TO THE MOST RE-VEREND FATHER IN GOD,

GEORGE, BY GODS PROVIDENCE, ARCHbishop of CANTERBURY his Grace, Primate of all

England, and Metropolitan, and one of his

Majesties, most Honourable Primate Councell,

I. D. wisheth all happinesse, temporall and eternall.

Seeing there is nothing (most Reuerend) so highly to bee esteemed, or so much to be desired of all Christians, as the glory of God in the saluation of his people, as being the principall and chiefe end of our creation and being, of our preservation and continuance in the world, therefore it behoueth all men, who would not faile of their end, and so live in vaine, in their severall callings wherein God hath placed them, to haue this alwaies in their eye, as their chiefe marke, and to propound it as the principall scope of all their actions, using all good meanes whereby it may be furthered and advanced.
As Princes and Magistrates, by enacting good lawes, and seeing them duly executed, making their owne liues (as it were) rules of that obedience which they require of the people, and liuely examples and patternes for their imitation.
Ministers, by leading those which are committed vnto their charge, in the waies of truth and godlinesse, not onely
by their preaching and writing instruction, admonition, correction and exhortation, but also by practising those vertues which they teach others, and shewing before them in the light of a godly life. Finally, the people, by yielding their cheerefull obedience to the godly lawes of Governours, and by imitating the sound and profitable doctrine, and imitating the Christian and religious examples of their godly Teachers. The consideration whereof hath moved me to imploy my talent both by preaching and writing, for the aduancing (as much as in me lieth) the glory of my great Lord and Master, and the good & saluation of my fellow seruants; or rather, to cast my mite into the Churches treasury, hoping that he will accept it, though not in its own value and worth, yet because I haue desired to be faithful in a little, and willing in my penury to offer vnto him all that I haue. And studying how I might best imploy my paines and indeuours for the aduancing of the former ends, I could finde no one part of Diuinity more profitable, in these times, for me to spend my strength vpon; then that which consisteth more in experience and practice, then in theory and speculation; and more principally tender to the sanctification of the heart, then the informing of the iudgement and the increasing of knowledge; and to the stirring vp of all to the practice of that they know in the duties of a godly life, and in bringing forth the fruits of faith in new obedience; then to fit them for discourse. For as in the ciuill state wee neede not so much to haue new lawes enacted, as to see the old executed, and obserued; nor to haue these cleared to the vnderstanding by the learned in that Science, as to haue them obeyed and practiced by all estates and conditions; so in the Church, knowledge so far exceedeth our obedience (not that which is saving and experimental, which is neuer seuered from vse & practice but that which is curious and vselesse) that we more neede a good helpe to worke that we haue into our hearts, for the inflaming of them with seruent zeale and true deuotion then to haue a greater measure of this light infused into our heads, which beeing destitute of feeling and practice, in which the power of godlinesse chiefly consisteth, doth (as the Apostle speaketh) but puffe vs vp, and maketh vs rather more learned, then more godly and religious. Againe, seeing the Lord, aboue all other parts, requireth the heart, as being the first mouer and chiefe agent in this little world of man, which ordreth and disposeth of all the rest, me thinks, his Ambassadors cannot better spend their paines, then in wooing

wooing and winning, espousing and uniting them to him in those inuolable and inseparable bonds of feruent loue and deuout zeale; and in perswading and enabling men to approue the sincerity of these holy affections, in their godly liues and vertuous actions. Finally, these discourses of practicall Diuinity tending to stirre vp deuotion, and to excite men to the duties of a godly life, are most fit and necessary for these times. First, because the world is already full of such bookes as doe fully handle the Doctrine of Di-uinity in all the points and parts of it, and also of learned controuersies wherein the truth is sufficiently defended, and all errors, which doe oppose it, refuted & refelled. Secondly, because our long peace and prosperity haue much cooled and quenched the seruour of our zeale and deuotion, and haue caused vs (contenting our selues with some cold formalities, and slight profession) to neglect the sincere practice of those substantiall duties which are required to a godly and Christian life. Lastly, because in these declining times, wherein many men waxing weary of the Truth, and being glutted with long dwelling on the spirituall Manna, do desire to returne to the fleshpots of Egypt, and for carnall respects doe fearefully relapse into Popery and superstition;
there is no meanes more effectuell to stay them from apostatcie and backsliding, then that first, by catechizing they should be soundly grounded in the knowledge of the Truth which we professe (In which regard wee haue iust cause to praise God for our Soueraignes care in reuiuing this holy exercise, which hath long languished in many places through carelesse neglect) And secondly, that being by this meanes inlightned in the knowledge of the Truth, they haue it by powerfull perswasions wrought into their hearts and affections, that they may also practise it in their liues and conuersations, without which, all other meanes will be vneffectuall either for the inlightning of the minde with sauing knowledg, or the inclining of the wil to imbrace it, and to continue firme and resolute against errors and heresies. For whereas sound and sauing knowledge of the truth, and the constant acknowledgement and profession of it, are the gifts of God, which none can attaine vnto, but those vpon whom he pleaseth to bestow them; he vouchsafeth these graces vnto those alone who loue his Truth, and bring forth the fruits of it in their holy practice. To these only this rich talent of truth is intrusted; to these it is doubled and redoubled, who make best vse of it for the glory of him that gaue it, by causing it to shine in their liues and conuersations. As we see in the example of Dauid, who became wiser and of greater vnderstanding then the Ancient, yea then his Teachers, because hee kept Gods Precepts. Vpon these alone is bestowed the gift of discerning betweene the sauing Truth, and the traditions and precepts of men; according to that of our Sauour, J. any man will do his will, he shall know the doctrine, whether it be of God, &c. As for them, who hide this rich talent without vse, the Lord will depriue them of it, and giue them ouer to their owne ignorance and errors. And those who allow a place for it onely in their heads, and will afford it no roome in their hearts, by louing, imbracing and practizing it, it is iust with God to send them strong delusions, that they should beleue lies; that they all might be damned who beleue not the truth, but had pleasure in vnrightrousnesse. As we see in the example of many in these times, who hauing beene inlightned with the knowledge of true Religion, haue become a prey to Priests and Iesuites; and (though otherwise of good vnderstanding) haue beene seduced and perswaded to beleue the most foolish absurdities in all Popery, of which there can be giuen no other reason then this, that they did not loue the light of Gods Truth, nor were carefull to walk by it in an holy conuersation, but resolu'd to continue in such profane & wicked courses, euen against knowledge and conscience, as would suffer them to finde no shadow of peace and comfort in the Doctrine of the Truth; and therefore they haue sought it in popish dispensations, and absolutions, which allow them, after that they haue, with the harlot in the Prouerbs, wiped their mouths, to returne againe to their former vncleanenesse; in which regard I doubt not to affirme, that whereas error and ignorance do make one Papist; loose licenciousnesse and resolu'd profanenesse doe make many. Finally, whereas those who haue the knowledge of the truth only seated in their braynes, and haue no feeling of the power and efficacy of it, for the sanctifying of their hearts, and the reforming of their liues, are easily seduced with cunning sophistry, when as they are puzzled with subtil arguments which they are not able to antwere: they contrariwise who haue sound and sense in themselves the efficacy of truth, for the changing of their mindes and hearts, and the renewing of their liues, will neuer forsake it, but will imbrace and professe it vnto the death, and cheerefully seale it with their blood; when for want of learning and Art, they are not able to defend it against the subtil obiections & cunning sophistry of their aduersaries. As we see in the example of many of the holy Martyrs, who being vnlettered, haue maintained the truth in the impregnable fort of their hearts, when their heads haue beene too weake to preferue it from violence. In which regard it were much to bee desired, that all Ministers, who haue the charge of soules committed vnto them, would be carefull, after that by catechizing they haue thoroughly grounded their people in the sound knowledge of the truth, in the next place, to worke it into their hearts and affections, and to perswade them vnto an holy practice of it in their liues and conuersations, both by shining before them in their light of doctrine, and also of an holy example; by the one, shewing vnto them the way of truth, and by the other, leading them in it like good guides, as it were by the hand. At which marks as I haue ayimed in the whole course of my Ministry, both by preaching and writing; so especially in these my present labours; the which I haue made bold to dedicate vnto your Grace; that they may remaine vnto the world, as a testimony how much I loue and honor you, as being in these perillous times, a chiefe pillar vnder his Maiesty, to vphold the sincere truth of Religion, against all errors, nouelties and heresies which otherwise were likely to grow too fast amongst vs; and also a principall Patrone of sound and solid preaching, which you are ready vpon all occasions to countenance both with your authority, and also by your painefull practice; as on the other side, to decry, as much as in you lyeth, that vaine or vani-

tie of such Preachers, which only seeke to preach themselves, by making ostentation of their wit, learning and reading; without any care to speake vnto the capacity of the people; as though their maine end were rather to make the excellency of their gifts knowne, for their owne praise or preferment; then to communicate them vnto others, to the Glory of God that gaue them, or the good of their fellow seruants, for whose sake they were entrusted vnto them. The Lord long continue your Grace to be a singular instrument of his glory, by maintaining the purity and practice of his true Religion in his Church, to the ioy of all that wish well to Sion, and the increasing of your owne glory and happinesse in the life to come.

Your Graces humbly deuoted in all Christian duty and service,

JOHN DOVNAME.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER

It is the duty (Christian Reader) of all who desire to approve themselves faithfull subiects and seruants to our great Lord and Soueraigne, that they consecrate themselves wholly vnto his seruice, not only in the spiritual Warfare, by fighting his battails, even vnto the death, against the many and mighty enemies of his glory and our salvation; but also in the time of peace, by doing his will, and performing all holy duties of his seruice, which in his Word he requirerh of them. And therefore as I haue inducured heretofore (according to the measure of grace receiued) to prepare and fit all those who vouchsafe to peruse my poore labours, that they may performe the duties of valiant Souldiers, in my Booke of the Christian Warfare: so perceiuing that those my paines haue much about their worth found good acceptance with all those that feare God; I haue now also beene encouraged to undertake the other, and not only to describe the duties of a godly life, in which we ought to liue our Lord and Master, but also to shew the meanes wherby we may be enabled herunto, and how we may remove the impediments which otherwise might hinder us from entring into, or proceeding in the wayes of godlinesse. The which my labours, if they prooue as profitable to those that reade them, as they haue bene painefull vnto me in framing and composing them, I shall thinke my self abundantly recompenced, and much more reioyes when I see the fruit of my hopes, when as I had cause to sigh and grieve, though wearinesse in my laborious seed time, of which though I should faile (as I hope I shall not) yet, as it is said of Ezechie, that in all wayes bringeth a reward with it, so may I truly say of these my labours, out of which, so much profit, comfort, and contentment haue accrued vnto my self, that I should haue no iust cause to repens for the scantinesse of my reward, although no other fruit should spring from them. But if I be not deceiued, as we are apt to be, lesse blinded in iudging of our spiritual and mentall, then of our naturall and corporall births, these my present labours will proue no lesse profitable vnto all that peruse them, then any of the former. Ye as if my affection mighte mislead my iudgement, doth not cause me to looke vpon them (like Fathers in perusing the works of their old age) with an vnpartiall eye, they are in some respects to be regarded before any of the others, both because the subiect on which they treat, haue the priuiledge of excellency and necessity, as being the maine duties of Christianity, which are to be performed thorowout the whole course of our lines, and also because they generally concerne all sorts of men, who thinke themselves bound to doe God any seruise, or to carry themselves so, that their works and wayes may be accepted of him. If any man shall thinke that I haue described the duties of a godly life with more strictnesse, and in greater perfection, then any can attaine vnto in this state of imperfection, and so haue required more of others, then I can any wayes be able to performe my selfe; let him know, that the worke must be fitted to the rule, and not the rule to the worke, and that this must be straights and perfect, although by reason of the crookednesse of the matter or stuffe, no worke-man is able to frame it so, but that it will in many places decline and swarve from it. And though the marke of perfection be so small, and so farre out of our reach, that none in this life can hit it; yet must it be set before vs; and we must strine so close to it, as weere as we can, seeing they are more likely to haue the prize of the best game, who aime at it, then those who looke another way. For my selfe, none can accuse me of so many and great imperfections in my course and practice of these duties, as I am ready to charge my selfe within the court of mine own conscience; yet if I would not belie the grace of God in me, I must professe, that I doe labour to performe that my selfe which I propound vnto others; and though I cannot attaine to the goal of perfection, as I haue here described it out of Gods Word, yet bewailing my stiffenesse and lamenesse in running the Race, I endeavour and presse (in some measure) towards the marke; for the price of the high calling of God in Iesus Christ; and no more then this doe I require of others. Now, because wee cannot grow in grace and godlinesse, without the assistance of Gods Spirit, and this cannot be had, vnlesse we sue and seeke for it; and because also godlinesse in a great part consisteth in pouring forth our soules before God in humble and hearty, frequent and seruent prayers; therefore left any thing which is necessary, should be wanting to this Treatise, I haue in the end of it set downe diuers formes, which may serue either for the use of weak Christians, who cannot fit themselves with better, or for some direction to guide them in compassing or conceiuing others, according to their owne particular occasions. If any man thinke them ouer-long and tedious, so him, I confesse, they are so, (though there is scarce two amongst them that may not be treatably vnto in a quarter of an houre) and therefore I would not torture his deuotion, by perswading him to rask and stretch it about its due length and strength; but rather I would aduise, if hee meets not with shorter Prayers, which better please him, that hee deuide both the Confessions and Petitions, with some marke of a Pen so as he may use one halfe at one time, and the rest at another. And so (Christian Reader) I leaue thee to the Lord, and his good blessing vpon all thy studies and endeouours, only requesting these two things at thine hands; First, that as I haue laboured much in giuing thee directions for the leading of a Christian life; so thou wilt also strine with all thine indeavour, so walke in this way revealed vnto thee. And secondly, that if thou reape any fruits of my paines (as I doubt not thou wilt, if thou reade so profit by them, constantly vnto the end, and not heere and there, by fits and startches) thou wilt be pleased to afford me the benefit of thy Prayers, that together with thy selfe, I may continue and hold out vnto the end, in the profession and practice of all Christian and holy duties, vntill hauing finished our course with joy, we doe both of vs receiue the Crowne of righteousness, which God of his free grace hath laid up for vs, and for all those who loue his appearing.

Phll. 3. 13, 14.

CAP. I.

Containing the Preface to the following Treatise, which sheweth the excellency, profits and necessity of the subiect matter therein handled. pag. 1.

SECT. I. THAT the end of every thing is to be preferred before the meanes which are destinated vnto it.

1. That the practice of Religion and godlinesse, is to bee preferred before the theory and bare knowledge of it. 2
- 3 That the practice of godlinesse is an insallible signe of the sincerity of our knowledge and profession. 3
- 4 That the practice of godlinesse is the touch-stone of our faith. 3
- 5 That though a godly life is not the cause, yet it is the way to euerlasting happinesse. 4
- 6 That all Gods Ministers should inforce this doctrine and practice of a godly life. 4

CAP. II.

Containing the definition of a godly life, whereby we may know what it is, and wherein it consisteth. 5

SECT. I. What a godly life is, both according to the Law, and the Gospell. 5

- 2 That a godly life chiefly consisteth in Euangelicall and filiall obedience, and what it is. 5
- 3 That the regenerate onely can leade a godly life. 6

4 That the Spirit of God is the Authour of spirituall life. 7

5 That the Spirit inlighteneth vs in the wayes of godlinesse. 7

6 That we must be ingrafted into Christ, before we can leade a godly life. 8

7 That onely those can leade a godly life, who are in the cōuenant of grace. 9

8 That a liuely faith is necessarily required to a godly life. 10

9 That the duties of a godly life must spring from the fountaine of loue. 10

10 That the duties of a godly life must proceed from thankfulness. 11

11 That the duties of a godly life must be done in humility. 11

12 That we must propound Gods glory, as the end of all our actions. 13

CAP. III.

Of the maine matter of a godly life, namely, that it must be framed according to Gods will, in holinesse, righteousness and subriety. 14

SECT. I. That we can no otherwise please God, then by framing our liues according to his will. 14

2 That not Gods secret, but reuealed will must be the rule of our liues and actions. 15

3 Reasons prouing that wee can no otherwise please God, then by doing his will. 15

4 Of the speciall duties wherein a godly life chiefly consisteth. 18

CAP.

The Table.

CAP. III.

Of the forme and manner how all Christian duties ought to be performed, namely, with feruency of desire, a settled resolution, and earnest indenuour to please God in all things. 19

- Sect. 1 That these desires, resolutions and indenuours are required of all those who will serue and please God. 19
- 2 That all Euangelicall obedience consisteth chiefly in these desires, resolutions and indenuours. 20
- 3 That they must not be faint and weak, but feruent and earnest. 21
- 4 That they must be intire and totall, both in respect of the subiect, and obiect. 22
- 5 That our desires, resolutions and indenuours must aime at the meanes, as well as at the end. 23
- 6 That they must not be lazie and idle, but diligent and painfull. 23
- 7 That they must not bee by fits and flathes, but constant and durable. 24

CAP. V.

Of sauing knowledge, which is the first maine ground of a godly life. How necessary it is, and the causes of it. 25

- Sect. 1 Of the maine grounds of a godly life. 25
- 2 That sauing knowledge is the prime vertue, and mother grace, from which all others haue their beginning. 25
- 3 That ignorance estrangeth vs from God, and the life of grace and glory. 27
- 4 That God is the chiefe Authour and efficient cause of sauing knowledge. 28
- 5 Of the instrumentall causes of sauing knowledge. 29

CAP. VI.

Of the obiect of sauing knowledge, namely, God himselfe and his attributes, his Word, and workes. 30

- Sect. 1 That there is a God, and how we may know it. 30

2 The second reason, taken from Gods loue towards vs. 680

3 The third reason, taken from Gods decree of Election. 681

4 The fourth reason, taken from the benefit of our Creation. 683

5 The fifth reason, taken from the benefit of our preservation. 684

CAP. XXXVII.

Two other reasons moving vs to a godly life: the first taken from Christ, giuen vnto vs by his Father; the other from the covenant of grace made in him. 686

Sect. 1. Of the inestimable gift of Iesus Christ, which should moue vs to loue and serue God. 686

2 That the work of Redemption should moue vs to serue our Redeemer in all duties of a godly life. 687

3 That by the couenant of grace, wee are strongly bound vnto all Christian duties of a godly life. 689

CAP. XXXVIII.

Of two other reasons moving vs to a godly life: the one taken from our effectuall calling; the other from our free Iustificati- on by faith. 692

Sect. 1. That the benefit of our effectu- all calling should moue vs to serue God in the duties of a godly life. 691

2 The second reason taken from our Iu- stification, and the fruits that follow it. 692

CAP. XXXIX.

Other motives arising from those duties which we owe vnto God and our neighbours. 694

Sect. 1. The first reason, taken from that thankfulness which wee owe vnto God. 694

2 The second reason, taken from that desire which should be in vs to glorifie God. 695

3 The third reason, taken from the will of God, that wee should thus serue him. 696

4 The fourth reason is, that wee may adorne the Gospell of God which wee professe. 698

CAP. XLI.

Other reasons taken from our owne profits, and the manifold benefits of a godly life.

703

Se&t. 1. That godlinesse is the chiefest gaine. 703

2 That it assureth vs of freedome from all our sinnes. 704

3 That by it we are freed from the punishment of all our sinnes. 705

4 That it doth much strengthen vs against Satans tentations. 707

5 That by a godly life, wee are prepared against death. 708

6 That thereby we are freed from Iudgement and condemnation. 709

CAP. XLII.

Other reasons taken from those singular priuiledges, which are peculiar to those who serue God in the duties of a godly life.

711

Se&t. 1. The first priuiledge is, that the Image of God is repaired in vs. 711

2 The second priuiledge is, that by a godly life wee haue title to all Gods promises; and first, of temporall blessings. 712

3 That thereby Gods sauing graces are much increased in vs. 714

4 That it strengtheneth our hope and confidence in God. 715

5 That it bringeth courage and true fortitude. 717

6 That it keepeth our consciences pure and peaceable. 717

7 That it causeth constancy and perseverance. 718

8 That it bringeth many benefits at the houre of death. 719

9 That it bringeth inestimable benefits in the life to come. 720

CAP. XLIII.

Of other singular priuiledges wherewith God crowneth a godly life.

721

Se&t. 1. Their conceit confuted, who imagine that God wholly reserueth the rewards of those that serue him, for the life to come. 721

2 That God ordinarily giueth greatest plenty of worldly blessings to worldly men. 722

3 That euen in this life God endoweth the godly with many singular and peculiar priuiledges; and first, that hee loueth them aboue all other his creatures. 723

4 That God watcheth ouer the godly with his speciall prouidence, and the benefits of this priuiledge. 725

5 That hee guideth and gouerneth the godly with his grace and holy Spirit. 727

6 That he guideth the godly in the time of their afflictions. 728

7 That hee inwardly guideth them by his grace and holy Spirit. 730

CAP. XLIIII.

Other singular priuiledges wherewith God in this life crowneth the godly, which are the fruits and effects of his holy Spirit.

731

Se&t. 1. That hee sealeth vnto the godly the assurance of their adoption. 731

2 The second speciall priuiledge is illumination. 732

3 The third is sanctification of the Spirit. 733

4 The fourth is internall and spirituall ioy. 733

5 The last is Christian liberty. 734

CAP. XLV.

Of foure other maine priuiledges, wherewith God crowneth a godly life, both in this world, and the world to come.

735

Se&t. 1. That hee bestoweth vpon them the Spirit of prayer. 735

2 That he giueth them meanes to build them vp in grace vnto saluation. 736

3 That they shall perseuere in the state of grace to saluation. 737

4 Of their inestimable priuiledges in the world to come. 739

CAP. III.

Of such private impediments as the world useth, to hinder vs in a godly life, and first, those on the right hand. 757

Sect. 1. Of the tentations of prosperity, and that they are most dangerous impediments of a godly life. 757

2 Of impediments arising from honours, riches, pleasures, and from euill company. 758

CAP. IIII.

Of impediments on the left hand, arising from afflictions and persecutions. 761

Sect. 1. How the world seeketh to hinder our course in godlines, by afflictions and persecutions. 761

2 3. Of the worlds professed hatred, whereby it discourageth vs in Christlian duties. 761

4 Of the false iudgement of the world, shewed in the bitter censures of the godly. 764

5 Of worldly contempt, vnto which the godly are lyable. 765

CAP. VI.

Of externall impediments whereby the world hindreth vs in the duties of a godly life; and first, slanders and derision. 767

Sect. 1. How we may be armed against slanders of the world. 767

2 Of derision and scoffes which the world useth to discourage the godly in all good courses. 769

3 How we may be armed against them. 769

4 Of the necessity of Christian Apologie and profession of the truth. 771

CAP. VII.

Of worldly persecutions, and how wee may be strengthened against them. 772

Sect. 1. Of the worlds cruelty in persecuting the godly. 772

2 That it hath alwayes bene the lot of the godly to bee persecuted of the world. 773

3 That our Sauour Christ hath foretold these persecutions. 775

4 Of the patience which the Saints haue shewed in suffering persecutions. 776

5 That our persecutions for righteousness sake, shall be richly rewarded. 777

CAP. VIII.

Of the impediments of a godly life, which arise from scandals and offenses. 778

Sect. 1. The first scandall arising from the prosperity of the wicked. 778

2 The second scandall arising from iudgement deferred. 779

 6 That infidelity is a great impediment to a godly life. 793

CAP. X.

Of manifold impediments arising from our corrupt hearts and affections. 793

- Sect. 1. The first impediment is an heart hardened through the deceitfulness of sinne. 793
 2 The second impediment is the loue of the world. 794
 3 The third impediment, worldly cares. 795

CAP. XI.

Of impediments arising from carnall hope and presumption. 797

- Sect. 1. That carnall hopes are great impediments to godlinesse. 797
 2 That carnall presumption is another great impediment. 799
 3 Of the meanes to remoue the former impediment. 800
 4 Of presumptuous neglecting the meanes of holinesse. 802

CAP. XII.

Of the third sort of carnall affections, which are impediments to a godly life; as superstitious scrupulosity, deiection of mind, feare and desperation. 803

- Sect. 1. That scrupulosity is a great impediment to a godly life. 803
 2 Of the meanes to be freed from it. 805
 3 That carnall feare is a great hindrance vnto godlinesse, and the meanes to be freed from it. 806
 4 That carnall sorrow is another great impediment, and how wee may bee freed from it. 807
 5 That desperation also hindreth vs, and how wee may be armed against it. 809
 6 That pride also is a great impediment,

and how to remouue it. 810

- 7 That sloth also much hindreth vs, and how wee may arme our selues against it. 811
 8 Of wearinesse in well doing, and how it hindreth vs; and first, that which proceedeth from an ill disposition of the body. 812
 9 Of that wearinesse which ariseth from the auerinesse of our willes vnto good duties. 813

CAP. XIII.

Obiections against a godly life made by the flesh, answered, and first, such as pretend impossibility and difficulty. 814

- Sect. 1. That a godly life is possible vnto vs. 814
 2 To whom a godly life is difficult, and the causes of it. 816
 3 The causes why the duties of a godly life seeme difficult and tedious euen to the regenerate, and the causes of it. 817
 4 That the difficulty must not discourage vs from it. 819
 5 That the recompence of reward must encourage vs against all difficulties. 820
 6 That a godly life, in it owne nature, is not difficult and tedious, but sweet and delightfull. 821

CAP. XIII.

That the godly life is not tedious and troublesome to the regenerate, but easie and familiar. 823

- Sect. 1. That the regenerate haue a new nature, vnto which a godly life is easie and pleasant. 823
 2 That a godly life is made easie, through the power of God the Father assisting vs. 825
 3 That God the Sonne ioyning with vs, taketh away all difficulty. 827
 4 That the duties of a godly life are made easie by the assistance of the holy Spirit. 829
 5 That the sauing graces of the Spirit make it easie and familiar. 829
 6 That Christian fortitude ouercometh all difficulties, and maketh a godly life easie. 830

The Table.

7 Of meanes whereby wee may attaine to Christian fortitude. 831

8 That by daily and constant practice we may easily ouercome all difficulties. 833

9 That worldlings take more paines about earthly vanities, and in the seruice of sinne and Satan, then is required to a godly life. 835

CAP. XV.

That a godly life is not harsh and vnplesant, mopish and melancholike, but aboue all others, most cheerfull and pleasant, sweet and delightsfull. 836

Sect. 1. That though a godly life were sad and sorrowfull, yet this should not discourage vs from it. 836

2 That sanctification taketh not away our ioy & delight, but only changeth and improueth it. 838

3 That no ioy of worldlings is comparable to that which is in Christians. 839

4 Of the diuers objects of our spirituall ioy. 841

5 That the Christians chiefest ioy is spirituall, and wherein it exceedeth all other ioyes. 842

6 That this spirituall ioy is proper to the godly, and belongeth to none other. 844

7 An admonition to the faithfull, to lay hold on this ioyfull priuledge, and to shake off sorrow and sadness. 846

CAP. XVI.

Three other objections of the flesh against a godly life, propounded, and answered. 848

Sect. 1. That a godly life taketh not away any lawfull liberty, but rather establissheth it. 848

2 That it taketh not away friendship and good society, but rather confirmeth it. 849

3 That a godly life doth not bring with it want and pouerty. 850

4 That though many godly men are poore, that godlinesse is no cause of their pouerty. 851

CAP. XVII.

Their objection answered, who alledge that their pouerty preffeth them to such continuall labour, that they haue no leisure for the duties of a godly life. 852

Sect. 1. That Gods Commandements bind to obedience poore and rich. 852

2 That pouerty hindreth not Gods graces in vs, but rather furthereth them. 853

3 That the more poore we are, the more earnest we should be in Gods seruice. 854

4 That if being poore, wee carefully serue God, wee may securely cast our selues vpon his gracious providence, and expect him to be our reward. 854

5 That the obiection of pouerty is but a friuolous and false excuse. 856

CAP. XVIII.

Their obiection answered, who pretend, that their multitude of worldly employments will allow them no leisure for religious duties. 857

Sect. 1. That earthly blessings are no hindrances to godlinesse, but the immoderate loue of them. 857

2 That we must not vndertake all employments which the world and the flesh will presse vpon vs. 859

3 That no businesse is of like moment, as by seruing God, to saue our soules. 859

4 That they who neglect the duties of Gods seruice, cannot expect good successe to their labours. 860

5 That the duties of our particular callings, must giue place to the generall calling of Christianity. 861

6 That we haue time sufficient for religious and ciuill duties, if it bee wisely husbanded. 863

7 That none are exempted by God, from the duties of his seruice, vnder pretence of any businesse. 860

CAP. XIX.

Their obiection answered, who excuse their neglect of religious duties, vnder pretence that the times and places wherein they liue, are full of corruption. 866

Sect. 1. That the corruption of the times is a strong temptation to withdraw vs from godlinesse. 866

2 That though it bee hard to flesh and blood to liue righteously in corrupt times, yet it is possible, yea easie to theregenerate. 868

3 A note of difference between true zeale and deuotion, and that which is false and hypocritical. 869

Cap. XX.

Divers other objections made by the fleshy against a godly life, propounded and answered. 870

Seck. 1. That it is not enough to live harmlessly, vnlesse wee also performe religious duties. 870

2 That it is not sufficient to serue God
in some things; and at some times.

3 Their objection answered, who pretend that they haue ouercome many obstacles. 872

4 Their objection answered, who assume that Ministers onely are bound to the strict performance of religious duties. 873

5 Their objection answered, who pretend want of means. 875

6 Their objection answered, who pre-

THE FIRST BOOKE OF A GODLY LIFE, CON- TAINING THE GROVND AND

fundamentall graces whereby it is supported.

C A P. I.

Containing the Preface to the following Treatise, which sheweth the excellencie, profit and necessity of the subiect matter therein handled.

According to the rules of reason, wee esteeme the end of al things to be the best, and to be preferred before the things which are destinated to the atchieuing of it; and every thing as it doth more or lesse conduce hereunto, so doth it gaine or lose a higher place in the worke of excellency; because that which aduanceth the end, most furthereth that which is most to be desired, namely, perfection and fruition. Thus the end of Physicke is health, and therefore, that Physicke is to be esteemed best, which most soundly and surely confirmeth or recouereth it. The end of Lawe is Iustice, that every man may quietly inioy his owne, and therefore, that Law and practice of it, is to be chiefly esteemed (not which through the helpe of Sophisticall wit and audacious skill, filleth the Lawyers purse, by protracting suites, and hindering or delaying the course of Iustice, but) which best helpeth the Clyent to the speediest and surest recovery of his right. The end of Warre is Peace, and therefore, that warre to be preferred, which being iust, alwaies endeth in such a peace as is sure, secure and permanent. Thus man, being the end of all vnreasonable creatures in the heavens and earth, they being made for his vse and benefit, is in this regard to be aduanced in excellency aboue them all; and every creature to be esteemed more or lesse good, as they more or lesse tend to mans benefit and blessednesse. And finally, because Almighty God is the supreme end, he is also the chiefe Good, and all creatures to be esteemed in worth and excellency, as they most serue for the magnifying of their Lord and Creator, and the aduancement of his glory for which end they haue their being.

And

§. Sect. I.
That the end of every thing
is to be preferred
before the meanes which are destinated
vnto it.

§. Señ. 2.
That the practice of Religion and godlinesse is to bee preferred before the theory and bare knowledge
of it.

And thus the end of all arts and sciences is the practice of them, and therefore the habit of skill shewed in the exercise of the artfman, is much to be preferred, because it is the end of theorie and speculation. And as this is to be confessed in all other arts, so cannot it be denied of Diuinity and Religion, the practice whereof doth in excellency surmount the knowledge and theorie, as being the maine end whereunto it tendeth. For to what purpose doe men spend their spirits, and tire their wits, in discerning the light of truth, if they doe not vse the benefit of it to direct them in all their waies? Why doe they rise betimes to see the Sunne, if they meane to sit idly still and doe nothing, which better suiteth with palpable and Egyptian darkenesse? Why doe they with such care and labour, heape vp these rich treasures of learning and knowledge, if (miser-like) they onely looke vpon them, and neuer make vse of them for the benefit of themselves and others? Why doe they spend their whole liues in sowing the seede, and neuer reape the crop? or hauing brought in the haruest, and filled their barnes and granaries: what good will all this doe them, if they let it there must and mould, and neuer eate the fruit of their labours? How vaine therefore is their practice, who spend all their strength in polemicall disputes, to euince error, and finde out the truth, if when they haue found it, they will not walke in this light, nor let it be the guide of their liues? like herein to foolish boyes, who strue for a ball, which when they haue gotten with much sweate, and haue no competitor to contend further for it, they cast into a corner with carelesse neglect; or hauing fought euen vnto blood, to beate others off a Mole hill, as from a fort of strength, doe make no further vse of it when they haue gotten quiet possession? How fruitlesse are the labours of such Pastours and Preachers, who spend all their time in painefull studies, to barrell vp that knowledge, which they meane neuer to vse, propounding no other end of their knowledge but to know; and as though they enuied all others their esteemed Iewell, neuer communicate it by painefull preaching vnto their people, who through their negligence haue no more vse of their gifts, then poore neighbours haue of a misers treasure, which is fast locked vp from them in their barred chests; nor are more edified by their knowledge, then if they were ignorant ideots, and destitute of all learning? Heerein also rich misers indeed, in that they doe not only depriue others of the vse of their wealth, but defraud their owne soules of the benefit of it, letting it rust without the vse and practice of it in a godly life; whereby as they should shine vnto others by a good example; so they should make their own calling and election sure, and strengthen their faith in the assurance of eternal blessednes, which is not promised to them that only know, but also do the will of their Master? Finally, how bootlesse and vaine is the practice of such professors of Religion among the people, who in their diligence to heare Sermons, and reade the Scriptures, take care onely to inlighten their braines with knowledge, which they wholly spend in proud disputes and lauish discourse, but neuer suffer it to descend into their hearts, to warme and cherish any holy affections, nor to shine out vnto others in the light of a godly life, to the glory of God, and edification of their brethren by their godly example?

Job. 13. 17.

Againe,

Againe, as the practice of all Christian duties in a godly life, is to bee preferred before knowledge and profession of Religion; so is it the signe and scale whereby we may know if our knowledge bee sound and saving, and our profession in truth and without hypocrisie. For an idle and fruitlesse knowledge furthereth not our saluation, but rather leaueth vs without excuse, aggravateth our sinnes, and increaseth our condemnation: for they are not blessed, who know the greatest mysteries of Christs Kingdome, but they who make an holy vse of what they know; not they that know these things (saith our Sauour) but they who doe them: not they that heare the Word onely, but they who keepe it, are blessed. Not the hearers of the Law, but the doers thereof are iustified, saith the Apostle Paul. And the Apostle James exhorteth vs to be not onely hearers of the Word, but doers also; seeing otherwise we shall but deceiue our selues, and vterly lose all the fruit of our labours. Without which practice, knowledge puffeth vp: not making vs solidly wise, but (like bladders filled with winde) easily tossed vp and downe at the pleasure of those who extoll vs with their praises: and is no christian knowledge, though it comprehend the greatest mysteries of Christianity, seeing we truly know onely what we practise. For as the Apostle Iohn, teaching vs to examine the truth of our knowledge, saith, Heereby we know that we know him, if we keepe his Commandements. And he that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his Commandements, is a lyer, and the truth is not in him. Finally, the more wee know, the more grievous shall our sinne and punishment be, if we doe not practise it; For the seruant that knoweth his masters will, and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes. Our profession likewise, without this practice, is but hypocritical, making vs to resemble the stony ground, which brought forth a faire greene blade, but no fruit to due maturity; like the fig-tree, which hauing leaues but no figs, was accursed; like the tree in the Garden, which cumbring the ground with its fruitlesse presence, was threatned to bee cut downe; like Glow-wormes, which haue some lustre and brightnesse, but no heate; seeing such Professours shine with some light of knowledge, but without all warmth of Christian charity. Neither is that pure Religion and undefiled before God, which like an emptie barrell, maketh a great sound in an outward profession, but that which exerciseth it selfe in the duties of Christianity, as to visite the fatherlesse and widdowes in their affliction; and to keepe a mans selfe vnspotted of the world.

Furthermore, the iust doe liue by their faith, which doth ingraft them into Christ their life and righteousness; and a godly life is the touchstone which discerneth a true and sincere faith, from that which is false and hypocriticall. It is the signe of our spirituall vnion and incision; for they that are ingrafted into the true Vine Christ, doe bring forth much fruit; and they who doe not, are either no branches at all, or such as are dead, and shall bee cut off. It is the fruit which the tree of faith beareth, by which wee may discern a liuing from a dead faith, and approoue and manifest it vnto others. It is the breath of this life of faith, and the operation of this facultie, whereby wee may discern whether it bee a liuing body, and liuely sacrifice acceptable vnto God; or a dead carcasse, which hath onely the shew of a true body, body, but stinketh in his nostrils, when for an oblation wee offer it vn-

to him.

Finally, a godly life, though it doe not merit euerlasting happinesse, with which it holdeth no proportion, yet it is the way that leadeth vs ther-unto, in which, whoso trauaile, shall at the end of their journey surely attaine to eternall blessednesse. And they who neglect it, being quite out of the way, can neuer come vnto that place of ioy: For without holinesse wee shall neuer see God. If we haue not our part in the first resurrection to newnesse of life, we shall haue no part in the second, to glory and immortality, but liuing and dying dead in sinne, the second death also will seaze vpon vs.
And if we walke not in this subordinate way of holinesse and righteoufnesse, which leadeth to life and happinesse, wee can haue no part in the chiefe and principall way Iesus Christ, without whom there is no saluation: For as many as are in Christ, are new creatures; They that are Christs, haue trucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts; They that are baptized into him, are buried with him by baptisme into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, by the glory of the Father, euen so they also should walke in newnesse of life. They that are in Christ, walke not after the flesh, but after the Spirit, and to such onely there is no condemnation. Finally, they that are ingrafted into the true vine Iesus Christ, shall bring forth in him, the ripe and sweet Grapes of holinesse and righteoufnesse, and bearing fruit, shall be more and more purged by our heauenly Father, that they may dayly increase in fruitfulnesse: So that there is no other way to assure vs of Christ and his benefits, no other meanes to make our election and calling sure, then by adding one grace vnto another, and bringing forth the fruits of them all in a Christian life and holy conuersation.

All which, as it evidently sheweth the excellencie, profit, and necessity of walking in this way of holinesse and righteoufnesse, (as I shall more plentifully prooue hereafter) so also how necessary and profitable it is for Gods Ministers, who are appointed for guides vnto others, that they doe not onely themselues walke in this way, and shine as lights and patternes of godlinesse in their holy and Christian conuersation; but also that they shine vnto them in the light of their doctrine, teaching them the way which they should choose, and what the acceptable will of God is, vnto which they should conform themselves in all holy obedience, perswading and exhorting them to goe forward when they are dull and sluggish, that their words may (as the Wise man speaketh) serue for goades to hasten their speede; and admonishing and reproofing them when they leaue this way, and wander in the by-ways of sinne and wickednesse, without which, the godly life of the Minister is not sufficient, and his exemplary actions but dumbe signes, and oftentimes (through humane frailty) erroneous patternes, if the Word preached doe not giue light and life vnto them. In which regard, among diuers of my worthy and godly brethren, who haue profitably laboured in this Argument, and offered vnto God their free-will offerings of great value, I likewise haue aduentured to cast my poore mite into this Treasury, that I may not only hereby more and more stirre vp and prouoke my selfe to walke more carefully, conscionably, and cheerefully, in this path of piety, but also may, as much as lyeth in mee, both by word and writing, perswade many others to beare mee company.

C A P. II.

Containing the definition of a godly life, whereby we may know what it is, and wherein it consisteth.

NOW that we may more orderly proceede in handling of this Argument, I will first shew what this godly life is, and what the duties are, which principally are required vnto it; and then propound the helpes and meanes, whereby we may be perswaded to enter into this Christian course, and enabled to proceed in it conscionably and cheerefully. And first, if we define it in that legall perfection which God requireth: this godly life is an absolute conformitie of all our actions, and whole conuersation, vnto the will of God, which is the perfect rule of holinesse and righteousnesse, as it is reuealed vnto vs in his Word, especially in the Decalogue or ten Commandments, vnto which we cannot attaine in this state of corruption and imperfection, seeing we are not perfectly regenerate, but are partly flesh, and partly Spirit, and haue the reliques of sinne remaining in vs, which as an heauy burthen presseth vs downe in this way, and like fetters on our legs, so hindreth vs, that we can but slowly and lamely proceed in our spirituall journey: as we may see in the example of the Apostle, who professeth that hee could not doe the good which hee would, but the euill which hee would not; and that whilst he was delighted in the Law of God, he found another law in his members warring against the law of his mind, and leading him captiue to the law of sinne. Notwithstanding we are to walke by this rule, and in our desire and indeuour (as it were with an holy ambition) to aspire vnto it; and though we cannot reach vnto this Sunne of perfection, yet wee must chuse it for our marke, and shoot towards it as high as we can, and be sorry and ashamed in our selues, that we can shoot no higher; of which, we haue the holy Apostle as a patterne for our imitation, who forgetting those things which were behind, namely, the former part of his race in the way of godlinesse, and reaching forth vnto those things which were before, to wit, that Christian perfection, vnto which he had not yet attained, did presse towards the marke, for the price of the high calling of God, in Iesus Christ. And this is that Euangelicall and Sonne-like obedience, which God now vnder the Couenant of grace requireth of vs, which if we labour to performe, he will accept of vs in Christ, and remember our sinnes no more, but will spare vs, as a man spareth his sonne who serueth him, accept of the will for the deede, and couering the imperfections of our obedience with Christs perfect righteousnesse, and washing away the pollution and corruption of it, in his most precious blood, he will be well pleased with vs, and approoue of vs, as though we had attained to perfect righteousnesse.

And in this filiall obedience doth that godly life principally consist, which we now intreate of: for it is nothing else but a seruent desire, sound resolution, and sincere indeuour, to conforme our whole liues in all holy obedience to Gods will, that we may please him in all things, and glorifie his holy name by our Christian conuersation; or if we would haue a more full description of it: A godly life is the life of a Christian; who being regenerate, quickned, and illuminated by Gods Spirit, and ingrafted into Christ thereby, and by a liuely faith, assuring him of Gods loue, and his owne saluation, doth in loue and thankfulness towards him, desire, resolute, and indeuour to please him in all things, by doing his will reuealed in his Word, and to glorifie his name, by walking before him, in the duties of holiness, righteousness, and sobriety; with faith; a pure heart, and good conscience all the dayes of his life. In which description, we are to consider two things. First, the person that leadeth this godly life, and secondly, the actions in this life performed by him; the person is first named, and then described by his state and properties. Concerning the first, he that leadeth this life, is the Christian onely. For as for the life of Heathens and Pagans, seeme it neuer so strict, iust, and glorious, as of Socrates, Aristides, Cato, Seneca, and such like, it is voyd of all true godliness, and not accepted of God, because it is ioyned with ignorance of the true God, and Iesus Christ, idolatry, will-worship, infidelitie, and all kind of heathenish impiety.

Neither doe all that beare the name of Christians leade this godly life, but they who are so, not in name and profession onely, but in deed and truth; that is, such only who are in that state, and qualified with those properties which are set downe in the former description. As first, that he be regenerate; for they that are vnregenerate, cannot performe any dutie of a godly life which is pleasing and acceptable to God, because being out of the Couenant, their persons, and consequently their actions are not accepted of him, but are the slaues of Satan, held captiue to doe his will; the children of wrath, and enemies vnto God and his grace, dead in trespasses and sins, and therefore no more able to doe the duties of holiness and righteousness, then a dead man is able to doe the actions of the liuing. In which respect, the Apostle saith, that we are not of our selues able to thinke a good thought, nor so much as to will that which is good, because it is God onely which worketh in vs both the will and the deed. Neither can we better our estate by our own strength; for as the Prophet teacheth vs, as well may the Ethiopian change his blacknesse, and the Leopard his spots, as we doe well, that are accustomed to doe euill: So that the regenerate man alone can lead a godly life, or performe any dutie acceptable vnto God; for first Abel was accepted, and then his sacrifice: and our persons must first be sanctified, before they can please God by our works of holiness. For as in the ceremoniall law, the touching of holy things did not sanctifie and cleanse the polluted person, but the person polluted did make the holy things to become vncleane, as Haggai speaketh; so the workes, which in themselves materially are good and holy, doe not sanctifie the vnregenerate man that doth them, but through the taint and pollution of his sinne, they also are polluted and defiled. Now vnto this regeneration two things are necessarily required: First, that we haue the Spirit of God dwelling in vs: And secondly, the sanctifying and sauing graces of the Spirit, which alwayes doe accompany it: for the Spirit of God is the Author of our regeneration, which begeth

teth vs vnto God, according to that of our Saviour, Except a man be borne of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdome of God. And that of the Apostle; But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are iustified in the name of the Lord Iesus, and by the Spirit of our God. It is the Spirit which mortifieth our sinnefull corruptions, by applying vnto vs the vertue of Christs death, and so by destroying the kingdome of sinne, raiseth vs out of the state of death, and which giueth vnto vs the spirituall life of grace, by applying vnto vs the vertue of Christs resurrection, which inableth vs to doe the actions of the liuing. It is the Spirit that leadeth vs into all truth, and hereby assureth vs that we are the sonnes of God; seeing wee performe vnto him filiall obedience: And therefore they who will walke in the wayes of godlinesse, must haue this holy Spirit to bee their guide. They who would outwardly mooue in the actions of piety and righteousness, must haue this inward cause to stirre, strengthen, and support them: for as well may a blinde man trauaile vncouth wayes without a leader, or the body mooue without the soule, as we goe in this Christian way, or doe the workes of God, vnlesse his holy Spirit be our guide and strength. The which must mooue vs in the first place, to labour earnestly to haue this Spirit dwelling in vs, and to vse to this purpose, that powerfull meanes of effectuell prayer, seeing our heavenly Father hath promised to giue his holy Spirit to them that aske him, as our Saviour hath taught vs.

And if we thus gaine his company, and giue him friendly intertainment when he dwelleth in vs, possessing our vessels in sanctification and honour, that they may be fit Temples for this pure Maiestie, and not vexing and grieuing this holy Ghest by quenching those good motions which he suggesteth vnto vs; then will not he be idle in vs, but will direct and guide vs in all our wayes, and inable and strengthen vs vnto all Christian duties of holinesse and righteousness; nor come alone to dwell in vs, but accompanied with the sweet society of all sanctifying and sauing graces. And first of all, he will quicken vs in the life of grace, who were before dead in trespasses and sinnes, and giue vnto vs spirituall motion in all holy actions: the which, though at first it be but weake, and scarcely to be discerned (like a child newly quickned in the wombe) yet shall it increase by degrees, vntill we be strengthened for the spirituall birth, and grow vp from age to age, and from strength to strength, vnto a perfect man, and vnto the measure of the stature of the fulnesse of Christ, of which life the Spirit of God is the principall Author, according to that of the Apostle: If the Spirit of him that raised vp Iesus from the dead, dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortall body, by his Spirit that dwelleth in you: without the which we cannot once mooue in the wayes of godlinesse, nor after that we haue begun, proceede or grow vp vnto any perfection. And therefore when we finde our selues dead and dull vnto all good actions, we are earnestly to pray with Dauid, that God will reuiue and quicken vs by his grace and holy Spirit, that we may become active, and able to performe the duties of a Christian and holy life.

Secondly, hauing giuen vnto vs this life of grace, hee will in the next place indue vs with spirituall light, and illuminate the blinde eyes of our mindes.

minds, that we may vnderstand the will and wayes of God reuealed in his Word, and attaine vnto such a measure of sauing knowledge, as may be sufficient to direct vs in all our thoughts, words, and actions. And this is that voyce of the Spirit, which in our conuersion vnto God, secretly whispereth in the eare of our minds, as it were behind vs, saying; This is the way, walke yee in it, when ye turne to the right hand; and when yee turne to the left. This is that day-spring, which the Sunne of righteousness with his arising hath caused to appeare and visit vs, to giue light vnto vs, who sate in darkenesse and in the shadow of death; and to guide our feete into the way of peace. This is that Comforter which our Sauour promised to send after his resurrection, who should leade his Disciples, and with them, all the faithfull into all truth. This is that grace of God, which hath appeared, teaching vs to deny vngodlinesse and worldly lusts, and to liue soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world. This is that holy oyntment and precious eye-salue, which openeth and illighteneth the blinde eyes of our minds, that we may know all things appertaining to our saluation; so as we need no Tutor to teach vs any other doctrine, but as the same anoynting hath taught vs of all things. Whereof he is called the Spirit of truth, not onely because he is most true, and Truth it selfe, but also teacheth and guideth vs in the wayes of truth. And the spirit of illumination and wisdom, not onely because there is in him a measure, without measure, of light and knowledge, but also illighteneth our minds darkened with ignorance, and maketh vs who were only wise vnto euill, wise vnto good, and to the eternall saluation of our owne soules. And vnlesse we be thus illightened by the Spirit of God, and haue the way of saluation reuealed vnto vs, it remaineth an hidden mysterie, of which we are not capeable in our naturall vnderstandings; for as the Apostle teacheth vs, The naturall man vnderstandeth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishnesse vnto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned, and the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God; and they vnto whom by the Spirit they are reuealed. Vnlesse this light shine in our hearts, we remaine in more then an Egyptian darkenesse, sitting still in error and sinne, and not being able to mooue in the actions of holinesse and righteousness; neither is it possible that we should walke in the wayes of God, vntill by the light of his Spirit they be reuealed vnto vs. Finally, we must first know the will of God, before wee can doe it, and so attaine vnto euerlasting blessednesse. And therefore in the next place, if we would leade this godly life, we must desire to be inglightened by Gods Spirit in the knowledge of his will, and to haue the light of spirituall wisdom added to the life of grace, that knowing it in our vnderstandings, we may yeeld obedience vnto it in our liues and conuersations; praying to this purpose without ceasing for our selues; as the Apostle for the Ephesians; That the God of our Lord Iesus Christ, the Father of Glory, would giue vnto vs the spirit of wisdom and reuelation in the knowledge of him; the eyes of our vnderstanding being inglightened, that we may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the Saints, &c.

The second maine thing required in those who are to leade a godly life is, that they be ingrafted into Iesus Christ, by vertue of which vnion he becombecomming their head, and they his members, they haue communion with him, and are made partakers of the vertue of his death and resurrection, whereby their finnes are mortified and crucified, so as they can no longer raigne in their mortall bodies, and they quickned vnto holinesse and newnesse of life, and so inabled to bring forth the fruits of obedience in the whole course of their conuersation. For we are naturally dead and buried in the graue of sinne, and not able to stirre or mooue in the actions of godlinesse; but no sooner are we ioyned to him, and touch his body crucified by the hand of faith, but presently (like the body touched by Elizans in the graue) we receiue such vertue and vigour from him, that we are reuiued and raised from this graue of sinne, vnto holinesse and newnesse of life. We are by nature wild vines, who bring forth nothing but sowre grapes of malicioulnesse and sinne; but when wee are ingrafted into the true vine Iesus Christ, we change our nature, and receiuing the liuely sap of grace from this roote of righteousnesse, we bring forth the fruits of obedience, whereby our heauenly Father is glorified, and we assured of our election and saluation. Finally, without him wee can of our selues doe nothing, as he hath taught vs; but being vnited vnto him, we may say with the Apostle, that we can doe all things through Christ which strengtheneth vs. And this is that which the same Apostle teacheth vs: We are buried (saith he) with him by baptisme into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead, by the glory of the Father, euen so we also should walke in newnesse of life. For if we haue beene planted together in the likenesse of his death, we shall be also in the likenesse of his resurrection. Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sinne might be destroyed, that henceforth wee should not serue sinne. And therefore if we would bee new creatures, let vs put on Iesus Christ, and labour to be vnited vnto him by his holy Spirit and a liuely faith; for in him alone we are elected vnto holinesse; in him onely we are created vnto good workes, which God hath before ordained that we should walke in them.

The third thing required is, that we be in the couenant of grace, made with vs in Iesus Christ, whereby God hath assured vs that he will bee our God, and that we shall be his people; he our gracious Father, and we his children, whom he will accept in his best beloved. For vntill we be in this couenant, our persons are not accepted, we remaining the slaues of sinne, and in the state of death and condemnation, and consequently, nothing which we can doe, seeme it neuer so glorious, is pleasing in Gods sight. We are till then vnder the law and couenant of workes, if not as it was giuen to the Iewes, yet as it was ingrauen in our hearts in our creation; and consequently vnder the curse which is denounced against all that doe not continue in all which is written in the booke of the law to doe it, namely, in that perfection which the law requireth. Of which, sayling innumerable times, we cannot, according to this strict rule, yeeld obedience, nor performe the duties of a godly life. But when we are admitted into the couenant of grace made in Iesus Christ, then this rigour of the law is remitted, and we are tyed onely to the obedience of sonnes, which consisteth more in our wills, desires, and indeuours, then in our abilities to performe our dutie in perfection. The which obedience as this perfect law of liberty doth require, require, so doth it inable vs to doe that which it requireth. For in this couenant the Lord promisseth that he will take away our stony hearts, which will rather breake, then bow vnto his will, and giue vs hearts of flesh, which will incline to all good motions of his Word and holy Spirit. And that hee will giue his holy Spirit vnto vs, to conduct and rule vs in all our wayes, and to support, strengthen, and comfort vs against all the difficulties and discouragements, which doe affront and crosse vs in our Christi- an course. That he will write his Law, not in Tables of stone, but in our hearts, that we may not depart from him. And if contrary to our purpose we slip in our way, the Lord hath promised that he will not remember our sinnes to impute them vnto vs, but will spare vs as a father spareth his sonne that serueth him. Now what can bee a greater encouragement vnto the performance of all the duties of an holy life, then to know that wee are accepted of God, and that our obedience, though imperfect and mingled with much corruption and weaknesse, shall in Christ, not onely be pardoned, but highly regarded and richly rewarded by our louing Father? And therefore let vs labour to be in the couenant of grace, vnto which, nothing on our part is required, but a liuely faith in Christ, applying all Gods promises made vnto vs in him, and that we bring forth the fruits of this faith in vnfeigned repentance and new obedience.

The fourth thing required in those who are to leade a godly life, is a liuely faith; whereby we vnderstand, not onely a generall faith, whereby we know and belecue that the duties which we performe, are agreeable to Gods will, and warranted by his Word: but a true, liuely, and iustifying faith, whereby we are ingrafted into Iesus Christ, and made partakers of all his benefits. For we must first by him be made righteous, before wee can doe the workes of righteousness; wee must first become good trees, before we can yeeld good fruits, and be liuely branches of the true Vine Iesus Christ, which sucke from this roote the sap of grace and holinesse, before we can beare the sweete and ripe grapes of new and true obedience, which are acceptable to God, and well relishing vnto his taste. In which respect the Apostle telleth vs, that without faith it is impossible to please God, because whatsoever is not of faith, is sinne. Besides, our best righteousness is like a polluted cloth, stained with our corruptions, and mingled with our imperfections, and consequently cannot indure the seuerer triall of Gods strict iustice, nor be accepted of him (who being infinite in perfection in himselfe, alloweth of nothing that is imperfect) vnlesse being vnited vnto Christ, we be made partakers of the benefit of his death and obedience, and so haue the imperfection of our actions couered with his perfect righteousness, and their pollution washed cleane away in his most precious blood. And therefore if we would leade such a godly life as may be pleasing vnto God, we must first labour to be indued with a liuely faith, that all our fruits of obedience springing from this roote, may bee accepted, in and for Christ, and be allowed through his righteousness and obedience, which deserue to bee reiecte in respect of their owne pollution and imperfection.

The fifth thing required is, that all the duties of a godly life which we performe, doe spring from the fountaine of loue, which is a fruit of a liuely

LIB. I. What things are required unto a godly life.

II

liuely faith, wherby being assured of Gods loue towards vs in Iesus Christ, we begin to loue him againe, and our neighbours for his sake; and receiuing the bright beames of his fauour into our hearts, haue them allightened and warmed thereby, and so reflect them backe againe towards God; in our loue of his Maiefty and zeale of his glory, abhorring whatsoever is displeasing, and louing and practising that which is acceptable in his sight. For this loue is the end of Gods commandements, and compriseth in it the whole summe and substance of the Law, and therefore it is the base and foundation of all true obedience; and whatsoever proceedeth not from loue, cannot be accounted any seruice vnto God, seeing it is not done for his sake, but out of selfe-loue, and for worldly respects, which being sinnefull and corrupt, doe pollute all the actions which doe spring from them.

1. Tim. 1. 5.
Matth. 23. 40.
Rom. 13. 10.

The sixth thing required vnto a godly life is, that we performe all holy and Christian duties out of our thankfulness towards God, as for all his benefits spirituall and corporall bestowed vpon vs, namely, our election, creation, preseruation, and the rest, so especially for that maine benefit, the great worke of our redemption by Iesus Christ, whereby he hath made vs, of the slaues of Satan, his owne seruants, of the children of wrath, his owne children by adoption and grace, of the seruants of sinne, the seruants of righteounesse, and of the heires of hell and condemnation, co-heires with Christ, and inheritours of heauenly happinesse. The which benefits being rightly considered, must needs make vs truly thankfull vnto him of whom we haue so great saluation, and out of this thankfulness, truly zealous of his glory to whom we are so deeply indebted, and to expresse both the one and the other, by our earnest indeuour, and conscientious care to glorifie his holy name, by shining before men in the light of a godly life. And that this ought to be the maine motiue to incite vnto the practice of an holy conuersation, it appeareth heereby, in that the Apostles doe so frequently vse it as a forcible argument to prouoke vs vnto it. You are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God in your body and in your Spirit which are Gods. Ye were sometimes darkenesse, but now are ye light in the Lord, walke as children of light. And therefore we must take heede that we doe not performe holy duties out of an opinion of merit to make God beholding vnto vs, or to satisfie his iustice which is onely done by Christs perfect righteounesse and obedience, or to leaue our workes of supererogation as a treasure vnto the Church, to be sold vnto those, who most wanting them, will buy them at the highest price; or to purchase by them Gods heauenly Kingdome, which is a free inheritance, and the meere gift of grace, which God hath of his sole bounty and good will given vnto vs, in and for Iesus Christ; but let vs doe what wee are able (and be sorry in our hearts that we can doe no more) out of vnfeined thankfulness vnto God, for the many and inestimable benefits, which of his free grace and vnderferued goodnesse he hath multiplyed on vs.

The seventh thing required vnto a godly life is, that all the Christian duties which we performe, bee done in humility and lowlinesse of spirit; for this is a grace most acceptable vnto God, which will mooue him to inhabite in vs as his Temples by his holy Spirit, for hee dwelleth with him, that that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to renew the spirit of the humble, and to renew the heart of the humble ones. It moueth him to bestow all other graces, and enlargeth our hearts that they may be fit to receiue them; for the meeke will be guide in iudgement, and the meeke will be teach his way. And this Argument the Apostle Peter vseth to perswade vs to bee clothed with humility: Because God resisteth the proud, and giueth grace vnto the humble. It is the ornament and signe of all other graces, and of all Christian duties, whereby we may know whether they be counterfeited and hypocriticall, or in sincerity and truth: for the oyle of sauings grace, and the water and winde of pride, will not mixe together, and therefore we must bee emptied of the one, before we can be replenished with the other. According to the song of the blessed Virgin; He hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath sent empty away. So that if we would be enriched with Gods graces, and be strengthened by his Spirit vnto the duties of a godly life, we must, as we increase in them, increase also in humility, and as our Sauour hath taught vs, When we shall haue done all those things which are commanded vs, we must acknowledge that we are vnprofitable seruants, who haue done nothing but that which was our dutie to doe. To which purpose let vs often meditate of the imperfections and corruptions of our best actions, which might iustly moue the Lord to reiect them, and vs also for them, if in the seuerity and strictnesse of his iustice he should looke vpon them. Let vs thinke not onely of the good we doe, but also of the euill which we commit, and the good which we leaue vndone, and then there will be no place for pride, but rather for that bitter and lamentable complaint of the Apostle, That which I doe, I allow not; for the good that I would, I doe not, but the euill which I would not, that I doe; O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? Let vs consider not so much how farre we haue proceeded in the Christian race, but rather how much remaineth, and how farre we yet come short of the goale of perfection, according to the Apostles example; I count my selfe (saith he) not to haue apprehended; but this one thing I doe, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth to those things which are before, I presse towards the marke for the price of the high calling in Christ Iesus. Finally, though we had attained vnto some perfection, yet there were no place for pride, but rather for the greater humility, seeing wee are the more indebted vnto God for his abundant grace and bounty, for (as the Apostle saith) Who maketh thee to differ from another? And what haue we that we haue not receiued? now if thou diddest receiue it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not receiued it? For who is proud of his debts? or the more puffed vp, the more hee is obliged to another? And as we must in these respects in our greatest perfection bee humble towards God, so also towards our brethren, whom wee seeme to haue out-runne in the Christian race; seeing we haue out-stripped them, not in our owne strength, for naturally we are alike, dead in trespasses and sinnes, and the children of wrath as well as they, but it is Gods free grace that hath put this difference betweene vs; which if we be humble and meeke in spirit, he will daily continue with increase, but if wee waxe proud of our gifts and progresse in the wayes of godlinesse, and boast with the Pharise of our good deeds, preferring our selues before others whom wee thinke doe

doe come farre behind vs; God, who abhorreth pride aboue all other vices, because it most impeacheth his glory, can stint his bountie, and withdraw his strength, he can put a thorne in our foot which will stay our speed, and cause the messenger of Satan to crosse vs in our course, and by his buffetings to hinder vs in our race, till we haue learned to be more humble. As on the other side, hee can enrich those whom we haue most contemned with a large measure of sauing grace, and put such vigour and vertue into them by his holy Spirit, that they shall as much out-strip vs in the wayes of godlinesse, as before we seemed vnto our selues to haue out-runne them.

The last thing required vnto this godly life is, that we propound Gods glory as the maine end of all our actions, not doing them for worldly respects, or our owne profit either temporall or spirituall principally, but that Gods will may be done in them; for he is the summum bonum, and supreme end of all things, and for his glory we were elected, created, redeemed, iustified, sanctified, and shall be glorified. And when we haue attained to heavenly happinesse, and haue the possession and fruition of Gods euermlasting Kingdome, the maine end of all our glory shall be, to glorifie God, who hath thus aduanced and glorified vs. For the four and twenty Elders (in the Reuelation) fell downe before him that sate on the throne, and worshipped him that liueth for euer and euer, and cast their crownes before the throne, saying: Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receiue glory, and honour, and praise; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created. The which their practice wee must imitate in the Kingdome of grace, if euer we meane to raigne with them in the Kingdome of glory; labouring to do Gods will in earth, as it is done in heauen, with all alacrity and cheerefulnesse, speed and diligence, that his name may bee hallowed and glorified, and his Kingdome aduanced and magnified, as we beg in the Lords prayer. For as it is the subordinate end of our election, that we may be holy, so the maine and supreme end of this end is, that our holinesse and glorification may be to the praise of the glory of Gods grace, who of his free mercy hath sanctified and glorified vs. And therefore in all our actions we must propound Gods glory as the supreme end of them, according to that of the Apostle: Whether ye eate or drinke, or whatsoeuer ye doe, doe all to the glory of God. So our Sauour commeth vnto vs, that our light should to this end shine before men, that they seeing our good workes, may glorifie our Father which is in heauen. And the Apostle Peter exhorteth vs, to haue our conuersation honest among the Gentiles, that whereas they speake against vs as euill doers, they may by our good workes which they shall behold, glorifie God in the day of visitation. And if thus by our godly liues wee glorifie God on earth, he will glorifie vs in heauen; but if in leading these liues, we Pharisaically aime at our owne glory, we haue all the reward which we can expect; or if neglecting this maine end, we principally aime at our owne good, which should be subordinate vnto it, as the satisfying of Gods iustice for our sinnes, to be registred in the Calender of the Saints, or to merit and purchase for our selues the Crowne of eternall blessednesse, we shall hereby derogate from the glory of Gods free grace, and the all-sufficient merites and satisfaction of Iesus Christ, and so, after all our paines and labour, be viterly frustrate of our hopes.

CAP. III.

Of the maine matter of a godly life, namely, that it must be framed according to Gods will, in holinesse, righteousnesse, and sobriety.

§. Sect. I.
That wee can no otherwise
please God,
then by framing our liues
according to his will.

WHat the person must be that is to leade a godly life, and how he ought to bee qualified that must offer vnto God any acceptable seruice, wee haue shewed in the former Chapter. And now it remaineth that we intreate of the latter part of the description, wherein the actions which in this life are to be performed, are generally expressed. And heere two things are to be considered, first, the matter of this godly life, or the maine duties which are to be performed; and secondly, the forme and manner how they ought to be done. The matter is either generally, or more speciall. Generally, it is required, that we please God in all things, conforming our wills and actions, our thoughts, words, and workes, in all holy obedience to his will, leauing and forsaking whatsoeuer is displeasing vnto him, and repugnant to his holy will and commandement, and contrariwise embracing and practising whatsoeuer is acceptable in his sight; for his will is the perfect rule of righteousness, and whatsoeuer agreeth with it, is iust and good, but whatsoeuer swarueth from it, either on the right hand or the left, is crooked, cuill, and wicked, and consequently odious and displeasing in his sight. And therefore if we would please God, we must in the first place deny our selues and our owne wills, saying with our Saviour, Not my will, but thine bee done; neither must we aske counsell of carnall reason, nor when we know Gods will, dispute with flesh and blood, whether it be fit or vnfit, profitable or vnprofitable, reasonable or against reason, to doe that which God commandeth, but we must yeeld vnto it absolute obedience, doing Gods will, as the Saints and Angels doe it in heaven, cheerefully and readily, without gaine saying, doubting, or replying. For if earthly Princes will not indure to haue subiects scan their Lawes, nor examine their Proclamations, to see with what reason they command, but require absolute obedience in all things not repugnant to the Law of God, and will not bee ruled according to their subiects best intentions, but will haue their obedience squared by their Lawes: If euery master in a family will bee serued according to his owne pleasure, and will not for matter or manner leaue it to his seruants choise, to performe what seruice best sorteth with their owne humour and liking; And if the Captaine of a company, or Generall of an Armie, will not excuse in a Souldier the neglect of their commands, vpon the fairest preterence, but seuerely punish euery prosperous disobedience, and succesfull disorder with great severity, then how much lesse will the King of kings indure to haue his will neglected, and ours preferred in his seruice? And how much more will he who is the Lord of hostes, be displeased with vs, if in our spirituall warfare we regard not what he commandeth, but performe such seruice as best suiteth with our owne conceites. No man that warreth (saith the Apostle) intangleth himselfe with the affaires of this life, that hee may please him who hath chosen him to be a Souldier; and if a man strue for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except except he strue lawfully; that is, according to the orders appointed by him who is master of the games. And therefore let vs not thinke to haue the Crowne and Garland of happinesse, if we stint God of this royaltie and priuiledge which we giue vnto men, nor struing for victory according to his will, nor offering vnto him that seruice which he requireth, but such as seemeth good in our owne eyes.

Now whereas I say that we must please God in all things by doing his will, I doe not heereby vnderstand his secret will, which being vnknowne to vs we cannot obey. Neither doth this will appertaine to vs, according to that, The secret things belong vnto the Lord our God, but those things which are reuealed, belong vnto vs and to our children for euer, that wee may doe the words of this Law. Nor doth it need our indeuour to bring it to performance: for who hath resisted this will of the Lord? What wisdom or vnderstanding can crosse his counsell? Seeing he who is infinite in power, and immutable in truth, hath said, My counsell shall stand, and I will doe all my pleasure. Yea this will is done by wicked men and the deuils themselves whether they will or no, and when they most seeke to resist it, they accomplish and bring it to passe. Neither are we with Euthusiasts and Familists to expect that the will, which must be the rule of our obedience, should be made knowne vnto vs by new reuelations: for the Lord hath once spoken vnto vs by his Sonne, the true and onely Prophet of his Church, and by him hath perfectly reuealed vnto vs his will and pleasure, with all things that are necessary for our saluation. All which is contained fully in the Booke of holy Scriptures which were indited by his Spirit, and written by holy men inspired thereby to this purpose, that reuealing perfectly the will of God, they might for euer serue to bee vnto the whole Church and euery faithfull member of it, the sole rule and squire of all their actions, from which they are inioyned vnder that great penaltie of Gods curse, not to swaue, either on the one side or on the other. So by Moses the Lord commandeth, that the people should hearken vnto his Statutes and Iudgements to doe them, and that they should adde nothing to the words which he commanded them, nor diminish ought from them; and restraineth them from their owne will in his seruice: Ye shall not (saith he) doe after all the things that we doe heare this day, euery man what is right in his owne eyes: whatsoeuer thing I command you, obserue to doe it; you shall not adde vnto it, nor diminish from it. So Iosuah is commanded to doe according to the Law, and not to turne from it, to the right hand, nor to the left. So Hierome speaketh to the same purpose; All things (saith he) are directed according to the rule, which sheweth whether they be crooked or straight. And so the doctrine of God is a certaine rule of speech, which iudgeth betweene things iust and vniust, which who so followeth, shall haue peace in himselfe, that passeth all sense and vnderstanding; and with it the mercy of God which is aboue all.

Vnto which testimonies diuers reasons might bee added, which euidently prooue, that we can no otherwise please God by our liues, then by framing them according to his will, and doing such seruice as in his Word he requireth, both in respect of the matter, and also the manner. As first, because heereby wee shall preferre our owne wisdom before the wisedome of God, neglecting that worship which he hath appointed, either in respect of the matter or manner, because in our foolish conceit we suppose that wee can deuise a better; which is such an indignity offered vnto his Maiestie, that no earthly Prince would indure it at the hand of his greatest subiects. Secondly, we shall hereby disgrace Gods Law and Word, which he hath appointed to be the rule of all our liues and actions, as though it were insufficient to that end for which God hath ordained it; whereas the Apostle telleth vs, that they are profitable for doctrine, reproofe, correction, instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may bee perfect, thorowly furnished vnto all good workes. And the Lord himselfe hath inioyned vs to goe vnto them as vnto the onely Iudge and counsellor, to be resolved in all our doubts, and directed in all our actions. To the Law and to the Testimonie. And our Sauour to the same purpose hath exhorted vs to search the Scriptures, because our ignorance of them, is the maine cause of all our errors both in doctrine and manners. Thirdly, whilest we neglect Gods Word in seruing him, and follow our owne inuentions, wee shall not doe Gods will, but our owne, and in stead of doing him seruice, we shall serue our owne lusts which are most opposite vnto him, committing heerein a grosse absurditie, in thinking to please God, by offering vnto him a seruice, not which he in his wisdom hath prescribed as most fit, but that which is deuised and appointed by our owne fleshly wisdom, which is enmitie against him, and our naturall imaginations, which are only and continually euill. Fourthly, if we neglect the direction of Gods Word, in performing seruice vnto him, though it bee, not in the matter, but the manner onely, God will neglect our seruice, as being meere will-worship, and not that which he hath appointed, according to his saying to the Iewes by the Prophet Esay, Who hath required these things at your hands? yea he will reiect it as odious and abominable, as he did the sacrifices of the Iewes, who in seruing him, chose their owne wayes, and in their hearts and soules still delighted in their abominations, when in outward appearance they seemed deuout in offering vnto him sacrifices and oblations, as elsewhere he protesteth by the same Prophet. Neither will our good meanings, blind zeale, and superstitious deuotion, make our will-worship accepted of God, seeing they are in themselves sinfull, and one sinne will not excuse another. Yea if we haue no better guides to direct vs, we shall for Gods true seruice, imbrace, and euen tire our selues in the seruice of the deuill, as we see in the example of the Iewes, whose blinde zeale misled them out of the way of saluation, into the way of destruction, whilest neglecting the righteousnesse of faith in Iesus Christ, they indeuoured to establish their owne righteousness. And of the Apostle Paul, who by an ignorant zeale was made (as hee confesseth) euen mad against the Saints, and with all raging crueltie, set himselfe to destroy the Church of God. And finally, of those honourable women spoken of in the Acts of the Apostles, who out of their blinde deuotion, raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts. Fifthly, if wee serue not God according to his will and Word, but according to our owne good meanings and blinde deuotions, it will not be pleasing to God, as not being done in faith, but doubtingly, not knowing whether the duties which which wee performe, bee agreeable to his will or no: or rather without doubting we may know, that our seruice is not according to Gods will; and therefore displeasing vnto him, seeing he hath perfectly reuealed his will in his Word, both concerning that which he would haue vs doe, and that which he would haue vs leaue vndone; and consequently, such seruice is not only without, but contrary to faith, and most odious vnto God. Sixthly, all our paines taken in this seruice, which is not warranted by Gods Word, but done according to our own inuentions, good meanings, and traditions of men, are in vaine, and all our labour lost, which is thus spent in will-worship and blinde superstition; according to that of our Sauour, In vaine they worship me, teaching for doctrines mens precepts. Yea they are not onely vaine, and as the Apostle speaketh, perish in the vsing, but euill, both simply and by accident: for who can bring good out of euill? that which is cleane, out of that which is uncleane? or spirituall seruice vnto God, out of the forge of our carnall reason and euill imaginations? seeing our Sauour hath taught vs, that, that which is of the flesh, is flesh; and that which is borne of the Spirit, is Spirit. And as it is simply euill in respect of the euill fountaine from which it springeth, so also accidentally, in that it is preferred before the Word and will of God, and by taking place of it, doth cause it to be cleane thrust out of doores, as we see in the example of the superstitious Pharises, who in setting vp their owne traditions, made Gods Commandements voyd and of none effect; and of the Papists, who by making roome for their blinde deuotions, haue quite exiled all the parts and meanes of the true seruice of God. In which regard, all the labour which is thus spent, doth not only not please God, and so lose all reward, but much displease him and prouoke his wrath, and pull downe his heauie iudgements vpon all such as tender such seruice vnto him, both in this life and the life to come. Of the former we haue an example in Nadab and Abihu, who were consumed with fire from heauen, because they offered strange fire vnto God, and did not vse that fire which he had sent downe from heauen to this purpose. In Saul, whose kingdome was rent from him, either for offering sacrifice himselfe which did not belong vnto him (for which sinne also Vzziah was smitten with leprosie) or for not staying the time appointed by God and his Prophet Samuel. And in Vzziah, who was smitten with present death, because being but a Leuite, he tooke vpon him to touch the Arke, which none might doe but the Priests, and suffered it to be carried in a cart, which should haue beene borne vpon their shoulders. Vnto which punishments (and the like) of this life, God will adde those eternall punishments in the life to come, vpon those that adde vnto, or detract from his will, which the Apostle Iohn threatneth against those who adde vnto; or detract from his Prophecie, namely, losse of heavenly happinesse, and all the plagues written in that booke, among which are the torments of hell fire, & euerlasting condemnation of body and soule. And therefore when we come thus farre, as to haue seruent desires and great deuotion to serue God, let vs take heed that the deuill doe not delude vs, by perswading vs through his instruments, to spend all our labour, not onely in vaine, but also to losse, nor to lay out our good intentions (as it were) good coyne, vpon the base trifles of humane traditions, will-worship, and our owne intentions, as worshipping of Saints and Angels, Masses, Pilgrimages, Popish Fasts, Penances, and punishing of our bodies, mumbeling of Latine Prayers without vnderstanding, satisfactions, and such like; seeing these are not onely not commanded, but expressely contrary to Gods will and Word. And the Apostle also hath giuen vs warning to take heed of, and auoid them, as hauing only a shew of wisdom, in will-worship, and humilitie, and not sparing of the body, and in truth are meere folly, being flatly opposit to the wisdom of God. But resolving to please God by leading a godly life, let vs make his will reuealed in his Word, the rule and squire of all our actions, resolving and endeavouring to do that which in this Word is commanded and inioyned, and to leaue vndone what in it is forbidden and condemned.

And thus we see what is the maine and generall matter of a godly life, namely, such a carriage and conuersation whereby we please God in all things, by doing his will reuealed in the Scriptures; more specially a godly life consisteth in our walking before him in the duties of piety, righteousness and sobriety, with faith, a pure heart, and good conscience all the dayes of our liues. In which words, three things are contained. First, the duties which in this godly life are to be performed. Secondly, the foundation vpon which they are grounded, and the fountaines from which they ought to flow. Thirdly, their time of continuance, and how long by vs they are to be performed. The duties of a godly life are all referred vnto three heads. First, piety towards God which compriseth in it all Religion, the whole worship and seruice of God both publike and priuate, with the matter, manner, time, meanes, and all circumstances, and in a word, all the duties required in the first table. Secondly, righteousness towards our neighbours, whereby we deale with them, as we would haue them to deale with vs, and giue vnto euery one their owne, behauing our selues iustly with all, and mercifully with all those who need our helpe. Thirdly, sobriety and temperance towards our selues, whereby we possesse our vessels in purity and honour, as it becommeth the Temples of the holy Ghost. Secondly, there is heere expressed certaine fundamentall vertues, vpon which, our vertuous and godly actions ought to be grounded, and from which they must spring and flow, if we would haue them acceptable vnto God; namely, a lively faith, without which wee cannot please him; a pure heart, from which as a fountaine floweth all true obedience; and a good conscience, purged from dead workes by the precious blood of Christ, which warranteth all our actions done in faith, as approoued of God; and so includeth and encourageth vs to bring forth the fruits of new obedience, when as wee know that our persons and all our actions are accepted of God in Iesus Christ. And lastly, heere is expressed the time how long wee are to continue in the doing of the duties of a godly life; namely, not for a while, no nor yet for a long time together, but indefinitely wee are to continue in bringing forth these fruits of obedience, throughout the whole course of our liues, and as the Apostle teacheth vs, neuer bee weary of well-doing. But of these points I shall haue occasion to speake more largely afterwards, and therefore will content my selfe for the present, thus briefly to haue touched them; for the explaining of the former description of a godly life.

C A P. III.

Of the forme and manner how all Christian duties ought to be performed, do namely, with fervency of desire, a settled resolution; and earnest endeavour to please God in all things.

And so I come from the matter of it, and the duties therein required; to speake of the forme and manner, how they may be performed; as that they may bee acceptable in Gods sight. And heereunto there concurre three things: First, fervencie of desire: Secondly, a settled resolution: And thirdly, an hearty and earnest endeavour to please God in all things by doing his will, in the duties of pietie, righteousness, and sobriety. First, our hearts must be inflamed with fervent desires to please God in all things, and to doe his will in as great perfection heere on earth, as the Angels and Saints doe it in heaven, although we cannot possibly in this state of sinne and corruption attaine vnto it. So the Church professeth of her selfe: In the way of thy iudgements, O Lord, haue we waited for thee, the desire of our soule is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee; with my soule haue I desired thee in the night, yea with my spirit within me will I seeke thee early. The which desires breake out into longing wishes after that perfection which we cannot as yet compasse, as we see in Dauid; O that my wayes were directed to keepe thy statutes! And are accompanied with bitter grieve and lamentable complaints, when as we finde them crossed with our corruption, and defeated by the tentations of the deuill and the world; as we see in the Apostles example; To will is present with me, but how to performe that which is good, I find not: For the good that I would, I doe not; but the euill which I would not, that I doe, &c. for I delight in the Law of God after the inner man, but I see another law in my members warring against the Law of my minde, and bringing me into captiuitie to the law of sinne, which is in my members. O wretched man that I am, who shall deliuer mee from the body of this death? And this fervent desire of the heart to please God by doing his will, is alwayes accompanied with an vndanted resolution and settled purpose of the will to shake off all delayes, and breake thorow all difficulties which hinder vs in our course, and with all care and good conscience, to vse all helpes, whereby we may be inabled and furthered in Gods seruice. And thus Dauid resolueth that he will keepe Gods statutes: I haue chosen the way of truth, thy iudgements haue I laid before me. I will runne the way of thy Commandements; when thou shalt enlarge my heart. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keepe it vnto the end. Giue me vnderstanding, and I shall keepe thy Word; yea I shall obserue it with my whole heart. And from this desire of the heart, and resolution of the will, there followeth an earnest endeavour in the whole man, of conforming all our powers and parts, words and workes, intentions and actions to the will of God, that we may in all things please him; and glorifie his name, by hauing the light of our liues shining before men; according to the exhortation of the Apostle; Whether ye eat or drinke, or whatsoever ye doe, doe all to the glory of God.

And in these desires, resolutions, and inducements doth consist the very forme and essence of a godly life, it being the top of that perfection which we can attaine vnto in this state of imperfection. This is that Euangelicall obedience which in the Gospel is required of vs; as we see in the Acts of the Apostles, where Barnabas exhorteth the Church of Antioch, not to performe that perfect obedience which the Law exacteth, which was a yoke too heauy for any to beare, but that with purpose of heart, they would cleaue vnto the Lord. Vnto which also the Gospel inableth vs, being made powerfull and effectuell by Gods grace, and the inward operation of his holy Spirit. This is that sonne-like obedience which God now requireth of vs, which if we performe, we and our seruice shall be accepted of God in Christ, our imperfect righteousnesse being couered with his perfect obedience, and our corruptions washed away in his blood. For he spareth vs, as a louing father spareth his sonne that serueth him, who in the duties which he requireth, respects his affection; more then the action, and the intention and desire of his heart to please him, more then of his abilities in performance; according to that of the Apostle; If there be first a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that hee hath not. An example whereof we haue in Dauid, who hauing in his heart a desire and resolution to build the Temple, though he did it not, was accepted and rewarded of God, as if he had built it. And in Abraham, whose resolution to sacrifice his sonne, was as pleasing in Gods sight, as if he had beene sacrificed. Now the reason why our desires and resolutions are so acceptable vnto God, is first, because they are the chiefe seruice of the heart, which the Lord respecteth aboue all other parts and outward performances. And secondly, because all our inducements and actions are according to our desires, either forward and seruient, or slacke and remisse. For as Philosophie teacheth, the loue and desire of attaining to the end, is the first cause in the intention of the agent, which setteth him on worke, and according to the greatnesse of this loue and desire, to the end at which wee ayme, such is our care and diligence in the vse of all good meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto it. Moreouer, as it will make our persons and actions accepted of God, so our prayers which God hath promised to heare and grant. According to that of the Psalmist; Lord, thou hast heard the desire of the humble; thou wilt prepare their heart, thou wilt cause thine eare to heare. And againe, He will fulfill the desire of them that feare him, he will heare their cry, and will saue them. And the Wiseman telleth vs, that the desire of the righteous shall be granted, that is, not they who are righteous, according to the rigour of the Law, but they who are Euangelically righteous, and desire and labour to attaine vnto it, as it is expounded in the prayer of Nehemiah, O Lord, I beseech thee, let now thine eare be attentive to the prayer of thy seruant, and to the prayer of thy seruants, who desire to feare thy name. And consequently, this being one of their most principall desires, that they may be so freed from their corruptions and imperfections, as that they may performe vnto God that perfect obedience which the Law requireth, and their soule longeth after; the Lord will satisfie satisfie it; and though for a time they bee turmoiled and humbled in the sight and sense of their corruptions, yet by degrees he will bring them vnto this perfect age in Christ, and to that height of perfection which they so much desire, when as having put off, with their mortalitie, all reliques of corruption, they shall be clothed with those long white robes of perfect holinesse in his heavenly Kingdome. Vnto which happy estate in the meane time, their longing and thirsting desires doe giue them full title and interest: for they are blessed, not who are replenished with perfect righteousness, but who hunger and thirst after it, as our Saviour hath taught vs.

But yet, that we may not in our carnall sloth and security deceiue our selues with shaddowes in stead of substances, we are to know, that not all kind of desires, resolutions, and induours are acceptable vnto God, nor make vs to be accepted of him, but those only which are sound and solid, sincere and vpright; vnto which, diuers properties are required. First, that they be not taint and weake, fickle and slight; but strong and vehement, earnest and feruent, like the desires of women with child, which are euen heart-sicke, vnlesse they be satisfied in the things which they long after, as Dauid implyeth where he saith, Behold, I haue longed after thy precepts, quicken me in thy righteousness. And againe, My soule fainteth for thy salvation, but I hope in thy Word, that is, thy promise, whereby thou hast assured me that thou wilt satisfie my desire. They must not be inferiour to the desires of worldlings, seeing the things desired are so much superiour, exceeding them in excellencie, profit, and permanencie, as farre as heauen exceedeth earth. Now we know that the desires of worldlings after their riches, pleasures, and preferments, are so feruent and earnest, that they wholly take vp their thoughts in thinking of them, and their care in compassing them. Neither is there any paines so great, or danger so desperate, which they will not venter vpon, but night and day, by sea and land, labour after that which their soule loueth. They must be like the desires of the Spouse in the Canticles, which made her sicke through their feruent heate, and ready to swoone, had she not bene stayed and refreshed with the wine and apples of spirituall comforts. They must so enlarge our hearts, that they will be ready to breake, if they be not replenished and mollified with the oyle of Gods grace and holy Spirit, according to that of Dauid, My soule breaketh for the longing that it hath to thy iudgements at all times. They must (as they are compared) resemble hunger and thirst, which make men sicke till they bee satisfied, and so resolute, that nothing can withstand them, no difficultie or danger so great and desperate, which they will not hazard themselves vnto, that they may procure meate and drinke to preferue them from famishing; and with such care and diligence vse all meanes tending heereunto, as if they were religiously bound to doe it by a solemne oath; as we see in that desire and resolution of Dauid; I haue sworne, and will performe it; that I will keepe thy righteous iudgements. And thus Iob, to strengthen his desires and resolutions, in shunning sinne, and seruing God, bindeth himselfe and all his members heereunto by solemne couenant; I haue (saith he) made a couenant with mine eyes, why then should I thinke vpon a maiden?

Secondly, these desires, resolutions, and indeuours, must be intire and totall, both in respect of the subiect and obiect. For they must proceed from the whole heart and will, so farre forth as they are regenerate, and hold place in all our actions and indeuours. Neither will God in his seruice accept of a heart diuided, whereof one part is giuen vnto him, and another to the world; nor of a double heart, one while ayming at his glory, and another while at the glory of the world, sinister and earthly respects. Neither can we after this sort serue God and Mammon, nor with an vnsettled resolution, which now inclineth to Gods seruice, and soone after to the seruice of Satan, for the base wages of sinfull profits and pleasures; nor with such a lame indeuour, as maketh vs halt betweene gaine and godlinesse, Religion and worldlinesse, the praises of men, and the approbation of God and a good conscience. But we ought with such firme resolution goe out of the Sodome of sin, that we must not cast a looke backward, as relenting in our purpose, and seeming loth to leaue it; and so set our hearts and hands to the plow of Gods husbandry, that we neuer giue it ouer, till we bring forth plentiful fruits of holinesse, that so after, we may reape the haruest of heavenly happinesse. In regard of the obiect also, they must be intire, and haue respect vnto all Gods Commandements, desiring, resolving, and indeuouring to please God in all things, both in flying and forsaking all manner of sinne which he hath forbidden, and embracing and practising whatsoeuer duties he hath inioyned and commanded. So that it is not enough, if with Herod we serue God in some things, and take libertie to serue the deuill, the world, and our owne lusts in others; that wee leaue some sinnes which are lesse pleasant or profitable, and retaine others which bring more profit or delight; nor that wee embrace and practise some vertues and Christian duties, which are more easie and lesse costly, and neglect others which are more chargeable, and require greater paines and diligence. And when we are commanded by God to slay all the cursed Canaanites and Amalekites of sinfull corruptions, wee must not put some only to the sword, and keepe others aliuie to pay the tribute of pleasure or profit to our carnall lusts, neither kil and mortifie the leanest of this cursed cattell, which serue vs for little or no vse, and let the fattest liue, as best seruing to feede our fleshly appetite: but wee must deuote them all vnto God as an accursed thing, and desire and resolue (as much as in vs lyeth) not to leaue any one aliuie to carry tidings to the deuill of the slaughter of the rest. Yea if there be an Agag which is more potent and powerfull in vs then any other, we must take our first and chiefe care how that may be subdued and killed; or such an Herodias and darling sinne, that our flesh more doteth on, then any other of our corruptions; we must with most care and circumspection, yea with most hatred and detestation, in respect of our part regenerate, put that farthest from vs, as most hurting our Christian growth, and hindring our proceedings in the wayes of godlinesse. According to the exhortation of the Apostle; Let vs lay aside euery weight, and the sinne that doth so easily beset vs, and let vs runne with patience the race that is set before vs. As on the other side, the more difficulty wee finde in any holy duty, by reason of that auerseness which we feele in our corrupt nature vnto it, the more vehement must our desires, desires, resolutions, and indeuours be to imbrace and practise it; even as the trauailer taketh willingly most paines in going vp the hill that lieth in his way homewards, and the Water-man imployeth the more strength and indeuour in handling his Oares, when as he roweth against wind and tide, then when they both fauour and further him.

Thirdly, that our desires, resolutions, and indeuours may bee sincere and acceptable vnto God, it is required, that we as well ayme in them at the meanes whereby they may bee accomplished, as at the end, and take all occasions, and vse all helpes, which may inable vs to Gods seruice, and with like diligence auoide all lets and impediments, whereby we might be hindered in it, as we desire and indeuour to performe the seruice it selfe which God requireth. For where he inioyeth any duty, there he no lesse requireth the meanes and opportunities which inable vs thereunto; and to thinke that we can performe the dutie, and neglect these helpes, is to imagine that wee can liue long, and eate no food, or come speedily to our journeys end, and neuer trauaile in the way that leadeth vnto it. As therefore it was a vaine wish of Balaam to die the death of the righteous, when as he neuer tooke care to leade a righteous life: so is it no lesse vaine to desire, that we may leade the life of the righteous, when wee doe not desire, resolue, and indeuour to vse the meanes that inable vs to doe it. And such are the desires and resolutions of those, who out of blinde deuotion indeuour to leade a godly life, continuing in their ignorance, and neglecting all good meanes, whereby they might come to the knowledge of Gods will, and so conforme their liues in obedience vnto it; who thinking it enough to haue a good meaning, doe tyre themselves in their owne superstition, and spend all their labour in vaine, offering vnto God, in stead of his pure seruice, which hee hath commanded, their owne worship, and humane inuentions and traditions; which he hath so often in his Word forbidden and condemned. But quite contrary was the course and carriage of holy Dauid, in his desire and resolution to leade a godly life: for as he longed, and had his heart euen broken with the vehemencie of his desires, to keepe Gods Statutes and Lawes; so with like earnestnesse hee hungred and thirsted after the meanes which might inable him vnto it; which was, to come into Gods Courts, the visible place of his presence, to heare his holy Word read and preached vnto him. As the Hart (saith he) panteth after the water-brookes, so panteth my soule after thee, O God; my soule thirsteth for God, for the liuing God: When shall I come and appeare before God? And againe, O God, thou art my God, early will I seeke thee, my soule thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee, in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is, to see thy power and thy glory, so as I haue seene thee in the Sanctuary.

Fourthly, our desires, resolutions, and indeuours to leade a godly life, must not be lazie and luskish, idle and slothfull, but exceeding industrious, painfull, and diligent in the vse of all good meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto it. For being a Iewell of such price, we may not thinke to haue it for the bare wishing; but that we must compasse it with some difficultie, and haue our cost and labour, in some proportion, answerable to this precious pearle, which is much to bee preferred before many worlds.

And considering what cost and paines worldly men willingly vndergoe in pursuing their earthly desires, out of a bare, and (often) false hope to obtaine them; with what industry and labour, hazard and danger, the ambitious man aspieth vnto honours, the couetous man hunteth after riches, and the voluptuous man after pleasures; let vs be sorry and ashamed to thinke any paines or perill too much, in walking in the way of a godly life, which shall assuredly be crowned with glory and immortalitie, rewarded with heavenly treasures which will neuer fade, and with such cuerlasting ioyes, as our eyes haue not scene, nor our hearts conceiued. The soule of the sluggard (saith Salomon) desireth, and hath nothing, but the soule of the diligent shall be made fat. The which, as it is true in respect of earthly riches, so also of spirituall grace and the treasures of holinesse, the which we may long idly wish, and yet neuer inioy them; whereas if, as our desires be earnest, so our indeuours diligent and laborious, wee may haue much more assurance to be enriched with them, then to compasse, with all our paines, our worldly desires; seeing we haue Gods promises more absolute for them. Neither doe they flee their followers as earthly riches doe, which make themselves wings, and flie away as the Eagle towards heaven, deluding their hopes, which with most speede pursue them. Yea slothfull desires rather hurt, then helpe vs in the wayes of godlinesse, causing the sluggard to rest in them, as sufficient without vsing any meanes to haue them satisfied. In which respect, the saying of Salomon is truly verified of them; The desire of the slothfull killeth him, for his hands refuse to labour. For as his body must needs famish, who onely wisheth meate, but vseth no indeuour to satisfie his hunger; so his soule will soone bee deprived of the spirituall life of grace and godlinesse, who idly desireth to bee replenished with this spirituall foode, and taketh no paines to attaine vnto it. The Kingdome of God (saith our Sauour) suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. Neither shall they enter into it, who sit downe idly, and cry out, Lord, Lord, open vnto vs, that is, content themselves with a bare profession of Christianity, and labour not to doe the will of our heavenly Father, but they who strine to enter in at the straight gate, and take much paines in trauailing that narrow path of righteousnesse which leadeth to Gods Kingdome.

Lastly, our desires, resolutions, and indeuours, must not be by fits and flashes, one while hot and earnest, and another while cold and remisse; but constant and durable, like those in couetous men, which neuer cease, till they be satisfied, or rather because they can neuer be satisfied whilest we liue on earth: therefore they must neuer cease, but the more wee haue of these spirituall riches, the more earnestly we must desire and indeuour to haue them still increased. For this life is not the time of our perfection, and full age in Christ, but of spirituall growth in grace, from strength to strength, and from a lesser, to a greater measure of godlinesse and righteousness. We must not, like those who are sicke of an ague, be one while cold, and another while hot, nor haue a good day for Gods seruice, and an ill day for the seruice of the deuill and the world: for this were a sickness, and no spirituall health, which would prepare vs for death and destruction, and not for life and happinesse. Neither will God euer accept of it, who who can no more indure to haue thus our time, then to haue our hearts diuided betweene him and his enemies. But our soules (with Dauids) must breake for the longing that they haue vnto Gods iudgements at all times; we must with him resolute to keepe Gods statutes vnto the end, and haue our hearts inclined to keepe his statutes alway. Wee must not, like the hypocrites, of whom Hosea speaketh, offer vnto God a righteousness like vnto the morning dew, which vanisheth when the Sunne ariseth, but such as will indure the heate of the day, like the streames that flow from a springing fountaine. For the waters of life which Christ doth giue, are neuer dry, but shal be in him that hath them, a well of water springing up to euerlasting life. And the trees of righteousness, which are of Gods planting, are like those planted by the riuers side, which are neuer barren, but bring forth their fruit in due season; and they that be planted in the House of the Lord, shall like the Palme tree perpetually flourish, and bring forth fruit in their old age, as the Psalmist speaketh.

CAP. V.

*Of sauing knowledge, which is the first mayne ground of a godly life:
How necessary it is, and the causes of it.*

Having explained the description of a godly life, and in part shewed what is required in him that is to leade it, and wherein it principally doth consist; wee will now proceed, and more fully handle some mayne poynts, before briefly touched, which are necessary to be knowne of him, who desireth to make any progresse in the wayes of godlinesse. And heere two things come chiefly to be considered. First, the grounds. And secondly, the parts of a godly life, which containe the duties that are to bee performed by those who leade it. The grounds of this godly life, are certaine fundamentall vertues whereupon it is built, and from which as living fountains; all other vertues and holy duties doe spring and flow. And these are principally two. First, sauing knowledge of God, his will and workes. And secondly, a liuely faith in Iesus Christ. From which, two other maine graces arise, which as principall causes produce all speciall duties of a godly life, namely, First, a sanctified heart purified by faith. And secondly, a good conscience, which followeth our iustification.

The first maine ground of a godly life, is sauing knowledge, which is the prime vertue, and mother grace, from which all others take their beginning. It is the roote of this tree of grace, from which, being effectuell, liuely, and full of spirituall sap, faith springeth (as it were) the mayne body of the tree; and from it all other vertues and graces, like the boughes and branches; and the profession and practice of Christianity in good workes, and the duties of godlinesse; like the leaues and fruits, doe proceed and grow. For first, we know God and his sauing attributes, and then by faith we apprehend and belecue them. And vvhien by an effectuell knowledge we conceiue, & by a liuely faith belecue them, as that Iehouah who is our God, is infinite in all perfection; omnipotent; omniscient, omnipresent, and all sufficient, most good and gracious, most mercifull and true, then doe we trust in him, loue him, and grow zealous of his glory, obey and serue him, praise and reioyce in him, and in all things submit our selues to his good pleasure. And so when we know and belecue the former attributes, ioyned with his iustice and hatred of sinne, they worke in our hearts the true feare of God, humility, and awfull reuerence; mouing vs to honour and worship him in spirit and truth, to imbrace and practise all vertues and holy duties, because they are acceptable vnto him, and to flye and forsake all vice and wickednesse, because they are odious in his sight. So that sauing knowledge, as the roote, doth comprize in it the life and sap of all other graces, whereof it is, that in the Scriptures it is put for them all, and comprehendeth in it alone, all Religion, and the duties of godlinesse. Thus the Lord prohibiteth vs to glory in our wisdom, strength, and riches; but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that hee vnderstandeth and knoweth me. And our Sauour telleth vs, that This is life eternall, to know God, and whom hee hath sent, Iesus Christ It is the maine ground and cause of all true obedience, and therefore the Lord, before he giueth his Law which hee would haue kept and performed, prefixeth a Preface, wherein he describeth himselfe, that his people might know him: I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, and out of the house of bondage. And David exhorting his sonne Salomon vnto Gods seruice, doth first require, that he should know him. And thou, Salomon my sonne, know thou the God of thy father, and serue him with a perfect heart, and a willing mind. Neither will any doe him chearefull seruice, till they know what a mighty and gracious Lord he is, and what bountifull wages, both of temporall and eternall blessings, hee giueth vnto those that faithfully serue him. It comprizeth in it the summe of all Gods promises, concerning his gifts temporall and spirituall, in the couenant of Grace. I will put my Law in their inward paris, and write it in their hearts, &c. and they shall all know me, from the least of them, to the greatest of them, saith the Lord. It is the cause of all other vertues: for before we know them, we cannot so much as desire them, as our Sauour implyeth in his speech to the woman of Samaria, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Giue mee drinke, thou wouldest haue asked of him, and hee would haue giuen thee liuing water. More particularly, it is the cause of faith: for we cannot come vnto him, nor beleue in God, till we know him, and what hee is. And affiance; for as the Psalmist saith, They that know thy name, will put their trust in thee; for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seeke thee. Of our loue of God: for we must know how louing and louely he is, before we can loue him; and as the Apostle saith, We loue God, because hee loneth vs first. And the vsuall speech is, There is no loue of that, of which there is no knowledge. To which purpose Augustine saith, that we may loue things vnseene, but not vnknowne. Of our inuocation and prayer: for how shall they call vpon him, in whom they haue not beleueed? and how shall they beleue in him, of whom they haue not heard? It is the cause also of our conuersion vnto God, and of turning to him from our sinnes, by true repentance. For the first grace wrought in vs by the Spirit, is illumination, whereby our mindes are inlightened with a sight of our misery, and our hearts hearts inflamed with a desire to come out of it. And to this purpose it is said, that the Apostle Paul was sent vnto the Gentiles, first, to open their eyes, and to turne them from darknesse to light; and then to recover them, from the power of Satan vnto God, &c. In a word, by knowledge of God, we attaine vnto all grace and peace requisite to life and godlinesse; according to that of the Apostle, Grace and peace bee multiplied vnto you, through the knowledge of God, and of Iesus our Lord; according as his diuine power hath given vnto vs all things that pertaine vnto life and godlinesse, through the knowledge of him that hath called vs to glory and vertue. So that grace and glory, holinesse and happinesse, are deriued vnto vs by this saving knowledge; and that in such measure, as this knowledge is, vnto which we haue attained. Heere in this life our knowledge is but begun, and so with it our sanctification and glory; and that being but in part, these are imperfect also; but when we haue this knowledge in perfection, wee shall be perfect also in righteousness and blessednesse; and when the dim glasse is remooued, and we see God face to face; and know as we are knowne, then shall we in his presence haue fulnesse of ioy, and pleasures at his right hand for euermore. To which purpose, the Apostle also saith; Beloued, now are we the sonnes of God, and it doth not yet appeare what we shall be; but we know, that when he shall appeare, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.

Contrariwise, want of this knowledge, and ignorance of God, and his will, maketh vs strangers from God and the Common wealth of Israel, and howsoeuer we be the Church, yet to be no true members of the Church. For God hath promised to all that are in the Couenant of grace, that hee will put his Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and that they shall all know him, from the least of them, to the greatest of them. And our Saviour saith, that he knoweth all the sheepe of his fold, and is knowne of them; and that they know his voyce, and are able to discern it from the voyce of a stranger. And as it makes vs strangers from God, and the Couenant of grace, so also from the life of God, or the godly life which he commandeth, as we see in the example of the Gentiles, who, having their understanding darkned, were alienated from the life of God, through the ignorance that was in them, because of the blindness of their heart. And contrariwise, thrusts vs headlong into all manner of sin; for as the Apostle saith in the same place, When the Gentiles, through their ignorance, were thus estranged fro the life of God, they became past feeling, and so gaue themselves ouer to lasciuiousnes, to worke all uncleannesse with greedinesse. So Hosea, hauing set downe a Catalogue of many grievous sins, which made the Iewes liable to Gods heavy iudgements, doth after shew, that the cause of all their sin and punishment was, because they lacked the true knowledge of God in the land. Whereof it also is, that sinners of all kinds, are included vnder the name of ignorant persons, who know not God. So the Psalmist: Poure out thy wrath vpon the heathen that haue not knowne thee, and vpon the kingdomes that haue not called vpon thy name. And the Apostle saith, that the Lord Iesus shall come with his mighty Angels in flaming fire, to take vengeance on them that know not God. And therefore if we would haue any portion in Gods saving graces, or part in heavenly glory; if we would not be strangers from God, and aliens from his Church; if we would performe any duty of a godly life, or not be caried headlong into all wickednesse, if we would not be subiect to Gods iudgements, and fearefull destruction, nor exposed to the imprecations of the faithfull in this life, nor to the vengeance of a terrible Iudge, when Christ shall appeare at his second comming; let vs not liue in ignorance, but vse all our indeuour to attaine vnto the saving knowledge of God and his will. Neither let vs with ignorant people, content our selues with our own good meanings and blind deuotions, as our guides in godlines; for then our seruice of God will be but will-worship, and the carnall conceits of our owne braines; and all our Religion, being nothing else, but bodily exercise, and ignorant superstition, will be reiected of God, as odious and abominable.

Seeing therefore knowledge is so necessary vnto a godly life, we will a little further insist vpon it, shewing what it is, and the nature and properties of it, whereby we shall be the better able to labour after it in the vse of all good meanes, and know to our comforts, when we haue attained vnto it. Saving knowledge then is a grace of God, wrought in vs by his holy Spirit, which enlighteneth our minds, to know those things which are reuealed of God and his will, by his Word and workes, that we may make an holy vse of it, for the sanctifying of our hearts, and direction of our liues, in all duties of holinesse and righteousness. Whereby we may perceiue, that not nature, but God onely is the Author and efficient cause of this knowledge, and so much onely doe we know of God, as we are taught of God. According to that couenant of grace, in which God promiseth, that hee will put his Law in our inward parts, and write it in our hearts, and that wee shall know him from the least to the greatest. So our Sauour speaking of his Elect, saith, that they all shall be taught of God. And againe; No man knoweth the Sonne but the Father, neither knoweth any man the Father but the Sonne, and he vnto whomsoever the Sonne will reueale him. Neither is this knowledge a naturall habit of the minde, but a grace of God, which is not purchased by vs or our owne merits, or therefore bestowed vpon vs rather then others, because God foresaw, that we would vse it when we had it, better then they, but Gods free gift promised in the couenant of grace. The which he worketh in vs first, by sending his Sonne, his true essentiall wisdom, who hath reuealed vnto vs his Fathers will, and being the great Prophet of the Church, hath made knowne vnto vs the counsels of God, and all things necessary for our Saluation; and that not onely, nor chiefly, to the wise of the world, but to the weake and simple; according to that of our Sauour; I thanke thee, O Father, Lord of heauen and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast reuealed them vnto babes. And secondly, his holy Spirit, who was and is sent from the Father and Sonne, to teach and lead vs into all truth, as our Sauour promised his Apostles. And this is that holy anointing, of which the Apostle speaketh, whereby wee know all things, and neede not that any teach vs, but as this anointing teacheth vs of all things. And that Collyrium, or precious eye-salue, which Christ promiseth to giue to the Angell of the Church of the Laodiceans, to enlighten their blind eyes in the knowledge of the truth. So the Apostle telleth vs, that we cannot see nor conceiue the things which appertaine to Gods Kingdome, but God hath reuealed them vnto vs, by his Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, euen the deepe things of God. And hence it is, that he

he is called the Spirit of wisdom, revelation and illumination, and the Spirit of truth, because he is both light and truth himselfe, and also enlighteneth our mindes which are naturally full of darknesse, and leadeth vs into all truth needfull for our saluation. And therefore if we would haue this saving knowledge, we must goe to the chiefe Fountaine and Author of it, and pray often and earnestly that he will for his Sonne, and by his holy Spirit take away our naturall blindnesse, and open our eyes, that we may see the wonderfull things of his Law.

The instrumentall causes of this knowledge, are first, the Booke of nature: secondly, the Booke of Grace. The Booke of nature, for euen this light being sanctified by Gods Spirit, is helpfull to the regenerate for the reuealing of God and his will vnto them: And that both the eternall booke of nature, which is the conscience, and the externall Booke, which is the great volume of the creatures. For if there be in all men some reliques of the light of nature shining in their consciences, which conuince them that there is a God, and that this God is most good, powerfull, iust, bountifull, a liberall rewarder of good, and reuenger of euill, according to the saying of the Apostle; That which may be knowne of God, is manifest in them: for God hath shewed it vnto them; then how much more clearely doth this light shine in the faithfull, when as it is renewed and made much brighter and clearer by Gods holy Spirit? The Booke also of the creatures doth conuince all men that there is a God, and that he is infinite in wisdom and power, omnipresent and full of goodnesse; according to that of the Apostle; The inuisible things of him from the creation of the world, are cleerely seene, being vnderstood by the things that are made, euen his eternall power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse. And therefore how much more may the faithfull profit by learning and reading this Booke, who haue the holy Spirit for their Tutor, which openeth their eyes, that they may see Gods wisdom, goodnesse and power shining in them; and their hearts, that meditating on them, they may make an holy vse of this knowledge, for the stirring of them vp to render vnto God prayse and thanksgiving? The Booke of grace also is either the internall writing of Gods Law and will, in the heart and inward parts, by the Spirit of God, which the Lord promisseth to doe in the covenant of grace; or the outward Booke of the holy Scriptures, in which are contained all things necessary to be knowne of God and his will, for the saluation of our soules. And lastly, Gods Ministers are his instruments whereby he reuealeth himselfe and his will vnto vs; who doe expound vnto vs his written Word, and vnfold the mysteries and difficulties thereof that we may vnderstand them. And therefore if we would attaine vnto the knowledge of God and his will, we are to vse the helpe of those instruments which he hath ordained for this purpose; especially we are to desire that inward writing of the Spirit in our hearts, and to make vse, by reading, and meditation, of the Scriptures, and by often hearing of them expounded and applied vnto vs by Gods faithfull Ministers.

That there is a God, and how we may know
it.

And these are the causes of saving knowledge. The object of it is God, his will and workes. Where first we are to know, that there is a God, who is to be worshipped and served of vs. Vnto which we attaine by the light of nature, which reuealeth this principle vnto vs, and conuinceth all men of this truth, by the Booke of the creatures, in which the infinite wisdom, power and goodnesse of the Creator shineth; by the terrours of conscience following the commission of heynous sinnes though neuer so secret; by the series and dependancy of causes one vpon another, in the disquisition whereof there is no end, till we come to the cause of causes, who hauing his being of himselfe, giueth being vnto all things; by the goodly order which may be obserued in the creatures, and the motion of the heauens and the celestiall bodies; by the small causes, one thing being referred to another, till wee come to the summum bonum and supreme end of all things, which is God; by the accomplishment of Prophecies foretold long before their euents; by the consent of all Nations, in acknowledging this principle; and finally, by the iudgements and punishments executed vpon the wicked, euen in this life: by all which we come to the cleare vnderstanding of this truth, that there is a God; although in truth it is so euident in it selfe, that no argument can be brought to illustrate it, seeing nothing is so cleare and manifest.

§. Sect. 2.
Who this God is, and how he may be described.

John 4.23.

Secondly, we are to know what this God is, or rather who he is; For what he is in his owne essence, he hath not reuealed in the Scriptures, neither are we capeable of this knowledge, nor any other creature, seeing he is infinite and we finite. But who he is, he hath made knowne in his Words, namely, that he is Iehouah Elobim, a Spirit infinite in all perfection, one in nature, and three in persons, the Father, Some and holy Ghost. By which description it appeareth, that God is primum ens, and the first being, who hath his essence of himselfe, and giueth being to all things, as his name Iehouah signifieth; that he is vncreated, and a Spirit, as our Sauiour, the wisdom of the Father, hath made him knowne vnto vs, not so much thereby shewing his essence what he is, which is ineffable and incomprehensible, as distinguishing him from all corporall substances. That he is but one, because he is infinite in all perfection, wisdom, power, presence and the rest: and it is against the nature of infiniteness to be more then one; because hee made and gouerneth all as supreme Monarch, in which Monarchy there can be no copartners; and because he is the cause of causes, from which all things haue their being, and vpon which they wholly depend.

§. Sect. 3.
Of Gods attributes, and how they are ascribed vnto God.

Thirdly, we must know, that this diuine essence is infinite in all perfection. The which perfection is seene in his properties, which are not properly in God, who is all essence and no qualities: for whatsoeuer is in God, is God, but according to the capacity of our shallow vnderstanding: neither doe they differ from his essence, nor one from another; for God is one, and of a most simple nature, admitting no diuision into parts, faculties or properties, nor yet any essentiall distinction, but onely in our comprehension or maner of vnderstanding. So as we must not take his properties to be any parts of his essence, seeing euery essentiall proprietie is his whole essence, and therefore howsoeuer distinguished in respect of his diuers manner of working towards the creatures, yet not in themselves, but are inseparable one from another. In which respect, the wisdom of God, is the wise God; the power of God, the powerfull God; and so in the rest. And his wisdom, power, mercy, goodnesse, iustice, truth, are all one in their essence, there being in God but one most simple and pure act, vnto which, diuers names are giuen in the Scriptures, to shew vnto vs how it is diuersly exercised towards the creatures.

Now these Attributes are of two sorts. First, primary: Secondly, secondary. Primary, are those which declare vnto vs the essence of God, as he is absolutely in himselfe, of which there being no similitude in the creatures, they are attributed vnto God alone, without communication to any other. And in this number are Gods Simplicity, Infinitenesse, Eternity, Immenstity, Immutability, and Omnipresence, all-sufficiencie, and omnipotency. His simplicity is an essentiall attribute, by which is signified that the diuine essence is vndiuided and absolute, without composition, parts or accidents, inuisible, impassible, and all essence, so that whatsoeuer is in God, is God. His Infinitenesse is, whereby is signified, that hee is in his essence vncircumscribed, and aboue all measure of time, place or any thing else, but simply immense and incomprehensible. The Eternity of God is an essentiall attribute, which signifieth that he is infinite and vncircumscribed by time, first and last, without beginning or ending, absolute without succession, wholly all, alwaies and at once. His immenstity is an essentiall attribute, whereby is signified, that the diuine essence is without dimension and circumscription of place, wholly euery where present, within the world, and without the world, contayning all things, and being contained of nothing. His Immutability is an essentiall property, whereby is signified, that the diuine nature being infinite, absolute, most simple and perfect, is subiect to no change of generation, corruption, augmentation, or diminution, passion or alteration, but euer remaineth one and the same. His all-sufficiencie is an essentiall property of the diuine essence, whereby is signified, that in himselfe alone he is most perfect and absolute, and in all things sufficient, both for himselfe and for all creatures. Finally, his Omnipotency is an essentiall property of Gods nature, whereby is signified his infinite and transcendent power, whereby he is able to doe all things which are not repugnant to his nature and will.

The secondary attributes of God, are those which are spoken of God in a secondary relation, as he is the first and the chiefe Agent working in the creatures, especially man, some similitudes and resemblances of his owne essentiall attributes, which are therefore (though improperly) called communicable, in respect of some analogie and likenesse that they haue with the properties which are in the creatures. For there is no perfection or good thing in them to be desired, of which the Idea and arch-type is not in God most absolute, infinite and eternall. But as they are essentiall properties of Gods nature, they cannot be communicated to any creature, seeing they are most simple and indivisible, but only (as it were) some shewes and shadowes of them; which in many respects differ from those attributes which are in God; for in him they are his essence, and by it he liueth, vnderstandeth, and is good, gracious and iust: but in the creatures they are qualities, and bare properties. In him they are all most perfect, infinite, absolute, and most excellent, immutable and eternall; in which regard he may be sayd, not only to be wise, iust, good and blessed, but wisdom, iustice, goodnesse and blessednesse it selfe. So that these secondary attributes in God, being his nature and essence, are to be vnderstood by the primary, as by their rule and measure, and therefore are to be attributed vnto him, most perfectly, simply, infinitely and absolutely: But in the creatures, the qualities which are some similitudes of these attributes, are mixt, imperfect, finite and mutable. In God all and euery his attributes being his essence, they can be but one, as his essence is one, simple and indivisible; so that by the same essence whereby he is wise, he is also true, and that, by which he is good, he is also iust, mercifull, and blessed: But in the creatures their properties are diuers, and differ from one another in their formes and operations. For by one faculty a man is wise, and willet by another, and his qualities of iustice, mercy, goodnesse, truth, are different properties one from another.

6. Sect. 6.

What Gods secondary attributes are, and how they may be described.

Now, these secondary attributes of God, though they be all but one in him, yet in our comprehension and conceit, who can only iudge of them according to their severall kinds of working towards the creatures, they are manifold, as Gods life, and immortality; his wisdom, truth, will, goodnesse, holinesse, beneficence, loue, grace, mercy, clemency, long suffering, patience, his iustice, anger and hatred; all which are needefull to be knowne of euery Christian, not onely that wee may take notice of Gods actions and operations towards vs, but also may accordingly frame our actions and liues, that so being agreeable to his pure and holy nature, they may be acceptable in his sight. And therefore I thought it necessary to describe them briefly and severally, referring the Reader, who desireth to haue them fully handled, to such Treatises as purposely intreate of this argument. ^a The life of God is an essentiall attribute: whereby is signified, that the diuine nature liueth, worketh and moueth in himselfe, and giueth vnto all things life and motion. ^b The immortality of God is his essentiall property: whereby is signified that he liueth eternally, and neuer dyeth, but hath, doth and shall for euer liue, worke and moue himselfe, and giue life, action and motion to all things that haue life and motion. ^c The wisdom of God is his essentiall property: whereby is signified, that God truly and perfectly with one eternall act of vnderstanding, at once doth know himselfe and all things; and that not onely externally, but also internally in their essence, not successiue by discourse of reason, but at once most distinctly and cleerely. Of which wisdom there are two parts. First, his ^d prescience, whereby he hath from all eternity, seene and known all things which are, haue been, or shal be, with infallible knowledge, as being all present to him, though past or to come, in respect of

of vs. Secondly, * his counsell, whereby hee resolueth to rule and gouerne all things in the best and most wise manner, for the setting forth of his owne glory. The ^e truth of God, is his essentiall attribute, whereby he is made known vnto vs, to be in himself most true in all his words and works, yea, truth it selfe, & the Author of all truth which is in the creatures. The ^s God, is his essentiall attribute, whereby is signified, that God with one will of most free and iust act, willett all things, approouing or disapproouing whatsoeuer he knoweth. The ^h goodnesse of God, is his essentiall property, whereby is signified, that he is infinitely good in and of himselfe, and the Author of all good, in and towards all the creatures. The ⁱ holinesse of God, is his essentiall attribute, whereby is signified, that his nature is wholly and most perfectly iust, infinite in all vertue, iustice, truth, mercy and purity, free from all vice, iniquity, and spot of any corruption, and therefore a louer of all purity and sanctity in the creatures, and a hater of all vice and impurity, as being contrary to his most holy nature. * The beneficence of God, is his essentiall attribute, whereby he is knowne to be in himselfe the fountaine of all bounty, and infinitely and absolutely good to the creatures, towards whom he exerciseth freely his beneficence and goodnesse. ^l The loue of God, is his essentiall attribute, whereby is signified, that he loueth himselfe chiefly, as being the chiefe goodnesse, and the creatures as they are good, freely approouing, rewarding and delighting in them, and willing and performing all good vnto them. The ^m grace of God, is his essentiall property, whereby he is known to be in himselfe infinite in grace, and extendeth his fauour and benignity freely vnto his creatures. The ⁿ mercy of God, is his essentiall property, whereby hee is knowne to be most pitifull in himselfe, and in his owne nature delighteth to helpe them that are in misery. The ^o clemency of God, is his essentiall attribute, whereby is signified, that he is in his nature most gentle, and benigne towards his creatures, in anger remembring mercy, and graciously pardoning vs when we deserue punishment, willing rather the conuersion then the death of sinners. The ^p long-suffering and patience of God, is his essentiall property, whereby is noted, that he is patient in bearing with sinners, expecting their repentance, that he may haue mercy vpon them. The ^q Iustice of God, is his essentiall attribute, whereby hee is knowne to be infinitely iust in himselfe, and exerciseth Iustice towards the creatures, being also the Author of all righteousness which is in them. The ^r anger of God signifieth, his iust and free will in punishing sinne, and all iniury offered against himselfe, or his Church and people. The ^t hatred of God, signifieth his iust will, whereby he disalloweth, detesteth, and decreeth to punish euill and sinne in his creatures.

And so much concerning Gods attributes, whereby his nature is made knowne vnto vs, that wee may accordingly serue him, and so carry our selues, as that we may bee acceptable in his sight. Now further we must know him in his persons, namely, that howsoeuer he is but one in nature and essence, yet he is distinguished into three persons, the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost. For the better vnderstanding whereof, we are to know, that a person in the deity is a subsistence in the diuine essence, comprehending the whole diuine nature and essence in it, but distinguished by an incommunicable property from other persons, vnto which it hath relation. Or it is the Godhead restrained or distinguished by his personall property. And therefore euery person, containing in it the whole diuine essence, it followeth, that whatsoever agreeth absolutely to, or is spoken of the whole diuine nature, in respect of its outward actions and workes towards the creatures, doth alike agree to euery distinct person, and whatsoever agreeth to, or is spoken of euery of the persons, that likewise agreeth to the whole diuine nature. And from hence also it followeth, that these three diuine persons, are in glory and all other attributes coequall, and in respect of time coeternal; but yet euery one is distinct frō other, by their personall property. So that the diuine nature being considered with the personall property of begetting, is the Father, and not the Sonne, nor holy Spirit; being considered with the personall property of being begotten, is the Sonne, and not the holy Ghost nor Father; and with the personall property of proceeding, is the holy Spirit, and neither the Father nor the Sonne. The Father then is the first person in Trinity, who hauing his being of himselfe, hath communicated his whole essence vnto the Sonne, and so hath begotten him by eternall generation. The Sonne is the second person in Trinity, who is begotten of the Father. The holy Spirit is the third person in the Trinity, proceeding from the Father and the Sonne, who is therefore called the Spirit, because he proceedeth, and (as it were) is breathed from them both; and the holy Spirit, because he doth immediately sanctifie the elect, and make them holy, and the Father and Sonne doe it mediately by him.

§. Sect. 8.

Of the knowledge of Gods workes, and first of his decree.

And thus haue we briefly spoken of the knowledge of God, in respect of his nature and persons: now with like or more breuity, we are to intreate of the knowledge of God, in, and by his workes and actions. The which are either internall, as the actions of the diuine persons one towards another; or externall, which are his operations and workes towards the creatures. And these are principally two. First, the decree of God. And secondly, the execution of his decree. The decree of God is an act of the diuine will, whereby he hath from all eternity purposed, that all should be done, which is, hath beene, or shall bee done, ordaining all things to a good end, and the meanes also, with all circumstances, whereby they attaine vnto it. And this is either common to all, or speciall to the reasonable creatures, as Angels and men. Gods decree, which respecteth men and Angels, is called predestination, which is Gods eternall purpose, whereby hee hath ordained the reasonable creatures to certaine ends, and to the meanes which conduce vnto them. Of which, there are two parts, election, and reprobation. Election is Gods eternall decree, whereby of his free grace, he hath purposed in Christ, to bring some to euerlasting life, and to the vse of the meanes, whereby they may attaine vnto it, to the praise of the glory of his grace. Reprobation is Gods eternall decree, whereby he hath purposed in his election to passe by some men, and to leaue them in their sinnes, that they may iustly be condemned, to the praise of the glory of his iustice.

The execution of Gods decree, is an action or worke of God, whereby in time, he bringeth to passe all that he hath eternally decreed, according to the counsell of his will. The which is either temporary or eternall. Gods temporary decree is generall or speciall. The generall, is either the creation of all things of nothing, or the gubernation of them, being made by his providence. The speciall execution of his decree, respecteth either Angels or men. To say heere nothing of Angels, wee are to know, that God having created the earth of nothing, did make man of the earth, in respect of his body, and breathing into him the breath of life, did create him a living soule; that man was created according to Gods owne image, in wisdom, holinesse, and righteousness, made Lord of all the creatures, and happie in the vision and fruition of God and his fauour, and of the ioyes and pleasures of Paradise. That being created good, and yet but mutable, God left him to the freedome of his will, and to be tempted of the deuill. Vnto which tentation when hee had yeelded, by transgressing Gods commandement, in eating of the forbidden fruit, he fell from this estate of happinesse, into the state of sinne, misery, and death. The which sin is imputed vnto vs who sinned in his loynes, he being no priuate person, but the roote of mankind; and the corruption of his nature, deriued vnto all his posterity by naturall propagation, the which we call originall sinne, whereby Gods image is defaced in vs, and we disabled vnto all good, and made prone vnto all euill. From which originall corruption, which is the fountaine of all maliciousnesse, hauesprung the cursed streames of actuall transgressions, whereby wee haue broken Gods whole Law, and euery commandement of it, in thought, word, and deed, both by omitting the duties which are commanded, and committing the sinnes which are forbidden. Whereby we haue made our selues subiect to the curse of the Law, and all the plagues and punishments therein threatned, both temporall and eternall; out of which miserable estate and condition, it was altogether impossible to recover by our owne meanes, or the helpe of any, or all the creatures.

And this was the execution of Gods decree, in respect of mans creation, fall, and misery. Vnto which, we must adioyne the knowledge of our recovery out of this wretched condition. To which purpose we must know, that when we were thus deeply plunged into this state of death and condemnation; and in respect of our selues, or any meanes of our owne, hopelesse, and helpelesse, for our recovery, it pleased the Lord, of his meere grace and free mercy, to send his Sonne into the world, to take our nature vpon him, and therein to worke that great worke of our redemption. The which hee did perfectly performe, both by his merits and efficacie. The former hee did by satisfying Gods iustice, both by his actiue obedience, in fulfilling the Law for vs, and by his passiue obedience, in suffering death in his body, and the anger of God in his soule. The which is a sufficient price of redemption for all that doe apply it, because he that did this for vs, was God and man. And so as his humane nature made him capeable of these sufferings, so the diuine nature, which was the Altar vpon which this sacrifice was offered, sanctified the gift, and gaue vnto it infinite value and dignitie, so as it became a sufficient and fit satisfaction for sinne. For as sinne being nothing in it selfe but a priuation, because of infinite guilt, in respect of the infinite Maiesty of God, offended by it, so the

the sufferings of Christs humane nature, though temporary, became of infinite value, in respect of the dignity of the person who suffered, being God and man. And as thus Christ saved vs by his merits, so also by his efficacie, applying the vertue of his merits vnto vs by his Spirit and Word; which begetting in vs a liuely faith, that bringeth forth the fruits of vnfeined repentance, we performe thereby the Couenant of grace, and so are made partakers of Christ and all his benefits, which are therein promised. For in the preaching of the Gospell, this couenant is proclaimed, and we are effectually called to the knowledge and participation thereof, God giuing Christ vnto vs to be our Sauour, and vs to Christ to bee saved by him, yea, vnting vs vnto him in one mysticall body, whereof hee is the Head, and we his members, by vertue whereof, as we are partakers of him, so haue we also right and interest vnto all his benefits. Of which vnion, the chiefe bond on Gods part, is his holy Spirit; and on our part, a liuely and iustifying faith; which is wrought in vs by the preaching of the Gospell; made effectually by the inward operation of the Spirit of God, and confirmed and increased by the vse of the Sacraments, which are the seals annexed to the Couenant, to assure vs that God will not faile to performe all his promises; And these things are the object of our saving knowledge, or the maine points which we are to know vnto saluation, and to inable vs to walke in the way of a godly life that leadeth vnto it. The which I would not heere haue touched; were not this knowledge necessary heereunto; or would haue handled them more fully and exactly, but that I feared, that they would cause this Treatise too much to swell, and farre to exceed the limits which I haue proposed vnto it; and also considered that there are already published many Catechismes and summes of Diuinity, in which, all men at their pleasure may finde these, and many other the like points of our Christian Religion thorowly discussed.

CAP. VII.

Of the quantity and quality of saving knowledge, and how necessary it is to a godly life.

§. Sect. I.
Of the quantity of knowledge, and the diuers degrees of it.

1. Cor. 13. 9, 12.
¶ 8. 2.

2. Cor. 5. 7.
Heb. 11. 1.

THe next point to bee considered in our knowledge, is the quantity and measure of it; the which is imperfect in the greatest perfection which in this life can be attained. For as the Apostle (though he had received abundance of the Spirit, and such reuelations as were not lawfull to bee vttered) confessed of himselfe; together with others, We know but in part; and see through a glasse darkely; and if any man thinke that hee knoweth any thing (namely in perfection) he knoweth nothing as he ought to know. For, we walke by faith, and not by sight. And, faith is of things vnseene, and not in vision and fruition. Neither can we attaine to perfect knowledge, vntill we attaine vnto perfect happinesse, which is not in this life, but the life to come, when we shall see God face to face, and shall know as we are knowne; not by the knowledge of faith, which is but by hearing, signes, semblances, and reuelations; but of vision, fruition, and most firme experience.

rience. For the perfection of our knowledge heere, consisteth most in the knowledge and acknowledgment of our imperfection, and not in the high degree of quantitie, but in the sincerity and truth. The which knowledge discovereth our ignorance, that we may bewaile it, and causeth vs (not in pride and selfe-conceit, to content our selues with that we haue, but seeing our imperfections) to labour in the vse of all good meanes, after a greater measure, till by attaining to one degree after another, wee doe in the end obtaine, with perfection of knowledge, perfect happinesse. But yet in this imperfect knowledge there are diuers degrees, which accordingly are diuersly required, that they may be acceptable vnto God, and sufficient for vs and our saluation. First, in respect of the diuers times of illumination; for in the twy-light of the Law, when as the Sunne was not yet risen, there was not so great a measure of knowledge required, as in the broad day of the Gospel, when as God requireth some proportion between our sight of knowledge, and the light of his truth shining vnto vs. Otherwise wee can haue no assurance that we are in the number of his Church; and of those with whom the Couenant of grace is made, vnlesse the Prophecies foretold of such, be verified in vs, and among the rest, that we, who are taught by his Sonne and Spirit, shall know God and his will in farre greater perfection, then they did which were vnder the Pedagogie of the Law. So in respect of the meanes, God requireth a greater measure, according to their greatnesse; expecting much, where he hath giuen much; as more of those where the Gospell is freely and openly preached, then of those, who liuing in times of persecution, haue it only by stealth, and with many difficulties and dangers. And in a flourishing Church (such as ours is) hee requireth the greatest measure, where hee hath planted the most faithfull Ministerie. And therefore in this cleere light of the Gospel, and liberall meanes which God alloweth vs, wee are to labour after a like measure of knowledge, as the Apostle exhorteth the Colossians, Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all wisdom: to which end, we must not cease to pray for our selues as the Apostle for them, that wee may be filled with the knowledge of Gods will, in all wisdom and spirituall understanding. Finally, that our knowledge may be acceptable, there is a diuers measure required, in respect of diuers callings. As that the Ministers must exceed the people, seeing they are appointed their teachers and guides, and the Priests lips must preserue knowledge, that the people may seeke the Law at their mouth. That the rich exceed the poore, because they haue more leasure, liberty, and opportunity to vse the meanes; that the husband exceed the wife, and the father the children, because they are bound by their places to teach and instruct them. And finally, that they who haue beene long Schollers in Christs Schoole, doe excell those who are nouices, and but newly admitted, for want of which proficiencie, the Hebrews are sharply reprooued by the Apostle. But yet wee are to know, that in all true members of the Church, who are of age and capacity, it is required, that they vnderstand the maine principles of Christian Religion, which are contained in ordinary Catechismes, that they may bee able to render an account of their faith to those that aske them; to instruct those who are vnder their government, and to know and discern the voyce of Christ from the voyce of a stranger, to try the spirits whether they bee of God or no, and not hand ouer head receiue whatsoeuer is deliuered by those who are in the habit and place of a Minister, but to discern, at least, in maine points necessary to saluation, the sound doctrines of their faithfull teachers, from the errours and vntuths of false seducers.

The last thing required in our knowledge, respecteth the quality of it; that it be sanctifying, effectuell, and sauing knowledge. Neither doth euery kind of knowledge make vs and our liues acceptable vnto God; for there is a false knowledge, consisting in vaine speculations, fables, quirkes, and conceits of wit, endlesse and vselesse genealogies, which minister questions, rather then edifying which is in faith; and making men rather more proud and contentious, then more holy and religious, which is odious vnto God. And there is a litterall or speculatiue knowledge swimming in the braine, which not being effectuell for the sanctifying of the heart, and amendment of the life, doth not profit, but rather hurt those that haue it, puffing them vp with pride, and making them disdain those that want it. The which, as it increaseth their sinne, because it is committed against knowledge and conscience, and leaueth men without excuse, so doth it make their punishment more grievous, and their condemnation more intolerable; for the seruant that knoweth his masters will and doth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes; and it shall bee more easie for Sodom and Gomorrah at the day of Iudgement, then for Orasin and Beshaida, because, hearing Christs Word, and seeing his workes, they repented not. This knowledge, though it be true in respect of the object, which is the Word and truth of God, yet is it vaine in regard of the effect, being vneffectuell to a godly life, and to the assuring vs of life eternall; in which, when we excell neuer so much, yet shall wee come short of many wicked men, who are in the state of death and condemnation, yea of the deuils themselves, who in theory and speculation know more then wee. Yea, in truth such knowledge is no better then ignorance in Gods estimate, seeing we know onely so much in Christianity as we bring into vse and practice, according to that of the Apostle; Heereby we doe know that wee know God, if we keepe his Commandements; he that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his Commandements, is a lyer, and the truth is not in him. And againe, Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not; whosoever sinneth (that is, in whomsoever sinne ruleth and reigneth) hath not seene him, neither knowne him.

And therefore if we would be accepted of God, and haue our liues and wayes pleasing in his sight, wee must not content our selues with such a knowledge as swims in the braine, but labour after such a sauing & effectuell knowledge, to be the guide of all our works and actions, which maketh vse of all we know, for the sanctifying of our hearts and affections, and the reforming of our liues and conuersations. For example, knowing that there is a God, we must worship and serue him, and professing him with our lips, we must not deny him in our liues. Knowing that he is a Spirit, we must not rest in bodily exercise, which profiteth nothing, but worship him in spirit and truth. Knowing that he is infinite and omnipresent, we must with Enoch walke with God, and in all things carry our selues, as before him. Knowing that he is all-sufficient, we must trust in him for all things, things, both in the presence and absence of inferiour meanes. Knowing that he is omniscient and the searcher of our inward parts, wee must approue our hearts as well as our workes vnto him, and make conscience of committing secret sinnes, as well as those which are open and manifest to the world. Knowing that he is omnipotent, we must depend vpon him for preferuation from all euill, and defence against all enemies; and that in greatest difficulties and dangers, because things, even impossible to men, are possible with God. Knowing that he is the chiefe Good, we must loue him aboue all things; knowing that he is true, yea truth it selfe, wee must beleue his Word and promises. Knowing that he is iust, we must feare to offend him; that he is mercifull, we must hope in him; that he is bountifull, we must do cheerefull seruice to so gracious a Master. Knowing that he is but one God, wee must worship him alone, and not false gods and grauen Images, and set vp no Idols in our hearts, as the earthly Mammon with the couetous, worldly honours and vaine glory with the ambitious, and carnal and sinfull pleasures, with those that are voluptuous. Finally, knowing that he is one in essence, & three in persons, we must worship the Vnity in Trinity. Knowing that God the Father, is our Father in Christ, we must reuerence, feare and loue him; that God the Sonne is our Redeemer, we must worship and serue him, in holinesse and righteousness, before him, all the daies of our liues; and knowing that the holy Ghost is our Sanctifier, and dwelleth in vs, wee must possesse our vessels in purity and honour, that wee may bee fit temples and habitations for this holy Ghost, &c.

And this is that sauing knowledge which is necessary to a godly life; the which we haue not of our selues; for euery man is a beast in his owne knowledge, a wise vnto euill, and vnto any good without understanding; but it is a grace and free gift of God, as before we haue shewed. And therefore if we would obtaine it, wee must carefully and conscionably vse all good meanes which hee hath appointed for this purpose. And first we must begge this grace of God by seruent and effectuell prayer, according to that of the Apostle Iames, if any man want wisdom, let him aske it of God, that giueth all men liberally, and vpbraideth not: and it shall be given him; as we see in the example of Salomon: and desire him to send his holy Spirit into our hearts, which will leade vs into all truth, and like a precious eye-salue, will open and illighten the blind eyes of our vnderstandings, that we may see the wonders of Gods Law. The which our prayer will be more effectuell to preuaile with God, if we craue this knowledge to this end, that we may glorifie him by it, according to that of Dauid, Make mee to vnderstand the way of thy precepts, so shall I talke of thy wonderous workes; and make our knowledge the rule of our liues, practising the things we know in the whole course of our conuersation, to which end Dauid beggeth it of God: Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I shall keepe it vnto the end; Giue me vnderstanding, and I shall keepe thy law, yea, I will obserue it with my whole heart. Secondly, let vs be diligent in hearing, reading and meditating of Gods Word, which giueth light and vnderstanding vnto the simple, and is sufficient to make vs wise in all things vnto saluation; and to make the man of God perfect and thoroughly furnished vnto all good workes.

Thirdly, we must vse holy conferences with others, whereby we shall enrich our mindes by communicating with them in their stocke, and more firmly imprint in our memories that which we know already, according to that of the Apostle, Let the Word of Christ dwell in you richly, in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another. Fourthly, we must labour to be reconciled vnto God in Christ, and then becoming his friends, hee will make vs acquainted with his will and counsailes, according to that of our Sauour, I haue called you friends, for all things that I haue heard of my Father, I haue made knowne vnto you. Fifthly, let vs labour to haue our hearts fraughted with Gods feare; for if any man feare the Lord, him shall he teach the way that he shall chuse. Sixthly, let vs decke our selues with humility, for hee giueth his grace to the humble, and teacheth him his way; he reuealeth his secrets to little babes, and hideth them from those who are wise and prudent in their owne conceits. And therefore we must be fooles to our selues and to the world, if we would be wise to God and our owne saluation. For there is no true wisdom, but in the saning knowledge of God and his will, and holy obedience yelded vnto them, according to that of the Prophet, The wise men are ashamed, they are dismayed and taken: lo, they haue reiected the Word of the Lord, and what wisdom is in them? Seuenthly, wee must labour after holines, for God reuealeth his mysteries vnto his Saints, but will not suffer his wisdom to enter into a prophane and malicious soule, as we see in the experience of the greatest Prelates and Doctors of the world, who liuing in prophanenesse and all sensuality, haue not so much feeling, sauing and experimentall knowledge of God, and the mysteries of his Kingdome, as many silly women and simple Ideots. Lastly, wee must put those things in practice which we already know, and then will God reueale more vnto vs, and fasten that which we know already, in our hearts and memories; for as our Sauour saith, If any man will doe his will, he shall know of his doctrine; and we shall with Dauid, be wiser then the ancient, yea, then our teachers, if wee haue more care then they in keeping Gods Commandements; For the feare of the Lord is wisdom, and to depart from euill, is understanding. And as Dauid saith, The feare of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, a good understanding haue all they that doe his Commandements.

CAP. VIII.

Of a liuely and iustifying faith, which is the second
mayne ground of a godly life.

§. Sect. I.

That without fayth we cannot performe any duties of a godly life.

Iob 14. 4.

E 15. 14.

He second mayn ground of a godly life, is a true and iustifying faith, without which we cannot performe any duty acceptable to God. For before our workes can be acceptable, our persons must be accepted; neither can the actions of an enemy be pleasing vnto him with whom he is at enmity, before they be reconciled: we must first bee good trees, before we can bring forth any good fruits, and haue our hearts sanctified by faith, before we can doe the workes of sanctification. For who can bring a cleane thing out of an uncleane? Not one, saith Iob. And what is

man, that he should be cleane? and he that is borne of a woman, that he should be righteous? As Eliphaz speaketh. First Abels person must be accepted, before his sacrifice could be acceptable. And we cannot be accepted in our selues, being dead in sinne, and the children of wrath as well as others, till being by faith vnited vnto Christ, God accepteth of vs in his best Beloued. Without faith therefore it is impossible to please God, for till our persons please him, our actions cannot. Againe, Whatsoeuer is not done offaith, is sinne; and our best actions which seeme most glorious in the eyes of men, will not indure the sight of Gods iustice, because they are imperfect, and stayned with the filth of our corruptions, till hauing applyed Christ vnto vs by faith, our vnrighteousnesse bee couered with his perfect righteousness, and our corruptions be washed away with his blood. And this was the cause why the Lewes, who followed after the law of righteousness, did not attayne vnto the law of righteousness, because they sought it not by faith in Christ, but by their owne workes of the law. Moreouer, we are wilde vines, till we be ingrafted into the true Vine Iesus Christ; and can bring forth no good fruit, for without him we can doe nothing. But being planted into this liuing Stocke by a liuely faith, we deriue from him such sap of grace, that wee are made fruitfull in all holy obedience; and as without him we can doe nothing, so with him we are enabled to the performance of all good duties, according to that of the Apostle; I can doe all things, through Christ that strengthneth me. Furthermore, faith is the prime grace that is (after we are illuminated) wrought in vs by the Spirit; and the onely liuing Fountaine, from which all true obedience floweth: for till it purifieth the heart, we haue not so much as a desire to please God in the performance of any duty; nor any power to produce a good action, till faith worketh by loue, and giueth vnto vs life and motion. And finally, without faith there can bee no loue, for wee cannot loue God, till first we be assured that he loueth vs; and without loue there can be no obedience, for loue is the fulfilling of the law, and therefore the want of loue, is the roote of all disobedience and transgression. But when by faith we are perswaded of Gods loue in Christ, then doe we loue God againe who hath so loued vs; and this loue worketh in vs a desire to please him in all things, both by hating and forsaking that which he hateth, and by louing and embracing that, which he loueth and commandeth. So that according to the measure of our faith, such is the measure of our loue; and if our loue be great or small, such also will be the fruits of our obedience.

Faith therefore and a godly life are inseparable companions, being vnited together in the bond of loue, which is stronger then death it selfe; and as a godly life cannot possibly bee without faith, no more then the fruit without the tree, or a well-built house without a foundation, or breath without a liuing body: So neither can a liuely faith be seuered from a godly life. For being by faith assured of Gods loue, we cannot chuse but loue him againe, and approue our loue by our new obedience. Being by faith ingrafted into Christ, and so become trees of righteousness, of Gods owne planting, we cannot but bring forth good fruits; For as an euill tree cannot bring forth good fruit, so neither can a good tree bring forth euill fruit, seeing the fruit alwaies followeth the nature of the tree. And as nien doe not gather Grapes of thornes, nor Figges of thistles; so neither Crabs of Apple-trees, nor wild and sowe grapes, of a good and fruitfull vine. Finally, faith and the fruits of obedience in a godly life, are the one the cause, and the other the effect, which haue such mutuall relation, that they argue and proue, eyther the presence or absence one of another; as if there be a Father, there must needs be a child of which he is a father; and if there be a child, there must needs be a father of whom he is a child. If there be a Sunne, there must needs be beames spreading from it; and if there bee beames, there must needs be a Sunne from which they are spread. If there be a living body, it must needs moue and breathe, and if there be a vitall breath, then must there needs be a living body from which it is breathed. And therefore as we may conclude that if there be no father, sonne nor body, there can be no child, beames nor breath; so where there is no faith, there can be no fruits of obedience, seeing these, as effects, doe arise and spring frō that cause. And contrariwise as we may infer, that if there be no child, beames or breath, there can be no father, light or body; so also that if there be no fruits of obedience in a godly life, there can be no faith, but onely some shew and shadow of it, as a man, though wanting a child, is like a father, the shadow of the sunne in the water, like vnto the sunne in the firmament, and a dead carkasse, like a living body, nor yet a godly life and true obedience, without faith, but some glorious resemblance of it in outward appearance. As a fatherlesse boy is like a child who hath a father, the lightening hath some similitude of the beames of the Sunne, and the breath of the winde, hath some resemblance to the breath of life.

Jam. 2. 18, 26.

§. Sect. 3.
That all those deceiue them
selues, who disioyne faith
from a godly
life.

Where by the way wee may perceiue that diuers sorts of men are notably deceiued, and coozen themselues of their owne saluation. As first, carnall gospellers and prophane protestants, who bragge of their faith as being strong and certaine, and yet liue in all impiety and vnrighteousnesse, bringing forth no fruits of their faith in good workes, and the duties of a godly life. Secondly, ciuill worldlings, and superstitious Papists, who pleasing themselues with their blinde deuotion, will-worship, humane inuentions, and some outward shewes of good workes, as fastings, penances, almesdeeds, hospitality and such like, doe thinke God also pleased with them, and will reward them with heavenly happinesse; when as they are destitute of true faith, and vtterly ignorant of God and his will, making no conscience of the duties of the first Table, to performe them in that manner which God hath required; but eyther neglect them altogether, or else doe them according to their owne meanings, wills, and humane inuentions and traditions. Thirdly, such as being touched with some inward guilt of conscience for their sinnes, through some affliction, or vpon the hearing of some powerfull Sermon, doe somewhat grieue for their sinnes, and so betake themselues, at least in many things, to a new course of life. The which, their sorrow accompanied with this reformation, they thinke pleasing to God, and sufficient to secure them of their saluation, though they bee destitute of the sauing knowledge of God, and a liuely faith in Christ, and doe these duties, not out of loue towards God, following their assurance of his loue towards them; but out of selfe-loue,

and seruile feare, either of temporall punishments, or eternall death and condemnation. But let them all know, that a lively faith, and a godly life, are inseparable companions, which neuer goe asunder; for as well may we part the heate from the fire, the light from the Sunne, and make a good tree, retaining still its nature, barraine of fruit, as separate true faith, and a godly life one from another. And therefore that the strong faith of carnall Protestants, is nothing else but fruitlesse security, and fond presumption; that the deuotion and good workes of ciuill worldlings and ignorant Papists, are blind superstition, will-worship, and glorious finnes; like trees that haue no roots, and faire buildings that haue no foundation; and that the sudden flood of sorrow, raised by some tempest of conscience, or storme of affliction, and springeth not from the fountaine of faith, is but worldly sorrow that causeth death, which commonly lasteth but a while; and when the causes of it are remooued, doth easily giue place to the contrary extreme of worldly reioycing, and carnall liberty.

Now the faith that is required vnto a godly life, as the ground and foundation of it, is either generall or speciall. The generall faith is a common gift of the Spirit, by which we belecue and giue firme assent to the whole Word of God, as true and certaine. It is called generall, because the object of it is generall, euen the whole Word of God, and euery part of it; and but a common gift of the Spirit, because it may be in the reprobate as well as in the elect, seeing it applyeth not Christ and his benefits for our iustification. For by this faith Ahab beleueing and assenting to the truth of Gods threatnings, outwardly humbled himselfe, and so adiourned his punishments. And the Nineuites beleueing the truth of Gods Word in the mouth of Ionas, repented, as they beleueed, that is, after a generall and legall manner, out of feare to bee attached with those heauy iudgements which were threatned, and so escaped them. Yet this faith is more then a doubtfull opinion, seeing it firmly assenteth to the whole truth, and is to be preferred before naturall knowledge and perswasion, grounded vpon the euidence of sense and reason, seeing it resteth vpon the sole authority of Gods infallible truth, and consequently, is more firme and vndoubted, because sense and reason may be deceiued, but the truth of God can neuer faile. Againe, though it be not a sanctifying gift of the Spirit, yet it is more properly then the other, a gift of the sanctifying Spirit, and necessary vnto iustifying faith, as being a degree leading to it; as also vnto a godly life, seeing it is required, that not onely all wee doe, be agreeable to the Scriptures, but also that we beleuee and be perswaded, that they are agreeable; for as the Apostle teacheth vs, whatsoeuer is done in doubting, whether it please God or no, and hath not this warrant of faith to make vs confident, it is, though materially a good action, yet formally no better then sinne in Gods sight.

The speciall faith, which is the maine ground of a godly life, is a true, liuely, and iustifying faith, which is a sanctifying grace infused by Gods holy Spirit, whereby wee doe firmly and effectually beleuee, and assent vnto the promises of the Gospell; especially those which offer Christ and his benefits vnto vs, and also apply them particularly vnto our selues, with assurance that they all doe belong vnto vs; and so rest wholly vpon them for our iustification and saluation; whereby it appeareth, that there are foure things required vnto iustifying faith. First, knowledge of Gods Word; especially the gracious promise of Christ and all his benefits, to all that will receiue him as their Sauour, and rest vpon him for their saluation. For first we must know the promises, before we can beleue them, according to that of the Apostle, How shall they beleue in him, of whom they haue not heard? namely, by the preaching of the Gospell: for as faith cometh by hearing, so this hearing is only of the Word of God. Secondly, assent to the truth of the Scriptures, especially the promises of the Gospell; for after that our mindes are inlightened with the knowledge of Gods truth, (by which is reuealed vnto vs, first, our sinne and misery, and that we cannot by our selues, nor the helpe of any creature come out of it, to the end that we may be humbled and despaire of our owne strength; and secondly, the infinite loue of God, and his free mercies in Iesus Christ, together with the gracious promises of the Gospell made in him, whereby is offered vnto vs, mercy, reconciliation, the forgiveness of our sinnes, and the saluation of our soules, to all that beleue, and will receiue them by the hand of faith, bringing forth the fruits thereof, in hearty repentance and new obedience) then doth Gods holy Spirit, by his secret operation, make the Ministry of the Word effectuell, to worke in vs a firme assent to this truth of God, respecting our saluation; not so much in respect of the cleere evidence heereof in it selfe, or the forciblenesse of the arguments which are brought to conuince and perswade naturall reason; as in regard of Gods authority, who is most infallible in his truth, infinite in his goodnesse, and almighty, to performe whatsoeuer he hath promised. Which assent being effectuell in vs, doth worke in our vnderstandings, a perswasion, that our sinnes, though in themselves haynous, yet compared with Gods infinite mercies, and the all-sufficient merits of Iesus Christ, are pardonable; in our iudgements a precious and high esteeme of these mercies and merits aboue all worldly things: In our hearts an hungry and thirsting desire, to be made partakers of them for the remission of our sinnes; in our wils a firme resolution to renounce all other meanes, and to rest wholly vpon Gods mercies and Christs merits for our iustification and saluation. And in our actions, a carefull indeuour, to vse all good meanes, whereby we may bee more and more assured of Gods loue in Christ, and among the rest, in all things to please God, in all our thoughts, words, and workes, that so we may glorifie him from whom wee expect so great grace and mercy, and make our calling and election sure. The third thing required, is an apprehension and application of the promises of the Gospell, the infinite mercies of God, and all-sufficient merits of Christ vnto our selues in particular, which is the forme and very life of faith, and maketh the things thus applyed, vsfull and effectuell for our iustification, and without which wee shall haue no more benefit by them, then a man hath by a soueraigne salue and cordiall medicine, not applyed and taken, or by warme clothes which are not put on. The last thing required, is affiance and confidence, when as knowing, assenting vnto, and applying Gods mercies and Christs merits vnto our selues, we rest and rely wholly vpon them for our iustification and saluation.

So that after illumination there are three degrees of faith; the first is an effectually assent to the promises of the Gospel, which worketh in our hearts an hungry desire after Christ and his benefits, and in our wills a resolution to cast our selves upon him alone for our saluation. By which the Christian truly liueth, but yet like a new borne babe, who weakly performeth the actions of life, but knoweth not, that he either liueth or moueth. And so weak it is in apprehension and application, that he can hardly discern it, and often calleth in question whether he hath any hold at all or no. It is strong in desiring, but feeble in performing; resolved by all meanes to stick vnto Christ, but yet scarce sensible of any vnion. It admireth the glorious beames and brightnesse of Gods loue shining in the Word, but feeleth little warmth of ioy and comfort by it in his owne heart and conscience. It worketh in the weak Christian, an hungry after the sincere milke of the Word, that he may grow vp thereby, but with little or no sense, that he is nourished, or any whit increased in the spirituall growth. He seeketh earnestly for grace and peace, but they seeme to fly from him, and is still wishing for more and more; but hath little comfort in feeling and fruition. His desires so farre exceed the proportion which he hath receiued, that it is swallowed vp of them, so that nothing in appearance remaineth: And (like couetous men) he thinketh not on what he hath, but vpon what he hath not, and spends a great part of that time in complaints of his wants, which should be employed in praying God for that plenty which hee hath receiued. But this faith is still in growth, though they that haue it, doe not see it growing; for the Lord is no more ready to enlarge our hearts with hungry desires after grace, then to satisfie them; this being his maine end why (like the Merchant) hee stretcheth out these empty bags, that he may replenish them with a greater portion of these hid treasures. And therefore when the weak beleuer carefully and conscionably laboureth in the vse of all good meanes, for the strengthening and increasing of his faith, as hearing the Word, Sacraments, Meditation, Prayer, and such like, the Lord with his Spirit so blesseth them vnto him, that from this first degree of faith he cometh to the second, namely, to a comfortable apprehension of Gods promises, as belonging to himselfe, to some sense and feeling of the loue of God shed abroad in his heart by the holy Ghost, and to some assurance that hee in particular hath part and interest in Gods mercies and Christs merits, whereby he is iustified and shall be saued. And this is the second degree of faith, which being but weak in the apprehension of Christ and his righteousness, and in the sense and feeling of Gods loue, is assaulted with much doubting, and oftentimes shaken with grievous tentations, whereby the Christians hold seemeth for the time wholly lost, and his faith in the operations of it almost quite extinguished; and therefore hauing attained vnto this degree, he resteth not in it as sufficient, but laboureth in the vse of all good meanes, whereby his faith may bee more and more strengthened and increased, vntill it come to the third and last degree of perfection, which is that plerophorie, and fullnesse of perswasion of the remission of our sinnes, of our vnion with Christ, and Gods vchangeable loue towards vs in him, from which, nothing in the world shall be able to diuide

Rom. 5. 3.

1. Pet. 1. 8.

§. Sect. 7.

That the duties of a godly life hold a proportion with our faith, whether it be weake or strong.

diuide vs, as we see in the Apostle Pauls example. Vpon which followeth Christian security, in the assurance of Gods protection, and peace of conscience, that passeth all vnderstanding, which though it be assaulted, yet is seldome impeached and impugned with any violence of tentations, trouble of mind, or terrours of conscience. And from hence springeth inward joy, unspeakable and glorious, out of our assurance and sweete feeling of Gods loue, and the certaine perswasion of our owne saluation, whereby wee are made cheerefull and constant, not onely in doing all which God commandeth, but also in suffering whatsoeuer hee inflicteth.

And these are the degrees of a liuely faith, without which, or some one of them, we cannot doe any thing pleasing vnto God, or set one step forward in the way of godlinesse: for faith is a cause and an inseparable companion of a godly life, of which, if we be destitute in the least degrees, well may we be ignorantly deuout, and zealously superstitious, but wee shall neuer performe any one dutie in such sort as God will accept of it. And according to the degree and measure of our faith, such also will bee our fruits of godlinesse, they holding a proportion the one with the other: for as a weake hand may as truly liue and mooue as a stronger, but yet is not so powerfull in motion, nor possibly able to doe so much worke; and as a little tree newly planted, may bring forth good fruit, as well as one that is come to perfect growth, yet cannot doe it in equall quantity: So he that hath the weakest faith, liueth an holy life, doth some good workes, and bringeth forth some fruits of godlinesse and righteousnesse; but his workes are not so many, nor his fruits in such plenty and abundance, as theirs whose faith is growne to an higher degree. Neither in truth is it possible, that it should be otherwise, seeing weakelings in faith haue more to doe, and lesse abilitie to performe. For the devils policie binds him to vse all meanes to supplant them when as he hath most hope, and to pull vp faith by the rootes, when it is newly planted; and his malice rageth most against those who haue newly escaped out of his bondage, and refuse any longer to be gouerned by him. The world more vehemently laboureth to hinder the good proceedings of those, who haue newly separated from it, as conceiuing more hope of their reclaiming; and the corruptions of their owne flesh, are much stronger to betray them into the hands of their forraine foes. So that they are in the same case with Nehemiah and his fellowes, who must in one hand hold their working instruments, and in the other their weapons, that they may bee ready to repell their enemies. And therefore hauing these and so many other difficulties, with innumerable discouragements to hinder them, and fewer and weaker comforts to hartten them on in their Christian course; it is no maruaile if they doe not make so good riddance of their worke, nor bring forth such plentifull fruits of godlinesse in their liues, as those who are stronger in faith, and haue overcome these difficulties, and after the conquest of their spirituall enemies, haue now attained to some peace and rest. And hereof it is, that they that are weake in faith, are more vnsettled in the Christian course, one while going forward, another while intermitting their labour, one while standing still, and soone after slipping and falling in their way, or wandring out of it into the by-ways of sinne; because they haue strong opposition, and are weake to make any resistance: onely the Lord, who hath promised that none of his shall be tempted aboue their power, and delighteth to glorifie his might in their infirmities, doth assist them with his Spirit, and thereby inableth them to ouercome all difficulties; and when they slip, preserueth them from falling, or being false, raiseth them vp againe; reneweth their strength when it is decayed, and giueth them, in the end, a good issue out of all their tentations, and an happy victory ouer all their enemies.

C A P. IX.

Of the meanes whereby wee may obtaine a liuely faith, and daily increase it from the least to the highest degree.

Seeing then faith is so necessary to a godly life, and higher degrees of it, for attaining of higher perfection, and making of a further progresse in the wayes of holinesse and righteousness; it behooueth euery one, who desireth to leade a life acceptable vnto God, to vse all good meanes whereby he may attaine vnto faith, and hauing the first degrees of it, not to rest in them, but to vse all indeuour, whereby he may grow from faith to faith, vntill he attaine vnto fulnesse of perswasion. Now the meanes of attaining faith are many. The first and principall is prayer, which is not onely in it selfe a powerfull meanes to obtaine it of God, but also of making all other meanes effectuell to those ends for which we vse them. For faith is not of our selues (as the Apostle teacheth vs) but it is a free grace and gift of God, and as our Sauour saith, It is his worke that we beleene on him whom hee hath sent. And none haue it, but they vnto whom it is giuen, according to that of the Apostle; Vnto you it is giuen in the behalfe of Christ, not onely to beleene on him, but also to suffer for his sake. Now the way to get Gods gifts, is, to beg them at his hands by effectuell prayer, according to that, If any man want wisdom, let him aske it of God, that giueth all men liberally; seeing he hath tyed himselfe by his gracious promise, that if we aske, wee shall receiue; and that whatsoever we desire in his Sonnes name, he will giue it vs. And therefore if we would haue faith, wee must bee frequent and seruent in prayer, and after that by Gods Spirit it is, like a small seede, sowne in our hearts, and scarcely to be discerned, being hidden from our sight vnder the clouds of our corruptions; we must vse the same meanes to bring it to some growth, saying with the Apostles, Lord, increase our faith, and with the father of the possessed child, Lord, I beleene, helpe thou mine vnbeleefe. The second meanes is, that we adioyne our selues to the true Church of God, where the Word is sincerely and powerfully taught, and the Sacraments duely and rightly administred. For howsoeuer our faith is not buile vpon the Church, yet doth it prepare our hearts to the receiuing of it, not onely in respect of that authority which it hath, to mooue vs to the imbracing of that which it imbraceth and commendeth vnto vs; but also as it offereth the meanes which onely are effectuell for the begetting and increasing creasing of our faith, being the Master of the Rowles, which hath the custody of all our spirituall euidences, and the keeper of Gods Seales, whereby our faith is assured of the truth of his promises. The third meanes, is the carefull and conscionable hearing of Gods Word, with a desire to profit by it; for faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God, in which respect the Preachers of the Gospel are called Ministers, by whom the people beleue; because their Ministerie is the ordinary meanes of be- getting faith in them. The fourth meanes, is the vse of the Sacraments, which are as Seales annexed to the Couenant of grace, whereby wee are vndoubtedly assured, that God will make good vnto vs all his promises of grace and saluation in Iesus Christ. The fift is, Christian conferences and holy examples, whereby wee gaine subiects to Christs Kingdome, and build vp one another in our holy faith, as we see in the example of the woman of Samaria, who by her sayings, drew many to beleue in Christ: and of Aquila and Priscilla, who by their holy conferences, informed Apollos more perfectly in the way of the Lord.

The last meanes is often to meditate vpon these points following. First, vpon Gods euerlasting and vnderferued loue, which moued him, euen whilst we were sinners, the children of wrath, the vassals of Satan, and enemies to God and his grace, to send his onely begotten, and dearly be- loved Sonne into the world, that taking our nature vpon him, hee might therein redeeme and saue vs, by satisfying his iustice, in paying for vs an all-sufficient price for our redemption. And therefore hee that sought vs when wee were lost, will not cast vs away when hee hath found vs. Hee that so loued vs when wee were enemies, will not forsake vs now, if wee seeke his fauour. He that out of meere loue gaue Christ to redeeme vs by his death, will not, when he hath bought vs at so deare a price, suffer vs to perish, if we apply Christ and his merits by faith, when as a free gift hee offereth him vnto vs. Secondly, let vs meditate on Gods infinite mercy, which causeth him to delight, not in death and destruction, but the con- uersion and saluation of sinners. The which his mercy being about all his workes, and infinitely greater then all our sinnes, is freely offered vnto vs, and wee are sure to receiue it, if wee doe not reiect it by vnbeliefe. Thirdly, let vs meditate on Gods immutable and infallible truth in his promises, and his omnipotent power, whereby hee is able to performe them. Fourthly, vpon the all-sufficiency of Christs righteoufnesse and obedience, whereby Gods iustice is fully satisfied, and his wrath appeased, of which wee shall bee partakers, if wee beleue in him as our onely Sa- uiour and Redeemer. Fifthly, let vs meditate on the Couenant of grace, wherein the Lord promisseth the pardon of our sinnes, and the saluation of our soules, not vpon the condition of our workes and worthinesse, nor with exception of our sinnes, but vpon the alone condition of a lively faith, which bringeth forth the fruits thereof in vnfeined repentance. Sixthly, let vs meditate vpon the generality and indefinitenesse of Gods promises, which exclude no sorts of sinners, who doe not exclude them- selues by their vnbeliefe, reiecting Gods pardon when as it is offered, and pulling off the soueraigne salue of Christs merits and obedience, so as it cannot cure their sores of sinne. Lastly, let vs meditate vpon faith, not onely only as it is an instrument, whereby Christ is applyed, but also as it is a sacrament, which is not arbitrary to be done or not done at our free choyse, but expressly commanded by God, as the condition of the covenant which he hath made with vs, the which we also in our baptisme have undertaken to performe. And therefore setting all doubts and disputes aside, wee must beleue in obedience to Gods Commandement. And so much the rather, because God hath not only required it at our hands, but hath also vsed all meanes enabling vs to performe it. For he hath made his couenant with vs of grace and saluation, and though he be truth it selfe, and cannot fayle of his promises, yet respecting our imbecility and weaknesse of faith, he hath, to put away all doubting, confirmed them by his oath, and by annexing vnto his hand-writing, his seales the Sacraments.

And these are the meanes of begetting and confirming of our faith, that it may not only assent vnto the truth of Gods promises, but also apply and apprehend them to our owne particular vse. Now, that from these two first degrees we may grow vnto fulnesse of perswasion, which, in assurance of our perseuerance in the fruition of Gods loue, doth make vs, with the Apostle, to triumph over all difficulties and dangers, there are diuers other things required. As first, that we esteeme faith our chiefe riches, and this will make vs spiritually couetous, and carefull by all meanes to adde vnto this treasure. Secondly, we cannot come to this fulnesse of faith, but by often experience of Gods loue, shining in the riches of his mercies, efpecially in things appertaining to grace and eternall glory. To which purpose we must bee sensible of Gods goodnesse, and diligently obserue his fauours towards vs, and so by induction of particulars (that seeing so often and many wayes he hath bin gracious, and hath given vnto vs such innumerable testimonies and pledges of his loue, hence) we may gather an experimentall conclusion, that being immutable in his goodnesse, wee shall liue and dye in his fauour, and nothing shall be able to separate vs from it. Thirdly, we attayne vnto this fulnesse of perswasion, by becom-ming more and more acquainted with God in the vse of his holy ordinances, as prayer, hearing the Word, receiuing the Sacrament of the Supper, and meditation; for hereby our communion and acquaintance with God is increased; and the better we know him, the more firmly will we trust and beleue in him, tasting hereby the sweetenesse of his goodnes, and the infallibility of his mercy and truth. Fourthly, we attaine vnto certaine and full assurance of Gods loue toward vs, by our often testifying and approving of our loue towards God, in our care to keepe all his Commandements, that thereby we may glorify his Name, by having the light of our holy conuersation shining before men: seeing we could not possibly loue him, if he had not loved vs first: and whom he loueth, to the end he loueth them.
Finally, we attaine vnto it by continuall exercizing our selues in good workes, and by the dayly practice of Christian duties, and leading of a godly life. For as faith iustifying vs, by applying Christs righteousnesse, doth cause a good conscience; after we haue peace with God; so when we keepe our consciences, purged with Christs blood, cleare and vnspotted of any knowne, willing and grosse sinne, it doth maruailously confirme

our faith in the assurance of Gods loue, seeing we are carefull to maintayne our peace with him, and therefore assuredly he will be at peace with us according to that of the Apostle; if our hearts condemne us not, then haue we confidence towards God.

And so much concerning iustifying faith, which is the ground and foundation of a godly life. Besides which generally considered, there is a speciall faith, or rather a branch of the other, which is very profitable and necessary to vphold and further vs in our course of Christianity; namely, when as we doe by faith apply Christ, not only for saluation, but also for sanctification, and apprehend the promises, both for iustification and life eternall, and also for the subduing of our corruptions, and renouation vnto newnesse of life in this World. In which respect also it may be truly sayd, that the iust doe liue by their faith, and that they cannot leade their liues in holinesse and righteousnesse without it. For there are so many mighty enemies that encounter vs in this way, so many difficulties and dangers which we must overcome, so many duties contrary to our corrupt nature to be necessarily performed, and so many strange corruptions to be mortified and subdued in vs, that if we respect our owne strength, it will plainly appeare to be vtterly impossible to goe forward in the course of godlinesse, or to attaine vnto any measure of that sanctification which we labour after; whereas contrariwise, if wee renounce our selues, and our owne strength, and by a liuely sayth rest vpon the power and promises of God, for the beginnign, continuing and perfecting of this worke, then neede we not to be discouraged by our wants and weakenesses, from vndertaking or proceeding in it, nor by the malice and might of our spirituall enemies, or any other difficulties which meete vs in the way; seeing we are assured that the Lord our God is all-sufficient to remoue all impediments, to giue vs strength against all opposition, to make things in themselves impossible, to become possible and easie vnto vs; and not only able, but also willing to bring vs on in the wayes of godlinesse, and to perfect that good worke of grace in vs which he hath begunne. In which respects, we haue great cause with all courage and cheerefulnesse to vnder take this worke, and to goe on in the wayes of godlinesse, if by faith wee are once perswaded, that we shall, in Gods good time, overcome our spirituall enemies, subdue our strong corruptions, performe with ease and comfort, those duties which seeme yet so difficult, and in some good measure, attaine vnto that sanctification, and holinesse of life, which wee labour after.

Now the meanes to attaine vnto this faith, and to be more and more confirmed in it, is to consider, that God the Father hath elected vs as well to the meanes as to the end; and as he hath ordayned vs vnto life eternall, so also that we shall walke in the way of holinesse and righteousnes, that leadeth vnto it; according to that of the Apostle, he hath chosen vs before the foundations of the world, that we should be holy and without blame. And therefore as his election is certaine to bring vs vnto euerlasting happines, so also to conduct vs thither by this way of holinesse, eyther by a shorter cut, as the thiefe vpon the Crosse, who was not conuerted before he suffered; or by a longer way, as Simeon, John the Apostle, and many others. So in that

golden chaire of saluation; whom hee did predestinate, them also he called; whom he called, them he iustified; and whom he iustified, them he glorified: the decree of God is coupled and linked vnto the end by the meanes which come betweene them. Againe, we haue Gods promises, vpon which wee may build our faith as well for our sanctification, as for our saluation, and that not only, as the promises of life eternall include the promise of holynesse and a godly life, as the way that leadeth to that end; but seuerally and in speciall manner. For in the Couenant of grace, the Lord promiseth to write his Law in our hearts, by which phrase is signified, that we shall not only know his will in our vnderstandings, but inelinc vnto it with our affections, that we may practise it in our liues; euen as the law of nature written in the heart of Adam by creation, inabled him both to know it, and also to imbrace and obey it. So God promiseth, that vnder the Kingdome of Christ, he will take away their corruptions of nature, and make them to become new creatures. Yea the Lord hath not onely said, but sworne it, that all who are redeemed out of the hands of our spirituall enemies, shall worship and serue him in holynesse and righteousness, before him, all the daies of their liues; that is, not by fits and starts, but from the day of their conuersion, to the day of their death. Againe, the Lord promiseth to giue his Spirit to those that aske him: and our Sauour, that he will send the Comforter, who shall leade vs into all truth, so that he shall not barely teach vs the way, but guide vs in it, subduing the flesh with the lusts thereof, and inabling vs to withstand the tentations of Satan and the world, to overcome all difficulties, and to hold out in our profession and practise of true godlinesse vnto the end. Moreouer, we may haue a sufficient ground for this speciall faith, if we consider, that the vertue of Christs death being applied by faith, is as effectuell for the mortifying of our flesh and sinfull corruption, as for the raking away of the guilt and punishment of our sins; and that his resurrection is as powerfull to rayse vs vp to newnesse of life in this world, as to the life of glory in the world to come; and therefore they that haue part in Christ, may apply him vnto themselves by faith, for assured sanctification, as well as for iustification or saluation; according to that of the Apostle: But ye are in Christ Iesus, who is of God made vnto vs, wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, that is, not onely sufficient to make vs holy by imputation of his holynesse, but by working in vs inherent holynesse by his Spirit. Finally, the holy Ghost who dwelleth in vs, is all-sufficient to perfect the worke which hee hath begun, and will not willingly lose his labour, in giuing it over before he hath attayned his end. And therefore though our flesh be neuer so rebellious, he both can and will tame and mortify it; though our enemies be neuer so many and malicious, he is all-sufficient by his owne strength, in our greatest weakenesse to overcome them. And though we meete with neuer so many difficulties, he will so assist and strengthen vs, that they shall not bee able to hinder vs from proceeding in the way of holynesse, till we come to our place of happynesse. Now if by these considerations we strengthen our sayth in this speciall perswasion, that if wee will waite Gods leysure in the vse of all good meanes, wee shall certainly attayne vnto that sanctification which we labour after, it will bee a notable incouagement to make vs goe on cheerefully in the practise of all duties, which concerne a Christian life; for who would not courageously fight, that is beforehand assured of victory? or run a race, that is sure to come to the goale, and winne the garland? or vndertake waighty and necessary enterprises, though of great difficultie, if he be thoroughly perswaded, that hee shall overcome them? whereas on the other side, for want of this faith, or rather this speciall art of application, many deare seruants of God are hindred and discouraged, from going on, in the duties of holinesse and righteousnesse, or else proceede with much vncomfortablenesse and disquietnesse, because comparing their weakenesse, with the difficulty of the worke, they thinke that they shall neuer atchieue it in any measure acceptable to God; though in the meane time they want not faith to rest vpon the promises of the Gospell, the mercies of God, and merits of Christ, for their iustification, and the bringing of them to euerlasting happinesse?

CAP. X.

Of the third ground of a godly life, which is a pure heart.

§. Sect. 1.
Of a pure heart, what it is, and whence
it ariseth.
Prou. 20. 9.

BESIDES those mayne grounds of a godly life before spoken of, sauing knowledge, and a liuely faith, there are two other which arise and spring from them, a pure heart, and a good conscience. By a pure heart, I doe not vnderstand such an one as is free from all sinne and corruption: for who can say, I haue made my heart cleane, I am pure from my sinne? But such an heart as being regenerate by Gods Spirit, is in part purified and sanctified, hating sinne, and louing vertue and holinesse in the inner man; feeling the waight of corruption, and desiring to be clenfed from it, and the want of grace, and resoluing to vse all good meanes, whereby it may be supplied. And this is a fruit of sauing knowledge, which discouereth vnto vs how vgly sinne is in it selfe; and pernicious vnto vs, and the beauty and excellencie of grace and godlinesse in it owne nature, with the profit which redoundeth vnto vs by it; and also of a iustifying faith, which applying the vertue of Christs death and resurrection, doth mortifie our carnall corruptions, and quicken vs in the life of grace, making vs to hate that sinne which we formerly loued, and to loue and imbrace that grace and vertue which in time past wee loathed; and answerably to resolue, that wee will vse all good meanes to be freed from the one, and furnished with the other. All which proceedeth out of our assurance of Gods loue, which being shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, doth worke in them vnsained loue towards God againe; whereby we desire, resolue, and indeuour, to leaue and forsake what he hateth and forbidderh, and to imbrace and practise whatsoever he loueth and commandeth.

Rom. 5. 5.

§. Sect. 2.
That all true
fruits of god-linesse spring
from a pure heart.

And this is that pure heart which is necessary to a godly life, as being a chiefe pillar that supporteth it, and a liuely fountaine, from which all good and vertuous actions doe spring and flow. For if the heart be pure, it will purifie all our words and actions; but if it be defiled, we can expect no pure streames from a polluted fountaine; according to that of our Saviour, Those things which proceed out of the mouth, come forth of the heart, and they defile the man: for out of the heart proceed euill thoughts, murders, adulteries, &c. And therefore as it is in vaine to purge the streames when the fountaine is defiled, because it will soone againe pollute them; whereas if the spring be cleere, it will soone cleanse the streames, though much defiled, that issue from it; so is it with the fountaine of the heart, and the words and actions, which from it, as streames doe spring and flow. The heart is the roote and tree, and the words and workes are the fruits it beareth, which discover what it is; for a good tree bringeth forth good fruits, and a corrupt tree bringeth forth euill fruits; neither can a good tree bring forth euill fruit, nor a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit, as our Saviour hath taught vs. It is the treasure of all our thoughts, speeches and actions. And a good man, out of the good treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is good; and an euill man, out of the euill treasure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is euill, for of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh. It is the King and Monarch in the little world of man, which giueth lawes to all the other members, raigning and ruling ouer them as it seemeth good vnto it. It is the primum mobile, and first moouer, which giueth motion to all other parts as inferiour spheares; and as it were the first wheele of the clocke, whose motion all the rest follow, standing still when it standeth, and going as it goeth. So that if the heart bee an indiffer of a good matter, the tongue will be the pen of a ready writer; if the heart bee prepared, so also will be the tongue to sing and giue praise; if it nourish euill thoughts like vnto discords, there can be no good musike: but if it be well tuned, we shall, in singing Hymnes, Psalmes, and spirituall Songs, sing with grace, and make sweete melody in Gods eares. And therefore David desiring to make good speed in the way of godlinesse, desireth first to haue his heart enlarged with the loue of it; I will runne (saith he) the way of thy Commandements, when thou shalt enlarge my heart.

And hereof it is that the Lord chiefly requireth the heart, according to that of Salomon, My sonne, giue me thy heart. The which also David chiefly required of him in the seruice of God; And thou Salomon my sonne, know thou the God of thy father, and serue him with a perfect heart and willing mind: for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and vnderstandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts. It is, aboue all other parts, the sacrifice which is most acceptable vnto God, according to that of the Psalmist, The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise. An vpright heart is his chiefe delight, and though he requireth sincerity both in our words and workes, yet aboue all, he desireth truth in the inward parts. And if the heart be sincere, and desireth to offer vnto God perfect seruice, the Lord passeth by and pardoneth our imperfections, and accepteth as perfect, our weake and worthelesse indouours; according to that of the Apostle, if there be first a willing minde, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not. An example whereof we haue in Iehosaphat and Asa, who though their inward corruptions did breake out into diuers open sinnes, yet because they prepared their hearts to seeke the Lord, he esteemed them as perfect, and what they did, seemed iust and right in his eyes. Whereas on the other side, how glorious soeuer our words and actions seeme to be, yet if we regard wickednesse in our hearts, the Lord will not regard vs nor our prayers; if we will not lay Gods Word to our heart, to giue glory to his name, he will send a curse vpon vs, by which, euen his blessings shall be accursed.

Neither can any duty of a godly life which we performe vnto God, be approoued of him, vntill our hearts bee first approoued. And as David would not accept of Abners seruice, nor let him haue the fauour of seeing his face, except he brought his wife with him; so neither will the Lord regard any seruice which we offer vnto him, if we leaue our hearts behind vs, which are aboue all other parts espoused vnto him by solemne Covenant. In all our obedience the heart is chiefly required. These words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: ye shall lay vp these words in your heart, and in your soule, and binde them for a signe vpon your hand, that they may be as frontlets betwene your eyes. And againe, Set your hearts vnto all the words which I testifie among you this day. In our conuersion vnto God, the heart must first turne vnto him. Turne ye vnto me with all your heart, &c. and rent your heart, and not your garments, and turne vnto the Lord your God. Breake vp your fallow ground, and sow not among thornes; circumsise your selues vnto the Lord, and take away the foreskin of your hearts. In our spirituall warfare against the enemies of our saluation, the Court of gard must keepe the carefulllest watch about the Castle of our hearts, that it may not be surprized, neither by the secret treason of the flesh, nor the open violence of the deuill or the world, seeing if we lose this fort, we shall lose the life of grace which is preserued in it; according to that of Salomon, Keepe thine heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life. The curing our soules of their spirituall diseases, must beginne at the heart; and the inward cause of corruption must thence bee purged, before there can bee any true reformation, or sound health in the outward parts: Euen as the heate of the face is not much abated, by casting vpon it water or cooling things, but by allaying inwardly the heate of the liuer. Finally, our seruice of God (if wee would haue it accepted) must not bee performed onely with the outward man: for as the Apostle speaketh, Bodily exercise profiteth little: but it must bee the seruice of the heart, and performed in spirit and truth. Otherwise it will bee vaine, and but lost labour, according to that of the Prophet cited by our Sauour; This people draweth nigh vnto mee with their lippes, but their heart is farre from mee. But in vaine they worship mee; &c. If wee wash our hands, and not our hearts, and make cleane the outside of the cup and platter, and let the inside bee defiled with corruption and sinne, wee shall not exceed the Pharises, who by our Sauours censure, did not exceede the hypocrites, and were worse then Publicanes and professed sinners: and if wee gild the outside by a glorious profession, and inwardly in the heart nourish our corruptions, wee shall with them bee rightly compared to painted sepulchers, which were outwardly glorious, but within full of dead mens bones and all uncleannesse.

And

And therefore when we goe about the reformation of our liues, let vs first begin with the purging of our hearts, and offer them vnto God as a free-will offering, and the first fruits of our new obedience, if wee meane to haue a good crop of godlinesse, and the whole haruest sanctified to our vse. And this was Dauids practice, watching chiefly ouer his heart, that he might consecrate it, aboue all other parts, to the Seruice of God. I delight (saith he) to doe thy will, O my God, yea thy Law is within my heart. And againe, I haue inclined mine heart to performe thy Statutes alwaye euen vnto the end. My soule hath kept thy testimonies, and I loue them exceedingly. So Moses prayeth vnto God, in behalfe of himselfe and the people, Teach vs so to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts to wisdom. Neither is it sufficient, eyther to please God, or to attaine vnto sanctification and a godly life, to consecrate our hearts in part only vnto Gods seruice, and to reserue part for the seruice of the world. For wee cannot serue two masters so contrary in disposition, nor at once please God and Mammon, as our Saniour hath taught vs. We must not halt betweene two opinions, but if God be God, wee must serue him: If Baal be God, we must serue him. God is a ieaious louer, and will indure no corriuals in the heart, which aboue all parts he chiefly loueth. And therefore if we intend to leade a godly life, and to please God in all our courses, wee must set our whole hearts to seeke and serue him, and as he requireth, loue him with all our heart, and with all our soule, and with all our mind. So Dauid; With my whole heart haue I sought thee, O let me not wander from thy Commandements. Giue mee vnderstanding, and I shall keepe thy Law; yea, I shall obserue it with my whole heart. And thus Asa and his people entred into a Couenant to seeke the Lord God of their fathers, with all their heart and with all their soule.

By all which it appeareth how necessary it is, that intending to lead a Godly life, we deuote and consecrate our hearts, yea, our whole hearts, to the seruice of God. And because he being most pure, can indure no corruption or pollution; and therefore will abhorre our most formall seruice, if our hearts continue and delight in their abominations; yea, will as much hate the heart it selfe polluted with sinne, if it be offered vnto him, as Swines blood, or a dogs head; therefore from hence also it appeareth how necessary it is, when we set our selues to please God by a godly life, to take speciall care to haue in the first place, our hearts purged, and purified from the filth of sinne. For naturally our hearts are full of all vncleanenesse, fountaines of malicioufnes, and sinkes of sinne, spiritually blind and foolish, but vnto all impiety, witty, sharp-sighted, and, as the Prophet speaketh, wicked and despihtfull aboue all things; auerse vnto all good, and prone to all euill, dead and dull to Gods seruice, and full of life and vigour to the seruice of the diuell, the world, and our owne carnall concupiscence. Finally, they swarme with all noysome lusts, as pride, hypocrisie, couetousnesse, voluptuousnesse, ambition, malice, enuie, disdain, worldly loue, and all manner of carnall corruption. And therefore it is most necessary that our hearts be first cleansed and purged, before wee can offer vnto God any acceptable seruice: for what can issue out of these sinks and puddles of corruption, but all manner of finfull impiety? and what streames of Gods seruice so pure in themselves, which will not bee polluted, if they runne thorow these dennes and ditches of all abominations? Now this purging of the heart consisteth in the mortification of the flesh, and its sinfull lusts, and in spirituall renewing vnto holinesse and new obedience, whereby we begin to hate all that euill which we formerly loued, and to loue that good which we formerly hated; to loath the tyranny of sinne and Satan, vnto which, with all willingnesse we subiected our selues in time past, and to imbrace the true seruice of God, in all sincerity, which before, we eyther neglected, or performed after a formall, cold and careles manner: And finally, haue our hearts and affections weaned from the loue of the world and earthly vanities, vpon which, in the dayes of our ignorance, wee wholly doted, as on our chiefe delight and treasure, because we now see that they are vncertaine, momentany and mutable, worthlesse and vnprofitable; yea, to those that set their hearts vpon them, hurtfull and pernicious. And contrariwise, adhere and cleaue vnto the Lord, with all our soules, as being all-sufficient, and infinite in all perfection, chusing him for our portion, and inheritance, our rocke and refuge, and farre preferring him before all earthly treasures and delights. And thus the Lord, when he called Abraham out of Vr of the Chaldeans, to bee his seruant, withdraweth his heart from the loue of worldly things, as being insufficient to preserue him from euill, or to furnish him with any true good, by promising that he himselfe would be his shield and exceeding great reward. And thus he perswadeth him vnto vprightnesse of heart, and to walke before him in holinesse of life, because, if hee would chuse him for his portion, he should finde him almighty, and all-sufficient, and therefore able to preserue him from all danger, and to relieue and supply all his wants, though for his profession and practice of Gods true Religion, he should be abandoned of all worldly helps, & exposed to the malice of many and mighty enemies. And thus Moses contemned the world, and refusing the pleasures of Egypt; and the honours of Pharaohs Court, adhered vnto God and his pure Religion, chusing rather to suffer affliction with his people, then to inoy the pleasures of sinne for a season. So Dauid being in his heart and affections, like a weaned child, and lothing the worlds brests, from which he had formerly sucked the sweet milk of earthly vanities, with so much delight, doth with all his heart and soule cleaue vnto the Lord, chusing him for his portion, and inheritance, and esteeming him as his sole treasure. The Lord (saith he) is the portion of mine inheritance, and of my cup; thou maintainest my lot. The lines are fallne vnto me in pleasant places, yea, I haue a goodly heritage. And when he was forsaken of all worldly helps in the day of trouble, hee was not (like worldlings) as a man forlorne and desperate, but, he cryed vnto the Lord, and said, Thou art my refuge and my portion, in the land of the liuing. So elsewhere he professeth, that all his ioy and comfort was in the Lord, and the assurance of his loue, the which was better and greater, then was incident to worldlings in all their posterity. There be many (saith he) that say, Who will shew vs any good? Lord lift thou vp the light of thy countenance vpon vs. Thou hast put gladnesse in my heart, more then in the time that their corne and their wine increased. And thus the Church in the Lamentation, was not in her greatest misery, left hopelesse and helpelesse, but cleauing to the Lord with her her heart, shee cryeth out, The Lord is my portion, saith my soule; therefore will I hope in him.

And these are the things wherein this purity of heart doth consist. The principall efficient which worketh it in vs, is the whole Trinity, the Father, Sonne and holy Spirit. God the Father beginneth this sanctification and holinesse in our hearts, by taking away their hardnesse, and making them soft and tender, and by giuing vnto vs his Spirit, to purify them from the filth of corruption, and to quicken them in the life of grace; according to that promise; I will giue them one heart, and I will put a new spirit within you; and I will take the stony heart out of their bodies, and will giue them an heart of flesh. And againe; After those daies, saith the Lord; I will put my Law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. And therefore if we would haue this grace, we must with the Apostle haue our recourse to God, praying for our selues, as he did for the Thessalonians: The very God of peace sanctifie you wholly; and I pray God, your whole spirit, and soule, and body, be preserved blamelesse vnto the comming of the Lord Iesus Christ. God the Sonne purifieth our hearts by shedding his precious blood, that it might be a Lauer of regeneration, wherein our polluted hearts might be cleansed. For so deeply are they engrayned in the skarlet dye of sinne, that nothing else will take away their spots and staines, and bring them vnto snowy whitenesse. It is onely his Crosse, that crucifieth these carnall corruptions, and the vertue of his death, that killeth and mortifieth sin in vs. And this is that Fountaine which the Lord promisseth should be opened to the house of Dauid and Hierusalem, for sinne and for vncleanenesse: in which if our hearts be not washed, they will remaine in their naturall filthinesse. God the holy Ghost purifieth our hearts, by vniting them to Christ, & by dipping and washing them in this Fountaine of his blood; and so maketh the death and merits of our Sauour, which are sufficient in themselves, effectuell vnto vs for our purification. For as the Poole of Bethesda had, by the mouing of the Angell, vertue in it to cure diseases, but yet did good to none, but those only which were put into it; so though the blood of Christ be sufficient to cure the heart of the leprosie of sinne, and to make it cleane, yet it is of no efficacie vnto any, sauing those who are by the holy Spirit dipped and washed in it; seeing, like the poore lame cripple, wee are naturallly impotent, and cannot make any vse of these meanes of our recovery, vnles we be assisted by the holy Spirit. The instrumentall cause of this purification is a liuely faith wrought in vs by the Spirit to this end, the which we may apply vnto our selues, Christ his death and precious bloodshed, for our spirituall purging from sinne: which is perfected in our iustification, in respect of the guilt and punishment, and begun in our sanctification, by purifying our hearts from their natural corruptions. In which respect, faith is said to purifie our hearts, not materially or formally, by any vertue inherent in it selfe, but instrumentally; by applying vnto vs the vertue of Christs death and bloodshed. And vntill we haue this faith wrought in vs by the Spirit, whereby we are assured of the riches of Gods grace in this life, and glory and happinesse in the life to come, our hearts remaine in their naturall filthinesse, and are full of all carnall and worldly lusts, neither is it possible that they should be perswaded to contemne the baits of worldly vanities, and to tread vnder foot the pleasures of sinne, with which they are naturally so much delighted, till they haue an offer of better things from God, and haue some assurance, that vpon their renouncing of the world and fleshly lusts, and seeking after these richer gifts, they shall most certainly attaine vnto them; according to that of the Apostle, Blessed be God, and the Father of our Lord Iesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten vs againe vnto a liuely hope, by the resurrection of Iesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and vndefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heauen for you. And this purged Moses heart from the loue of the world, and made him willing to suffer afflictions with the people of God, because with the eye of faith he looked vpon the recompence of reward. And this caused the Saints of God to content themselues to dwel in tabernacles, & not to regard any earthly mansions, because they looked for a City which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God: & the holy Martyrs, to indure with patience & ioy most cruell persecution, not accepting deliuerance, because by faith they were perswaded, that they should obtaine a better resurrection. Of which comforts of faith, wee haue great neede to be thereby supported vnder the Crosse, and perswaded vnto the contempt of the world; seeing Iesus, the Author and finisher of our faith, who was free from all worldly lusts and carnall corruption, was by his heavenly hopes encouraged in his earthly sufferings: for as the Apostle testifieth, He, for the ioy that was set before him, endured the crosses, despising the shame, and is set downe at the right hand of the Throne of God.

CAP. XI.

Of the signes of a pure heart, and the meanes whereby we may both obtaine and preserue it.

6. Sect. I.
Of the inward signes of a pure heart.

And these are the causes of a pure heart. The signes whereby we may know whether our hearts bee thus purified or no, are either inward or outward. The inward signes are first the loue of holinesse and purity; for as when our hearts are defiled with naturall corruption, we loath sanctitie, and loue and delight in impure lusts, and the pleasures of sinne; so when our hearts are purified by faith, they are chiefly pleased with those things which please God; and louing purity and piety, they delight in the exercises of holinesse and righteousness. And therefore when we loue purity and holinesse, it is an euident signe that our hearts are pure and holy, seeing the cause of loue is likeness; and where there is no similitude, there can be no loue. The second signe is hatred of sinne, which vpon the same ground we naturally loue; especially of those sinnes vnto which our corrupted nature is most inclined, because they most molest and trouble vs, and polluting the heart with their defilements, hinder most our progresse in sanctification and holinesse. And thus Paul, when his heart was purified, abhorred all corruption, and delighted in Gods Law, hating that sin most, which he did most commit, because, like a Rebelle, it warred against the law of his minde, and made him captiue to the law of sinne. The third signe is, our carefull attoyding all meanes and occasions of spirituall pollution: for as he that hath filthy hands, careth not to handle filthy things, but when they are washed cleane, will not willingly touch that which will defile them: so an impure heart shunneth not the occasions and meanes of impurity, because they cannot make it worse then it is in it owne nature, in the quality, though they may increase the pollution, in respect of the degree: yea, rather being like filthy hogges, naturally inclined vnto filthinesse, they seeke the occasions of more vncleannesse; and purposely wallow themselves in the stinke and puddle of sinne; as often as they haue opportunity of satisfying their carnall lusts. More especially, he that hath a pure heart, delighteth in the company of those who are pure and holy, by whose Christian conuersation, his purity and sanctification may be more and more increased, and cannot indure the society of the wicked, no nor when, like filthy dogs, they sawne vpon him, because he knoweth that the leprosie of sinne is of an infectious and spreading nature, that he who toucheth pitch, shall be defiled with it, and that worldly men most defile, when they most sawne, and doe vs least hurt, when they are farthest from vs.

The outward signes of a pure heart, are the fruits of sanctification and holinesse: for the tree is knowne by the fruits, and the fountaine by the streames that flow from it, whether they be good or euill, for a good tree cannot bring forth euill fruit, nor an euill tree good fruit, as our Sauour hath taught vs. If therefore the fruits we beare be pure and holy, it is an euident signe that our hearts be purified and sanctified; if the streames be cleere and sweete, such also is the fountaine from which they spring; and if the coyne wee outwardly spend and vse in our Christian trading one with another, be currant, of pure metall, and the right stamp, then is the treasury of our hearts good, out of which we bring it. More especially, the purity of our hearts appeareth in the purity of our words, when as we delight in the language of Canaan, and cheerefully intertaine one another with holy conferences; and when as our speech is powdred with the salt of wisdom, and ministreth grace vnto the hearers, edifying one another in our most holy faith. So also pure hands are a signe of a pure heart, being inseparable companions, that alwayes goe together, and both infallible notes of a Citizen of heauen; and the workes of holinesse and righteousness are signes of an holy and righteous heart, euen as cleere streames are a signe that the fountaine is pure from which they spring. Whereas if the hands be full of blood, crueltie, and oppression; bribery and extortion, fraud and deceit, it is more then manifest, that our hearts remaine still polluted with fleshly lusts, whatsoever profession we make of purity and sincerity.

Now when by these signes, as it were, by the pulse, we come to know the state of our hearts, whether they be choaked vp with the grosse humors of sinfull lusts; or infused and quickened with purity and holinesse, as it were the vitall spirits of grace; which inable vs to the actions of a godly life: in the next place we must carefully vse all good meanes, whereby we may attaine vnto this purity of heart, if we haue it not, or preserve it in vs, if we already haue it. And first, we are to haue it in high esteeme, as being a most

most precious iewell, not to be valued with any worldly wealth. For it is the fountaine of loue, from which all true obedience floweth, according to that of the Apostle; The end of the Commandment is love, out of a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unsained. So that if the heart be not purified by faith, this holy ghest of diuine loue will not lodge in it, without which, we cannot performe any dutie commanded towards God or our neighbour; or if we doe, yet not growing from the roote of loue, it faileth of its end, and consequently is done in vaine. It is the chiefe place of residence where Gods holy Spirit dwelleth, exercizing his vertue, and shewing his diuine power and Maiesty; for if our bodies be the temples of the holy Ghost, then sure our hearts being purified, are the Holy of Holiest, which being his owne peculiar, no man may enter or prie into it; and if we be the habitation of his holy and glorious Maiesty, then is the sanctified heart his priuie chamber, in which he supbeth with vs, and his bedchamber, in which he lodgeth. It is that pure Cristall Fountaine which purifieth all our actions, making them accepted as white in Gods sight, which in themselves are spotted, and causeth all other gifts of God to be pure vnto vs; for to the pure, all things are pure, but vnto them that are defiled and unbeleeuing, is nothing pure, but even their minde and conscience is defiled. Finally, it is this purity of heart, whereby we attaine vnto assurance of blessednesse; according to that of our Sauour; Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God. And the Psalmist propounding this great question, Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? and who shall stand in his holy place? thus resolueith it: He that hath cleane hands and a pure heart, &c. And if thus considering the excellency of this Iewell, we doe esteeme it according to its true value, it will be a notable meanes to attaine vnto it. For according to that estimate which we set vpon Gods rich gifts, such is his bounty in bestowing them; if wee thinke them much worth, we shall haue much; if of little value, we shall haue them but in little measure; but if we contemne and neglect them as things of no price, (and as those Ruffians, who obiekt purity as an imputation, and esteeme this cleanness of heart and hands, the foulest blemish and aspersiō,) the Lord will giue vnto vs none at all, but will pronounce against vs that fearefull saying, He that is filthy, let him be filthy still. For he will not cast his Pearles before swine, that will tread them vnder their filthy feet; he will not giue much of his graces to them, who haue but small esteeme of them; but to those who prize them highly, he will giue them liberally, because the thankfulness of their hearts, will hold proportion with that price which their iudgement shall set vpon them. In which respect Dauid was neuer neerer slipping into the puddle of impurity, then when he preferred worldly prosperity before sanctity and cleanness of soule; Neuer was he neerer to a polluted heart, then when he concluded that he had cleansed it in vaine. Besides, the more wee esteeme this purity, the more dearly will wee loue it, and the more earnestly will we labour in the vse of all good meanes, whereby we may be plentifully enriched with it, begging it of God, who is the sole giuer of it, by seruent prayer, and desiring that he will worke it in our hearts by his holy Spirit. And so the Lord, liberall in himselfe to bestow his gifts vpon them who esteeme them, wil giue this purity vnto vs with a much much more bountifull hand, hauing freely bound himselfe hereunto by his gracious promise, that if we aske, we shall haue, and if we seeke, we shall find; the Lord being as ready to blesse the meanes, that they may bee effectuall to their ends, as we can be to vse them.

On the other side, let vs consider of the manifold evils which doe accompany an heart that is polluted and defiled with sinne; for it maketh all appearances of graces, though neuer so excellent, to be nothing lesse in truth, and but sole semblances and shewes, wherein is nothing but meere hypocrisie. Our humiliation, like Ababs, which was not in the heart, but onely in the outward habit; and like the Israelites, who hanged downe their heads like a bulrush, and afflicted their soules, onely in the day of their fast, their hearts remaining full of pride and crueltie. Our zeale, like Iehu's, who destroyed Idolatry, to build vp his owne kingdome. Our obedience, like Herods, which was but to the halues, and only so farre as would stand with his carnall lusts. Our profession and following Christ, like that of Iudas, which was no further then he saw it would stand with his ambition and couetousnesse. Our bounty, in the workes of mercie, like that of Ananias, which was to be praised of men, and not to bee approoued of God. It maketh our prayers vnacceptable to God; for if we regard wickednesse in our hearts, the Lord will not heare vs. It pollureth all our actions, as the corrupted fountaine pollureth all the streames that issue from it; and maketh all the creatures to become vnclane, for vnto them that are defiled and unbelieuing, is nothing pure, but euen their minde and conscience is defiled. Finally, it prophaneth all our vowes of holinesse, and maketh all our desires, resolutions, and indeuours to leade a godly life, vnsettled, fickle, and vnconstant, like vnto the burning of an agne, which proceedeth not from naturall heate, but from distemper, and therefore endeth in vnnaturall coldnesse, the harbinger of death. For these flushings and flashings of deuotion, are not caused with that kindly heate of diuine loue, but with the scorching fire of blinde and distempred zeale; kindled with selfe-loue and worldly respects, and therefore last no longer then they last. Whereof it is, that the righteousness which is grounded on it, is like a goodly house without a foundation, which falleth to the ground, when the tempest of tryall ariseth; like the Cake, of which the Prophet speaketh, which though it may seeme outwardly scorched, and more then enough, yet is it not halfe baked, and therefore heavy, and not to be digested by Gods stomake; and as the morning dew or cloud, which vanisheth away, and like the blade, springing from the seede sowne in stony ground, which for want of earth and moisture withereth, when the sunne of affliction and persecution riseth.

And these are the arguments which may moue vs to esteeme and seeke after a pure heart, and to hate and auoide the contrary. Now when our hearts are inflamed with the loue of it; the meanes to obtaine it, is a liuely and iustifying faith, which purifieth the heart, as the Apostle speaketh; not by any vertue that is in it selfe, but by applying vnto vs the blood of Christ, which alone is sufficient to purge our hearts from all corruption, and to kill and crucifie the flesh with the lusts thereof. And therefore seeing so long as wee continue in infidelitie, our hearts will also continue in their impurity; this must make vs labour to come out of this estate, and to vse to this purpose, all good meanes whereby this faith may bee begunne and increased in vs. Secondly, let vs wash them in the teares of vnfeined repentance, bewailing those sinnes, in which formerly wee delighted, and hating those corruptions, which in time past we loued. And because we cannot at once purge the deepe sinke of our polluted hearts from all their filthinesse, therefore wee must make it our daily worke, and doe it by degrees. And seeing we cannot in one assault overcome these cursed Canaanites, we must continually make warre against them, and cast them out one after another, as God by his Spirit shall inable vs. Especially let vs not, out of feare and cowardize, suffer the sonnes of Anakim, our great and Gyant-like corruptions, fortifie themselues in the castle of our hearts; nor let those Agags, which haue ruled and raigned most in vs, liue out of any carnall respects; but let vs euen at the first strike at these maine rootes, which being cut off and plucked vp, many of the branches will die, for want of that sap of bitterness which they sucked from them; and let vs driue out these master Bees, and whole swarmes of carnall lusts will issue after them.

§. Sect. 5.
Of the meanes
to preferue the purity of our hearts.

Pro. 4.23.

Now when our hearts are thus purified, our next care must bee to preferue them in this purity and cleanness: for as the cleanest house will gather soyle, if it bee not sometime swept; and the brightest armour and weapons are apt to take rust, if they be not often scowred and oyled: so much more will our hearts remooue to their naturall vncleanness, and euen rust againe in their corruptions, if wee once onely take paines to cleanse them, and afterwards be carelesse to maintaine them in their puritie. First therefore we must keepe a narrow watch ouer our hearts, and as the Wiseman exhorteth, about all obseruations, obserue them, that they bee not carried away from God with loose wandrings, and so (Dina-like) be defiled with carnall and worldly lusts. For these spirituall enemies are conquered, but not quite killed; they are beaten and expelled (as it were) out of this city, but not quite banished out of our coasts. For they lye lurking in secret corners, and in ambushment; and no sooner doe we neglect our watch, and leaue the gate of our hearts vngarded, but presently they take the aduantage, and entring into them in whole troopes, they surprize them at vnawares. And therefore it behooueth vs to keepe daily our watch strong, and to nourish and preferue the garrison of Gods graces in vs, that they may either bee discovered and defeated before they approach, or be repelled and beaten backe in their first assaults. For if with loose Christians we neglect this watch and gard, and let our hearts roue after worldly lusts, and suffer them at pleasure to ryot in them; if we keepe them vnder no gouernment, but suffer them like masterlesse men, to wander at their pleasure, we shall neuer reserue them for Gods vse, nor fit them for his seruice: But like loose vagrants vnaccustomed to worke, it will be death vnto them to take any constant paines, saue onely by fits and starts; and when we would settle them to prayer, hearing, reading, and meditation, with such like holy exercises, they will by no meanes bee kept in, vnlesse they be held strictly in their bounds by the strong chaine of some sharpe afflictions, but euery hand-while, they will start aside, and according

according to their accustomed course, wander abroad after worldly vanities. Whereas if we keepe a carefull watch ouer our hearts, we shall keepe them from wandring away from God; or when they begin to stray after the pleasures of sinne and worldly vanities, we shall checke them in their course, and bring them backe vnto Gods seruice. We shall be still in readinesse to repell and beate backe the tentations of Satan, and to keepe our worldly and carnall lusts from entring at all, and so preferue our hearts in their purity from their defilements; or if they haue entred at vnawares, they shall not haue time to fortifie themselves, but being like secret traytors obserued, and (as it were) taken in the watch, we will examine them; and finding out their treason, and that they are come in to defile our hearts, and to betray vs to our spirituall enemies, we will kill and crucifie them, and that pollution which they haue left behind, wee will presently purge away, by renewing our faith and repentance. And thus by this carefull watch we shall either be preferued from receiuing hurt by our carnall lusts and the devils tentations; or if we haue, yet we shall with great ease recouer our losses, when they are no sooner sustained then espied. For these staines of sinne will easily be washed out, if wee take them in hand when they haue first tainted our hearts. Our enemies will without any great danger be beaten out, when they are first entred, and haue had no time to fortifie and intrench themselves. Our wounds, whilest they are Greene, will be soone cured; and if assoone as we haue drunke the poyson of sinne and carnall lusts, we presently cast them vp againe, before they haue had time to worke, or vse our antidote of faith and repentance, it will not be able to doe vs any great harme.

Secondly, if we would preferue our hearts in puritie, we must labour to keepe them from all sinne; not onely those raiging and raging lusts, which waste the conscience, and extinguish the vitall spirits, like strong poysons; but euen from those lesser corruptions which most men regard not, thinking no sinne so small that wee may liue in it, nor giuing allowance to the least carnall and worldly lusts. For these also will defile the heart themselves, and make way for the pollution of fouler finnes, whilest they lessen our care to keepe them out; euen as when the house is already somewhat fouled, men care not greatly though it be fouled more, whereas when they see it cleane, they more carefully keepe it so from all annoyance. But most especially wee must labour to preferue our hearts pure from those finnes, with which they haue formerly beene most tainted, and vnto which they are still most naturally inclined. And as men take most care to preuent hereditary diseases; and that they doe not by relapse fall into that sicknesse, out of which they haue newly recouered, because they are more prone vnto them then any other: so also must vve doe in keeping our hearts pure from those speciall corruptions, vvhich haue made them sicke to the death, and haue fearefully hazarded their euerlasting saluation. In time of vvarre vve most strongly man that part of the vvall, vvhich being vveakest, hath most often beene attempted by the enemy; and if a breach be made, vve keepe it vwith a narrow vvarch and strong gard, till it bee againe repaired. So the experience of our enemies policie and pouer in putting vs often to the vvorst, doth make vs more vigilant and diligent in our warlike preparations, that we may be able to make resistance. But if our friends, whom we have formerly loved, and are acquainted with all our secrets, knowing our outgoings and comings in, doe become our enemies, with what care and circumspection doe we prevent their mischiefs, because we know that by their ancient familiarity with vs, they are acquainted with all advantages? And thus must wee doe in warring with our corruptions, if ever we meane to get victory, and to preserve our hearts from being surprized by them.

The second meanes is to preferue them from all sinne.

Thirdly, we must not only labour to keepe our hearts pure from the sins themselves, with which formerly they have beene defiled, but also avoid all the occasions and meanes whereby we may be drawne vnto them, having euen the garment which is spotted with flesh. For as in vaine he fleeth the plague in himselfe, who haunteth the company of those that are infected; as hee fondly shunneth to bee burned, who maketh it his sport to play with fire and gunpowder; and he foolishly protesteth against whoredome, who delighteth in the kisses and wanton imbracement of some common Strumpet; So it is in vaine to thinke, that wee can preserve our hearts from the infection of sinne, and from the fire and filth of burning and polluting lusts, vnlesse we shun the meanes and occasions, as well as the corruptions and sinnes themselves.

Finally, if we would preserve our hearts in their purity, wee must often examine them in Gods sight, and for the approving of their purity and integrity, often offer them to his triall. For as the husbands eye and presence, allowing or disallowing all the wifes particular actions, and behaviour to strangers, is the best and surest meanes to preserve her chastity; so if the heart betrothed vnto God, haue all the affections and desires of it scanned and examined before him, it will not easily be polluted with strange and vncleane lusts. And thus Dauid kept his heart in purity and integrity, by prouoking and offering it often to Gods triall. Iudge me (saith he) O Lord, for I haue walked in mine integrity, &c. Examine me, O Lord, and proue me, try my reins and mine heart. And againe, Search me, O God, and know mine heart; try me, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in mee, and leade me in the way everlasting. Whose example if we follow, it will be a notable meanes to preserve our hearts in purity. For as we are extraordinary carefull to haue our houses cleansed from all filth, when we prepare them to giue entertainment to an honourable and respected friend, who hating all sluttishnesse, will curiously looke into euery corner; so will our care exceede in cleansing our hearts, when as we inuite our God to visit and lodge in them: yea, wee shall haue hereby the benefit, not onely of our owne care and diligence for the cleansing of our hearts, but of the Lords assistance to make them more cleane, when we haue cleansed them as well as we can. For he is not a curious carper at our infirmities, but a cheerfull helper to reforme and amend them; and therefore he that inuiteth the Lord to trie and search his heart, doth in another place desire his assistance for the purging of the filth and guilt of sinne, which lurked in such secret corners, that it was not subiect to his owne view, Who (saith he) can vnderstand his errors? cleanse thou me from my secret faults.

Lastly, if wee would preferue the purity of our hearts, our care must be to haue them continually taken vp in holy exercises, either about the generall duties of Christianity, or the speciall duties of our callings: of the former sort are the diligent and attentiu hearing and reading of the Word, which is a speciall meanes of our sanctification, as our Saviour noteth, and of the strengthening of our faith, by which our hearts are purified; and also prayer at ordinary times eyther publike or priuate, receiving the Sacrament, holy conferences one with another, singing Psalmes, and doing the workes of righteousness vnto all, vpon all occasions, and the workes of mercy vnto those, who doe in any respect stand in neede of our helpe: of the other sort are inward ejaculations, and lifting vp our hearts in our secret prayers at all times, and vpon all occasions, and holy meditations of Gods mercies or our owne miseries, or on the meanes whereby we may be enriched with all grace, and enabled vnto the performance of holy duties. For this priuiledge the heart hath aboue all other parts, that whereas they cannot exercise their duties, but when fit opportunity is offered, as the eare cannot heare the Word, but when it is preached, nor the hand performe workes of mercy, but when it hath meanes to doe them, and fit subiects to worke vpon, the heart needeth neuer to be idle and out of holy exercise: but euen when our bodies are taken vp with the workes of our callings, or honest recreations, wee may on all occasions pray, giue thanks, and exercise our hearts in holy meditations, eyther reioicing in the Lord and his mercies, or sighing and forrowing in the sight and sense of our owne miseries. And if our hearts be thus exercised, being wholly taken vp with Gods seruice, they will haue no leysure for the imployments of the diuell, the world and the flesh; whereas if they be swept cleane of all spirituall grace and holy duties, the diuell will easily enter with whole swarmes of noysome lusts, and so pollute them at his pleasure with all manner of poysonous abominations.

CAP. XII.

Of Conscience in generall, the nature, properties, and effects of it.

THe last ground of a godly life, is a good conscience, without which it is impossible to please God, or to performe any duty acceptable in his sight. In speaking whereof, wee will first generally shew the nature of conscience, & then more particularly intreat of a good conscience. The nature of conscience may bee partly knowne by the name, which signifieth to know together, or with another: for as the minde, vnderstanding the nature of things, is sayd to know them: so when another ioyneth with it in this knowledge, they are sayd to know together. Now there is no creature that can ioine with man in the knowledge, that is secret in his minde, according to that of the Apostle; No man knoweth the things of a man, but the Spirit of a man that is in him. Whereof it is, that humane lawes take no notice

tice of the thoughts of the heart, either to reward or punish them; but it is only the Lord that searcheth the heart and reynes, who knoweth and taketh notice together with our minde, of all the secrets which are knowne vnto it. Whereby the nature of conscience in part appeareth, namely, that it is such a faculty in the soule, as taketh notice of all our actions, and beareth witnesse of them before Gods Iudgement seate, eyther with vs, when they approue them as good; or against vs, when as they condemne them as euill. So that the conscience is a certayne diuine power, which is placed by God in the soule of man, as a third party indifferent betweene him and vs, sometime speaking for vs, and sometime against vs, as the equity of the cause requireth. It is Gods Monitour, which he hath set ouer vs, to take notice of all wee doe, that hee may either reward our well-doing, or punish that which is done amisse. And because simple knowledge might see and conceale what it seeth and knoweth, God to this science hath added conscience, which being placed in vs on the behalfe of the great King of heauen and earth, will not let any thing lie hid and smothered, but giueth vnpartiall witnes of whatsoeuer is done before his Tribunal, eyther excusing vs when wee doe well, or accusing vs, when we haue sinned against him: Not that the Lord needed any such witnesse or Monitour to informe him of our actions; for he seeth and knoweth all things past, present, and to come, with one perfect and simple act; but because he would in the administration of his iustice, proceede in a legal manner, that wee hereby might be conuicted of the vprightnesse of his iudgements, hauing in our selues a witnesse that iustificeth and approueth them.

What conscience is, being generally considered.

But that we may yet more clearly discern the nature of conscience, what it is, we will thus define it. Conscience is a faculty, or power placed by God in the soule of man, which reflecteth the vnderstanding vpon it selfe, causing it to apply its generall and contemplatiue knowledge of truth and falshood, good and euill, to practicall vse, for the ayming and determining of all our particular actions, according to the generall rules of reason, either with vs or against vs. It is a faculty, and not a naturall habit which may bee got and lost: for howsoeuer the operations of it may be hindred and deadened for a time, by carnall security, hardnesse of heart, and the violence of our lusts and passion: euen as reason it selfe cannot exercise its functions in the time of sleepe or drunkennesse; that it neuer vtterly fayleth; but when it is awakened by affliction, it sheweth it selfe in the actions of accusing, condemning, and terrifying, as in former times. Neither is it a bare art of vnderstanding, as some would haue it, but a distinct faculty & working power, which in it own vertue produceth diuers actions. For when the vnderstanding, in the Thesis and Theory, by way of generall contemplation, approueth of any action, as good, or condemneth it as euill, the conscience applyeth it in the Hypothesis vnto a mans owne particular actions, and by vertue of those generall notions in the vnderstanding, determineth of them, either with or against vs, that they are good or euill. And this it doth (as the schooles speake) in a practicall Syllogisme, in which the reason or contemplatiue vnderstanding (so called, because it is exercised in contemplation, and in seeking out the principles ples of all knowledge, & is in respect of this office, named also by Diuines, conscientia, because it is the keeper and conseruer of those notions implanted in vs, concerning good things to be imbraced, and euill things to be shunned of vs) this contemplatiue vnderstanding (I say) doth in this Syllogisme offer vnto vs the Maior or Proposition. The conscience which they call conscientia, because (as I haue shewed) it knoweth not to it selfe alone, but with God, maketh the Minor or assumption, and the facultie of iudgement determining of the fact, inferreth the conclusion: As for example. The vnderstanding suggesteth this Proposition; Hee that serueth God, who is the supreme cause and chiefe Good, performeth a good durie. The conscience assumeth, But thou hast serued God, the supreme cause and chiefe goodnesse; and so the iudgement inferreth; therefore thou hast performed a good duty. Againe, on the other side; the vnderstanding faith, Whosoever will worship God truly, must worship him according to his reuealed will, and not according to his owne inuentions; the conscience assumeth, But thou hast not worshipped him according to his reuealed will, but according to thine owne inuentions; whereupon the iudgement inferreth, Therefore thou hast not worshipped God truly. Or thus; Whosoever breaketh the Law, is accursed, faith the vnderstanding; But thou (faith the conscience) hast broken the Law: therefore, faith the iudgement, thou art accursed.

Now this facultie of conscience performeth diuers offices, in respect of the diuers parts, wherein it exerciseth its power and vertue. For in the vnderstanding, before our actions are archieued, it playeth the part of a friend, or gentle Monitour, telling what is to be done or lest vndone, with the penaltie or reward which will follow our commission or omission. After the deed is done, it becommeth a Iudge, approouing or disallowing the action, and either absolving or condemning vs, for the doing or not doing of it. In the memory, it performeth the office of a Notary and Register, in setting downe and keeping vpon Record, what wee haue done, good or euill; and also of a witnesse, giuing euidence, either with or against vs, according to the nature of our fact, accusing vs when wee haue done ill, and excusing vs when we haue done well. In the will and affections, it is the deputie of Gods Spirit, to suggest and inioyne vs good duries; and when they are done, to reward vs by comforting, cherishing, and replenishing our hearts with ioy; and when we haue done ill, especially by committing sinnes which are haynous and against conscience, it executeth the office of a Iaylor or tormentor, filling the heart with shame and sorrow, with feare and terrour, with finall desperation, hellish perturbation, and intolerable tortures, that no racke nor gallowes, no hot pincers or scalding lead may be compared with them, as we see in the example of Cain, who out of a despairing conscience, crieth out, that his punishment was greater then he could beare; and of Judas, who, to ease his torment, which the gnawing worme of conscience caused, hanged himself. And with this office of conscience the Heathens were acquainted, which gaue occasion to that fiction of hellish furies, which endlessly haunted and tormented those who had committed haynous sinnes against the light of nature. The which also appeareth by their writings, wherein are many notable sayings to this purpose. What doth it profit, saith Seneca, to hide a mans selfe, and to auoide the eyes and cares of men? A good conscience calleth in the multitude, and an ill is sollicitous and fearefull euen in solitude. If the things thou doest be honest, care not though all men know them; if dishonest, what skilleth it though no man know them, seeing thou knowest them thy selfe? O miserable man that thou art, if thou despisest such a witnesse! And againe, It is the greatest securitie to doe no man wrong. They that cannot abstaine from it, doe leade a life full of confusion & perturbation, so much fearing as they haue hurt. Neither are they at any time quiet. After they haue done mischief, they feare, they are troubled. Conscience suffereth them not to intend any other things, but euery hand while to reuiue themselues. He suffereth punishment that expecteth it, and he expecteth that hath deserued it. It is possible, by some meanes, to be safe with an ill conscience, but neuer secure. For he thinketh he may be taken with the manner, though yet he be not. In sleepe he is troubled, and being awake, as oft as he nameth any mans wickednesse, he thinketh of his owne. It neuer seemeth enough blotted out, neuer sufficiently couered. A guiltie conscience hath sometime the hap to be hid, but neuer assurance. So the Satyrist; Whatsoeuer crime is committed by euill example, it first displeaseth the author. This is the first punishment, that no man guilty can be absolued, himselfe being Iudge, although by the fauour of the corrupted Iudge he be acquitted. In which regard Cato was wont to say, that euery man ought to feare and respect himselfe most when he doth any euill, because, though he may shun others, yet from himselfe he cannot flee.

Now this power of conscience in iudging, witnessing, binding, and punishing, it hath onely from God which is the Lord of it, and hath seated it in man as his Viceroy and Deputie, to rule him in all his wayes, and, if he will not obey, to be his Notary, to keepe vpon record all his faults, his Witnesse to giue testimony against him, and his Executioner to torment him, when in the Court of conscience hee is condemned. Neither hath any creature power ouer conscience, either to binde it, or set it at liberty, but God only; nor hath the conscience it selfe any authority to execute these offices, till it haue a Commission ingrossed and sealed from God, which is either the Law of nature, written in the heart in our first creation, or the diuine Oracles of God, contained in the bookes of the Old and New Testament. And if without these, conscience doth any thing against vs, either by vniust iudging, or false accusing, we may reuoke it all by a Writ of error, and make our appeal from this false iudgement in the Court of conscience, to our supreme Lord, to bee iudged by him according to his Law. For howsoeuer in the creation, conscience was an vpright Iudge and true witnesse, yet after the fall, the vnderstanding being darkened with ignorance, and the iudgement corrupted, doe offer vnto the conscience false rules and Principles, and so cause it to giue wrong euidence and erroneous iudgement, iustifying when it should condemne, and condemning when it should iustifie, excusing those whom it should accuse, and accusing them whom the Law of God excuseth and absolue. The which commeth to passe, because the light of nature is through through the fall almost extinguished, and the booke of the Law written, according to which, conscience should iudge and testifie, is not vnderstood and knowne, or because it is blinded by lusts and passions, or being corrupted, hath the mouth stopped with the bribes of worldly vanities, or finally is become seared and senselesse with customable sinning and habitual wickednesse.

C. A. P. XIII.

Of a good Conscience, which is a maine ground of a godly life, what it is, and the causes of it.

IN which regard, conscience thus corrupted and disabled, cannot be a sufficient ground of a godly life, till after our regeneration, it be renewed and restored in some measure, vnto that integrity and perfection which it had in our first creation. And this we call good conscience, which is a maine foundation of godlinesse, guiding and inabling vs to the performance of all good duties which God requireth. In speaking whereof, we will first shew what it is, and then the causes of it, the effects and fruits which spring from it, the properties and signes whereby wee may know it, and the meanes by which we may obtaine it, if it bee wanting; or preserue and keepe it, if we already have it. Concerning the first; A good conscience is that, which being renewed by Gods Spirit, and a lively faith, applying vnto vs the vertue of Christs death and obedience, doth speake peace, and truly testifie vnto vs, according to the Scriptures, that we are redeemed out of the hands of all our enemies, reconciled vnto God, iustified, sanctified, and shall perseuere in grace vnto saluation, and that all our actions are warranted by the Word, and accepted of God in Iesus Christ, though in themselves imperfect; whereby we are comforted in all things, made cheerefull and diligent in Gods seruice, and willing to doe all things which may be pleasing vnto him. The causes of a good conscience are diuers. The principall efficient is God the Father, Sonne, and holy Spirit. The Father bestoweth this gift vpon vs, who as in the beginning he first created, and placed it in vs, as an vncorrupted Iudge, and impartiall witnesse betweene him and vs, so it is he alone that doth renew and repaire the ruines thereof, contracted through the fall of our first parents, by which, together with all other faculties, conscience was corrupted, and either so deadd, seared, and benumbed, that it had no sense and feeling at all, or when it awakened out of this deadly sloune, did nothing but accuse and terrifie vs, or vnjustly excuse and encourage vs in our sinfull courses, by presenting vnto vs false comforts.

The meritorious cause of it, is God the Sonne, and our Saviour Iesus Christ, who satisfying Gods iustice, and appeasing his wrath by his death and obedience, freed vs from the guilt and punishment of our sinnes, reconciled vs vnto God, and made our peace with him; vpon which followeth peace of conscience, and freedome from the accusations and terrours of it. For when by the Law of God, or light of nature, it is set a worke to affright

affright and disquiet vs in regard of our finnes, then shewing our pardon sealed by the blood of Christ, it is calmed and quietered, hauing nothing to lay to our charge, which Christ our surety hath not satisfied for vs. Whereof it is that our Sauour was prophetically named; The Prince of peace, and prefigured vnder the type of Melchizedech, because hee is not onely the King of righteousness, by whom we are iustified, but also King of peace, as the Apostle speaketh, who making our peace with God, did thereby also procure for vs peace of conscience. For the Iudge hath no authority to condemne, nor the witnesse to accuse, nor the Iaylour to imprison, nor the executioner to punish and torment, when the supreme Soueraigne King of heauen and earth, being satisfied by the sufferings of his Sonne, hath sent vs his free pardon, and wee haue pleaded it in the Court of conscience: Yea, rather the Iudge doth then acquit and absolue vs, and the witnesse saith nothing against vs, but as a messenger of good things, doth testifie vnto vs this ioyfull tydings. And hence it is, that our Sauour was no sooner borne vnto vs, but the holy Angels were sent as Gods Heralds to proclaime this peace; Glory bee vnto God in the highest, and in earth peace, good will towards men. The which peace, our Sauour wrought as a Mediatour betweene God and vs, by satisfying his iustice, and offering himselfe as an all-sufficient sacrifice for the finnes of all his elect. So the Apostle saith, It pleased the Father, that in him should all fulnesse dwell; And (hauing made peace through the blood of his Crosse) by him to reconcile all things to himselfe. And else where he affirmeth, that we were without Christ, being aliens from the Common-wealth of Israel, and strangers from the Couenant of promise, hauing no hope, and without God in the world; but that now in Christ Iesus, we, who sometimes were farre off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ. For hee is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken downe the middle wall of partition betweene God and vs; Hauing abolished in his flesh the enmity, euen the Law of Commandements contained in ordinances, to make in himselfe of twayne, one new man, so making peace: And that he might reconcile both vnto God, in one body by the crosse, hauing slaine the enmity thereby: And came and preached peace vnto vs, both them which were a farre off, and to them that were nigh. And thus working our peace with God, he brought also peace to our consciences, when as by his blood hee had clesed them from the guilt and punishment of sinne; for if the blood of Bulls and Goates, sanctified to the outward purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through his eternall Spirit, offered himselfe without spot to God, purge our consciences from dead workes, to serue the liuing God? Finally, the conscience is renewed and sanctified by God the holy Ghost, whilest he applieth Christ and all his benefits, the vertue of his death and precious blood, and maketh them effectuell for the purging of our consciences from all sinnefull corruption, and spirituall defilements, that wee may be inabled to performe pure and acceptable seruice vnto God.

For the effecting whereof, he vseth as his instruments, the preaching of the Gospell, and administration of the Sacraments, and a liuely faith; which by them both, made effectuell by the inward operation of the Spirit, is begotten and also confirmed and increased in vs. First, the preaching of

of the Gospell is the instrument which the Spirit useth, whereby a good conscience is wrought in vs; for when the Law preached, and the curse threatned, like a strange winde and tempest, hath rent the mountaines, and broken in pieces the rockes of our proud and hard hearts, and as the earthquake and fire, which Elias saw and felt, hath terrified the conscience with the guilt of sinne, and caused vs to hide our faces from Gods presence, then the still voice of the Gospell, causing these stormes to cease, doth quiet and calme the conscience, so as wee can without terrour, yea with much ioy and comfort, heare the voyce of God speaking peace, and offering vnto vs reconciliation, grace, and saluation in Iesus Christ, assuring vs vpon the condition of a lively faith, bringing forth the fruits thereof in vnfeined repentance, that all Gods gracious promises, respecting this life and the life to come, doe belong vnto vs. In which regard it is called glad tidings, which cause, euen the very feete of those that bring them, to seeme beautifull vnto vs; and the Gospell of peace, which Christ himselfe first preached. Peace I leaue with you, my peace I giue vnto you, not as the world giueth, giue I vnto you: Let not your heart be troubled, neyther let it be afraide. And when he had reconciled vs vnto God by his Crosse, and slaine enmity thereby, he came also and preached this peace vnto vs: And afterwards sent his Disciples as his Heralds to proclaime it, to all who by faith receiued it, yea as his Ambassadors to beseech vs, in his stead, to be reconciled vnto God. By which meanes when the peace of a good conscience is begunne in vs, it is thereby more and more confirmed and increased; as also by the vse of the Sacraments, which being as seales annexed to the couenant of grace, doe confirme our faith in Gods promises, and so worke peace and ioy in our consciences, out of this assurance that Christ and all his benefits are ours, and that wee in him are reconciled vnto God.

For neither the Gospell, nor the Sacraments, no nor yet Christ himselfe, will bring vnto vs this peace of conscience, vnlesse wee receiue and apply them by the hand of faith: as the best salve will not heale, vnlesse it be applied to the wound, nor meate nourish vs, vnlesse it be receiued into the stomake, nor the purest water purge vs from our filth, vnlesse we be washed in it. But when this precious balsam is applied to our wounded consciences, and when by the hand of faith they are washed in the Lauer of his precious blood, then they are healed of the sores of sinne, and being rised from the guilt, punishment, and power of it, do speake peace vnto vs, and are the messengers of such ioyfull tydings as cannot be damped with any worldly tribulation. According to that of the Apostle, Being iustified by faith, we haue peace with God, through our Lord Iesus Christ, by whom also we haue acceffe by faith into this grace wherein we stand, and reioyce in hope of the glory of God: And not onely so, but we glory in tribulation also, &c. Whereof it is, that in the Scriptures, faith and a good conscience, are as the cause and effect ioyned together, so that one of them cannot miscarry in the storme of tentations, but we shall make shipwracke of them both, and together with our faith, lose both our peace with God, and our peace of conscience. Whereas our assurance of faith will embolden vs to draw neere to the Throne of Gods grace; with a true heart, hauing our hearts sprinkled from from an euill conscience, and our soules washed with pure water. But yet we must take heede, that we doe not attribute that to the instrument, which is peculiar to the principall cause, nor imagine that faith, by any vertue that is in it selfe, doth purifie our consciences, or worke peace in them. For this it can no more doe, then the hand it selfe can cure a sore by touching it, or nourish the body, and keepe it warme, without food or clothes, though it be the instrument to apply and put them on; but it is onely our good Ionas, which being cast into the raging Sea of our troubled consciences, maketh them cleane and still; it is the wood of his Crosse alone, that is, the vertue of his death and passion, which being cast into these waters embittered with the guilt of sinne, that can make them to yeeld vnto vs the sweete and pleasant waters of ioy and consolation: Although he will doe no more good to pacifie the stormes, and sweeten the bitter torments of a raging conscience, if he be not applied by a liuely faith, then Ionas in the ship, or the branches still growing vpon the tree, and not at all cast into the tempestuous Sea, and bitter waters.

CAP. XIII.

Of the actions and effects of a good Conscience; of the peace which it truly speaketh; and how it differeth from the false peace of secure worldlings.

§. Sect. 1.
That a good conscience speaketh goodnesse and peace only.

And so much of the causes of a good conscience, both principall and instrumentall. The next point to be considered, is the actions and effects of it, which are to speake peace, and to rectifie vnto vs truly, and according to the Scriptures, good and comfortable things; as a Iudge acquitting and absolving vs; as an aduocate pleading for vs; as a witnesse excusing and giuing euidence on our side; and as a sure and faithfull friend, admonishing vs that we may not fall; or rebuking vs being false, that we may rise againe by vsained repentance. Where we are to consider, what the conscience witnesseth; and secondly the rule, according to which it giuerh testimonie. The things which the good conscience speaketh and witnesseth, are goodnesse and peace only; neither is it the action of a good conscience properly, to accuse and terrifie vs for sinne; but to speake peace vnto vs, and to iustifie vs as righteous; not in our owne naturall righteousness, but in the righteousness of Christ applied by faith, which is most pure and perfect; and in our sanctification and inherent righteousness wrought in vs by the renewing of the holy Ghost, which is but begun, spotted, and imperfect in this life, but yet is growing towards purity and perfection, and in the meane while hath the imperfections covered with Christs perfect righteousness, and the spots and staynes of it washed away in his blood. So that the good conscience is the peaceable conscience onely, which witnesseth good things vnto vs, as most nearly resembling the conscience of Adam in the first Creation, whilst he remained in the state of innocency, which onely iustified him and his actions, and thereby comforted and strengthened him in Gods seruice; and neuer accused or ter-

hed him before his fall, because he was pure and free from all taint of sinne; vnto which purity of Creation, lost by transgression, the holy Ghost reneweth the conscience by degrees, vnto the highest whereof it attaineth, when casting to accuse and terrify vs, it iustificeth and excuseth vs before Gods Tribunal; being then most good and perfect, when as it is most quiet and peaceable; so as we can say with Paul, I haue liued in all good conscience before God, vntill this day, namely, from the time of my first effectual calling and conuersion.

Alb. 23. 1.

§. Sect. 2.
That a good conscience speaketh peace according to the truth of Gods Word.

But here the carnal worldling and loose Libertine wil take occasion to presume, that about all others, they haue the best consciences, because they seldome or neuer accuse them, or if they doe, yet they can easily put them to silence; they were neuer in their liues troubled with any horrors and feares; but haue had their consciences euer quiet and peaceable, witnessing good things vnto them, as that their sinnes are pardoned, they highly in Gods fauour, and shall most certainly attaine vnto saluation. But for preuenting of this, we haue added in the description of a good conscience, that it doth not onely witnesse peaceable and good things, but also that it doth giue true testimony of them. So that if we would haue good consciences, they must not be erroneous in their euidence, but peace and truth must be matched together. And because they who most erre, are ready with the best to brag of truth, as well as of peace, therefore I also added the Rule and Touchstone, whereby all diuine truth is to be tryed, namely, when it agreeth with the truth of God reuealed in the Scriptures. For conscience (as I haue said) is a witnesse with God, testifying that which he also testifieth; and therefore when it doth excuse them whom God excuseth, and secretly whispereth peace to them, vnto whom in his Word he hath proclaimed it, then is its testimony true, and truly comfortable. But when it offereth peace to them against whom hee hath proclaimed warre, and excuseth them as good subjects, whom his Word condemneth of high treason and wicked rebellion, then is the testimonie of conscience false and erroneous, and can be no good ground of any sound consolation. And in this case, conscience is a traytor both to God and vs, renouncing his seruice and that office which he hath imposed vpon it, and ioyning with the enemies of our saluation, to dishonour him in our destruction. For it mayntaineth a false peace, by giuing vs false intelligence, telling vs that we are in safety, when as we lye open to all danger; that we are strong and well fortified against all assaults, when as we are naked and haue vpon no part of the spirituall armour, and like a false Sinon, it testifieth that our spirituall enemies are quite departed, whereas they lye in secret ambushment, ready to assault and surprize vs, when by beleeuing this false intelligence, we are secure, and neglecting the spirituall watch, giue our selues ouer to worldly delights.

The difference betwixt the peace of a good and bad conscience, as first, that the peace of the wicked proceedeth from ignorance of their estate.

Euery conscience therefore is not good which is peaceable, but that which speaketh peace in truth; not according to our ignorant conceits, blinded with pride, and selfe-loue, or presumptuous opinions which haue no sound ground, but when it is squared by the perfect and infallible rule of the holy Scriptures, whereby we may discern, whether that inward peace which wee feele in vs, proceedes from a good or a bad conscience.

6. Sect. 4.

The peace of a good conscience proceedeth from spirituall life: of an euill, from senselesnesse
and deadnesse.

ence. For there are many things by corrupting and defiling the conscience, and making it worse, and more dead and senselesse, then it is in it owne nature; which make it (at least for time) quiet and peaceable. As first, ignorance of God and his will, which hood-winking the conscience, giueth the deuill fit opportunity to carry it quickly whither hee will, and like a thicke fogge, and darkenesse of the night, depriuing vs of light and sight, doth cause vs to erre into the by-ways of sinne, whilst wee thinke that we are in that perfect path of righteousness that leadeth to Gods Kingdome. As we see in Pauls example, who in the time of his ignorance, thought concupiscence to be no sinne, which after hee was enlightened with the knowledge of the truth, he discerned to bee the roote and fountaine of all wickednesse. And whilst his iudgement was thus blinded, his conscience spoke peace vnto him, testifying that hee was alite and in good case, when as being truly informed, hee plainly saw that hee was dead, and in the high way that leadeth to hell. Such haue not their peace disturbed by conscience, because, being ignorant of the way, it cannot admonish them when they goe out of it, and being it selfe misinformed, it must needs giue vnto them false euidence. And though their hearts be full of sluttish corners, and euen deepe dungeons full of all filthinesse, yet the eye of conscience doth not discern any annoyance, because it is in the darke, and is not enlightened with the knowledge of Gods truth. But especially this commeth to passe, when as ignorance is not onely simple and naturall, but imbraced and affected, men purposely neglecting, yea, contemning and shunning the meanes of knowledge, because for their greater quietnesse, they would not haue conscience to take notice of their wayes. As they who blesse themselues in their good meanings, as sufficient to saluation, and wholly neglecting Gods true seruice, doe content themselues with their owne blinde deuotion and superstition. Such shun those places where the light of the Gospel shineth, and like Battes and Owles, delight to liue in darke corners, where they seldome or neuer heare a Sermon, because they delight in the workes of darkenesse. They hate the light of Gods truth, because their workes are euill, as our Sauour speaketh; and as the thiefe and adulterer waite for the twy-light, and make choice of the night, as fittest for their purposes, hating the morning as the shadow of death, because it discovereth their faults to others, and bringeth them in danger to be apprehended, condemned, and executed. So these affect the darkenesse of ignorance, and abhorre the light of truth, because they would not haue conscience to take notice of their wickednesse, lest, like Gods Sergeant, it should arrest and hale them before his Tribunall, and there, as an vnpartiall witnesse, giue euidence against them, and lest, being condemned, it should play the executioner, tormenting and vexing them, day and night with hellish horrors, and deepe despaire.

Secondly, peace of conscience doth often proceed, not from spirituall life and motion, knowing and doing Gods will, but from the cleane contrary, as from spirituall deadnesse, idlenesse and sloth in performing those duties which God requireth. For as when the body is dead, it hath no sense of sicknesse, wounds, or any hurt which can be done vnto it: so when the

the soule is dead in sinne, the conscience hath no feeling of any waight that lieth vpon it, nor of any wounds or sores of sin, wherewith it is mangled and deformed. And though corruption and guilt, like a gangrene, indangereth it, euen vnto the very death, yet it neuer complaineth, because it hath no sense and feeling of this mischief and misery. Besides, whilest men snort in this lethargie of sinne, the deuill neuer wakeneth nor disquieteth them, because hee knoweth that this temporary rest will end in restlesse torments; and that the disturbing them of this ease may happen to awake them; and so hauing a sense of their disease, may worke a desire and resolution to vse all meanes whereby they may be cured. Neither will it stand with his policie, to let them, who are in his thraldome, and ready with all cheerefulnesse to doe his will, come vnto a sight and sense of their misery, which might make them desirous to come out of it; and therefore he neuer terrifieth their consciences with his tentations, but rather more blindeth their eyes, that they may not see their wofull state, and stoppeth their mouthes, that they may not complaine of it. And so our flesh and carnall corruptions are quiet, and neuer goe about to disturb our peace, whilest we suffer them to liue and raigne in vs: but when we goe about to depose them from their regencie, and like slaues, to bring them in subiection, then they rebell, and taking armes against the part regenerate, make vs feeble the vprores and garboyles of a ciuill and intestine warre. Thus corrupt humours in the body, though they indanger our liues, yet oftentimes are scarce discerned before they bee moued; but when we stirre them with some wholesome potion, which serueth to purge vs of them, then they rage and make vs more sicke in our owne sense then we were before. Thus the sea it selfe is calme and quiet, when there is no winde to moue it, but in the time of a storme it rageth and roareth, as if it would at once swallow vp the earth. And thus gunpowder is quiet and harmelesse when it is let alone: but if a sparke of fire fall into it, it bloweth vp all that is neere vnto it. And so sinne and corruption, if it be let alone, will be so quiet, that it will neuer disturb our peace: but if wee seeke to purge it out by wholesome medicines, or if it be touched with the fire of Gods Spirit, or but euen blowne vpon with the breath of admonition and rebuke, out of the mouthes of Gods faithfull Ministers, then the Sea is no more raging in a streame, nor gunpowder more clamorous and vnruly when the fire is put vnto it. Moreouer, spirituall sloth and idlenesse doth oftentimes keepe the conscience which is most corrupted, in peace and quiet, because it maketh vs neglect all spirituall exercises which should awaken it, and bring it to some sense and feeling. As hearing the Word, reading, meditating of our wants and weakenesse, the soulenesse and deformitie of sinne, the fearefulnesse of Gods Iudgements, the curse and threatnings of the Law, the daily examination of our estates, by the strict rule of Gods Word; which are the meanes, both to cast out the strong man out of his quiet possession, and to disturb the peace of an ill conscience, which ariseth not from any sound security, but rather from want of spiritual exercise: herein like vnto a lame horse, which complaineth not of his lameness whilest he lieth at ease, but when by trauell he becometh sensible of his paine, he cannot indure it, but halteth downe right.

§. Sect. 5.
The third difference between a good and euill conscience.

1. Tim. 4. 1, 2.

Rom. 1. 26, 28.

§. Sect. 6.
The last cause of the peace of an euill conscience, is worldly employments.

A third cause of peace to an ill conscience, is carnall securitie, which doth not take away the guilt and punishment of sinne, but onely serueth as the devils cradle, to rocke vs asleepe, that we may haue no sense and feeling of it. Whereof it saith with vs, as with men sicke of dangerous diseases, whose sleepe bringeth not health, but a cessation of paine, through the binding vp of the senses, who, after they are awakened, doe feelee themselves more sicke then before. And as it bringeth vs asleepe in sinne, so the deuill and our corrupt flesh doe by it lull conscience a sleepe also, lest being disquieted, it should disquiet vs, and waken vs with clamour and crying: And intending to sacke the citie of our soules, he maketh the Watch-man drunke with this poysonous and intoxicating cup, that hee may not sound the alarme, nor giue vs any warning to prepare for resistance. Now this security being continued and increased, groweth at last to hardnesse of heart, in the highest and worst degree, which neglecteth and contemneth all meanes whereby it might be loosened, and to a reprobate sense, carrying men on in the course of sinning with greedinesse and delight. And when they are come to this passe, their consciences also increase in their carnall peace, their deepe sleepe causing a lethargie, and their lethargie death. Such consciences, from a sleepe numnesse, fall into a dead palsie, hauing no sense of sinne or smart; vnto which they grow, by often quenching the good motions of the Spirit, speaking vnto them in the ministry of the Word, and by customable committing of knowne sinnes, without repentance or remorse. For as festering sores, not clenfed by salues and corrosiues, quickly gangrene, and running from part to part, destroy the whole body; so if we doe not clense our sores of sinne, by renewing our faith and repentance, they will corrupt the whole man, euen conscience it selfe, and make it become dead and senselesse. Such are the consciences of those, of whom the Apostle speaketh, who departing from the faith, and speaking lies in hypocrisie, haue their consciences seared with an hot yron, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstaine from meates, which God hath ordained to bee receiued with thankesgiuing. And such had the Gentiles, who were giuen ouer of God to their vile affections, and a reprobate minde, to commit sinne without checke and remorse, yea with greedinesse and delight.

Finally, the conscience is made quiet, and at peace, when men are wholly taken with worldly vanities, both in their hearts and affections doting vpon them, and in their actions and employments in seeking after them. For Satan, seeing conscience placed in man by God, as his Deputy and Vice-roy to gouerne him, as his Iudge to absolue or condemne him, and as a witnesse, to giue euidence of all his particular actions, and hauing no power to depose it, or to put it out of its place and office, doth labour by all meanes to peruert and corrupt it, that it either may be silent, or giue vniust iudgement and false euidence. And to this purpose, he offereth worldly honours, riches, and pleasures, that by these bribes he may stop the mouth of conscience, so as it may either say nothing, or speake as he would haue it: And with Satan ioyneth the world and our owne flesh, for no sooner doth conscience begin to awaken out of the sleepe of security, and to stirre and mooue, speaking something that concernes its office

fice (as it were) betweene sleeping and waking, but presently they endeavour all they can to bring it asleepe againe, by rocking it in the cradle of worldly prosperity, and singing vnto it the bewitching songs of carnall pleasures. And if conscience will needs start vp and bee meddling, either accusing or condemning them for sinne, or terrifying and tormenting them with the guilt and punishments due vnto it; then doe they corrupt this Iudge and witnesser with carnall pleasures; and when they cannot be ridde of their laylour, but they must needs goe abroad vnder his custodie, they will make him drunke with these alluring cups of worldly delights, that they may haue more liberty to doe what they list, without checke and controulement. And thus when conscience groweth melancholy through the neglect of dutie, they cheere it againe, that it may still goe on with them in carnall courses, by feasting and reuelling; musicke and merry company, sporting and gaming, iesting and wanton dalliance, strage-playes, vnchaste sonnets, and pleasant histories. And if, notwithstanding all these, conscience stirreth and beginneth to speake, then doth the world giue such a Plaudite to these pastimes, and the flesh entertaine them with so loud an outcry of clamorous lusts and passions, that the voyce of conscience being quite drowned, it becommeth silent, because it speaketh to no purpose. And thus also conscience is sometimes at ease and peace, through worldly cares and imployments, in compassing these earthly things: for hauing their hearts wholly set vpon these vaine objects, and all their actions and indeuours taken vp in these exercises and imployments, conscience is silent, because they haue no leisure to attend what it saith, chusing rather to say nothing, then to speake much to little purpose.

CAP. XV.

Of the good things which a good Conscience witnesseth to the faithfull.

And so much generally of the matter which a good conscience testifieth, namely, peace and good things, and of the manner how it giueth witness, to wit, truly, and according to the rule of Gods Word, wherein the peace which it bringeth diuersly, differeth from the peace of an ill conscience. Now we are to speake more particularly of the good things whereof it giueth euidence, and of the fruit and benefit which ariseth from it. First, it witnesseth vnto vs truly; and according to the rule of Gods Word, that all our finnes are pardoned, and we reconciled vnto God; not by any satisfaction which our selues haue made, or any worthinesse in vs; for which God should accept vs aboue others; but only out of our assurance of faith, which perswadeth vs, that God, of his free grace and mercie, for the alone merits and satisfaction of Iesus Christ, hath forgien vs all our finnes; and accepteth of vs in the face of his best Beloued, in whom only he is well pleased: vpon which ground, a good conscience giueth comfortable euidence, not onely when wee please our selues

selues in the sight and sense of Gods graces in vs, and in our cheerefull obedience and best seruices which we performe to God: but also when we see and feele our corruptions, and imperfections, our slips, falls, and manifold saylings in our best actions: Because ingiueth euidence, according to the assurance of faith, which is grounded on Gods mercies and Christs merits, and not vpon our workes and worthinesse, and therefore cannot be ouerthrowne by our wants and weakenesses, our corruptions and vnworthinesse. In which respect, the Apostle saith, that baptisme doth save vs (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God) by the resurrection of Iesus Christ. Which answer is nothing but this, that when Gods iustice and the Law layeth sinne to our charge, and requireth obedience, the conscience giueth in euidence, that Christ, by his death and resurrection, hath made full satisfaction, and in our stead, hath done all which was required of vs.

And as the conscience thus beareth witness of our iustification, and reconciliation, so also of our sanctification, namely, that being freed from sinne, we are become seruants of righteousnesse, and not onely delivered from the guilt and punishment of sinne, but also from the corruption, power, and dominion of it, so that though it dwell in vs, as a trayterous slave, yet it doth not raigne and rule in vs, as in times past. And though we be not wholly freed from all reliques of sinne and corruption, nor can performe vnto God that perfect obedience which the Law requireth; yet our consciences giue in euidence with vs, that wee are in part sanctified, and shall in Gods good time haue this worke thorowly perfected, and that in the meane while, we hate the euill wee doe, and loue the good we doe not, delighting in the Law of God in the inner man, euen when we are led captiue vnto sinne; that we desire and resolute to please God in all things, and indeuour in the vse of all good meanes, to haue our desires satisfied; and consequently, that we performe that Euangelicall obedience which God requireth, and are through Christ accepted of him. In which regard we may say with Paul, from the time of our effectuall calling, that we haue liued with all good conscience vntill this day. Again, a good conscience is our warrant for all our actions, testifying vnto vs, that what wee haue done, and are about to doe, is commanded of God, whereby we are comforted in those duties which we haue performed, and encouraged to proceede in well-doing, because we doe not our owne will, but the will of God. And though our actions bee imperfect in themselves, yet being done in sincerity and with vpright hearts, we shall not be discouraged in the sight and sense of our imperfections, yea, rather we shall find cause of reioicing and glorying in them, because being done with a good conscience, it will iustifie and giue witness vnto vs, that wee are also iustified and approued of God, and haue both our persons and workes accepted of him through Iesus Christ; according to that of the Apostle Iohn, If our heart condemne vs not, then haue wee confidence towards God. And this made the Apostle Paul most gladly to glory in his infirmities, which otherwise in themselves would haue bene a cause of griefe and mourning; and to reioyce in the conscience of his well-doing, which in respect of the imperfections euen of his best actions, would haue filled his face with blushing.

ing, and his heart with shame. Our reioycing (saith he) is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshy wisdomie, but by the grace of God, we haue had our conuersation in the world.

Moreover a good conscience testifieth vnto vs, that we are through Christ in an happy and blessed estate, both in respect of the time present and to come. In respect of the present, a good conscience will make vs beare and brooke all estates, not only with patience, but also with comfort and ioy in the holy Ghost. If we be in prosperity, and abound with Gods blessings, it warranteth vnto vs the lawfull vse of them, and witnesseth vnto vs that we are heires and right owners, and not thieues and vsurers, that they are Gods talents, which being employed to aduantage, for the glory of our great Lord, and good of our fellow seruants, they shall be doubled and redoubled, when we are called to giue account of them; that they are pledges of Gods fauour in this life, and earnest pennies of euerglasting ioy and happinesse in the life to come. If we be in aduersitie and affliction, a good conscience, like the good Angell, holding vs by the hand in this fire furnace, will secure vs that wee shall not receiue any harme. For it will testifie vnto vs, that these curses in their owne nature, are through Gods mercy turned into blessings; that they are testimonies of Gods loue, seeing as many as he loueth, he chastizeth, and signes of our adoption, for the Lord correcteth euery sonne that he receiueth: and they are bastards and no sonnes whom he correcteth not. That they will not separate Gods loue from vs, but our loue from the world. That they are not poysons to kill vs, but medicines to cure vs of our spirituall diseases, fannes, and files, and fires, to winnow vs from our chaffe, scowre vs from our rust, and purifie vs from the drosse of our corruptions. Finally, that whatsoever they seeme to flesh and blood, yet they shall worke together for the best, to them that loue God; and that though they be bitter and vnpleasant, for the present, yet they shall bring forth the quiet fruits of righteousness, to them that are exercised thereby. In respect of the time to come, a good conscience doth giue vnto vs truly, and according to the Scriptures, this comfortable and ioyfull euidence, that we shall continue euer to be holy and happy, persevering to the end in Gods grace vnto saluation; not by vertue of our owne strength, but through the power and promises of God. For he hath assured vs, that he will put his feare in our hearts, that wee may not depart from him. That though we haue many fierce Wolues to assault vs, and be but silly weake Sheepe, vnable to make resistance, yet our Shepherd Christ, being infinitely stronger then they, none shall be able to pull vs out of his hand. That whom God loueth, he loueth with an euerglasting loue, and to the end; that the gifts and calling of God are without repentance; and finally, that though we be many wayes tryed, yet the Lord will neuer suffer us to bee tempted aboue our power; but will giue a good end and issue to all our tentations.

Lastly, a good conscience maketh vs cheerefull and diligent in Gods seruice, and willing to doe all things which are pleasing in his sight. So the Prophet speaking of the faithfull, saith, that they should beare a voyce behind them, saying, This is the way, walke ye in it, when ye turne to the right hand, and when ye turne to the left. That is, besides their outward teaching in the Ministry of the Word, they should haue an inward teacher to direct and admonish them, euen the Spirit of God, speaking vnto them in the heart and conscience. And this is that which Dauid meaneth, where he saith, that his reines did teach him in the night season, that is, the voyce of conscience, which did shew him the wayes of God, and moued him with cheerefulnesse to walke in them. The which is the maine end at which the conscience aimeth, in witnessing and sealing vnto vs all the former comforts. For therefore the conscience giueth vnto vs that comfortable testimonie, that wee are deliuered out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies, to the end that we should not still serue them, but worship our Lord and Redeemer, in holinesse and righteousness before him all the dayes of our liues; that he hath bought vs at so deare a price, that we should glorifie him in our soule and body, because they are not our owne, but his, who hath redeemed them; that we are freed from sinne, that it may no longer reigne in our mortall body, but being deliuered out of this cruell tyrannie, we should become the seruants of righteousness; that our consciences are purged from dead workes, that we may serue the liuing God; that wee are reconciled vnto God, by the death and sufferings of Christ, that we may about all things esteeme our peace with him, which was so dearely purchased, and not bee inticed with the hire of the whole world, to doe any thing displeasing vnto God, or which might breake or disturbe our peace with him, seeing this were to vnder-value this inestimable price, as being of lesse worth then worldly vanities, and to tread the precious blood of Christ vnder our filthy feete, as an vnholly thing, and euen to despise the Spirit of grace with which we are sanctified. Therefore it witnesseth vnto vs, that we are sanctified, that we may be made carefull to bring forth the fruits of sanctification to his glory, that hath called vs out of darkenesse, into this marvellous light, and out of the bondage of sinne and Satan, into the glorious liberty of the sonnes of God. That though our sanctification be imperfect, and stained with many corruptions, yet through Christ it is accepted of God, to this end, that we might be made more cheerefull and diligent, in seruing so gracious a Lord. For what greater encouragement can there be vnto vs, in the performance of all good duties, then to bee assured, that our labour of loue shall not be lost, and that whatsoever we doe, shall be taken in good part and richly rewarded, though neuer so imperfect, if we desire and indeuour to doe the best we can? Finally, a good conscience giueth vnto vs this comfortable testimony, that we are most happy in all estates; that no estate, though neuer so much crossed and afflicted, may discourage vs from going on in the wayes of godlinesse, seeing no misery can make vs miserable, but euen our afflictions themselues shall aduance our happinesse, and that we shall neuer lose either grace or glory, but constantly hold out in the Christian race of godlinesse and righteousness, vntill we be crowned with the Garland of blessednesse; that we may not be discouraged with the sense of our weakenesse and wearinesse, nor with the assaults of our spirituall enemies who incounter vs in the way, seeing fighting against them, not in our owne strength, but in the power of Gods might, we are sure of support to hold out in the fight, and haue his neuer-fayling promise of obtaining victory.

CAP. XVI.

Of the signes and properties of a good Conscience.

The next point to be considered, is the signes whereby we may discern whether we haue a good conscience, or no; that if we haue, we may with Paul reioyce in it, if not, wee may labour to obtaine this precious iewell. Besides therefore these signes, which by the diligent Reader may be easily gathered out of the former discourse, there are diuers others which may be added. And first, if we haue a good conscience, wee may discern it by the causes of it; for it is not the worke of nature, which by the fall was corrupted in this, as in all other faculties; but the free gift of God; not purchased by our owne merits, not purged from naturall defilements with our owne satisfactions, but purified from dead workes by the precious blood of Christ, applied vnto vs by his holy Spirit and a liuely faith. And therefore if wee feele no change in our consciences; but that they still remaine the same which they alwayes were; if they be not washed with the blood of Christ, which purgeth them, not only from the guilt of sinne, but also from dead workes, that wee may serue the liuing God; or if their purity and peace proceede from any thing then from this, that being bathed in this fountaine opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Ierusalem, for sinne and for uncleannesse, they are assured that their sinnes are pardoned, and shall neuer be imputed nor laid to their charge; if they be not purified by faith, which both assureth vs of saluation, and also worketh by loue; but are grounded alone vpon groundlesse presumption; it is cleare and manifest, that we deceiue our selues with a shaddow, and haue not yet attained to a good conscience.

The second signe, is the manner of working this good conscience. For it is not wrought by worldly perswasions, taken from our credit, pleasure, or profit, but by the ministry of the Word, begetting faith in vs, whereby the heart and conscience is purified. And this it doth first, by terrifying it with the sight and sense of our sinnes, and the punishments due vnto them, whereby we are humbled, and brought to despaire of our owne strength, for our recovery out of our misery; and then by pacifying and comforting it, by offering vnto vs in Christ the free pardon of our sinnes, reconciliation with God, and the eternall saluation of our soules. So that heere the saying is truly verified, that peace is the daughter of warre; for if our consciences haue had no conflict with Gods iustice, and the curse of the Law, and haue not beene truly humbled in the sense of his wrath, and the enmitie which hath beene betweene him and vs, our peace is carnall and corrupt, springing nor from assurance of faith, but from securitie and presumption, which haue caused this ease, nor by recovery of health, but through the numnesse and stupidity of the disease.

Thirdly, a good conscience is knowne by the effects; for it excuseth and acquiteth vs before God of all sinne; and speaketh peace vnto our hearts, assuring vs that we are reconciled, and in Gods fauour; and grounding this testimonie vpon the infallible truth of holy Scriptures; It maketh keth vs bold in all dangers, and like armour of prooffe, it contemneth the gun-shot of any worldly perils. It makes vs couragious in the performance of all good duties, and not greatly to care who liketh or misliketh them, because we carry our warrant in our bosomes, which will iustifie our actions before God, what censure soeuer men passe of them. It maketh vs like good seruants, to come often into our Masters presence, because it witnesseth vnto vs, that we are in his fauour, and that he accepteth of vs and our seruice. It maketh vs often to examine the booke of our accounts, euen in the presence of our Lord, and to desire him to suruey our reckonings, because it testifieth vnto vs that we haue dealt faithfully with him. So Dauid, Examine me, O Lord, and prooue me, try my reines and my heart. After which Audit, it will iustifie vs in respect of our integritie, as it did him. Thou hast proued mine heart, thou hast visited me in the night, thou hast tryed me, and shalt find nothing: Not in respect of the perfection of our performance, which is full of wants and weakenesses, but of our desire and resolution, as he expoundeth himselfe in the next words: For I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgresse. If therefore our consciences produce these effects in vs, it is an euident signe that they are pure and peaceable. But if contrariwise they accuse and terrifie vs, or excuse and acquit vs without the warrant of Gods Word; If we are bold and valiant in our peace and prosperity, fearing no euill, but cowardly timorous when we are incourted with any danger; If wee are so couragious in euill, that we are not ashamed, though men heare vs talke wantonly and vainely, or see vs in our actions imitate the greatest number, though vnlawfull and without warrant: but are ready to blush if a good speech hath slipped from vs in bad company, or if we be ouertaken at vnawares in performing some religious dutie, by such as are ready to flout vs for it; If wee care not how little wee come into Gods presence, and seldome or neuer examine the booke of our accounts betweene vs and him, or else slightly and ouertly for forme and fashion sake, and like vnfaithfull factors, cannot indure to haue our Master audit our reckonings; then are our consciences defiled, and can giue no true testimony of peace vnto vs.

Fourthly, a good conscience is knowne by the properties of it. First, as it is peaceable, so also it is pure, not onely from the guilt of sinne, but also from the corruption. For the blood of Christ, as it doth like a soveraigne salve pacifie the rage of conscience, caused by the sores of sinne, so doth it draw out the corrupt matter that causeth it, clenfing these wounds, as fast as it healeth them; and as it saueth vs from this body of death, as the Apostle calleth it, so doth it purge it from dead workes, that we may serue the liuing God. And therefore if our consciences be thus purged, then are they truly pacified. But if they witness vnto vs that we liue still in sinne, and so purpose to doe for the time to come, and yet testifie that we are in Gods fauour, and haue our part in Christ and his benefits, they are euill and lying consciences, and giue in false euidence, expresse contrary to the testimony of God, who being Truth it selfe, hath said, that there is no such peace to the wicked.

Secondly, it is the propertie of a good conscience, with all care and circumspection to keepe it selfe cleere both before God and men; before
God,

God, from faultinesse and sinne; before men, from offensiuensse and all appearance of euill. According to the example of the Apostle, Who herein exercised himselfe, to haue alwayes his conscience void of offence, towards God and towards men. So that a good conscience thinketh it not sufficient, to haue Gods approbation with contempt of mans; when as they will lawfully stand together: for it is an offence in our neighbours, when they giue false testimony of vs, and an offence to them, when we make them to stumble by our euill example, drawing them on to the practice of that euill, the appearance whereof they see in vs; from both which, Christian charity should restraîne vs. Yea it is hurtfull also vnto our selues in losing our good name, which is to be preferred before riches; and though we keepe this precious oymntment for our inward comfort, yet we lose the benefit of that beauty, which it outwardly causeth, and the sweete odour of it, at least so farre forth as wee haue it reflected vpon vs by others commendation. Much lesse doth it rest contented with mans approbation, when it is disallowed of God: for when they can say no euill of vs, nor we by our selues, yet are we not thereby iustified, seeing it is the Lord that iudgeth vs, who is greater then our hearts; and therefore as it desireth mans approbation, so only thus farre forth as it will stand with Gods allowance, according to the example of the Apostle, who commended himselfe to euery mans conscience, in the sight of God. And if we thus doe, then haue we a sure signe of a good conscience: but if when we giue iust offence, we iustifie our selues by pleading a good conscience, and so say and thinke, that we doe not care what men say or conceiue of our actions; or if (like hypocrites) we approue our selues and our consciences to men, by a faire shew in our outward behaviour, and neglecting the Iudgement of God, nourish in our hearts secret corruptions, we discover a bad conscience, and both sinne against God, our neighbours, and our selues.

Thirdly, it is the property of a good conscience, not to bee doubtful and wauering, whether it be so or no, but being so, it knoweth assuredly that it is so, and seeth it selfe by its owne light: According to that of the Apostle, We trust, or are assured that we haue a good conscience, in all things willing to liue honestly. And this confidence of it selfe, maketh it confident and couragious against all dangers, and bearing witness to vs that God is with vs, it maketh vs not to care greatly who oppose against vs. So the Wiseman saith, that the righteous man is bold as a Lyon, because his conscience iustifying him, doth also beare witness that hee is iustified and approoued of God, and being in his fauour, is vnder his protection, who is both able and willing to preserue him against all euill; according to that of the Apostle; Heereby we know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before him. For if our heart (that is, our conscience) condemne vs, God is greater then our heart, and knoweth all things; but if our heart condemne vs not, then haue wee confidence towards God. And whatsoever we aske, we receiue of him; because we keepe his Commandement, and doe those things that are pleasing in his sight. Neither doth the true feare of God, which is alwayes in the faithfull, hinder, but much confirme and strengthen this confidence, seeing it is not seruile but filiall; and when wee feare most in the sight and sense of our frailtie and corruption, then are we most assured that we shall neuer neuer depart from God, nor he from vs, and so shall most firmly stand, through his power assisting and vpholding vs.

Fourthly, it is the propertie of a good conscience, to make those that haue it merry, cheerefull, and full of ioy. It is a pleasant sawce, which maketh all our meates delightfull; and whatsoeuer our cheere be, good conscience, if it be our companion, will make it a feast, and fill our heart with such ioy, that a sallad of cold herbes shall be better vnto vs, then a stalled Oxe, or the greatest dainties, that wealth and wit can prouide for wanton worldlings. It will make the hardest lodging, a bed of downe; and the poorest cottage more pleasant, then the most stately Palace, to them who haue not this inmate to harbour with them. It is (like sugar) sweete in it selfe, and sweeteneth all things that are mixed with it, and such a precious oyntment that it persumeth the whole house. The ioy of conscience is compleate in it selfe, and proceeding from an inward cause (as it were) a liuing fountaine, that neuer faileth; it alwayes lasteth, without any supply from the land-waters of earthly prosperity; wherein it farre exceedeth the ioy of worldlings, which arising from carnall comforts, faileth when they faile. The ambitious man cannot reioyce but in his honours, and if (with Haman) he wanteth cap and knee, all his other comforts will not keepe him from deepe melancholy, and discontent. The couetous man cannot haue any ioy, if he cannot haue that riches, not which he needes, but which he desires; and he that is voluptuous, is as moodie and melancholy in the want of musicke, merry company, and such like worldly delights, as he is merry when he hath them. So that their ioy, like Summer brooks, are not to be seene or found, no longer then they are supplied by the showres of worldly prosperity. But hee that hath a good conscience, reioyceth in it when it is alone, without the company of any worldly comfort, & in the greatest solitude, it presenteth vnto vs a Theater of delights: And not only in the absence of all worldly good, but also in the presence of the greatest worldly euils. For he that hath peace with God, and peace of conscience, reioyceth in tribulation, as the Apostle speaketh. So when the Apostles were beaten for Christs cause, their backs were no more loaded with stripes, then their hearts lift vp with ioy, because they were thought worthy to suffer for him. So when Paul and Sylas were imprisoned, and their feete in the stockes, their ioy was at liberty, and the roome that contained them, was not able to confine it. It accompanieth the faithfull in all their afflictions, and maketh their burthen light, which is intolerable to those that want it. In their greatest pouertie, it is in stead of riches. In all their sicknesse it is a comfortable cordiall. In the noysome stench of worldly slanders and reproaches, it is a sweete oyntment, and precious perfume, which cheereth and reuiueth their spirits. So when Paul was apprehended and arraigned as an hainous malefactor, this comfort refreshed him, that he had liued with all good conscience before God. So when he was pressed out of measure, euen vnto death, with troubles and persecutions, he reioyced in this, the testimony of his conscience. Yea, euen at the day of death, when all worldly comforts, like false friends, forsake vs, or staying with vs, doe become (like Iobs kinsmen) miserable comforters, seruing for no vse, but to aggrauate our griefes; the ioy of conscience conscience triumpheth ouer death it selfe, because it is vnto vs, but a straight doore, thorow which we shall enter into a faire Palace of euerlasting blessednesse: Yea it shall cheere our hearts at the day of Iudgement, and when they who haue spent their dayes in carnall delights, shall droope, and desire the hills to fall vpon, and couer them, the ioy of conscience will cause vs to lift vp our heads, because the day of our full redemption draweth neere. If then wee can finde in our selues this true spirituall ioy, that will beare vs vp in all estates, and keepe vs above water in the greatest stormes of worldly afflictions, it is a manifest signe of a good conscience; whereas contrariwise, if we haue no ioy sauing that which is fed with the fewell of worldly prosperity, and is presently extinguished, when the water of tribulation is cast vpon it; if it leaue vs when we most neede it, and will stay on no termes any longer with vs, then whilest it may haue the company of health, wealth, pleasures, and preferments, friends and fame: If we reioyce more in earthly, then in spirituall and heauenly things, in the name and credit of vertue and grace, more then in the things themselves, and in the fame, more then in the conscience of well-doing, and lesse grieue when we haue made shipwracke of conscience, then when we are at a losse, in the pursuite of glory and esteeme amongst men; it is a signe that the conscience is carnall and corrupt, fauouring more of the world and earthly vanities, then of spirituall grace and the things of God.

Finally, a good conscience may be knowne by the integritie and constancy of it. For it laboureth to approoue it selfe before God and men, in all things, and at all times. It respects the whole Law of God, and sheweth it selfe in euery commandement, as well as in any, due order and proportion being obserued in the waight and excellencie of euery duty. It ioyneth piety and holinesse with honesty and righteousness, and faith with good workes; and so giueth place and precedency to the chiefe duties, as that it doth not thrust out of doores the least and meaneest with carelesse neglect. As we see in the example of David, who had respect to all Gods Commandements, and of Paul, who kept a good conscience in all things. So also a good conscience is knowne by our constancie in holy and righteous duties, and may iustly take to it selfe that Motto or word of our later renowned Queene, of happy memory, Semper eadem. It is the same in all places, and in all companies, at home as well as in the Church, alone as in company, among the godly and sincere, as the godlesse and prophane. It changeth vpon no occasion, but keepeth a iust and equall tenour in the performance of the duties of holinesse and righteousness, whether honour or dishonour, good report or euill report, gaine or losse, prosperity or aduersity attend vpon them. Which integritie and constancie, if we find in vs, it will giue vnto vs this comfortable euidence, that wee haue a good conscience. But if contrariwise wee share stakes betweene God and the world, and in some things (like Herod) heare and obey his Word willingly, and willingly in other things stop our eares, and neglecting his reuealed will, giue our selues ouer to be ruled by our owne carnall lusts; If like ciuill worldlings, we onely make conscience of the duties of Iustice and honesty, and neglect the duties of Religion and piety; or if with hypocrises, we are forward in the outward duties of piety, and make no conscience of honesty and iust dealing with all men, nor of the workes of mercie towards those that are in want and misery, and are so wholly for faith, that we are nothing for good workes; If wee are religious and honest by fits, when it will best serue our worldly ends, and be Saints in the Church, and deuils at home; or fit our conuersion to all companies, seeming zealous and deuout among them that feare God, and cold and carelesse of all Christian duties among the godlesse and wicked, wee may hence conclude, that our consciences are corrupt and carnall.

esteem it.

Now when by these signes we haue examined our selues, wee shall finde, either that we haue a good conscience, or that we want it. If we haue it not, then are we carefully to vse all good meanes, whereby we may attaine vnto it; but if vpon triall we find, that we haue it, then are we to reioyce in it, vsing all good meanes, whereby wee may preserue and keepe safe so precious a Iewell. The meanes by which we may get a good conscience, if we want it, are diuers. The first is, in our iudgements highly to esteeme it, as one of Gods speciall graces and rich gifts, and in our hearts and affections, to loue and desire it aboue all earthly things. And so will the Lord be more willing to bestow it vpon vs, when we esteeme and desire it, according to the worth and value of it, and we also shall be more earnest in vsing all good meanes to get it, and more thankfull vnto God for it, when wee haue obtained it. Now that wee may esteeme and desire this gift of God, let vs consider, First, that it is most excellent, and one of the chiefeest parts of our happinesse, giuing vs a taste and entrance into the ioyes of heauen, euen whilest we are vpon earth. For (as the Apostle saith) The Kingdome of God is not meates and drinckes, but righteousness, and peace, and ioy in the Holy Ghost. But to what end should I speake of the excellencie of it which is vspeakeable, or labour to set forth the beaury and brightnesse of this heavenly light, which no mortall eye can behold in its perfect glory, seeing as the Apostle telleth vs, it passeth all vnderstanding. And therefore I will content my selfe to shaddow it darkely, and to giue some glimpse of it (as of the Sunne in the water) by touching briefly the profit and necessitie of it. And for the vtility of this grace, that may be said of it, which the Apostle speaketh of godlinesse, that it is profitable vnto all things, hauing the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. Like a wincesse. It giueth euidence on our side before God, and excuseth vs of all those faults which Satan accuseth vs of, or the Law layeth to our charge; like an Aduocate it pleadeth our cause, and prooueth that wee are iust and innocent, through the righteousness and obedience of Iesus Christ. As a iust Iudge, vpon this euidence and plea it absolveth vs,

and the iudgement thereof shall neuer bee trauerſed or reuerſed in this world, nor in the world to come. But looke what ſentence good conſcience paſſeth on earth, the ſupreme Iudge will ratifie at the great Day of aſſiſes, in which reſpect, if it condemne vs not heere, then may wee haue confidence towards God, that hee will not condemne vs hereafter. As a comfortable and true friend, it alwayes beareth vs company, encouraging vs when we doe well, and reproouing vs when we doe amiſſe, admoniſhing and warning vs to looke to our footing, when wee walke in ſlippery places, and are in danger of falling, and to riſe, if wee doe fall for want of care in taking warning, by renewing our repentance. In our proſperity it is our guide to leade vs on, and direct vs in the right uſe of it; in our affliction it is our comforter, which ſpeaking peace within, doth make vs with patience and ioy to beare all outward croſſes and calamities. In time of peace, or rather ceſſation of that conſiſt with the ſpiritual enemies of our ſaluation, it is a faithfull Watch-man, which leaues vs to inioy our reſt and quiet when there is no danger, but yet admoniſheth vs to ſleepe in our Chriſtian armour, ſeeing they are not gone, but haue onely withdrawn their forces for their greater aduantage; and in time of warre when the enemy approacheth, and is ready to encounter vs, it not onely ſoundeth the alarme, that we may ſtart vp and ſtand in readineſſe, but alſo is armour of prooſe, and euen a brazen wall to keepe vs from danger when they aſſault vs. Finally, it performeth all good duties, to all ſorts of men, at all times, and all places, accompanying the Iudge to the bench, the Lawyer to the barre, the Diuine both in his Study and Pulpit, the Tradeſman in his ſhop, and the Buyer and Seller in the market, teaching and admoniſhing them how they ſhall carry themſelues in all caſes, and both approving them when they performe their dutie, and rebuking them, when for feare or fauour, glory or gaine, they doe neglect it. And from hence alſo the neceſſity of a good conſcience appeareth, ſeeing it bringeth with it ſo much good, of all which they are deſtitute that liue without it. Yea they are ſubiect to the contrary euils, hauing in them a witneſſe that daily accuſeth them, and a Iudge that condemneth them, no guide to leade them, no friend to admoniſh them, to incourage them in good, or diſcourage them in euill. Neither can they doe any thing pleaſing vnto God: for the end of the Commandement is loue, out of a pure heart, a good conſcience, and faith vnſained, of which end they faile, that are deſtitute of it, and can doe nothing but ſiſte againſt God, and bring vpon themſelues fearefull condemnation: for if our corrupt conſciences condemne vs, God the righteous and vnpartiall Iudge, who is greater then our conſciences, will much more condemne vs, as the Apoſtle Iohn ſpeaketh.

Secondly, we muſt labour to know the will of God reuealed in the Scriptures, and to apply what we know, vnto our ſelues, for our owne uſe. For the conſcience iudgeth and witneſſeth with God, for vs, or againſt vs, and therefore we muſt know what he approoueth and condemneth, if we would haue our iudgement and euidence to agree with his; otherwiſe our conſciences being vniuſt and erroneous, will iudge vniuſtly of our actions, and giue in falſe euidence; when wee put our ſelues vpon them for triall. More eſpecially, we muſt labour after the knowledge, both of the Law and the Gospell, for the Law, as it is the rule of our actions, according to which they ought to be wholly conformed, so also it is the rule of our consciences, whereby they discern whether they be right or crooked, good or euill. It is the municipall law for the peculiar gouernement of Gods subiects, and the booke of Statutes, set out by our Soueraigne, according to which, conscience is bound to iudge and giue euidence, which it cannot doe, vnlesse it know, and be able to examine our actions according vnto this law. In which regard, the consciences of ignorant men do in most things mislead them into manifold errors, because they are not able to iudge of their actions according to Gods Law, which they know not, but giue sentence of them according to their owne wills, humane traditions, and their owne inuentions, superstitious conceits and good meanings. And the like may be said of those, who hauing some knowledge of Gods Law, doe through negligence or prophanenesse neuer examine their actions by it, yea, rather being carried through the violence of their carnall lusts and passions, into all disobedience and sinne, and resolving in themselves to goe on in their course, doe cast the Law out of their sight and remembrance, lest conscience hauing it to iudge by, should accuse and condemne their euill actions, and so abate their pleasure which they take in them. But especially if we would haue good consciences, we must apply vnto our selues the sentence of the Law, which condemneth all of sinne, and subiecteth them vnder the curse, who doe not continue in all that is written in the booke of the Law to doe it. For vntill the Law doe conuince vs of sinne, and that we cannot be iustified before God in our own righteousnesse, we shall rest in it, & neuer seeke to be partakers of the righteousnes of Christ, by which alone we can be iustified before God, and consequently by it only obtaine peace of conscience. In which regard it is not sufficient to know, and apply the Law vnto vs; for this will worke in the conscience terrours and feares, and no peace: but onely vse it as a schoolemaster to teach vs our owne vilenesse and sinfull corruption, and that we are in our selues most miserable, & in the feareful state of death and condemnation, that so it may bring vs vnto Christ, in whom alone we can be iustified and obtaine sound and secure peace. And therefore if we would haue good consciences, wee must also know the Gospell, in which God of his free grace doth offer vnto vs peace and reconciliation in Iesus Christ; wee must acquaint our selues with the couenant of grace, which is the maine foundation of all our peace, when as thereby wee are assured, not onely that Gods mercies are infinite, and Christs merits all-sufficient, but that they belong vnto vs, performing the condition of the couenant, that God for Christs sake will forgive vs our sinnes, be reconciled vnto vs, and write his Law in our hearts, that we may not depart from him.

Thirdly, we must not, for the obtaining of a good conscience, only know the Gospell and Couenant of grace, with the sweet promises therein contained, but also apply them by a liuely faith, and in a speciall maner intereste our selues in them, by performing the condition of the couenant, which is our restitution that we make with God. For we must be iustified by faith, before we can haue peace with him, or peace of conscience. Our consciences must be purged by the blood of Christ, from dead works, and from the guilt and punishment of all our finnes, before they will speake peace vnto vs. The Charter of our peace must be drawne vpon the Crosse, & sealed with the effusion of Christs blood, and must be receiued and pleaded by faith, before our consciences will cease accusing and condemning, or stand with vs vpon any rearmes of peace. Now this faith must be approued to be vnfaigned & sound by the fruits which it bringeth forth in vnfained repentance, by the changing of our hearts, and renewing of our mindes, our hatred of euill, and loue of good, our sorrow for our finnes past, and resolution to leaue and forsake them for the time to come, and to serue the Lord in the contrary duties of holinesse and righteousnesse; without which fruits, faith is no liuing Tree, but a dead stocke, which will giue vs no assurance of peace with God in the remission of our finnes, and consequently will bring with it no peace of conscience. And hereof it is, that the promises of the Gospell are as often made to repentant sinners, as to those that beleeue in Christ, because though faith only be the condition of the Couenant, yet it is such a faith alone, as is fruitfull in repentance. Neyther can this faith be so easily seene and discerned in it selfe, but onely by the fruits that spring from it, which necessarily inferre this good Tree from which they spring, the promises are made to them, because these being more sensible, they may be more easily applied.

Fourthly, the exercises of repentance are notable meanes to worke peace of conscience; as our often humbling of our selues before God in the sight and sence of our vilenesse and vnworthinesse, whereby our stony hearts are broken, and our spirits made contrite; our dayly confession of our finnes vnto God, and earnest crauing of pardon for them, seeing our sayth will assure vs, and answerably our consciences will witnesse with vs, according to the rule of Gods Word, that humbling our selues, we shall be exalted, that being empty of all grace and goodnesse, and hungering after it, we shall be filled and satisfied; that the God of peace will dwell with vs, and bring his peace vnto vs, being of broken hearts and contrite spirits; and finally, that confessing and forsaking our finnes, we shall finde mercy, seeing it standeth vpon the truth of Gods promise, according to that of the Apostle, if we acknowledge and confesse our finnes, he is faithfull and iust to forgive vs our finnes, and to cleanse vs from all vnrightheousnesse. Of which we haue experience in the example of Dauid, who being afflicted in the sight and sence of his sinne, with terrors of conscience, vsed this meanes to quiet it and get peace, I acknowledge (saith he) my sin vnto thee, and mine iniquity haue I not hid: I said, I will confesse my transgressions vnto the Lord, and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sinne. Lastly, the vnfaigned loue of God and of our neighbours is a notable meanes for the obtayning of a good conscience; for if we loue God, our consciences will witnesse vnto vs that he loneth vs, seeing his loue shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, worketh this loue in vs; and is that diuine fire and flame from which this heat cometh: for he loue him, because he loued vs first, as the Apostle testifieth. And this loue of God towards vs, and our loue towards him, will make vs carefull to keepe our consciences vnspotted of any knowen sinne, and zealous in doing all things which may be pleasing in his sight. From which sence of our mutual loue, will spring peace unspeakable, wee resting securely vpon him who so lo-ueth vs; and whom we so loue. According to that of the Apostle; Aboue all things put on charity; which is the bond of perfectnesse; and let the peace of God rule in your hearts.

And these are the meanes of getting a good conscience. The meanes of preserving it being gotten, are diuers. First, the often renewing of our covenant of peace with God, by renewing the condition of it on our part, faith and repentance. For as wee daily wound our consciences through our frailty in falling into sinne, whereby the peace of them is disturbed, and defile them, by casting vpon them the filth of our corruptions: so our care must be, to heale daily these wounds, by applying vnto them afresh by the hand of faith; the soueraigne salve and balm of Christs blood, which is of sufficient and sole vertue; and nothing else in the world, to heale these wounds; and also to wash them as often in the teares of vsained repentance, which will giue vs assurance that they are purged and cleansed from all filth of sinne. Secondly, being cleansed, our continuall care must be to keepe them cleane from all sinne, especially in our desires, resolutions, and indeuours, and howsoeuer we cannot hinder it from dwelling in vs, yet we must take heede that it doe not to raigne in vs, that we should obey it willingly in the lusts thereof; for sinne willingly nourished, cannot possibly stand with this peace, seeing they doe wound and waste the conscience; which sores, if they fester and putrifie with corruption, will breed in them such a gnawing worme, as will giue vnto vs no peace or rest; but night and day will torture and torment vs.
Thirdly, let vs daily mortifie all our sinfull lusts, as wrath, enuie, malice, uncleane concupiscence, pride, and the rest; which will betray conscience vnto sinne, and with their loud cries and tumultuous clamours, hinder it of all sound peace and quiet. But especially, we must crucifie all worldly lusts of ambition, couetousnesse, and voluptuousnesse, and weane our hearts from the loue of earthly vanities: which otherwise if it be entertained, will set the peace of conscience vnto sale, for the base price of pleasure, profit, and preferment, as the miserable experience of these times doe too plainly teach vs. Fourthly, we must often examine our consciences by the rule of Gods Word, whether they giue vnto vs true euidence and iudgement, the which must be done in the presence of our supreme Iudge, who perfectly seeth all secrets, and giueth righteous iudgement, not onely of all our actions, but euen of conscience also, which as his Deputie iudgeth of them: Euen as the Iudges of the Kingdome, according to law, call to account all subiects, and passe sentence of their actions, but yet are accountable to their Soueraigne, and haue all their iudge-ments and determinations subiect to his censure. And this is that answer of a good conscience towards God; whereof S. Peter speaketh, which the Apostle Paul by continuall exercise indetoured so to make, as he might be accepted of him. Which that we may the better doe at the great Day of reckoning, we must often put conscience to iudge and examine it selfe, according to the rule of the Scriptures, that the Booke of Gods Law, and the booke of conscience may agree together, and also desire the Lord in priuate, often to try and examine vs and it, that all things being cleared betweene

betweene vs and him, we may not come to publike shame, when wee are called to giue an account in the Starre chamber of heauen. Fifthly, we are to keepe our consciences cleane and vndefiled from dead workes, and not to smother any sinne in them without iudgement and execution, though for life and liberty, it offer to bribe vs with all the honours, riches, and pleasures in the world. For if conscience be not pure and vnpartiall, in condemning all sinne, it can neuer be peaceable, seeing it will be bound ouer to answer before the supreme Iudge, for conniencie and partiall iudgement; and for not condemning and punishing sinne as his Vicegerent, according to law; shall it selfe be found an accessory, and guilty of that sinne which it tolerated in vs, and so shal be condemned and tortured with that gnawing worme which neuer dieth. Lastly, we must continually meditate of the day of Iudgement, when as a cleere and good conscience will be better vnto vs then ten thousand worlds. The which will make vs carefull to preserue our consciences in their purity and peace, seeing if they doe not approue vs at that day, we can neuer be iustified before the tribunall of Gods Iudgement. And as Iudges and Notaries, knowing that their wise, iust, and iudicious King will exactly view and examine their Bookes and Records, are made thereby carefull to keepe them faire, and without the aspersiō of any faultinesse, and, if they haue failed in the iust executing of their office, will doe what they can to bee free from all imputation; so wee being to shew our bookes of conscience before the King of heauen and earth, are to be much more carefull, that they may be vnblemished, and without all spots of sinne; and because wee often blot and blemish them in this life; and haue our faults and sinnes often interlined; we must labour to get out all these blots and staines, by washing them often with the hand of faith in the blood of Christ, and in that agua fortis, and powerfull water, which flowed out of his side; that so our sinnes not being found in these bookes of account, may not be imputed vnto vs, nor bring vpon vs that iust condemnation which they haue deserued. And so much concerning a good conscience, and those fundamentall vertues, which are the maine grounds of a godly life.

C A P. I.

Of the maine duties wherein a godly life consisteth.

§. Sect. I.

That a godly life consisteth
in doing all those duties which God hath commanded.

WE haue intreated the more largely of the maine grounds of a godly life, because when the foundation is laid large and deepe, the building which is erected vpon it, is more firme and durable. And now we are come to shew, first, wherein it consisteth: and secondly, what are the properties of it, and of all the duties required in
it. A godly life consisteth in the conformity of our whole carriage vnto Gods reuealed will, both in fleeing and forsaking all that is euill, and in imbracing and practising that which is good; in leauing vndone that which hee hath forbidden, and in doing that which hee hath commanded: And is generally required in many places of holy Scriptures.
Depart from euill, and doe good; cease to doe euill, and learne to doe well. Put ye off, concerning the former conuersation, the old man, which is corrupt, according to the deceitfull lusts; and be renewed in the Spirit of your minde, and put on that new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holinesse.
So Hierome to this purpose saith, That there are two kinds of Gods Commandements, in which, all Iustice is comprehended. The one for-biddeth, the other commandeth; for as euils are prohibited, so good things are inioyned. There cessation and rest worketh, here study and in-deuour. There the minde is restrained, here incited. Here it is a fault to doe, there not to haue done. And therefore to the leading of a godly life, it sufficeth not (as many thinke) to bee harmelesse and innocent, vnlesse wee also bee diligent and constant, in doing of all holy and iust actions, but we must as hee addeth, vpon the foundation of innocencie, erect the building of righteousness. Yea, in truth a godly life more principally consisteth in doing, then not doing; in action, rather then in forbearance. And he no lesse displeaseth God, and sinneth against his owne soule, who neglecteth the good which he requireth, then he who committeth the euill which he forbiddeth. The Idolater offendeth no more haynously in worshipping a false god, then the Atheist that acknowledgeth no God; nor the superstitious person, who worshippeth him in a false manner, then the prophane worldling, who worshippeth him not at all. He that hid his talent, was cast into vetter darkenesse, because he did not vse it to his masters aduantage, as well as they that abuse and mispend it. Dives was cast into hell for not feeding Lazarus, as well as others that rob and oppresse the poore: the foolish virgins were shut out, who had not in their lampes the oyle of grace, and the light of a godly life. And they at Christs left hand, shall at the day of Iudgement haue their portion with the deuill and his angels, who did not feed the hungry, and clothe the naked, as well as they who spoile them of their food and rayment; seeing there is but this difference betweene them, that the one withholdeth their right, which God hath allotted them, the other taketh it away when they already haue it. The one, like the nurse, withholdeth the brest from the hungry child entrusted to her care and keeping; the other pulleth the teate out of his mouth, when he hath taken hold of it. Or if they differ at all (as in some cases there is some difference) there shall be onely this difference in their punishments; that these innocent and harmelesse men, who haue power to doe good and doe it not, shall be damned in hell, but not in so deepe a degree of condemnation as the other.

Vnto a godly life therefore it is required, that wee hate and forsake all euill, and that we imbrace and practise that which is good; that is, that we abhorre and renounce sinne in all kindes, without exception, and those most of all, which whilest we liued in the state of infidelity, we most loued, and to which, as yet our corrupt nature most inclineth, seeing they are our greatest and most dangerous enemies, & like traytrous Rebels, raising intestine warre within vs, doe as much as in them lyeth, expose vs to the malice of our open enemies, the deuill and the world. In which totall relinquishing of sinne, we must bee constant in our resolutions and indeuours, and not doe it by fits and flashes, as wee shall see heereafter. And with the like constancie, we are to settle our selues, in imbracing and practising all good duties, whether they be hard or easie, pleasant or displeasing, profitable to our worldly estate, or to our losse and hinderance. Now, because the Word and revealed will of God is the rule and squire, according to which, we are to iudge of good and euill, that being good which it commandeth, and euill which it forbiddeth; therefore a godly life consists in our conformitie & obedience to Gods will revealed in his Word, or to all Gods Commandements contained both in the Law and Gospell. For because we cannot performe obedience to the Law legally, that is, in that perfection which the Law requireth, therefore a godly life is not, as wee vnderstand it in this Treatise, an absolute conformity vnto the Law (though it bee most absolute when it is most conformable) but when we conforme our selues and all our actions, according to the rule of the Law, after an Euangelicall manner, that is, desire, resolute, and indeuour to per-forme vnto it as perfect obedience as we can, which because through our frailty and corruption it is defectiue, and nothing imperfect can be acceptable vnto God, therefore vnto such a godly life as may be pleasing vnto him, there is required, that to our obedience of the Law, we adde our obedience to the Gospel, which requireth a liuely faith in Christ, whereby applying vnto our selues both him and all his benefits, the imperfections of our obedience are couered with his perfect righteousness, and our sins and corruptions washed away in his blood. And also that we shew forth the fruits of this faith in our vnfained repentance, whereby we bewaile our sinnes past, and resolute and indeuour to leaue and forsake them for the time to come, lament the imperfection of our obedience, and labour and strue after more perfection; without which obedience to the Gospel, our imperfect obedience to the Law, will not be accepted of God, nor intitle vs to this godly life, which is pleasing in his sight.

That we must in a godly life performe obedience to the Law, after an Euangelicall manner.

Our obedience therefore to the Law is required, seeing it is the rule of holinesse and righteousness, according to which, all our thoughts, words, and actions are to be conformed; and our obedience to the Gospel, to supply and amend what is imperfect and defectiue through our frailty and corruption, and to make our workes straight in Gods sight, when through ignorance or impotencie we haue swarued from our rule. The Law must be obserued of all that will leade a godly life, because as a Schoolemaster it teacheth vs, what is good, and what is euill, what we must doe, and what wee must leaue vndone; The Gospel also with no lesse care, because it sheweth vs how it is to be done, and also ministreth courage and strength, whereby we are enabled to performe our duties. We must make the Law the Canon, according to which, wee must carry our selues in all our thoughts, words, and workes, because so farre forth onely, as they are conformable vnto it, they are holy and righteous; but withall, the Commandements of the Gospel requiring faith and repentance, must be obeyed, that what is imperfect in vs, may be made perfect through Christ, and that our new obedience, which cannot be accepted according to the Couenant of workes, as comming from seruants, may be acceptable, according to the Couenant of grace, as comming from sonnes, whose desires and indeuours are pleasing to our heavenly Father, who accepteth the will for the deed. The Law prescribeth the way wherein all are to walke, that will leade a godly life; The Gospel, as a faithfull companion, encourageth vs to goe in this way, and leading vs by the hand, preferueth vs from falling; and when through frailty wee are false, it lifteth vs vp againe.

That in a godly life we must ioine together the duties of piety, righteousness, and sobriety.

Now the duties of a godly life, which the Law requireth, respect either God or men: both which are to be considered, first generally, as they are to be performed of euery Christian in the whole course of their liues; and secondly, as they are to be exercised in them euery day. The duties which respect God, are contained in the first Table, and are all comprehended vnder the name of piety. The duties which concerne men, are comprehended in the second Table, and are either the duties of righteousness and mercie, which respect our neighbours, or the duties of temperance and sobriety belonging to our owne persons. All which must goe together, ther, and may in no wise be severed the one from the other. For piety is the root of righteousness and sobriety, and these the fruits and signes of piety, and neither of both are accepted of God, but when they go together, seeing piety without righteousness, is like a foundation without a building, and righteousness without piety, is like a building without a foundation; that, as a fire without light; this, like the fooles fire, a light without heat; that alone, at the best, makes but hypocrites; this without that, no better then proud Iusticiaries and ciuill worldlings. And hereof it is, that the holy Ghost in the Scriptures ioyneth them altogether, requiring no lesse the one then the other. So he saith, that those who are the redeemed of the Lord, shall worship him in holinesse and righteousness before him, all the dayes of their lines; that we must pray for Kings, and all that are in authority, that we may leade a quiet and peaceable life vnder their government, in all godlinesse and honestie. That our spirituall renewing, according to Gods image, ought to be both in righteousness and true holinesse: That a Bishop ought to be a lover of hospitality, and a lover of good men; sober, iust, holy, and temperate; that the grace of God which bringeth salvation appearing, hath taught vs to deny ungodlinesse and worldly lusts, and to liue soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world. And that they who will make their calling and election sure, must not imbrace loose and single vertues, nor performe scattered duties, but linke and chaine them one with another. For they are such twinnes as liue and die together, and the soule, life, and breath of Christianity, which may bee distinguished in doctrine and discourse, but not derided in our practice and conuersation.

The first and maine duties required vnto a godly life, are all comprehended vnder the name of piety, required in the first Table. Which is nothing else, but that true Religion, whereby we worship the onely true God, according to his will reuealed vnto vs. So Augustine, What is piety, but to serue God with a pure minde? which is otherwise called worship. And againe, this is piety to loue God freely and absolutely, and out of him to expect no reward, but what is expected from him. For he is the chiefe Goodnesse and what thing of worth can he aske of God, to whom God seemeth of little worth? So that piety consisteth in Gods true seruice, and in the performance of those holy duties of his worship which he requireth in the first Table: of which, piety is the summe; according to that of our Sauiour repeated out of the Law, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, & him only shalt thou serue. The which is sometime signified by the seate of God, a part of diuine worship being put for the whole, Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, and serue him; and shalt sweare by his Name. And sometime by the loue of God, which is put for all worship, because all holy seruice and true obedience doth flow from it. So Moses in his repetition of the Law, makes this the sum of all, Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thine heart, & with all thy soule, and with all thy might. And our Sauiour Christ telleth the Lawyer, that this is the great Commandement, which comprehendeth in it the whole first Table; Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soule, and with all thy might. Where hee sheweth both the object of true worship which is the Lord our God onely, and the speciall and principall act of it, which is loue, from which, as a fountaine, all other parts, like streames, doe spring and flow; and also the subject of this duty which is the whole man. For by the heart, is vnderstood all the affections, desires, and inclinations; by the soule, the will, purpose and resolution; by the minde, the reason, vnderstanding, discourse, and memory; and by the might or strength (which Saint Luke also addeth) all the faculties of the soule, and parts of the body, with all their functions, actions, and operations, both internall and externall. So that the whole man must be consecrated vnto the seruice and worship of God, by all those who imbrace piety, and desire so to performe the duties of a godly life, as they may be acceptable and pleasing in the sight of God. The which, as it is required by him, so there is none but he, who can inable vs in any measure to performe it, seeing it is not in our owne power, but his free gift, and the worke of his holy Spirit, which is bestowed vpon whom and when hee will; for it is God onely, who by his diuine power, giueth vs all things which pertaine to life and godlinesse, as the Apostle Peter speaketh; and therefore when he requireth it of vs, we must returne vnto him againe, and intreate him by earnest and seruent prayer, that he will inable vs to performe that which hee requireth; according to that of Augustine, Giue what thou commandest, and then command what thou wilt.

And thus we generally see what piety is. Let vs in the next place consider briefly of some arguments which may mooue vs to imbrace and practise it, in the whole course of our liues. The first is, that piety and the duties of it are most excellent, and to be preferred before righteousness, both in regard of our iudgements, which ought to esteeme them aboue the other, in respect of the object, God himselfe, vnto whom immediatly they are to be performed, who infinitely exceeding men; the duties which wee owe vnto him, are incomparably to bee preferred before those which are due to them. In regard also of our hearts and affections, which ought to imbrace with greater loue and desire those things which our iudgements doe most highly value; and in respect of our indeuour and practice, where in we ought to giue priority and precedencie, in regard of time and place, vnto the duties of piety, aboue all earthly things, according to that of our Sauour, First seeke the Kingdome of God and his righteousness, &c. Again, Christ calleth the first Table, inioyning piety, The great Commandment vnto which the second is like, but not equall. For piety is the fountaine of righteousness, and the alone sure foundation, vpon which it standeth; which if it wanteth, or is built vpon any other ground, as it were, vpon a quagmire or the sands, it will soone fall and come to ruine, seeing the building can stand no longer then it hath a foundation to rest vpon; as we daily see in the Morall and meere ciuill righteousness of worldlings, which resting vpon their credit, or profit, or feare of humane Lawes, doth last no longer then they last. It is the heart and head of Iustice, which giueth life, heate, and motion vnto it, without which, it is but a dead trunk, yea the very soule, which doth informe it, without which, it is but a lothsome carkasse in Gods sight. And therefore in the practice of a godly life, we are more highly to esteeme, and answerably with more care, earnestnesse and delight, to put in practice the duties of piety, which concerne God immediatly, then the duties of righteousness which respect our neigh-

neighbours. As for example, we must loue and stear and obey God more then men; and when both will not stand together, we must neglect the one in comparison of the other, as wee see in the example of the Apostles, who when men forbade that which God commanded, obeyed him rather then them. But yet seeing all duties both to God and men are commanded of God, and in that regard we serue or disobey him, mediately and indirectly, when wee doe or neglect the duties which concerne them: therefore in performing the duties of the first Table in our iudgement, affection and practice, we are to obserue a due proportion betweene them, comparing like with like, the greatest with the greatest, middle with middle, and the least with the least; neyther are the ceremonies, and circumstances, and meanes of pious duties, to be preferred before the maine and substantiall duties of righteousness; as we see in Gods owne choice, vho preferred mercy before sacrifice, and the duties of righteousness, mercy and loue, before an externall fast, or the outvard rest of the Sabbath, vvhich is but a meanes of the seruice of God, and of our spirituall resting from sinne.

The second reason is taken from the profit of piety, vvhich may much induce vs to the embracing of it. For if mens hearts are set chiefly vpon gaine, and are ready to enquire after it vpon all occasions, according to that of the Psalmist, There be many that say, Who will shew vs any good? And if their affections and desires are inflamed and enlarged, according to the greatnesse of the profit vvhich they pursue, then vvhich our iudgements are conuincd, and persvaded that there is most gaine in godlinesse, there is great reason why our hearts should be set vpon it as our chiefest treasure. But the Apostle telleth vs, that godlinesse is gaine, yea, great gaine with contentation; where he maketh not the gaine of godlinesse to depend vpon the condition of our contentment, as though there were no profit in it, vnlesse wee be contented with it; but that it is the effect, and an inseparable companion of godlinesse, to make vs contented with all estates, and therefore not gaine onely, if it be ioyned with content, but because it alwaies bringeth with it contentation. Even as the Sunne is said to bee comfortable, not if it giue light, but because it giueth light, it doth bring vs comfort with his beames and brightnesse. Now this profit of piety, is incomparably greater then the gaine of the whole world; for this is profitable but for some purposes, but the other for all things; that onely for the present, but this also for eternitie, according to that of the Apostle; Godlinesse is profitable vnto all things; hauing promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come. In this life it assureth vs of Gods grace and fauour, that we are his children and heyres of his promises; who are continually vnder his protection, and thereby safe from all danger, though we haue but little, yet there is cause of great contentment, seeing our small pittance is better then the riches of many wicked, it being a pledge of Gods loue, and an earnest penny of our heavenly happinesse. That we are blessed in all estates, prosperity and aduersity, pouerty and riches, health and sicknesse, life and death, because God that loueth vs, will by his wisdom and power, cause all things to worke together for our good. In the life to come also godlinesse will be most gainfull; for when all worldly profits are utterly ceased, and the glory and beauty of them withered and vanished out of sight, then shall we finde most profit in our piety, and reape a ioyfull harvest of all our holy inducements. Then shall we with confidence approach into Gods presence; when as we expect that Crowne of glory, which he hath freely promised to those who haue serued him in holinesse and righteousness all the daies of this life; and hauing on this wedding garment, we shall be admitted into the Bridall chamber of our Head and Husband Iesus Christ, and there eternally solace our selues in the fruition of his loue, and of that heavenly happinesse which he hath prepared for vs. Whereas contrariwise, all worldly things without piety, are vnprofitable to all in many things, and in all things to many, giuing no contentment in their greatestt abundance, but like sweete drinckes encrease thirst; and as fuell put into the fire, inflame the heate of carnall concupiscence. Or if they giue some seeming content in the time of health, yet how little pleasure doe we take in them vpon our sicke beds? though they haue some taste vnto our carnall appetite in the time of life and strength, yet what an after-tang leaue they at parting? and how little comfort and contentment bring they against the terrors of death, and the dreadfull apprehensions of approaching Iudgement?

The second reason is taken from the profit of Piety.
Psal. 4. 6.

Rom. 8. 28.

The third reason is taken from the necessity of piety, seeing without it wee can haue no assurance of any spirituall benefit, neither in this life, nor in the life to come. For it is the end which God hath proposed vnto them all, vnto which he most certainly attaineth, if we euer attaine vnto them; seeing he who is infinite in wisdom and power, can neuer faile of his end which he propoundeth to his actions. Now the Lord hath chosen vs, that we should be holy; hee hath redeemed vs out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies, that we should worship him in holinesse and righteousness all the dayes of our liues. We are reconciled by Christ in the body of his flesh, through death, that hee may present vs holy and vnblameable in Gods sight. He hath adopted vs for his children, that wee may be holy, as he is holy. He hath iustified and pardoned all our sinnes, that being freed from sinne, wee may become the seruants of righteousness. And therefore without this holinesse we can haue no assurance that we are elected, redeemed, reconciled, adopted or iustified, and consequently that we shall be saued: for though it be not the cause of our happinesse, yet it is the way that leadeth vnto it; in which if we walk not, we shal neuer come into that place of blessednes: for without holinesse none shall see the Lord, as the Apostle teacheth vs.

Vnto these reasons we may adde the consideration of Gods manifold mercies in Iesus Christ, which ought to bee notable inducements to moue vs to the imbracing and practising of piety. For what greater encouragement can we haue to make vs zealous and cheerefull in the duties of Gods seruice, then to consider how gracious and good, God hath bene vnto vs in our creation, redemption and continuall preseruation; in giuing vnto vs his Sonne, and pardoning our sinnes, in freeing vs out of the cruell bondage of all our spirituall enemies, and in multiplying his blessings vpon vs, both in spirituall and corporall things? And this argument the Apostle useth to this purpose; I beseech you therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a liuing sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable seruice. And as the fruition of Gods present fauours ought to make vs forward in his seruice, so also the consideration of his gracious promises concerning better and more excellent things in time to come, euen the full fruition of his glorious presence, and eternall blessednesse in his euermlasting Kingdome. And this reason also the Apostle vsueth to this end: Having therefore these promises (dearely beloued) let vs cleanse our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh and spirit, perfecting our holinesse in the feare of God. Finally, the consideration of Christs coming to Iudgement should perswade vs vnto holinesse, when as the heauens being on fire, shall be dissolued and passe away with a noyse, the elements melt with feruent heate, and the earth with all the workes thereof shall be burnt vp. For then onely they shall bee happy who haue beene holy, and raigne with God in glory, who haue faithfully serued him in holinesse and righteousness in the Kingdome of grace. And thus the Apostle Peter reasoneth, Seeing then (saith he) that all these things shall be dissolued, what manner of persons ought yee to be, in all holy conuersation and godlinesse? But I shall haue hereafter occasion to speake more fully of this point, when I come to shew the manifold reasons and motiues which may induce and perswade vs vnto a godly life; and therefore for the present I will content my selfe thus briefly to haue touched them, referring the Reader for his more full satisfaction to the following discourse.

2. Cor. 7. 1.

2. Pet. 3. 11.

C A P. III.

Of our adhering and cleauing vnto God, with the full purpose and resolution of our hearts.

WE haue spoken of piety, which is the summe of the first Table. And now it followeth, that we speake briefly of the particular precepts; the first whereof is containd in these words: Thou shalt haue no other gods before me, or before my face.

The maine scope and summe whereof is this, that wee know, acknowledge and worship Iehouah, the Father, Sonne and holy Ghost, in Trinity of persons, and vnity of Essence, and no other gods besides him. For to haue God, is, in our mindes and vnderstandings to know and acknowledge him, to bee our God, all-sufficient, incomprehensible, omnipotent, immutable, eternall, iust, mercifull, and infinite in all perfection; in our hearts and affections to adhere and cleaue vnto him with faith, affiance, hope, loue, zeale, whom we know to be the chiefe Goodnesse and supreme cause of all our happinesse; in our wills, with all earnest desire and constant resolution to serue and obey him in all his Commandments, with all the power and faculties of our bodies and soules, whom we know and acknowledge to be the chiefe end of all things, and so infinitely good & gracious vnto vs; and with our bodies, actions and induers, to worship and serue him alone, with all our might and strength. So that the true sauing knowledge of God is the ground of all other vertues and obedience, as we haue shewed; and therefore if wee would imbrace any vertues, or perform any Christian duties of a godly life, we must

in the first place labour to haue our mindes enlightened with the knowledge of God and his truth; without which, our deuotion will bee no better then superstition; and all our indeuours in the performance of religious duties, meere will worship and idolatry, as wee see in the example of the Idolaters, who in stead of worshipping the only true God, worship stocks, stones and Images, Saints, and Angels, and in stead of doing Gods will in their deuotions, do their owne wills, and therefore tire themselves, and spend all their strength in vaine.

§. Sect. 2.
Of adhering to God, what it is, and the necessity of it.

But of this knowledge of God, which is the maine ground of a godly life, wee haue before spoken; and now it remaineth that wee speake of the hauing of God in our hearts and affections, wills and resolutions. Of which we will intreate first generally, and then more specially. The generall duty which compriseth all the particulars, is, that knowing and acknowledging the Lord to be in himselfe the chiefe Goodnesse, and infinite in all perfection, and our most gracious and louing Father in Iesus Christ, we doe adhere and cleaue vnto him with all our soules and wills, hearts and affections, resolving to consecrate our selues wholly to his worship, and with the vttermost of our indeuour to please him in all things, by conforming our liues in all holy obedience vnto his reuealed will, leauing and forsaking whatsoever he condemneth as euill, and imbracing and practizing all that he commandeth as good. And this the Lord requireth in the first place of all those who serue him. Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, him shalt thou serue, and to him shalt thou cleaue. And againe, Yee shall walke after the Lord your God, and feare him, and keepe his Commandements, and obey his voice, and yee shall serue him and cleaue vnto him. So Barnabas exhorteth the new Conuerts of Antioch, that with full purpose of heart they would cleaue vnto the Lord. And the Apostle perswadeth not to the bare practice of good duties, but that wee cleaue vnto that which is good. Which holy resolution was in David, who purposed in his heart that his mouth should not transgresse; and fully resolved, that if the Lord would teach him the way of his statutes, he would keepe them with his whole heart and vnto the end. The which resolution is necessary vnto all those who intend to leade a godly life, wherein there are so many lets, difficulties and discouragements, that if wee be not fully resolved to passe by, or overcome them, wee shall eyther not beginne, or soone giue ouer to proceede in the Christian course. And therefore our holy desires to please God in all things, must be armed and confirmed with strong resolutions, that we will do our vttermost indeuour to attaine vnto our desires, or else they will be but like those idle and vain desires of the sluggards, of which Salomon speaketh, who desire and haue nothing, because they are but bare wishers, neuer purposing to take any paines for the satisfying of their desires. Neither can such be said to serue God with their whole hearts, but with a part only; For as Philosophy teacheth vs, there are two faculties in the heart of man; the one called concupiscible, which desireth and imbraceth that good which reason discovereth, the other the irascible faculty, which being displeased with those lets and oppositions that hinder the fruition of the good desired, armeth vs with resolution to set vpon and overcome them. And with both these we must serue God, cleauing vnto him and his will.

will, with the desires of our heart, as the chiefe good, and resolving to inioy him at any price, and to doe that which is pleasing vnto him, notwithstanding all difficulties and dangers which oppose vs in the way.

But seeing many men deceiue themselves with shadowes and shewes of good purposes and resolutions of cleauing vnto God, and pleasing him by their seruice; it will not be amisse to set downe some properties and signes whereby we may know that, vnto which the Scriptures so earnestly perswade vs. And first, this resolution ought to be generall and vniuersall, extending it selfe not only to some few of many duties, but vnto all without exception. We must with Dauid haue respect vnto all Gods Commandements; and walke worthy of the Lord, vnto all pleasing, being fruitfull in euery good worke, and hauing a good conscience in all things; as the Apostle speaketh. Secondly, it must be diligent and painefull in the vse of all good meanes whereby we may attaine vnto our end; like vnto the resolution of worldlings in compassing earthly things, who spare for no paines for the archieuing their purposes, but labour night and day, by Sea and land, for the compassing of their riches, pleasures and preferments. So as wee may say with Dauid, My soule followeth hard after thee; and neuer rest in our pursuite, till with the Spouse in the Canticles, we inioy him whom our soule loueth. Thirdly, it must be so magnanimous and couragious, that nothing may be able to daunt or dismay it: and the greater the difficulties and dangers be which crosse vs in our Christian courses, the more must wee double and redouble our resolutions to withstand and ouercome them, though it be with the losse of riches, friends, yea, euen life it selfe. And such a resolution was in good Ioshua, who though all the people did leaue the Lord, vowed himselfe and his family vnto his seruice. And in Ruth, whose resolution of adhering to Naomi and her God, could not bee hindered by any dissuasion. And finally, in the Apostle Paul, who when hee was perswaded by his friends, that he should not expose himselfe to the perill of persecution, by going vp to Ierusalem, breaketh through all difficulties in the strength of his couragious resolution; What meane you to weepe and breake my heart? for I am ready, not to be bound onely, but also to die at Hierusalem for the name of the Lord Iesus. Yea, when the holy Ghost himselfe witnessed, that in euery Citie, bonds and afflictions did abide him, his resolution made him constant in his course: But none of these things (saith he) moue me, neither count I my life deare vnto my selfe, so that I might finish my course with ioy, &c. Fourthly, it is the property of this resolution of adhering vnto God; to ioyne with this fortitude and magnanimity, true humility; not grounding our courage vpon our owne strength, as Peter did, who trusting to the ardencie and vchangeablenesse of his loue towards Christ, resolved, that though all men should forsake him, yet hee would not. For if we leane vpon this weake Reede, it will most faile and deceiue vs, when we most rely vpon it; but being humbled in the sight and sense of our owne weakenesse and frailty, wee must wholly rest vpon the power and promises of God, and like the child in the mothers armes, wee must cling vnto him with all our strength, but not so much trust to the firmnesse of our hold, as to his clasping of vs; knowing that if he withdraw his strength and leaue vs, we shall soone cease cleauing vnto him, and fall into those tentations, which the deuill, the world, or our owne flesh shall suggest vnto vs. Wee must say with the Apostle Paul, I am able to doe all things, but we must adde that which followeth, through the power of Christ which strengtheneth me. We must resolute with him, that nothing shall separate us from the loue of God in Iesus Christ, in the meane time acknowledging our impotencie vnto any good, and that in vs, that is, in our flesh, dwelleth no good thing. And so shall our resolution of cleauing vnto God bee much more firme, seeing God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble; and filleth the hungry with good things, but sendeth the rich empty away. Lastly, our resolution must be firme and constant, neuer leaping to cling vnto the Lord with a liuely faith, till by loue we haue full fruition of him in his Kingdome. It must not be vssettled, fickle, and by firs, one while resoluing to serue God, and another while drawne from our resolution by worldly tentations: but we must clasp fast hold of him, as Isaac did in his wrastring, and fully resolute neuer to leaue him, till wee haue our desire, that is, till wee haue full fruition of him in heauen, without feare of losing him. Most of which points I haue handled before, and therefore doe heere thus briefly touch them.

And this holy resolution of cleauing vnto God, and pleasing him in all things, is most necessary vnto a godly life; first, because it is the foundation and ground of all other duties, which whilst it remaineth firme, there is good hope, though the rest of the building bee shrewdly shaken with the blasts and stormes of trialls and tentations, and much sayling and frailty be shewed in many outward actions; seeing so long as the foundation remaineth, the decayed parts of the house may bee repaired with more ease; but if our resolution be vssettled and weake, the whole frame that resteth vpon it, will fall with it owne waight; and the duties themselves of a godly life, will seeme irksome and tedious. It is the very soule which giueth life and motion to all our actions, and in what case it is, in such are they; if strong, then are they strong, if weake, then they weake also. If it be faint, then they languish; If full of vertue and vigour, then are they also vigorous and courageous. Secondly, because it is a mayne and principall part of true repentance, which chiefly consisteth in the full purpose of the heart, the inclination and resolution of the will, and the constant indeuour in our whole liues, to forsake all euill, and imbrace all good, and in all things both inwardly and outwardly to please God, by performing vnto him that acceptable seruice, which in his Word he requireth of vs. Thirdly, because this purpose of heart, and resolution of our wills, to serue and please God, doth make both our persons and actions acceptable vnto him; for he chiefly requireth the seruice of our hearts, as being the fountaine of all our actions, and respecteth not so much our deeds as our will; not the perfection of our actions, as the sincerity of our affections; according to that of the Apostle, If there be a willing mind, a man is accepted, according to that which he hath, and not according to that which he hath not. As we see in the example of the prodigall sonne, who resoluing to goe to his father, and to acknowledge his sinne, before he had done it, and whilst he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion on him. To this purpose one saith, If thou purpolest in thine heart to leaue euill,

and doe good, to hold that which thou hast receiued, and to grow daily better, although (by reason of humane frailty) thou doest something not to be iustified: Yet if thou purpolest not to persist in it, but repentest and amendest what is amisse, as farre as thou art able, God, without doubt, will repute thee holy. Lastly, this resolution is necessary, because we shall meete with many difficulties and discouragements in our course of a godly life, as the tentations of the deuill, the persecutions, scornes, and reproches of the world, the corruptions of our nature, and the vnplesantnesse vnto flesh and blood of holy duties; that if we be not armed with a strong resolution, well grounded and settled with mature and serious consideration, vpon vnanswerable reasons which induce vnto it, wee shall not bee able to continue constantly in our course, but giue ouer with shame, that which we haue rashly and weakely begunne. And therefore our Sauiour exhorteth vs to lay a good foundation before we begin this building, and to prepare a good stocke, whereby we may be enabled to finish our worke, and to make sufficient preparations to withstand the force of our spirituall enemies, before we presume to enter into the field and giue them battell. The which is chiefly done, when wee arme our selues with Christian courage and vndaunted resolution, that we will set aside all excuses, and come vnto God when he calleth and inuiteth vs, that wee will breake thorow all difficulties, and bee discouraged with no dangers; that, come prosperity or aduersity, honour or disgrace, riches or pouerty, life or death, wee will consecrate our selues to Gods seruice, and doe all things which are pleasing in his sight.

Luk. 14. 28, 29,

Now the meanes of confirming this resolution of adhering vnto God with all our hearts, and pleasing him in all things, are diuers. First, wee must often meditate on Gods infinite goodnesse in himselfe, whereby hee deserueth the whole heart and affection, with all the seruice of his creatures, and their whole indeuour to glorifie him who is worthy of all loue. Secondly, we must call often to our remembrance his inestimable loue, and exceeding great bountie towards vs, which plainly appeare in our election, creation, preservation; but especially in that great worke of our redemption, wherein he hath giuen his Sonne to death, that he might saue and restore vs to life and happinesse; as also the speciall and singular fauours which hee hath extended vnto vs in the whole course of our liues. And this, if any thing will make vs resolute to serue and please him, whom wee haue tryed and tasted to bee so infinitely good and gracious vnto vs. Thirdly, wee must meditate seriously on his power and all-sufficieny, whereby he is able, and on the truth of his gracious promises, whereby he hath assured vs, that he is willing to assist vs in all difficulties, and to defend vs against all dangers which shall affront and oppose vs in our Christian course, and in the performance of the duties of a godly life; for what can more strengthen our resolutions in performing faithfull seruice vnto God, then to be assured by his assistance, of victorie over all enemies, strength in overcoming all difficulties, safety in all dangers, and prosperous successe and an happie issue of all our indeuours? And thus Moses exhorteth Iosua to resolution and courage, because God had promised to be with him. He it is (saith hee) that doth goe before thee, he will be with thee, thee, he will not faile thee, neither forsake thee; feare not, neither be dismayed. Fourthly, let vs remember, that it is impossible to lose the fruit & benefit of our labour, whatsoeuer paines we take in Gods seruice; for besides the present pay of temporal benefits, we shal haue the rich rewards of eternall and heavenly happinesse, of which, the other are but small earnest pennies and pawnes. So that if we in Gods seruice lose our earthly riches, we shall haue for them heavenly treasures; if our fame and reputation amongst men, we shall be recompenced with eternall glory, in the presence of God; his Saints, and Angels; yea if we lose our life it selfe, in losing, we shall finde it, euen an euerlasting and most happy life, for one that was momentany and miserable. Fifthly, if we would haue this Christian resolution firme and constant, it must be well grounded when we first begin, and wee must expect, when we enter into the course of a godly life, not the fauour of men, ease and prosperity, but many enemies to encounter vs; and many difficulties and dangers in our Christian way; which if we doe not forecast before they happen, and arme our resolution against them, they will vtterly daunt and discourage vs at their first approaching. And therefore before we make purchase of this gaine of godlinesse, let vs cast before-hand what it will cost vs, and resolue to leaue it at no rate. Sixthly, let vs meditate often of the excellency, vtility, and necessity of a godly life, in which respects it is to be preferred before all worldly things whatsoeuer, seeing thereby, and by no other meanes without it, we are assured of Gods loue and our owne saluation, of his grace in this world, and glory and happinesse in the world to come. Seuenthy, let vs thinke of the preciousnesse of our soules, which are of much more value then ten thousand worlds, and that there is no other meanes to prouide for their eternall happinesse, and their fruition of Gods presence, which perfecteth our blessednesse in heauen, then by framing our hearts to adhere vnto him, with firme resolution to serue and please him whilst wee liue vpon the earth. And let vs often meditate on that speech of our Sauour, What will it profit a man to win the whole world, and lose his soule? For heere our soules are saued or lost; heere the acceptable time and day of saluation lasteth; which if we let passe, it is neuer againe to be regained, but our precious soules, for the price of momentany vanities, shall be eternally sold to hellish torments. Lastly, because our resolution of adhering vnto God, and pleasing him in all things, is apt to faint and languish, therefore our care must be, often to suruey it, that when we finde any saylings or vnsettlednesse in it, we may reparaire and strengthen it; yea, in truth this is a worke fit for euery morning, to take a view of our spirituall state, and to renew our resolution; that wee with the day following vse all meanes whereby it may bee improoued and bettered, inrich our selues in our spiritual stocke, and to our vttermost indouour, doe all things which may please God, as wee shall more fully shew heereafter. Yea; if we finde our resolutions weake and vnsettled, we must confirme them, by making with God a solemne Couenant, that our hearts in all things shall adhere vnto him, and start aside vpon no occasion; according to the example of Asa, and the rest of Gods people, who entred into a Couenant to seeke the Lord God of their fathers, with all their heart, and with all their soule; yea if neede be, wee must confirme this Couenant, not only

onely by solempne protestation, but by an inuolable oath, as they did at that time; and the Prophet David long before them; I haue sware (saith he) and will performe it, that I will keepe thy righteous iudgements.

C A P. III.

Of trust, affiance, and hope in God.

THe speciall duties, whereby we adhere and cleaue vnto God with all our hearts, are either principall, or those which arise out of them and depend vpon them; the chiefe and principall are affiance, the loue and feare of God. By affiance wee adhere and cleaue vnto him, when as knowing, acknowledging, beleeuing, and remembring the omniscience, omnipotence, all-sufficiency, trueth, and goodnesse of God towards vs; we doe put our trust and affiance in him, for the obtaining of all good, and preservation from all euill, both in the presence and abience of all inferiour meanes. Vnto which affiance the Scriptures exhort vs. So David, Trust in the Lord, and doe good. And Salomon, Trust in the Lord with all thine heart, and leave not in thine owne vnderstanding. Which if we performe, wee haue diuers gracious promises made vnto vs: as first, that we shall be greatly rewarded; Cast not away your confidence; which hath great recompence of reward; and be incompassed with all Gods mercies and fauours; according to that of the Psalmist, He that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about. Secondly, that wee shall bee sustained and preserved by his providence: Cast thy burthen vpon the Lord, and he shall sustaine thee; he shall neuer suffer the righteous to be mooued. And againe, They that trust in the Lord, shall be as mount Sion, which cannot be remooued, but abideth for euer. Thirdly, that we shall haue the good things of the earth for the present, and eternall blessednesse in the life to come; for he that trusteth in the Lord, shall possesse the land, and shall inherit his holy mountaine. So Jeremie, Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. And the Psalmist, O trust and see, that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in him. And thus wee must trust in the Lord for the obtaining of all good, and the auoiding of all euill: vnto the former, David exhorteth, Commit thy way vnto the Lord; trust also in him, and he shall bring it to passe. And of the other, we haue him for our example; The Lord is my light and my saluation, whom shall I feare? the Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I bee afraid? I haue an hoste should incampe against me; my heart shall not feare, though warre should arise against me, in this will I be confident. And againe, God is our refuge and strength, a very present helpe in trouble; therefore will we not feare, though the earth be remooued, and though the mountains be cast into the midst of the sea, &c. And thus must we trust in the Lord, in the presence and abience of inferiour meanes. When we haue meanes, wee must put our affiance in him, first, though they be weake and insufficient, knowing that he is able to giue vertue and vigour vnto them, seeing we liue not by bread onely, but by euery word that proceedeth out of Gods mouth. Hee is able in the famine to feede vs with rauenous birds; which in their owne nature are more

more fit to take away our meate, then to bring any vnto vs; and to make our small pittance, a few pulse, an handfull of meale, and a cruize of oyle, as sufficient for our nourishment as the greatest dainties of the worldly wicked. In time of plague he can keepe vs safe vnder the shaddow of his wings, and though thousands doe fall at our sides, and ten thousand at our right hand, it shall not come nigh vs. In time of warre, he is able to saue with few, as well as with many, as Jonathan speaketh; and to giue victory, not only to those who haue a strong armie, but to those also that haue no power, as Asa confesseth. Or if our meanes be many and mighty, yet we must not trust in them, but vsing them as sent of God to serue his providence in our sustentation and preseruation, we must put our whole confidence in him, and rest alone in his blessing vpon them, without which they shall neuer doe vs any good. For we trauaile in vaine, vnlesse God blesse the house; In vaine wee plow and sow, vnlesse hee giue the increase. In vaine are our Granaries and Store-houses replenished with all plentie, if hee breake the staffe of bread. In vaine is the horse prepared against the day of battell; if saluation come not from the Lord. And in vaine doe Gods spirituall Husbandmen plant and water, except the Lord doe giue increase. Neither must we lesse trust in the Lord in the vtter absence of all inferiour meanes, knowing that he is true of his promise, and will neuer faile vs if we put our affiance in him, and in himselfe alone, all-sufficient to preserue and defend vs in their absence, as well as in the presence of them. And thus did Dauid trust in God, though he walked alone in the vale of the shaddow of death; the three children in the fire furnace, Daniel in the Lyons den, Peter garded with Souldiers, and Paul and Silas when they were in the stocks. And thus Abraham hauing Gods promise, respected not his age, nor the deadnesse of Sarabs wombe, but trusted in him for the obtaining of a sonne, and as the Apostle speaketh, against hope beleued in hope, that hee should become the father of many nations.

Now the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto this firme affiance, are these: The first is the often consideration of Gods sauing attributes, as of his omniscience, whereby he taketh notice of all our wants and dangers; of his omnipotencie, and all-sufficiencie, whereby hee is able to relieue and preserue vs; of his providence, which in especiall manner watcheth ouer vs who are his sonnes and children, to dispose of all things to our good; of his mercy, bounty, goodnesse, and truth of his promises, whereby we may be assured of his good will and readinesse to helpe vs. The second meanes is, to obserue Gods mercy and goodnesse in time past, shewed both towards others and towards our selues, in freeing vs from euill, and procuring our good. Wee must consider what God hath done formerly to others, assuring our selues that he is ready to doe the like for vs, if with them we feare and serue him, seeing he is no respecter of persons, but is alike to all. So Dauid confirmed his affiance in God, by remembering his goodnesse towards their ancestors; Our fathers trusted in thee, they trusted in thee, and thou didst deliuer them; they cryed vpon thee, and were deliuered; they trusted in thee, and were not confounded. So when he could with no comfort rest vpon God in his present sense and feeling, he remembered

Gods

Gods wonders of old, in deliuering his people Israel, and crowning their enemies in the red Sea. And thus he saith, others would confirme their affiance by his example. This poore man cryed, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles. But much more wil the experience of Gods mercy and goodnesse towards our selues, in prouiding for vs in the time of want, and deliuering and preserving vs from former dangers, confirme our trust and confidence in him, seeing he is immutable in his loue, and changeth not, though we be changed. And thus Dauid strengthened his affiance in God, that he would giue him victory over Goliath, because he had former experience of Gods goodnesse towards him, and power assisting him against the Lyon and the Beare. And the Apostle concludeth, that as the Lord had formerly deliuered him out of former afflictions, so he would be a like gracious still, and deliuer him out of like afflictions in the time to come. Lastly, if we would confidently trust in God, we must be such as feare and serue him, and making conscience of our wayes, doe walke before him in holinesse and righteousnesse; for with such onely hee hath made his Couenant of grace and protection, and such only may challenge a part in his promises of prouision and preservation. So Salomon, The wicked flee when none pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a Lyon. And againe, In the feare of the Lord is assured strength, and his children shall haue hope. And the Psalmist appropriateth this confidence vnto the faithfull only; Ye that feare the Lord, trust in the Lord, he is their helpe and shield. And not onely those who are professedly wicked, but the close hypocrite also is excluded from it. For the hypocrites hope shall be cut off, and his trust shall be a Spiders web. His confidence shall be rooted out of his Tabernacle; and it shall bring him to the King of terrors.

From this affiance in God, ariseth hope; for when knowing and beleeuing God and his sauing attributes, wee trust in him for the accomplishment of all his gracious promises, then doe we by hope expect the accomplishment of them, euen when they are deferred with patience and comfort, knowing that God is immutable in his loue, and most true of his Word: with which hope we are sustained in all afflictions, that wee doe not faint vnder their burthen, seeing we hope for deliuerance in Gods due time, are armed against all assaults of our spirituall enemies with this helmet of saluation, in expectation of assured victory, and stayed with this anchor in our Christian course, notwithstanding all the tempestuous stormes and boysterous blasts of trialls and tentations. The which anchor is not fastened on the fleeting and sayling sands of our owne worth, workes, and merits, but vpon the firme ground of Gods immutable loue, mercy, goodnesse, power and truth, which will neuer faile those that rest vpon them; according to that of the Psalmist, They that know thy Name, will put their trust in thee: for thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that secke thee. And thus Abraham hoped against hope, being fully perswaded, that what God had promised, he was able also to performe. And the Apostle exhorteth vs to hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, because he is faithfull that hath promised. The object of this hope, are future good things which God hath promised; as fruition of good, and freedom and deliuerance from euill, which are not yet seene (for then there were no place for hope) but certainly expected in Gods good time. But the mayne and principall object of our hope, is heavenly happinesse, which wee shall ioy in soule and body, at Christs comming to Iudgement, whereof it is called the hope of saluation, and the hope of eternall life. The chiefe properties of this hope are, First, that it be patient. Secondly, that it be certaine and assured: of the first the Apostle speaketh, If we hope for that we see not, then doe we with patience waite for it: and in this regard calleth it the patience of hope in our Lord Iesus Christ. Of which patience, he telleth vs that we haue neede, because God oftentimes delayeth to accomplish his promises, as though he had forgotten both vs and them. Secondly, it must be certaine and assured, whereof it is compared to an anchor, which if it fayleth in a tempest, it putteth the ship in great danger of foundring and perishing. And therefore the Apostle desireth, that the Hebrewes might haue full assurance of hope vnto the end; which if wee haue, it will make vs neuer to be ashamed, seeing God, vpon whom we waite, will neuer faile to accomplish his promises. And this is that hope vnto which the Scriptures exhort vs. So the Psalmist, Waite on the Lord, be of good courage, and hee shall strengthen thine heart; waite, I say, on the Lord. And againe, Rest in the Lord, and waite patiently for him.

Which that we may labour after, let vs consider, that it is most profitable and necessary vnto all that will leade a godly and Christian life. For it is not onely a part thereof, as being one of the three principall vertues which the Apostle commendeth vnto vs, but a notable meanes, whereby we are moued and inabled to labour after all other vertues, and to put in practice all other duties, because we are assured of the fruit of our labour, and hopefully expect the obtaining of it; without which hope we would be vtterly discouraged, sit still and doe nothing. Againe, this hope maketh vs not to bee ashamed, in middest of all reproches and disgraces which we suffer for Christs sake, and causeth vs with him to runne with patience the race which is set before vs, in expectation of that ioy which is set before vs. It maketh vs not onely patient, but ioyfull in afflictions, yea euen to glory in our reioyng, in hope of the glory of God, in all our tribulations. It confirmeth our faith from which it springeth, and maketh vs cheerefull in all Christian duties. It quickeneth and reioyceth our drooping hearts, and not onely maketh the way of godlinesse delightfull vnto vs, but vs also pleasing and accepted of God. It is an helmet of saluation, to defend vs against our spirituall enemies, yea it selfe saueh vs, as the Apostle speaketh, because it moueth God to saue vs: for as the Psalmist saith, He is the Saviour of them that hope in him. Finally, it maketh vs blessed in the assured expectation of our blessednesse. For happy is hee that hath the God of Iacob for his helpe, and whose hope is in the Lord his God. Whereas contrariwise, without this hope, we are as the Apostle telleth vs, of all men most miserable, hauing neither the comforts of this life, which worldlings inioy, nor expectation of better in the life to come. Let vs therefore labour after this hope, and vse carefully all good meanes whereby we may attaine vnto it. And seeing it is the gift of God, and grace of his holy Spirit, let vs in the first place beg it at his hands, by frequent and seruent prayer, assuring our selues, that he, who is the God of our hope, will not deny to giue it vnto vs.

vs. Secondly, let vs meditate often vpon Gods sauiing attributes, of power, mercy, goodnesse, truth, &c. and so our imperfections and vnworshippesse will not make vs despaire, nor weaken our hopes in expectation of his promises. Thirdly, let vs often heare, reade, and meditate in the holy Scriptures, which were purposely written, that wee through patience and comfort of them might haue hope. Fourthly, let vs, in all the seruice which we offer vnto God, auoid hypocrisie, and serue and worship him in sincerity and yprightnesse of heart. For the hypocrites hope shall perish, and be cut off like a Spiders web, as Biddad speaketh. Lastly, if wee would haue hope in God, let vs leade a godly life, and serue him all our dayes in holinesse and rightcoulnesse; for the flesh of Gods holy ones shall rest in hope; whereas when a wicked man dieth, his expectation shall perish; and the hope of the vniust men perisheth, as the Wiseman speaketh.

CAP. V.

Of the loue of God; and diuers vertues which spring from it.

He next mayne and principall dutie is the loue of God, when as knowing, beleeuing, and remembring his infinitenesse in all goodnesse, excellency, beauty, and all perfection, and his inestimable loue, grace, and bounty towards vs, we doe loue him againe with all our heart, soule, minde, and strength, aboue all things, and all other things in him, and for his sake. So that the causes of our loue towards God, are his goodnesse, excellencie, beautie and perfection in himselfe; and his goodnesse, grace, and benignity towards vs. For goodnesse is the onely obiekt of loue, neither doe wee loue any thing which is not either truely good, or at least appeareth good vnto vs. And therefore seeing God is the summum bonum, and chiefe goodnesse, when his nature appeareth to be so, we should loue him chiefly, and place our chiefe happinesse in his fruition. But yet because in this state of corruption we are full of selfe-loue, therefore wee cannot loue God perfectly and absolutely for himselfe as we ought, till wee bee assured of his loue towards vs, and haue it shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost: for we loue him, because he loued vs first, as the Apostle speaketh. Now the measure of our loue, wherewith we are to loue God, ought to be without measure, both because he is immeasurable in goodnesse in his owne nature, and also because his loue towards vs hath exceeded all measure; the which appeareth not only in our creation, whereby he hath given vs vnto our selues, and made vs his most excellent creatures, but also in our Redemption, wherein he hath given himselfe vnto vs, euen his onely begotten and dearely beloued Sonne, of the same nature with himselfe; to die for our sinnes, and rise againe for our iustification; and that, when we were not friends, but of no strength, strangers, sinners, enemies vnto him and his grace, the slaues of Satan, and children of wrath as well as others. And therefore if he thus loued vs, when we merited no loue, yea when we deserved wrath and harred, how much more, if it were possible, should wee loue him who is most louely, and infinitely deserueth our loue? But because our nature being finite, we cannot loue him infinitely, wee ought therefore to loue him as much as is possible for vs, with all our hearts, soules, and strength. Or if we cannot thus doe, in respect of our corruption, yet at least we must loue him in sincerity and vprightnesse of heart, as much as we can, and be heartily sorry that wee can loue him no better. We must loue him aboue all things in the world; as house, lands, parents, children, wiues, yea our owne liues, and be ready with all cheerefulness to lay them downe for him, as he hath first laid downe his life for vs. For if we ought to loue all things in him and for him, then ought wee to loue him much more, preferring his glory euen before our owne saluation, when as they come in comparison, the one with the other. And this is that loue of God, which is to be imbraced of vs, as being in it selfe a most excellent vertue, and in diuers respects to be preferred before faith and hope, and to vs most profitable, seeing it assureth vs of Gods loue, and remission of our sinnes, transformeth vs, after a manner, into the diuine nature (for where is loue, there is likenesse, and it is the nature of it to change the louer, as much as may be, into the party beloued) and finally weaneth our hearts from the loue of the world and earthly vanities, and listeth vp our affections and thoughts vnto God and heavenly things; maketh all that we doe or suffer for Gods sake, easie and tolerable; yea sweete and comfortable: for it seeketh not her owne, beareth all things, endureth all things; it inclineth vs to offer vnto God cheerefull obedience, and to performe all duties of holinesse and righteounesse required vnto a godly life, with ioy and delight, which without it are irksome and vnpleasant, yea intolerable and impossible vnto flesh and blood. Now the meanes whereby our hearts may be inflamed with this diuine fire of Gods loue, are, first, that we often meditate vpon Gods infinite goodnesse, excellency, beauty, and perfection, which make him worthy of all loue, and how hee hath exercised these sauing attributes towards vs, in our creation and preservation, in our redemption, giuing his only Sonne to die for vs, and for his sake forgiving vs all our sinnes, and in bestowing vpon vs all the good things which wee inioy in this life, or hope for in the life to come.

Now the vertues and graces which arise and issue from loue, are diuers, as zeale of Gods glory, ioy, and reioycing in God, thankfulness and obedience. Zeale is the fruit and effect of our seruent loue towards God, and as it were a flame arising from this diuine fire, whereby we are made most carefull and earnest in seeking Gods glory, both in aduancing and furthering all meanes whereby it is furthered, and in opposing, hindring, and remoouing all the impediments whereby it may bee hindred. And this is to be shewed in all other vertues, as being the intension of them, and in all duties which we performe vnto God. So the Apostle telleth vs generally, that it is good to be zealously affected alwayes in a good thing. Our loue towards God, and hatred of sinne, must be zealous and hot, and not cold or luke-warme; our repentance must bee ioyned with zeale; Be zealous and amend. We must zealously worship and serue God, according to that of the Apostle; seruent in Spirit, seruing the Lord. Wee must not onely doe good workes, but be zealous of them. Wee must pray with zeale, zeale exceedingly, and poure out our hearts like water before the Lord; with zeale we must preatch the Word, and be inwardly affected with that wee speake, that so also we may affect others; and we must with zeale heare the Word, and euen hunger and thirst after this spirituall food of our soules, that we may grow vp thereby. But yet our care must be, that our zeale be guided with knowledge, and not shew it selfe in all things, but (as the Apostle speaketh) onely in a good matter; and also that in aduancing of the meanes of Gods glory, and remoouing the impediments, wee keepe our selues within the limits of our callings. Now the meanes to attaine vnto this zeale, is to consider often and seriously how great things the Lord hath done for vs, which will make vs thinke that we can neuer be too earnest in seeking his glory, nor too intent and seruient in all holy duties of his seruice. That it is an inseparable propertie of all grace, to be zealous in them, and therefore there can be no grace at all, where zeale is wanting. That is an vndoubted signe of those who are the redeemed of the Lord, to be zealous of good works: & therefore where there is no zeale, there can be no signe of redemption by Christ; finally, that luke-warmenesse is most lothsome vnto God, and that those who are so, he will spue out of his mouth.

The second vertue arising from loue, is ioy and reioycing in God, when being assured of his loue towards vs, and louing him againe, casting for the present, how good the Lord is, and perswading our selues of the full fruition of him in the life to come, we are exceedingly delighted, and euen glory in the assurance and sence of Gods fauour. For it is the nature of loue to make vs reioyce in the thing beloued: and as the more excellent any thing is in our conceite, the more our loue exceedeth, so according to the measure of our loue, such also is our ioy when we inioy it. And therefore needes must our ioy and reioycing in God exceed all other ioy, because our loue ought to bee proportioned to his goodness and excellency, and our ioy to our loue. In which respect, this diuine ioy swalloweth vp all worldly griefe, and causeth vs to glory, not onely in worldly prosperity, but also in persecution and tribulation. And this is that ioy vnto which the Scriptures exhort vs: Reioyce in the Lord alway, and againe, I say, Reioyce. Reioyce euermore. Delight thy selfe in the Lord, and he will giue thee the desires of thine heart. Which if we attaine vnto, then haue wee euen in this life, the first beginnings of our heavenly happinesse. For as the Apostle teacheth vs, the Kingdome of God consisteth in righteousness, peace, and ioy in the holy Ghost. Now the meanes to obtaine this ioy, is to labour after assurance that wee are vnited vnto Christ; for we cannot haue it in our selues, but in, and through him: according to that of the Apostle, We ioy in God through our Lord Iesus Christ, by whom now we haue receiued the atonement. Secondly, if we would haue this ioy, we must labour after the assurance of our iustification, and remission of our sinnes; for peace with God followeth our iustification by faith, and ioy this peace. Thirdly, let vs labour after this assurance, that wee are the sonnes of God by adoption and grace, and to haue it sealed vnto vs in our hearts and consciences, by his holy Spirit, that so our assurance of our heavenly inheritance, may vphold our ioy and reioycing in the midst of temporary crosse and afflictions. Finally, let vs labour to feele Gods loue shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, which wee shall best discern, by finding them inflamed with seruent loue towards God, approoued to-bee sincere, by our care to flee all sinne which is odious vnto him, and imbracing all vertue and goodnesse which is acceptable in his sight. §. Sect. 4.

Of thankfulness vnto God, what is required vnto it; and the meanes of it.
Psal. 116. 12.

The third vertue arising from the loue of God, is vnfaigned thankfulness: for when in consideration of Gods goodnesse, mercy, and bounty towards vs, our hearts are inflamed with his loue, and replenished with in unspeakable and glorious, then doe we thinke, with Dauid, what wee may returne vnto him for all his benefits; and finding no possible meanes of making the least requitall, in regard of our impotency, and Gods all-sufficiency, we doe at last resolute to remaine for euer thankfull debtors, and to expresse our thankfulness, both by our words in praying and magnifying, and in all our actions by glorifying him our Benefactor, who hath bene so infinitely gracious vnto vs, seeing wee haue nothing else to returne vnto him. So that our loue of God, proceeding from his loue towards vs, is the roote of our thankfulness, and our reioicing in his loue and goodnesse, an inseparable companion of it. For this thankfulness is a vertue, whereby knowing, acknowledging, and reioicing in the sense and feeling of Gods loue, goodnesse, and bountie towards vs, wee are inwardly thankfull vnto him for all his benefits, and outwardly expresse it, by praying and glorifying his holy Name, both by our lips and liues, whereby it appeareth what is required to this vertue of thankfulness. First, that wee apprehend Gods loue, and inwardly reioyce in it, hauing our hearts thorowly affected with the sense of his goodnesse and bounty towards vs. Secondly, that wee doe not ascribe the blessings and benefits which wee inioy, vnto any thing else, but onely vnto God, as our supreme and chiefe Benefactor, who is the principall Author of all our good. Thirdly, that wee doe not smother our thankfulness in our hearts, but cause it to breake forth, first, in our words, by praying & magnifying Gods holy name; for as the Psalmist speaketh, It becommeth the righteous to be thankfull; and secondly, in our workes, by doing those things which are pleasing vnto God, in whom our soule delighteth; that so the light of our godly liues shining before men, we may cause them also to glorifie our Father which is in heauen. The which ought to be performed of vs in all things and at all times, both in prosperity and aduersity, plenty and penury, health and sickness; according to that of the Apostle, But be filled with the Spirit, speaking to your selues in Psalmes, and Hymnes, and spirituall songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord; giuing thanks alwayes for all things vnto God the Father, in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ. An example whereof wee haue in Iob, who blessed the Lord when he was deprivied of all his substance; and in the Church grievously afflicted, who in the midst of all her calamities, did acknowledge Gods mercies, in that they were not utterly consumed. Now the meanes whereby we may be stirred vp to this duty, duty, and inabled to performe it, are first to consider, that this thankfulness and thanksgiving is good, pleasant and comely, according to that of the Psalmist; Transe the Lord, for it is good to sing praises vnto our God: for it is pleasant, and praise is comely. Secondly, consider that it is the will of God that we should be thankfull vnto him for all his benefits, which if we performe, he requireth nothing else at our hands, nor any other requittall for all his mercy and goodnesse towards vs. And this reason the Apostle vseth, In euery thing giue thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Iesus concerning you. Thirdly, that it is most pleasing vnto God, and that the sacrifice of the calues of the lips is much more acceptable then of Bulls and Goats. Fourthly, let vs continually meditate vpon Gods manifold and inestimable mercies bestowed vpon vs in time past, his eternall loue, our election, creation, the great worke of our redemption by the death of his onely begotten and dearly beloued Sonne, our vocation and effectuell calling to the participation of this great benefit, from which innumerable others are excluded; our iustification, sanctification, continuall preseruati- on, together with our assured hope of glorificatiō, with al special blessings which from day to day he bestoweth vpon vs. With all which, our hearts will be filled with thankfulness, and our mouthes with praises & thanksgiv- ing, if we thoroughly meditate on them: especially if withall we consider our vnworthines of the least of Gods fauours, and according to Iacobs ex- ample, compare Gods inestimable mercies with our demerits. Lastly, let vs meditate and consider what a foule vice vngatitude is, & how vile and odious in the sight of God & mē, that the Lord wil neuer let it go unpun- shed, nor suffer any to inioy his benefits, who through their vngatitude wil not acknowledge them, nor render the praises which are due vnto him.

The fourth and last vertue arising from the loue of God, is obedience, which is a fruit of our loue, and thankfulness; whereby in all things we submit our selues, our wills and actions, wholly vnto Gods good will and pleasure, both in doing all that he requireth, and in patient suffering what- soeuer he imposeth. So that this obedience is of two kinds. First, our actiue obedience to Gods Law, whiereby wee conforme our whole man vnto the reuealed will of God. The which is an inseparable fruit of our loue towards God, and an infallible note whereby wee may discern that which is sound and sincere, from that which is false and counterfaite; for if we loue God, we will keepe his Commandements; And this is the loue of God, if we keepe his Commandements; and his Commandements are not grieuous. The properties of this obedience are these: First, that it be absolute vnto what- soeuer God requireth, and admit of no discourse of reason when we know his will; but whether profit or disprofit, honour or disgrace, the fauour or displeasure of men doe follow vpon it, we are to doe the things that he inioyneth. Secondly, it must be total, both in respect of the object and sub- iect. In respect of the object, we must obey God in all his Command- ments at all times, neither adding nor detracting, nor declining there- from on the right hand or on the left. Neither is it sufficient that wee o- bey God in some things, and neglect others, or in many and most things, and not in some few: for he that thus sinneth in one thing, is guilty of all; but we must propound vnto our selues the whole Law of God for the rule of our liues, obseruing one table as well as another, and worship him both in holinesse and righteoufnesse, and that not only for some small time, but all the dayes of our liues. In respect of the subiect, our obedience must be with the whole man, and like our loue from which it springeth, it must be performed with all our hearts, soules and strength. But especially the Lord requireth the inward obedience of the heart, wherein he chiefly delighteth; we must worship him in spirit and truth, in sincerity and vprightnesse of heart, as before his face, and in his sight and presence; neither is it sufficient that we doe that which is right, vnlesse we doe it vprightly. It must be voluntary with cheerefulnesse and delight, as the Saints and Angels doe the will of God in heauen. For loue maketh euery burthen light, and the Commandements of God not to be grievous. Yet this internall obedience is not sufficient, vnlesse the externall be ioyned with it. For God will bee worshipped with the whole man; with our bodies, as well as with our soules; with our outward actions, as well as with our inward affections.

Now the meanes which may moue and enable vs to yeeld this obedience, are these; first, we must consider that the Lord hath created vs to this end, that we should serue him, and to the same purpose, when we were by sin vtterly lost, hath redeemed vs with the inestimable price of his Sonnes most precious blood, that wee should worship him in holinesse and righteoufnesse before him all the dayes of our liues, that being freed from sinne, we should become the seruants of righteoufnesse; and from the slauerie of Satan, that we should spend our dayes in Gods seruice. Secondly, let vs meditate on the riches of reward, and that liberall wages which the Lord hath freely promised to giue vnto those who faithfully serue him; in which respect we may iustly say of our actiue obedience, as the Apostle of our passiue, that all our seruice in this present world, is not worthy the glory which shall be reueyled; for it is slight, short and imperfect, but shall cause vnto vs a farre more excellent and eternall waights of Glory. Thirdly, let vs consider, that though our best seruice be mingled with many imperfections, and stayned with our corruptions, yet God in Christ will accept of it, and not only pardon our wants, but reward our wills and workes. For he will spare vs, as a man spareth his sonne that serueth him, accepting of our will for the deede, and of our sincere affections, as of perfect actions. Fourthly, let vs consider, that hereby we shall be assured of all Gods promises: for Godlineffe is profitable for all things, hauing the promises of this life, and of that which is to come. Neither doth God require our obedience for his owne sake; (for he is most absolute in perfection, and our righteoufnesse doth not profit or extend vnto him) but for our owne good and benefit, that he may crowne our obedience with eternall blessednesse. For hee that keepeth the Law, happie is he; and he that heareth Christs Word, and keepeth it, is by him pronounced blessed. Lastly, let vs often propound vnto our selues the examples of Gods Saints and Seruants, that haue gone before vs, and set before vs their obedience as a patterne for our imitation. For more cheerefully may we trauaile in this way of holinesse and righteoufnesse, if wee see a plaine path beaten by those that haue gone before vs. But especially let vs set before vs the neuer-erring example of our Sauour Christ, who who tooke more delight in doing his Fathers will, then in his meate and drinke, and in all things was obedient vnto him to the death, euen the bitter death of the Crosse, as the Apostle speaketh.

* Christian Warfare the third part.

The second kinde of obedience is passive, and is called patience, which is a fruit of our loue and thankfulness towards God, whereby we submit our selues meekely and constantly to beare all those crosses and afflictions, which it shall please God to lay vpon vs. The causes of which patience are diuers; the first and principall is the Spirit of God, of which it is a fruit. Secondly, a liuely faith, which not only apprehendeth the promise of eternall happinesse, with which our temporarie afflictions are not to be compared, but Gods speciall promises of strength to indure all trials, and of helpe and deliuerance in Gods due time. Thirdly, trust and affiance in God, who hath promised to be with vs in all our afflictions, and neuer leaue vs to our owne weakenesse, or to the malice and fury of our enemies, vpon which we conclude, that though he kill vs, yet we will trust in him. But the loue of God is the next and immediate cause of our patience, which maketh vs meekely to suffer whatsoever he imposeth, who so loueth vs, and whom we so loue. For loue endureth all things, and the greatest difficultries are not hard vnto it. It is stronger then death, the waters of afflictions cannot quench it, and the floods of calamities cannot drowne it. The object of this patience is afflictions, which the Lord imposeth for the tryall or correction of his children; for all whom he loueth he chastiseth: and whosoever will be Christs Disciple, must denie himselfe, take up his Crosse, and follow him, that is, that crosse and measure of afflictions which God himselfe imposeth vpon him. Neither are we to take vpon vs burthens of our owne making, but such only as the Lord allotteth vnto vs, which are those alone that we cannot by lawfull meanes auoid, or without falling into sinne. The manner how we are to beare these afflictions, is first voluntarily, with a meeke, quiet and contented minde, as being sent of God for our good, yea cheerefully and ioyfully, as they are signes and scales of our adoption, and speciall meanes to further and assure our euermourning saluation. Secondly, we must beare them constantly, so long as it shall please God to continue them vpon vs, that is, till he giueth vs honest and lawfull meanes to be freed and deliuered from them; not thinking it inough that we haue borne some few, or many afflictions, but holding out vnto the end: for he is not crowned who hath fought well for a time, but he that neuer giueth ouer, till he haue obtained the victory, according to that of our Saviour, Be faithfull vnto the death, and I will giue thee the Crowne of life. But of these points, as also of the meanes whereby wee may be enabled with patience, comfort and ioy to endure afflictions, I haue written largely elsewhere, and therefore will content my selfe thus briefly to haue touched them in this place.

He fourth and last mayne vertue required in this Commandement, is the feare of God; whereby I vnderstand, not that seruile and slavish feare which is in wicked men, and the very devils themselves, in the apprehension of his iustice, wrath, and power, in punishing sinne; but that filiall and sonne-like feare, whereby knowing, beleeuing, and remembring not onely Gods iustice, truth, maiesty, power and dominion ouer all creatures, but also his infinite loue, goodnesse, and mercy towards vs in Iesus Christ; we feare his displeasure; who is to glorious and gracious, as the greatest euill. In which description is expressed the grounds and causes of the true feare of God; namely, the knowledge, belife, and remembrance of Gods attributes; As first, that hee is a iust God, and will not let sinne goe vnpunished; with which consideration our Sauour inciteth vs to Gods feare, because he iustly casteth into hell those that sinne against him. Secondly, that he is true of his Word, in his promises to those that serue and please him, and his threatnings against those that displease and sinne against him. Thirdly, his maiesty and glory, in that he is the supreme Lord, and most glorious King of heauen and earth, which is alone sufficient to strike an awfull feare of God in the hearts of all creatures. Fourthly, that he is a most powerfull and mighty God, and so able to execute all his iudgements, and not onely to kill the body, but also to cast both body and soule into the euerclasting fire of hell, as our Sauour speaketh. Lastly, his dominion ouer all creatures, whereby they are obnoxious and liable to his iustice and punishments, is effectuall to strike feare into the hearts of all men; according to that of Malachi,
If I be a master, where is my feare? and that of Jeremie, Who would not feare thee, O King of nations? for vnto thee doth it appertaine. For howsoeuer the faithfull being in Christ, can receiue no hurt from these attributes; for his iustice is satisfied for their sinnes, and there is no condemnation vnto them; his threatnings doe not belong vnto them, but contrariwise his sweete and gracious promises; his maiesty, power, and dominion, are arguments of ioy and comfort, seeing they are wholly for their protection and preservation: yet doe the children of God feare, in respect of these attributes, when they consider them in their owne nature, and see the effects of them in wicked men, euen as the sonne feareth his father, when he seeth him punish his slave, though he be sure that he shall neuer taste of the same stripes, and reuerenceth him in respect of his power, iustice, grauity, and authority ouer him, though he expecteth nothing from them but all good. So the Apostle Peter vseth this argument: And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons, iudgeth according to euery mans worke, passe the time of your sojournings heere in feare. And the Apostle Paul vseth Gods seuerity to the reiected Iewes, as a reason to make vs to feare
God; and exhorteth vs to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling.

Besides,

Besides, being partly flesh as well as Spirit, and therefore full of infirmities and corruptions, it is profitable for the vnregenerate part, which is a slave, and not a sonne, to be contained in dutie, and restrained from sinne, by the feare of Gods Iustice, power, and punishments. For our loue being imperfect, our feare cannot attaine in this life to full perfection, but so farre soorth as we are vnregenerate, is seruile and slavish. And to this end are Gods iudgements denounced, and punishments inflicted, in the hearing and sight of the godly, that they may feare to offend so iust and mighty a God, and so escape these fearefull punishments. But the chiefe grounds and causes of Gods feare in the hearts of his children, are saving knowledge, and a lively faith, whereby being assured of Gods loue in Christ, we loue him againe, and are about all things afraid to doe any thing which is displeasing in his sight; either in the omission of any duty, or commission of any sinne, which our gracious and louing Father either commandeth or forbiddeth.

And this is that feare of God, which in the Scriptures is so much commended vnto vs, and causeth those, who in their hearts imbrace it, to bee happy and blessed, according to that of Salomon, Blessed is the man that feareth alway; which blessednesse that we may attaine vnto, let vs labour after this feare, and to this end let vs consider the excellencie and profit of it, that our hearts being inflamed with the loue of it, we may carefully vse all good meanes whereby we may obtaine it. The excellency of it heere in appeareth, in that it compriseth in it all other duties, and is vsually put for the whole seruice of God, wherein the whole man is to bee employed, according to that of Salomon, Let vs heare the conclusion of the whole matter, Feare God and keepe his Commandements, for this is the whole of man. Secondly, it is called in this respect, the head and beginning of wisdom, that is, of all godlinesse and true Religion. Thirdly, it giueth grace and vertue vnto all other duties, and maketh them acceptable in Gods sight: For our whole conuersation must be a constant walking in Gods feare. In it wee must worship and serue God. Serue the Lord with feare. And in thy feare will I worship towards thine holy Temple. By it our sanctification is perfected, and our saluation wrought out and finished. The profit of this feare of God is also inestimable; for it restraineth vs from all vice and sinne, according to that of Salomon, A wise man feareth and departeth from euill; and of David, Stand in awe, and sinne not. As we see in the example of Ioseph, who had his eares and heart stopped against the vnchaste allurements of his mistress by the feare of God. And of the Egyptian Midwives, who by the feare of God, were kept from obeying the wicked edict of the King. Whereas contrariwise, the want of this feare is the cause of all disobedience and sinne, as Abraham implyeth in his speech to Pharaoh; and the Apostle plainly expresth: for hauing set downe a Catalogue of many finnes, he concludeth with this as the cause of all the rest; There is no feare of God before their eyes. Secondly, it is a fountaine of life, making vs to depart from the snares of death. Thirdly, it incites and inables vs to the performance of all good duties; and therefore the Lord hauing deliuered his Law, wisheth that the hearts of his people might be alwayes fraughted with his feare, that thereby they might bee moued to obey it: and the Preacher in this respect, compriseth in it alone all other vertues and duties, because it mooueth vs to the imbracing of them all. Fourthly, it deliuereth from all other feares; and causeth them to giue place when it is present, as the Sunne all other inferiour lights. For if we feare God, we will not feare the threatnings of men; if we feare him that can cast body and soule into hell, we neede not feare them that can onely, and that by his permission, kill the body; as our Sauour implyeth. Fifthly, it maketh vs partakers of all good things promised in this life, for hee that feareth the Lord, wanteth nothing which is good; but God is present with such, to take notice of all their wants; and his eares are open to heare their prayers and grant their desires. Finally, it bringeth with it euerlasting blessednesse; For blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his wayes. And happie is the man that feareth alway: but he that hardeneth his heart, shall fall into mischiefe. Which promises belong not alone to those that feare God, but also to their posterity after them; for their seede shall bee mighty upon earth, and their generation blessed, as the Psalmist speaketh.

Now the meanes of attaining vnto this feare of God are diuers. First, to consider and meditate of Gods nature and attributes, as of his omniscieny, whereby he seeth all things, euen the secret corners of our hearts; of his omnipotency, whereby he is able to reward vs if we feare him, or punish vs if we neglect him; of his Iustice, whereby he impartially iudgeth all men without respect of persons; of his truth, which neuer fayleth in his promises or threatnings: But especially of his mercy and goodnesse towards vs in Christ, which will inflame our hearts with his loue, and out of this loue cause vs to feare his displeasure as the greatest euill; according to that of the Psalmist, There is mercy or forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared. The second meanes, is the consideration of Gods Iudgements executed on the wicked, which are so many instructions vnto vs, to feare God and auoide his displeasure, that we be not partakers with them in their punishments. So the Psalmist saith, that the righteous seeing the destruction of the wicked, should feare God, and deride their folly; and the Apostle telleth vs, that the former examples of Gods Iudgements were written for our learning, that they might admonish vs to take warning by their harmes, lest we fall into the same euils. The third meanes, is the diligent reading and hearing of the Scriptures, which are called, The feare of God, because they worke his feare in vs. And thus the Lord inioyneth the King to haue the Law with him, and to reade therein all the dayes of his life, that he may learne to feare the Lord his God. For in them are contained many Commandements, inioyning many exhortations moouing, and many reasons perswading to this feare. Feare the Lord with reuerence, and reioyce with trembling. Let all the earth feare the Lord, let all the inhabitants of the earth stand in awe of him; for he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast. O feare the Lord, all ye his Saints, for there is no want to them that feare him. The fourth meanes, is to deny our selues and our owne wilddome, and when God commandeth any thing, not to aske counsell of carnall reason, vnto whom the more we incline, the more the feare of God abateth in vs, as we see in the example of Eue, who following sense and reason, obeyed the devils aduice, and cast off the feare of God. And this

the Wiseman impieth: Be not wise in thine owne eyes, but feare God, and depart from euill. The fifth meanes, is, to meditate often on our owne infirmities and weaknesse, and of the malice and might of our spirituall enemies; which will make vs worke out our saluation with feare and trembling, and whilest we stand, to take heede of falling. The sixth is, to remember our end daily and continually; as first, the day of our death, which will worke our hearts to Gods feare, as the Psalmist impieth: and secondly, the day of Iudgement and end of the world, which is called, The terror of the Lord, because it is a notable meanes to worke his feare in our hearts. The last and chiefe meanes, whereby all the rest are made effectual, is seruent prayer. For it is no naturall faculty or habit, but the gift of God, which he promisseth to put in the hearts of the faithfull, that they may not depart from him: and is to bee obtained by faithfull and effectual prayer: As we see in the example of the Psalmist, who prayeth the Lord to knit their hearts vnto him, that they might feare his Name.

The last vertue required, is humility, whereby knowing and acknowledging Gods power, iustice, maiesty, goodnesse, mercy, and infinite perfection, and our owne vilenesse, and vnworthinesse, imperfections, and sinfull corruptions, we doe renounce all glory and praise, as not belonging vnto vs, and ascribe it wholly vnto God, vnto whom alone it rightly appertaineth. So that it is the nature of humility, to vilifie and abase our selues in our owne sight, euen to the ground, as the word importeth, to cast off all opinion of our workes and worthinesse, and in the sight and sense of our sinnes and corruptions, to acknowledge our selues worthy of Gods most heauie punishments in this life and the life to come; and contrariwise, to ascribe all glory and praise vnto God alone, euen of all the good we haue in vs, or is done by vs, from whom alone we haue it; according to that of the Psalmist, Not vnto vs, O Lord, not vnto vs, but vnto thy name giue the glory: And of Daniel, O Lord, righteousness belongeth vnto thee, but vnto vs confusion of faces, because wee haue sinned against thee. The causes of this humility, are first, the knowledge and acknowledgement of Gods infinitenesse in all excellency, goodnesse, and perfection; in which he is so incomprehensibly glorious, that when we come in his presence, it maketh vs to vilifie and abase our selues, what opinion soeuer before wee had of our owne worth and excellencie, euen as the light of a Glow-worme is quite dazeled; when the glorious beames of the Sunne doe shine vpon it. Thus in the sight and sense of Gods glory and maiesty, Ezechiel was cast to the ground; Manoah concluded that hee should die; Isayas cryeth out, Woe is me, for I am vndone, because I am a man of vncleane lips, &c. for mine eyes haue seene the King, the Lord of hosts. And Iob hauing seene the Lord, abhorred himselfe, and repented in dust and ashes. Especially if wee consider that this God, mighty and glorious in himselfe, is so infinitely gracious vnto vs, in conferring vpon vs so innumerable benefits, and aboue all, that inestimable gift of his onely Sonne, to worke that great worke of our Redemption. The consideration whereof, will make vs to humble our selues with Iacob, and to confesse that we are lesse then the least of Gods mercies; and to say with Dauid, Who am I and my house, that thou hast brought me hither to? wherefore thou art great, O Lord God for for there is none like thee, &c. Secondly, the knowledge and acknowledgement of our owne vilenesse and vnworthinesse; both in regard of our bodies, which are but dust and ashes, as Abraham acknowledgeth; and in respect of our soules, which howsoever they were created according to Gods Image, in wisdom, holinesse, and righteousness, yet through the fall of our first parents, and the corruption deriued from them vnto vs, they are wholly defiled in all the powers and faculties of them, with originall corruption, and loaded with the guilt of innumerable numbers of a ctuall transgressions, whereby we are made subiect to the wrath of God, the curse of the Law, the plagues and punishments of this life, and eternall death and condemnation in the life to come. In which regard we haue iust cause to humble our selues with the prodigall sonne, and to say with him; Father, I haue sinned against heauen and earth, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne. And if there be any good thing in vs, or done by vs, to acknowledge with the Apostle, that wee haue it of Gods free grace, seeing of our selues, we are not able so much as to thinke a good thought, but it is God alone that worketh in vs both the will and the deed.

And this is that humility, which as it is in it selfe most excellent, so vnto vs most profitable, and therefore of vs to be much esteemed, and earnestly desired. It is most excellent, as being the most beautifull ornament, which maketh vs appeare glorious in the sight of God, in which respect, the Apostle exhorteth vs to decke our selues with it. Yea it adorneth all other vertues, making them (as the soyle, the Iewell) being in themselves rich and beautifull, much more precious and glorious in the sight of God and men. It is most profitable also: for when we humble our selues, and become euen with the earth, we are thereby preserved from falling, and when we indge our selues, we shall not be iudged of the Lord. Yea if wee humble our selues, the Lord will exalt vs: and if with the poore Publicane we acknowledge our sinnes, we shall depart iustified, and find God faithfull of his promise in forgiuing vs our sinnes. So the Apostle James, Humble your selues in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you vp. And the Apostle Peter, Humble your selues therefore vnder the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time. And thus the Lord exalteth the humble, by enriching them with all his gifts, both temporall, spirituall, and eternall. With temporall benefits, for by humility and the feare of the Lord, are riches, honour, and life. With spirituall graces; for he resisteth the proud, but giueth his grace to the humble. Hee filleth the hungry with good things, but sendeth the proud empty away. For he ^a teacheth them his wayes, and reuealeth vnto them the secrets of his Kingdome, making them thereby wise vnto their saluation. He giueth them the grace of iustification, and the ^b forgiuenesse of all their sinnes. Hee maketh them ^c thankfull in prosperity, acknowledging themselves with Iacob and David, lesse then the least of Gods mercies, and that all the good which they haue, they haue receiued it from God; and not onely patient, but also thankfull ^d in greatest afflictions, acknowledging that it is the mercies of the Lord that they are not utterly consumed. He blesseth them with his ^e presence, taking delight to dwell with them, that are of an humble heart and contrite spirit; and so with his power and prouidence safegardeth them from all euill. Finally, in the life to come, he crowneſh humility with eternall glory and felicity, according to that of our Sauour; Blessed are the poore in ſpirit, for theirs is the Kingdome of heauen. So that, humility is not onely it ſelfe a moſt excellent grace, but the chiefe meanes alſo of obtaining all other graces, ſeeing God giueth them onely to the humble. For they onely ſhall haue the riches of Gods beſt and moſt precious gifts, who will bee thankefull vnto God for them; thoſe onely are thankefull, who highly eſtimate them; and they alone make this eſtimate, who haue felt the want of them, and earneſtly deſired them; and they and no other haue thus done, who are thoroughly humbled in the ſight and ſenſe of their owne pouertie, emptineſſe, and nakedneſſe.

And thus, when our hearts are enlarged with that loue of this excellent and profitable grace, let vs in the next place carefully vie all good meanes, whereby we may be decked and adorned with it. And firſt we muſt often and ſeriously meditate vpon Gods excellency and infiniteneſſe in wiſedome, glory, power, iuſtice, and goodneſſe, and then the opinion of our owne worth will vaniſh, like the light of a candle, when the Sunne ſhineth in its full brightneſſe, and our ſeeming perfection which much pleaſed vs, when we beheld it alone, or compared in with others who come ſhort of vs, will appeare to be nothing but imperfection; and wee vile and of no worth in our owne eyes. Secondly, let vs compare our ſtate as it is, with that it was in our creation, and there will be great cauſe of humiliation, in the beſt gifts and graces in vs, ſeeing they are but the ruines of an old building, and like baſe worne-out ragges of ſumptuous apparell. Thirdly, let vs compare our vertues and dories, with that which the Law requirerh, and ſo we ſhall haue good cauſe to be caſt downe in the ſight of our imperfection, when we ſee what perfection, euen vpon the penaltie of the curſe it exacteth of vs. Fourthly, let vs meditate on the matter whereof we are made, and into which we ſhall againe be reſolued; and then may wee in all humility ſay with Iob to corruption, I thou art my faſher, and to the worme, I thou art my mother and my ſiſter; yea with Dauid, that we are wormes and no men: And acknowledge with Abraham, that wee are but duſt and aſhes, vnworthy to appeare in Gods preſence, or to make any ſuite vnto him. Fifthly, let vs ſet our many and grieuous finnes before vs, our originall corruption, which is the roote of all wickedneſſe, and our actuall tranſgreſſions, both of omiſſion and commiſſion; and withall, the wrath of God; and curſe of the Law due vnto them; and this will make vs with the Publicane to caſt downe our eyes, and ſmite our breſts; and with broken and contrite hearts to cry out, God, be mercifull vnto me a ſinner. Sixthly, with our graces and vertues, let vs compare our vices and corruptions, and ſo our few graines of gold will be couered with ſuch a maſſe of drotte, our ſmall quantity of good come mixed with ſo much chaffe, that our good parts will not ſo much liſt vs vp, as our ill will pull downe and humble vs, if we weigh them in the ballance of an vnpartiall iudgement. Seuently, let vs remember that we haue nothing but what we haue receiued, and that by the grace of God we are that we are, and therefore let vs not boaſt, as though we had not receiued them, but retaining the ioy and comfort of Gods graces vnto our ſelues, let vs returne all the praiſe and glory glory vnto him whose gifts they are; and not carry our selues as proud owners, but as humble and thankfull debtors. Eighthly, let vs consider, that what good things soeuer are in vs, they are the Lords talents, of which we must giue an account at the day of Iudgement, and that we are Stewards, and not absolute owners of the gifts which we haue receiued, and so our greater gifts will work in vs greater humility, seeing they are but receipts, and consequently debts, for which we shall be accountant vnto God, how we haue imployed them. Ninthly, let vs remember, that though we haue neuer so many vertues and graces, yet if pride bee mixed with them, it will spoile them all; seeing it is the payson of all vertues, a small portion whereof will infect a great quantity of wholesome meate and drinke. Whereas humility is such an ornament, as will adde much to their native beauty, and make them truly glorious in the sight of God and men. Tenthly, let vs set before vs the examples of Gods seruants, who as they haue excelled in all other graces, so also in humility, as of Abraham, Iob, David, Paul, but especially of our Sauour Christ himselfe, the most perfect patterne of humility, who being the Soueraigne Monarch of heauen and earth, did dained not to wash his Apostles feete; and being equall with his Father in all glory and Maiesty, yet made himselfe of no reputation, and tooke vpon him the forme of a seruant, and being made like vnto men, humbled himselfe, and became obedient vnto death, euen the death of the crosse. Lastly, if we would attaine to true humility, we must not content our selues with the sparing and seldome vse of these meanes, but exercise our selues daily in them, because pride will not easily leaue his hold, and though it be once or twice, or many times repelled, yet will it recouer new strength, and make against vs fresh assaults, yea it will spring sometimes from the roote of vertues, and euen like the Phoenix, when it is consumed with the fire of Gods Spirit, it will re-enliue it selfe, and out of its owne ashes recouer birth and being.

And thus much concerning those vertues whereby wee haue God inwardly in our hearts. Besides which, there is also required, that wee haue him outwardly in our bodies and externall actions; and that is, when as with the outward man wee serue and worship him. The which also we owe vnto God, seeing hee hath created and redeemed both our soules and bodies, that wee should in both performe seruice vnto him. And though alone it bee of small value, for as the Apostle saith, Bodily exercise profiteth nothing, yet doth the Lord require it with the other, and that with the sweete incense of the heart and minde, wee offer our bodies also a liuing sacrifice, holy and acceptable vnto him: which Daniel thought to bee a matter of such moment, that hee chose rather to bee cast into the Lyons denne, then to neglect it for the space of a few dayes. Our Sauour also requireth, not onely that wee haue in vs the heate of spirituall graces, but that also that wee cause their light to shine out before men, that they seeing our good workes, may glorifie our Father which is in heauen. For as naturall fire doth retayne its vertue and strength, when as it hath some outward vent, and when that is stopped, is choaked and presently dies; so doe our inward graces and vertues liue and flourish, when they haue the outward vent of corporall obedience.

dience, and externall workes of piety and righteousness, but soone languish and are extinguished, if they neuer put forth themselues in these outward exercises. Now this externall honour, is either in outward signes or actions. Of the former sort, is religious adoration in externall signes and gestures, as prostrating the body, vncouering the head, bending the knee, lifting vp the hands, which being considered as religious gestures, are proper and peculiar to God alone. Of the other sort is the outward seruice of God, in calling vpon him, vowing vnto him, swearing by his Name, celebrating feasts to his honour, and all outward obedience to the Law, which, in respect of the person to whom they are to be performed, namely, God alone and no other, are all required in the first Commandement.

CAP. VII.

Of the duties which are required in the second Commandement, as Prayer, hearing the Word, and administration of the Sacraments.

§. Sect. 1.
Of the things
generally required in the second Commandement.

WEE haue shewed that the first Commandement requireth, that wee serue and worship Iehouah, the onely true God. In the three other Commandements of the first Table, is shewed how he is to be worshipped, and the time when. The manner of his worship is, how wee is to be serued in his solemne and set seruice, required in the second Commandement, or how he is to be glorified at all times in the whole course of our liues in the third. The time when wee is principally to bee worshipped, is vpon his Sabbaths, required in the fourth Commandement. In the second Commandement, God requireth that we worship him the true God, after a right and lawfull manner, and by such meanes as are agreeable to his nature, and which in his Word hee hath prescribed vnto vs, vnto which wee ought not to adde, from which wee ought not to detract any thing, as hath before bene shewed. For this is our reasonable seruice, to worship so great a God, not after our owne phantasies, but according to his owne will, and with such a seruice in which hee delighteth. Now hee delighteth in such a worship as is agreeable to his nature; which being spirituall and true, yea Truth it selfe, it followeth, that wee must worship him by spirituall and true meanes, and after a spirituall and true manner, that is, wee must conformance all the seruice which wee offer vnto God, according to the prescript rule of his Word. And thus wee are to worship God, both inwardly with our soules; and outwardly with our bodies; Priuately by our selues, in our families; and publicly in the congregation, in which wee are to performe all our seruice, with vnanimie and ioynt affection, as if wee all worshipped God with one heart and minde; and with vniformity in all outward rites and actions, as if wee had all but one body. Contrariwise, the Lord, in this Commandement, forbiddeth both the contempt and neglect of his worship, which is the sinne of Atheists and profane persons; and also worshipping him by false means, and after a false manner; as first, all will worship and superstition, which is deuised by mens braine, and out of a good meaning and intention offered vnto him in stead of his true seruice: of which sort is the making of any Image to represent God thereby, or any other for religious vse; the worshipping of these Images, or of any thing else besides the true God; by offering vnto them any part of that religious seruice which is proper and peculiar to him alone: As religious adoration; Inuocation, dedicating Churches, and consecrating of festiualls to their honour and such like. Secondly, all irreuerence in Gods seruice: As when the externall worship is performed without the inward, with deceitfull lippes, and not with the heart, and in spirit and truth, which is the seruice of Hypocrites. Lastly, when as the publike seruice is performed without any vnanimity of the heart, or vniformity of externall rites and ceremonies, or with such as are vncomely, apish, light, and opposite to the vse of edifying.

Mat. 21. 22.

And these are the things which generally are commanded or forbidden in this Commandement. The speciall duties which are here principally required, are three, Inuocation, preaching and hearing the Word, and the administration of the Sacraments. In respect of the first, there is first required that we pray, and the neglect hereof condemned. Secondly, that wee pray according to Gods will, performing those things therein which in his Word hee requireth. And these are either essentiall vnto prayer or accidentall. The things essentiall, respect either the person vnto whom we must pray, which is God only and no other; or the person in whose name alone we must pray, namely, Iesus Christ, and not in the mediation or intercession of any creature. Thirdly, by whose helpe, to wit, the holy Ghost, who helpeth our infirmities, and teacheth vs to pray as we ought. Fourthly, After what manner, that is, before prayer with due preparation, and in prayer in respect of our soules, that we pray in the spirit, and not with the lips alone, nor with wandring thoughts. In our mindes, that we pray with vnderstanding, and not in an vnknowne tongue, nor in ignorance, nor conceiuing what we vtter with our mouthes. In our hearts, that we pray with reuerence in respect of God, and humility in respect of our selues. In our bodies there is required, that wee vse such voice and gestures, as are most fit to stirre vp our affections and deuotions to the religious performing of this duty. Lastly, there is required, that wee pray for those things which are good and lawfull, hauing all our suites warranted by the Word of God. The things accidentall required in prayer, are the circumstances of persons, place or time. In respect of persons, prayer is either publike in the Congregation, or private. In respect of the place, prayer is not limited, but wee haue liberty in all places to lift vp pure hands vnto God. In respect of the time, wee must pray without ceasing, as often as any fit opportunity and occasion is offered. The kinds of prayer, are either petition or thanksgiuing. In all our petitions there is required, 1. A sense of our wants. 2. Feruent desires to haue them supplied. 3. A speciall faith, faith, that our requests shall be granted, grounded vpon Gods promises. After our petitions made, we must quietly rest vpon God, perswading our selues that wee shall obtaine them in due time. Secondly, we must carefully vse all good meanes, which may serue Gods prouidence in conser-ring these blessings vpon vs. Thirdly, If wee doe not presently obtaine, we must perseuere in prayer without fainting or wearinesse. The other part of prayer is giuing of thanks, whereby wee praise God for all his benefits, either receiued or promised, vnto which the same things are to be fitted, which were generally required in prayer, as that they be rendered to God alone, in the name of Christ, by the holy Ghost, with vnder-standing in our mindes, and reuerence and humility, with thankfulnessse and cheerefulnessse in our hearts.

And so much of the duties respecting prayer. Those that respect the ministry of the Word, are of two sorts; the first respect Gods Ministers that preach it. The second, the people that heare it. In respect of the Minister, it is required first, that his person be qualified and fitted for this high function, in which regard hee ought to be once lawfully called to this office inwardly by God, and outwardly by the Church. Secondly, he is to haue his calling approued and sealed vnto him by his sufficiency of gifts, both in knowledge and vtterance; and willingness of minde to imploy them to Gods glory, and good of his people. Secondly, for the matter which he preacheth, it is required, that he deliuer nothing but that which is grounded vpon the pure Word of God, and that he rightly expound the Scriptures by the Scriptures; and diuide the Word of God aright, both in obseruing profitable doctrines out of the Text, and in applying them to his hearers, for instruction in the truth, confutation of errors, exhortations to duties, reproofe of offenders, and consolation of the weake and afflicted. Thirdly, for the manner, there is required that he speake in the euidence of the Spirit, as if God by him did speake vnto the people. Secondly, in simplicity without any impiety of humane inuētions, or affectation to shew his owne learning & gifts. 3. in integrity and vprightness as in Gods sight and presence, chiefly ayming to please God and men. 4. In fidelity, hauing in his ministry no respect of persons; but deliuering Gods message impartially to the noble and base, rich & poore, friends and strangers all alike. Fifthly, with authority & power, according to the example of our Sauour, not fearing the face of any gainfayer or opposer. Sixthly, with al grauity, as becommeth the waightinesse of his Ambassage. Seuently, with all liberty and freedome of speech and spirit, taxing and reprobuing sinne wheresoeuer he findes it. And finally, with seruent zeale of Gods glory, and the saluation of the people.

The duties which respect the hearing of the Word, are of three sorts. The first, such as are to bee performed before wee heare, which are two principally. The one, that we sit and prepare our selues, before wee presume to approach into Gods presence to performe this holy duty; the which is done, partly by remoouing those impediments which might hinder vs, as infidelity, impenitencie, carnall security, worldly distractions and earthly-mindednesse, prophanenesse and small esteeme of the Word, excessiue eating or drinking, conceite of our owne knowledge, as though little or nothing could be added vnto it, prejudice and forestalled opinions of our teachers, hypocrisie, curiosity, itching eares, factious affections, whereby men haue the truth of God in respect of persons, hearing or not hearing, according to that opinion which they haue conceived of him that speaketh. And partly, this preparation consisteth in vsing all good helpes and meanes, which may enable vs to the carefull and conscionable hearing of the Word. As to consider the waightinesse of the action which wee are about to performe, namely, an high and holy seruice vnto God, which will further and seale vp vnto vs our saluation or condemnation, and be either the sauour of life vnto life, or of death vnto death, soften vs like waxe, or harden vs like clay, and make vs one step neerer eyther to heaven or hell. For Gods Word shall neuer retorne voide, but accomplish what he pleaseth, and shall prosper in the thing whereto he sends it. Secondly, to meditate on the ends for which we heare, which are, to glorifie God in the meanes of our saluation, to be built vp in all sauing grace, knowledge, faith, obedience, loue of God, zeale, patience, and the rest. Thirdly, we must examine our selues to finde out our sinnes, that we may gather strength for the mortifying of them; and our spirituall wants, that we may haue them supplied in this spirituall market of our soules. Fourthly, we must renew our repentance, that wee come not in our sinnes; and our faith, without which our hearing will not profit vs. Finally, we must vse faithfull and seruent prayer, that God will so assist with his holy Spirit, the Minister in speaking, and vs in hearing, and sanctifie to our vse his holy ordinances, that they may be effectuell to build vs vp in our most holy faith, and more and more enrich vs with all sanctifying and sauing graces. And being thus prepared, our next duty is, that setting aside all worldly impediments, we resort vnto the holy assemblies, to be made partakers of Gods holy Word, that wee may profit thereby.

The second sort of duties respect the action of hearing it selfe, vnto which is required, that wee set our selues in the presence of God, and heare the Word preached, not as the word of mortall man, but as the Word of the euerliuing God; with all feare and reuerence, with all diligence and attention, with alacrity and cheerefulnesse, humility and a good conscience, auoiding (as much as lieth in vs) all distractions, wandering thoughts, priuate reading, dulnesse, drowzinesse and carnall wearinesse. Finally, with hungring and thirsting after the foode of our soules, and earnest desire to profit by it. To which end we must apply and fit our selues to euery thing which is spoken to profit by it, whether it be doctrine, confutation, reproofe or consolation, receiue the Word into good and honest hearts, and there reserue it as a precious treasure for our vse in the whole course of our liues and conuersation. The third and last sort are those duties which are to be performed after we haue heard; which are, First, to meditate on that which hath beene deliuered vnto vs, that we may imprint it in our memories, and worke it into our hearts. Secondly, conference with others, that wee may be mutuall helpers for the vnderstanding, remembring, imbracing and practising of that which we haue heard. Thirdly, that we sanctifie the Word vnto our vse by effectuell effectuall prayer, desiring that God will giue a blessing vnto it, and make it effectuall by his Spirit for the inlightning of our minds, the sanctifying of our hearts and affections, and the reforming and amending of our sinfull liues. Lastly, we must on euery fit occasion call to mind what wee haue heard, that we may bring it vnto vse, and conscionably practise what wee haue learned.

The third sort of duties required in this Commandement, respect the administration of the Sacraments, which are only two, Baptisme, and the Lords Supper. Vnto both which it is generally required, that they bee administred. First, by a lawfull Minister and no other. Secondly, only to those which are in the Couenant, either the faithfull or their seede. Thirdly, that they be administred according to Christs institution, without the mixture of humane inuentions. More especially vnto the receiuing of the Lords Supper, there is required, that we receiue it worthily, to which purpose, diuers duties are required before, in, and after the Communion. Before, that wee duely prepare our selues for this holy action, which consisteth, first, in an examination of our selues, how we are qualified with such sauing graces as are necessary to the worthy receiuing of the Lords Supper, the which, are an hungry and thirsting after Christ and his benefits, as after that spirituall foode, which alone is sufficient to nourish vs to life euerlasting. Secondly, knowledge of the mayne principles of Christian Religion, respecting either God or our selues, without which we cannot discerne the Lords body, no more then a blind man can by his bodily sight discern the outward signes of bread and wine. Thirdly, faith in Iesus Christ, approoued to be true and liuely by the fruits of it, in the inward sanctification of our hearts, and in our outward workes of piety, mercy, and righteousness. Fourthly, vnfeigned repentance, consisting in an hearty sorrow for our sinnes past, springing out of faith, and the apprehension of the loue of God towards vs, and a settled purpose and resolution, not onely to leaue them for the time to come, but also to serue the Lord in the contrary duties of holinesse, righteousness, and sobriety. Fourthly, loue and charity towards our neighbours, approoued by our willingnesse and readinesse to giue vnto those that want, and to forgiue those that offend. Secondly, after this examination there is required vnfeigned humiliation in the sight and sense of our wants and weakenesses, especially in these sauing graces before spoken of. Secondly, an hungry after the meanes whereby they may be supplied, especially the Sacrament which was purposely ordained to supply our wants, and strengthen our weakenesse in these graces. Thirdly, humble confession of our sinnes in generall, and especially of those which haue come to our mind in our examination, wherein we renewed our faith and repentance. Fourthly, a steadfast resolution in our hearts, and faithfull promise to God, that if he will in Christ accept of vs, though not prepared according to the preparation of the Sanctuary, but full of imperfections, and weake in those graces which are necessary vnto the worthy receiuing of this holy Sacrament, we will in that part of our liues which remaineth, strue after more perfection, and conscionably labour in the vse of all good meanes, whereby we may increase our knowledge, faith, repentance, and charity towards our neighbours. And lastly, earnest and hearty prayer vnto God for the remission of our finnes, for the assistance of his Spirit in our intended action, for a new supply of sanctifying graces, and for his blessing vpon his holy Ordinances, the Word and Sacraments, that they may be effectuell for the renewing and increasing of them in vs, and for the strengthening of vs vnto the duties of a godly life. In the action of receiuing, wee are to be exercised both by meditation and action. We are to meditate on the outward signes, Bread and Wine, and the things signified by them, the precious Body and Blood of Christ; as also of the Analogie and relation betweene them. When we see the Bread and Wine set apart from a common, to an holy vse, we are to be put in mind thereby, that so Christ was set apart and sealed to the office of Mediatourship, that he might bee our Prophet, Priest, and King, and so worke that great worke of our Redemption. When we see one Bread and one Wine, consisting of many Graines and Grapes, we are to be put in mind thereby, that there is but one Mediatour betweene Gods vs, euen the man Iesus Christ, and that he hath but one body, the Catholike Church, consisting of many members. When wee see the Bread broken, and the Wine powred out, wee are to call to mind, that so the body of Christ was broken and crucified, and his blood shed for our finnes, that it might be spirituall food for our soules, to nourish them to life euerlasting. When we see the Minister giue and deliuer the Bread and Wine, we are to remember that so God offereth the Body and Blood of his Sonne, to be receiued spiritually by faith of euery worthy receiuer. The actions to be performed, are first, to receiue the Bread and Wine at the hands of the Ministers, and to eate and drinke them with our bodily mouthes. Secondly, to performe an inward action answerable thereunto, namely, by the hand and mouth of faith, to receiue and feed vpon Christs Body and Blood for our spirituall nourishment. Thirdly, to remember the infinite loue of God and his Christ to vs, the one, in giuing his deare Sonne; the other, his precious Body and Blood for our Redemption; and being truly thankfull vnto them in our hearts, for these inestimable benefits, to set forth their praises, both by our lips and liues, songs of Thanksgiuing, and holy conuersation. After the receiuing of the Supper, we are to performe these duties. First, to bee perpetually thankfull vnto God the Father, Sonne, and holy Spirit, as for all his benefits, so especially for that great worke of our Redemption, and for deriuing and assuring vnto vs the fruit of it by his Word, Sacraments, and holy Spirit. Secondly, wee must examine how wee haue profited by receiuing of the Supper, for the satisfying of our spirituall hunger, and the replenishing of our empty soules with the gifts and graces of Gods holy Spirit, which were the maine ends for which we came to the Lords Table. Lastly, we are to performe carefully our purposes and promises made vnto God and our selues, that we will conscionably and diligently vse all good meanes, for the furthering of vs in the duties of repentance and a godly life.

C A P. VIII.

Of the duties required in the third and fourth Commandement.

He third Commandement requireth that wee sanctifie Gods Name, and glorifie him out of his publike and solemne seruice, in the whole course of our liues and conuersation. The Name of God signifieth diuers things in the Scriptures, as first, God himselte and his attributes, which are his Essence. Secondly, his Glory. Thirdly, his Titles, as Iehouah, Elohim, Jah. Fourthly, his Word. Fifthly, his Religion. Sixthly, his Workes. And to take it in vaine, is to vse it in our thoughts, words, and workes, rashly, lightly, and without iudgement, or in vaine, and to no end, or falsly, wickedly, and contumeliously to his dishonour, which is heere forbidden. Contrariwise in this Commandement, God requireth that we sanctifie and glorifie his holy Name: and as it is Holy, Reuerend, and Glorious in it selfe, so to vse it holily and reuerently, in all our thoughts, words, and actions. And on the other side he forbiddeth vs to vse Gods Name, that is, his attributes, Titles, Word, Religion, and Workes vainely, that is, rashly, irreuerently, and lightly, vpon no iust cause, or else prophanely, falsly, and contemptuously to Gods dishonour. The mayne duties required of vs, are first, that wee effectually know, beleue, and remember God and his attributes, and also often thinke and meditate on them, holily and reuerently, that wee make profession of God and his attributes, and vpon all occasions speake of them in like manner; and that wee walke worthy such an holy knowledge and profession in our liues and conuersations. Secondly, that wee desire Gods glory in our hearts, and indeuour to set it forth by all meanes; making it the matter of our speech, and glorifying him by our praises and thanksgiuing, and the end also of all our words and actions. Thirdly, that we vse Gods Titles and Names iudiciously, in matters of waight and importance, after a serious and reuerent manner, and to a good end. Fourthly, that wee vse Gods Word religiously and holily, reading, meditating, and conferring of it with a desire, studie, and indeuour to know, remember, and praise it. That we make it our Schoolemaster, to teach and instruct vs in all truth, our chiefe guide for the directing and reforming of our hearts and liues, and the squire and rule, according to which wee frame all our words and actions. Fifthly, that wee walke worthy our high calling, and by our holinesse and righteousness adorne the Religion which we profess; carrying our selues in all things vprightly, in respect of God, and inoffensiuely in respect of men. Sixthly, that in our thoughts, words, and actions, wee make an holy and religious vse of all Gods workes, both of creation and gouernment, and both meditate and speake of them so, as it may redound to Gods glory, knowing him by his workes, and glorifying him in them, by acknowledging them his workmanship, and his wisdom, power, and goodnesse shining in them. And also to our owne good, imitating in them that which the Scriptures propound, as good for our imitation, and a

voyding the contrary. And finally, that wee receiue them with thanksgiuing, and sanctifie them to our vse by the Word and Prayer. So also here is required that wee make an holy vse of the creatures in respect of Gods gouernement and prouidence; as first, for the determining of doubts and controuerfies (which can no otherwise be cleared and decided) by casting of lots, in the vse whereof we are to vse prayer vnto God, and sometimes, (when the occasion is waighy) fasting, desiring of him, that by his good prouidence he wil direct them to the right end, for which we vse them. And as before they are cast, we are to referre our selues wholly to Gods determination; so after, wee are to rest contented and well pleased with his sentence. Secondly, we are to make an holy vse of Gods prouidence, first, in conferring rewards and blessings either vpon our selues or others. In respect of our selues wee make a right vse of Gods blessings and benefites: When as in our hearts we bee vnfainedly thankfull vnto God for them, when in our words we praise and magnifie his bounty and goodnesse towards vs, and tell what great things he hath done for vs, and when in our workes and actions, we referre them wholly to Gods glory, and both our owne and others good, taking occasion of his mercy and goodnesse to feare him, and to turne vnto him from our sinnes by vnfained repentance. In respect of Gods blessings bestowed vpon others, we carry our selues holily, when as we reioyce with them in Gods bounty and goodnes, and ioyne with them in praises and thanksgiuing. The like holy vse we are to make of Gods prouidence in respect of punishments and afflictions, whether they bee inflicted vpon our selues, or vpon others. As when God layeth his hand vpon vs by his iudgements and chastizements, wee are to be humbled in the sight and sence of our sinnes, and beare them with patience and thankfulnes, acknowledging Gods mercy, in that we are not vtterly consumed, and profit by them both for the mortifying of our sinnes, and for our spirituall quickning vnto new obedience. So when we see Gods Iudgements vpon others, we are to take warning by their example, and communicate with the faithfull in their sorrowes, bearing a part of their griefe; and magnifying Gods Iustice, which hath found out the wicked to inflict vpon them deserued punishments.

More especially, there is required in this Commandement, that wee glorifie and sanctifie Gods name by our oathes and vowes. First, by our oathes, vnto which is required, first, that we honour Gods name, in swearing by it vpon a iust and necessary occasion, acknowledging thereby Gods infinite wisdom, from which nothing can ly hid; his Truth, which abhorreth all lies and falsehoods; his Iustice, which when he is called to be a witnesse and Iudge, will neither suffer truth and innocency to goe unrewarded, nor vntruth and guiltinesse unpunished without respect of persons. Secondly, that we swear only by the name of God, either directly or indirectly, and by no creature in heauen or earth. Thirdly, that wee swear after a lawfull manner, vnto which is required that we swear in truth, that is, to that which is true, and truly, according to the perswasion of our mindes; In righteousnesse, binding our selues thereby only vnto things lawfull; and in iudgement, whereby we discern the necessitie of it, in regard that we can no otherwise cleare the truth, nor be beleued in a matter of importance, which much respecteth Gods glory, or our owne or neighbours good. And so come to the performance of this high and holy action with all reuerence as in Gods presence, duly weighing and considering the conditions and circumstances of our oath, according to the Scriptures. Lastly, that we sweare vnto a right end, namely, to the glory of God, by reuealing and ratifying a necessary and vnkowne truth, which could no otherwise bee made manifest; and to the good of our neighbours and our selues; that they may be satisfied, all controuersies and strifes ended, all doubts and suspicions remoued, and our owne truth and innocency declared and cleared.

The second speciall thing here required, is lawfull vowes, whereby we cheerefully promise vnto God some thing which may be acceptable vnto him, either because we haue already found him gracious and good vnto vs, which moueth vs to doe this duty out of loue and thankfulnessse, or because we expect his mercy and goodnesse for some benefit to be receiued, or punishment to be auoided or remoued, out of our faith and hope grounded vpon Gods promises. Vnto which vowes, that they may bee lawfull and acceptable vnto God, there are two things required, namely, that we make them lawfully, and truly to performe them. Vnto the making of a lawfull vowe is required, First, that it be performed as a religious act to God and none other. Secondly, that it bee done after a religious and holy manner. 1. In truth, with a sincere and cheerefull heart. 2. In righteousnessse, vnto which is required, in respect of the person, that hee haue power in himselfe to vow that thing, or haue the consent of his gouernours. Secondly, that the thing vowed, be lawfull and acceptable vnto God, as being good and commanded, or of an indifferent nature, but in respect of vs, good and profitable, and therefore to be vsed, or hurtfull and inconuenient and therefore to be auoided. Thirdly, that we vowe in iudgement, whereby we discern that our vowe is in the former respects lawfull, and very profitable either for the aduancing of Gods glory or our owne good. The last thing required, is, that we make it to a right end, as namely, to the glory of God, the good of our neighbours, and our owne benefit; for the exercising of our temperance and sobriety, or the renewing and furthering of our repentance, or for the strengthening of our faith, and our good purposes and resolutions about the performance of good duties. In respect of performance of our vowes, there is required, that it be done at the time appointed, and without delay, and also without any diminution or abatement in quantity or quality of that which we haue vowed. Especially our care must bee of performing our common vowe in baptisme, in renouncing all our spirituall enemies, and in consecrating our selues wholly vnto Gods seruice, in performing vnto him the duties of holinesse, righteousnessse, and sobriety all the daies of our liues.

In the fourth Commandement, the Lord appointeth a speciall time, wherein all the former duties both publike and priuate, are principally to be performed, which whosoeuer doe neglect, they manifestly shew that they are destitute of the power of all true Religion. The maine duty required, is, that wee remember to sanctifie the Sabbath: In which two things things are to be considered: 1. that we must sanctifie the Sabbath: 2. that we must remember to doe it, that is, be mindfull and carefull to sanctify it. To the sanctification of the Sabbath two things are required: First, the rest. Secondly, the sanctifying of it. The rest consisteth partly in an outward rest from bodily labours and worldly affaires, and in our inward resting from the seruile workes of sinne. The workes from which wee must rest, are bodily labours, and all worldly imployments, so farre forth as they are distractions and hinderances to the spirituall Sanctification of the Sabbath; As buying and selling, all manner of workes of our ordinary callings, traouailing, feasting of friends with meates not easily cooked, and such like. For all kinds of bodily labours on the Lords day are vnlawfull, except they be referred to the sanctification of the Sabbath, as the meanes of it, of which sort are the labours of the Minister in the duties appertaining to his ministry; and of the people traouailing to the places of Gods worship. Or secondly, the workes of mercy, which are duties of the Sabbath, as giuing of almes, visiting the sicke and prisoners, healing diseases and sores, by applying fit medicines and salues. Or lastly, workes of necessity, which are of importance, and cannot, without great inconuenience, be done afterwards, nor could haue beene done before. For as for that necessity, which ariseth from our negligence and carelesse oversight, it is sinfull, and in the first word of this Commandement forbidden and condemned. And among these workes of necessity, we are to reckon labour in prouiding conuenient foode for our bodies, tending of cattell, when it is done rather in mercy, which respecteth their necessity, then for our owne gaine: Labours of Mariners begun before the Sabbath in their Nauigation at Sea: Fight in a lawfull warre against our enemies; labours of seruants and subiects imposed vpon them by their gouernours as necessary, and not apparently discerned by them to be otherwise. The inward and spirituall rest, is our resting from sinne, as at all times, so especially on the Sabbath. For these workes of darkenesse, are about all other most seruile and slauish, seeing thereby we make our selues the vassals of Satan.

And this is the rest required on the Sabbath; the sanctification of this rest is either by vsing the meanes, or doing the workes of sanctification. And this is done both publikely and priuately; publikely, by vsing the publike meanes of sanctification in the seruice of God. And this is done, First, of the Ministers, by publike praying in the congregation, preaching and reading the Word, and administration of the Sacraments. Secondly, the people, by frequenting the assemblies in the beginning, and continuing to the end of diuine seruice; and being there, by carrying and behauing themselves religiously, diligently & vprightly, in calling vpon Gods name, hearing the Word, and in the right vse of the Sacraments. The publike workes of sanctification, are almesdeeds and collections for the poore. Priuately the Sabbath is sanctified, by our preparation to Gods publike seruice, which chiefly consisteth in meditation and prayer; and after the publike seruice, by meditating on the Word heard, and applying it to our owne vse, and by holy conferences with others. Vnto which duties, respecting the publike worship, we are to adde and vse these other meanes meanes of sanctifying the remainder of the Lords day; Reading of the Scriptures or other religious & holy writings; meditation on Gods Word and workes, especially of creation, preservation and redemption; Innovation by prayer; thanksgiving and singing of Psalmes: and finally, godly conferences vpon some fit subject, which best sorteth to the present occasion, and tendeth to the vse of edification: vnto which meanes we must adde the private workes of sanctification, which are the workes of mercy, and appertaine chiefly either to the body, as the giuing of alms, visiting the sick and prisoners, curing diseases, &c. or else to the soule, as teaching the ignorant, reclaiming those who are seduced by error, admonishing those who faile of their duty by frailty and infirmity, rebuking the scandalous and wilfull offender, exhorting the backward and sluggish, comforting the distressed, counselling them for the good of their soules that neede counsaile, and reconciling those whom we know to be at variance. But we must not only sanctify the Sabbath, but also as a speciall helpe and meanes hereof, we must remember to doe it, that is, vse all providence and care, deuotion and diligence about these duties of sanctification. Before the Sabbath we must so forecast our businesse, and dispose of all our worldly affaires, that wee be not distracted in performing of holy duties, by hauing our mindes, tongues or actions exercized and taken vp by them. And on the Sabbath we must remember to sanctifie it, by hauing our whole man taken vp in the seruice of God, both publikely and privately, and by performing the duties required with all diligence and attention, sincerity and vprightnesse, cheerefulnesse and delight.

CAP. IX.

Of the summe of the second Table.

WE haue spoken of the duties of piety contained in the first Table. And now wee are to intreat of the duties of righteousness, and sobriety required in the second: vnder righteousness, comprehending all duties which we owe to our neighbours; and vnder sobriety, all those which belong to our owne persons. By righteousness, we vnderstand a vertue or habit which ordereth the whole man to the good of our neighbours; as the minde and vnderstanding, to thinke; the memory, to remember; the wil to desire; the affections and passions, to couer and affect; the whole body, to act and performe all things which we know good and profitable both for their soules, bodies, name and state, for their temporal welfare and prosperity in this world, and their euertlasting happinesse in the world to come. The general rule of which righteousness is, that we doe all that, and that only, vnto others, which we would haue others doe vnto vs; and consequently, seeing we desire that our neighbours should with all the powers of their minde and body aduance, as much as in them lieth, our good in all things respecting our soules, bodies and states; Iustice and righteousness requireth the same at our hands towards them; namely, that to the uttermost of our power we be ever ready to doe all things which tend to their good, and to the preservation of their honour, person, life, purity, chastity, wealth and good name, not so much as intertaining a thought, or first motion in our mind, or hearts, which in any of these or other respects may tend to their hurt and prejudice. Of which Iustice or righteousness there are two parts, the one distributive, whereby we doe giue vnto every one their due, and due which of right appertaineth vnto them; in which is to be obserued a geometricall proportion, which hath respect in this distribution vnto every man according to their place, person and such other relations and circumstances, and is in all things carried with due regard of equity and moderation. The other is commutative, which is vsually exercised in commerce and mutuall dealings and trading one with another, as in changing, borrowing, lending, buying, selling, letting, setting, and such like affaires of this life; The generall rule whereof is, that we keepe from no man his right, but pay every man his debt and due. In which is to be obserued an Arithmetical proportion, performing all these duties of Iustice in a strict equality, without any respect of place or person.

The other maine duty is sobriety, which comprehendeth vnder it all duties which respect our owne persons; the which in a generall sense, as it is to be here vnderstood, signifieth soundnesse of minde, which ordereth all things to the good and safety of our persons and state. And thus the word, which is translated sobriety, is taken in the Scriptures for a sound minde, so it is said, that the demoniacke was by our Sauour Christ restored to his right minde. And the Apostle saith, that he was not mad, but spake forth the words of truth and sobernesse, that is, of a right and sound minde, which tended to the safety and saluation of himselfe and others; and exhorteth all men to be wise vnto sobriety, or to thinke soberly, not straining their wits about the measure of their gifts, which is the next way to cracke and lose them. And thus elsewhere hee opposeth these two, the one against the other, to be sober, and to be besides our selues. Sobriety therefore is a vertue or habit proceeding from a sound minde, spirituall wisdom and iudgement, whereby wee are enabled to rule and order our selues, with all our powers and faculties of minde and body, and all things else about which they are exercised to our good, safety and saluation. First, it ruleth and ordereth the minde to the vsing of all good means, whereby it may be more and more inlightened with saving knowledge; the memory, as a faithfull register to retaine good things; the conscience, to performe its office rightly in excusing and accusing; the will, to chuse the good, and refuse the euill, and in all things to be conformable to the holy will of God; the affections, to couer after spirituall and heavenly things with vnlimited desires, and temporall good things with moderation, temperance and purity; and the body in all holinesse and temperance, that it may be a fit temple for the holy Ghost, and a ready instrument vnto the soule for all good actions. And thus it ruleth the whole man and every faculty and part of him, as they are exercised about their seuerall and particular objects, causing the minde to approue or condemne; the memory to retaine or cast out; the conscience to accuse or excuse; the will to chuse or reiect; the affections, to loue and desire, or to hate and contemne;

the body, to doe, or leaue vndone all things good or euill, when they are propounded vnto them. And in respect of these seuerall sorts of objects, this vertue of sobriety hath place; and is commanded in euery precept of the second Table. For as it ruleth and ordereth vs about the preservation of our honour and authority, it is required in the first Commandement; as about the good, preservation and saluation of our liues, our soules and bodies, in the sixth; as about our chastity, purity, temperance, and sobriety in the vse of meates, drinckes, and apparrell, in the seuenth; as about our goods and possessions, either in getting or vsing them righteously and iustly, in the eighth; as about the preserving of our good name, in the ninth; as about withstanding the first motions and suggestions vnto sinne, and the recouering of originall righteousnesse, and holy concupiscence in our mindes and hearts, in the tenth and last.

But seeing our Sauour hath comprized both these duties of righteousnesse and sobriety vnder charity, and hath made loue the whole summe of the Law, our loue towards God, of the first Table, and our loue towards our selues and our neighbours, of the second Table: I will consider of them both vnder this one, first generally, and afterward more specially in euery seuerall Commandement. For charity and true loue towards our selues, mooueth vs out of a sound and right minde, to performe, in thought, word, and deed, all good duties which tend to our safetie and saluation; and charity towards our neighbours, as it mooueth vs to loue them as our selues, so to performe all duties of righteousnesse and mercy, which we doe vnto our selues, or would haue others doe vnto vs. Now this charity is a gift or grace of God, infused into our hearts by his holy Spirit, which out of the sense of Gods loue towards vs in Christ, working true and feruent loue towards them againe, doth mooue vs to loue our selues, and all men as our selues, and as Christ hath loued vs for Gods sake, and in obedience to his Commandement. It is a gift of God, and no naturall habit; for naturally, as wee are haters of God and men, so euen of our selues, neither is any hatred of an enemy so hurtfull and pernicious vnto our soules and bodies, as carnall selfe-loue, which is a chiefe cause and meanes of depriving vs heere of all grace, and of glory and happinesse in the life to come. And therefore the Apostle exhorting vs to loue one another, telleth vs where we must haue this gift; Let vs (saith he) loue one another, for loue is of God. Neither is it a common gift of God, but a sanctifying and saving grace of his holy Spirit: for as the loue of God towards vs, as the cause, so our loue towards God, as the effect of it, is shed abroad in our hearts by the holy Ghost, as the Apostle testifieth.

The meanes and manner of working this grace in vs, is, first by perswading vs that God in Christ loueth vs, and will giue vnto vs the remission of our sinnes, his grace heere, and glory heereafter: with the lively heate of which loue, our hearts are inflamed with feruent loue towards God againe, from which springeth an holy affection towards our selues, who are thus beloued of God, members of Christ, and Temples of the holy Ghost, whereby we seeke the fruition of our chiefe goodnesse, and consequently of our owne saluation and eternall happinesse, which whilest we were destitute of the loue of God, and were poysoned with hatred of God and carnall selfe-loue, we neglected and contemned: And from hence also miseth the like affection towards our neighbours, whom wee loue for Gods sake, not onely as Gods creatures, and bearing his image, but also in obedience vnto his Commandement. So that it is impossible to loue either our selues or our neighbours as wee ought, and for our owne and their good, vnlesse wee loue God in Christ Iesus first and chiefly, from whose sincere loue the other springeth and floweth. But when we sincerely loue God, and so yeeld our obedience vnto the first Table, our loue towards our selues and our neighbours, which is the summe of the second Table, will necessarily and inseparably follow. For as our loue towards God is exercized immediately in religious vertues and holy duties of piety vvhich wee performe in his seruice, so mediately by performing (in obedience to his Commandements) the duties of a true and Christian loue towards our selues and our neighbours. For when our little goodnesse, bounded in narrow limits, will not reach vnto God for the manifestation of our loue towards him, wee extend it as farre as wee are able, and doe what good we can, out of a holy and sanctified affection to our selues and our neighbours, to shew our loue towards God, in yeelding obedience vnto his Commandements. As we see in the example of Dauid, who being rauished with the apprehension of Gods loue, and desiring to shew his loue towards him againe, could no otherwise doe it, then by taking the cup of saluation, and praising the name of the Lord, and by causing his goodnesse to extend to Gods poore Saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, which, in respect of its smalnesse, and Gods all-sufficiency, could in no sort reach vnto him. Where, by the way we may note, that if wee loue our selues and our neighbours out of our loue towards God, and in obedience vnto his Commandements, performing these duties of the second Table, in and for him; then doe wee, when wee doe most good to our neighbours and our selues, shew most loue towards God, and performe vnto him such acceptable seruice as he requireth of vs, and will richly reward in this life and the life to come. For he hath sworne, that all those whom he hath redeemed, shall serue him as well in righteousness as in holinesse all the dayes of their lines. And his grace appearing, hath taught vs to deny not onely all ungodlinesse, but also all worldly lusts, and to live as well soberly and righteously, as godly and religiously, in this present world.

But let vs come to speake of this dutie of charity, as in our Sauiour Christs words it is propounded vnto vs out of the Law of God; Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Wherein we are to consider two things: the dutie commanded, and the manner of doing it; In the duty, wee are to consider the act of louing, and the obiekt of our loue, which is our neighbours and our selues, the first plainly expessed, the other necessarily implied in the manner, when as we are commanded to loue them as we loue our selues. The duty of loue containeth in it, First, an affection or motion of the heart, wherewith we are affected and inclined towards that we loue. Secondly, an earnest and longing desire that we may inioy it, by being (as it were) vnited vnto it. Thirdly, ioy and delight in the fruition of it, and a contentation, whereby we rest according to the measure of our loue and fruition, satisfied with it. The properties of it are principally two; the first, that it be sincere and vnfeined. So the Apostle requireth that our loue be without dissimulation, and vnfeined; and the Apostle Iohn dissuadeth vs fro n lip loue, which is onely in profession, but fruitlesse and ineffectuall in action: Little children (saith he) let vs not loue in word, neither in tongue; but in deed and in truth. The other, that it be seruient and effectuall, according to that of the Apostle, Above all things, haue seruient charity among your selues. And this is that sincere and seruient loue, which is so much and often commended and commanded in the Scriptures. So our Sauour Christ; This is my commandement, that ye loue one another, as I haue loued you. And againe, A new commandment I giue vnto you, that yee loue one another; as I haue loued you, that yee also loue one another. The Apostle likewise, Walke in loue; as Christ also hath loued vs; and hath given himselfe for vs, &c.

The obiect of this loue plainly expressed, is our neighbours, whereby we are not with the Pharises to vnderstand our friends onely, nor, according to the vulgar vse of the word, those that dwell neere vnto vs alone, but all men, without exception, who are of the same nature with vs, consisting of a reasonable soule and body, whether they bee strangers or acquaintance, friends or enemies vnto vs. For all men are of the same flesh, and created according to the same Image of God, and also our brethren, as they haue all alike descended from the same first parents. And this is implied in the Law, where that Commandement, which is given for the helping of our enemies Oxe or Asse, being repeated in another place, is rendered thy brothers Oxe or Asse. And the Prophet Esay maketh it a worke of mercy to couer the naked, without any exception of stranger or enemy, because hee is of our owne flesh. But our Sauour plainly presseth this duty both by precept; But I say vnto you, loue your enemies, bless them that curse you, doe good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully vse you and persecute you; propounding the example of God himselfe for our imitation; that you may bee the children of your Father which is in heauen, for hee maketh his Sunne to rise on the euill and the good, and sendeth rayne on the iust and on the iniust. And also by his Parable of the man which fell among theeues, who being a Iew, was relieued by a Samaritane, though an enemy to that nation, and therefore approoued as a neighbour vnto him. All men therefore being our neighbours, they are all, in respect of their persons, to bee loued of vs, with such loue, in respect of the qualitie, as is sincere, vnfeined, and seruient; even as wee loue our selues, although in respect of the quantitie, wee may and ought in our loue to obserue diuers degrees. For seeing wee loue others, in, and for God, therefore wee must loue those aboue others which are of the household of faith, and our kindred in the Spirit; brethren of the same heauenly Father, and fellow members of the same body, in whom the Image of God most brightly shineth; so the whole Church and Common-wealth, more then a priuate man, and among priuate men, our parents, children, kindred, familiar friends, and benefactors, more then strangers or ordinary men.

Leuit. 19. 17.

The manner of our loue towards our neighbours is, that we loue them as our selues. In which, the loue of our owne persons is necessarily implied; for if the loue of our selues be the rule of our loue towards our neighbours, then must our charity begin at home, and from it, as from the fountaine, the streames of brotherly loue must spring and flow. And howsoever we haue in the Scriptures no direct precept, inioyning vs to loue our selues, yet it is necessarily implied. First, when we are commanded to loue God; for seeing loue vniterh vs vnto him, who is the chiefe Good and fountaine of all happinesse, we chiefly loue our selues in louing him, in whose fruition consisteth all blessednesse and felicity. Secondly, in all those Commandements which require of vs that we seeke our owne good and preservation, both in respect of our soules, bodies, and states, temporall and eternall, both by auoyding all sinne which would hurt vs, as selfe-murther, vncleannesse, prodigality, exposing of our fame and good name to slanders and imputations, and by imbracing all vertues, and practising all good duties which may further our euertlasting saluation. Besides, where our Sauour saith, that whoſoever loueth his owne life better then himſelfe, is not worthy of him, he implyeth that wee ought to loue our selues, but with such a loue as is subordinate to the loue of him, who hath loued vs better then his owne life. And the Apostle, in pressing a mans loue towards his wife, which ought to exceed all other naturall loue, because of that neere vniion betweene them whereby they become one flesh, vsith this as a reason, that no man euer hated his owne flesh; implying thereby, that seeing man and wife are both one, therefore we should loue our wiues as our selues, and consequently our selues first, according to which rule we are to loue them.

But seeing our naturall loue of our selues is carnall and earthly, plunging vs head-long into sinne and death, and is no better then true hatred, in respect of those miserable effects and fruits which it produceth both to our soules and bodies, therefore this carnall loue ought not to be our rule in louing our neighbours, (although in truth wee can loue them with no other, whilst this loue ruleth and swayeth in vs) but first this loue must be mortified in vs; and in stead thereof our hearts must be replenished with a iust and holy loue, whereby we loue our selues in and for God, for the aduancing of our temporall and spirituall good, and the eternall saluation of our soules and bodies, in the fruition of him whom wee chiefly loue, and with him, of euertlasting ioy and happinesse. And when wee thus truly loue our selues, according to this rule wee must loue our brethren. So that when we are commanded to loue our neighbours as our selues, it is not required that we should so loue them, as we loue our selues in the state of corruption, with a carnall and earthly loue, which would draw them together with vs into eternall death and destruction, and is therefore to be esteemed no better then hatred; but as wee ought to loue our selues in the state of regeneration, with a right, lawfull, and holy loue, which is alwayes subordinate to the loue of God, and louing him first and chiefly, doth cause vs to loue them, in and for him, and not in such respects as are carnall and sinfull. In which regard, as we are bound to loue all men, euen our enemies; yea the most wicked in the world, in respect of

of their persons, which are Gods workmanship: so, not our dearest friends, in respect of their vices, or their vices together with them; seeing our loue must be subordinate to the loue of God, and for his sake: and as we loue their persons which he also loueth, so must wee hate their sinnes and corruptions, euen as wee ought also to hate our owne, because he hateth and abhorreth them. And wee must loue our selues and them according to Godswill, and not contrary vnto it; so farre forth as it may stand with Gods loue, and not when there is any opposition betweene them. And thus Dauid, who mourned for his enemies, because they kept not Gods Law, and prayed for them, in respect of their persons, yet hated them, in respect of their sinnes, which were hatefull to God, as he often professeth.

*Pf. 119. 136, 137.
Psal. 119. 113.
Psal. 139. 21, 22.*

Now the lawfull and right loue of our selues hath diuers properties; for first it is vnfeined, and not counterfeited and dissembled; and seated and settled in the heart, and not in the tongue and lips onely. Secondly, it is seruient and effectuell, and not cold, remisse, and carelesse. Thirdly, constant and permanent; and not fickle and mutable, alienated and estranged by frailties and infirmities. And such ought our loue to be towards our neighbours, sincere and vnfeined, seruient and effectuell, seeking by all meanes their good, not onely in word, but in deede and action, doing that vnto them, which we would haue them do vnto vs; and finally, we must loue them with a constant loue, and not alienate our affections from them, in regard of their frailties and imperfections. And thus wee are to loue our neighbours, either with a common and naturall loue sanctified by Gods Spirit, or with a special and spirituall loue. In respect of the former, as euery man out of a naturall loue doth seek his owne good, the preservation of his life, the welfare and health of his body, the chastity of himselfe and his wife, the prosperity of his estate, and his owne credit and good name; so ought we with like loue to seeke by all meanes the good and preservation of our neighbours, in euery of these, and all other respects. The speciall and spirituall loue, whereby a man loueth himselfe, causeth him chiefly to seeke the enriching of his soule with all sanctifying grace, and to further by all meanes his everlasting saluation; and with such loue also we must loue our neighbours; doing them all the good we can, both in respect of their bodies and states, but principally in seeking their spirituall good, and the eternall saluation of their bodies and soules.

Mat. 7. 12.

But because our loue of our selues, by reason of our naturall corruption, is, whilst we continue in this life, weake and imperfect, and therefore no fit rule for our loue towards our neighbours, to be squared by; therefore our Saviour hath propounded vnto vs, a much more perfect patterne for our imitation, euen that most admirable and diuine loue wherewith hee hath loued vs: This is my Commandment, that ye loue one another, as I haue loued you. As therefore Christ hath loued vs first, before we loued him, or any waies deserued his loue, and hereby moued vs to loue him againe, so ought wee to preuent one another with our loue, and thereby prouoke them to returne vnto vs the like durie. Secondly, as Christ loued all his elect, freely without any respect of merit, yea when we were strangers, sinners and enemies, not because of any goodnesse in vs, but that by his

Loue he might bring vs to good; so ought our loue to be free, and not mercenary, so farre forth as it may redound to our owne profit; but we must loue strangers, that thereby we may make them our familiar acquaintance; Our enemies, that we may make them our friends; and even those that are now euill and sinners, that we may bring them to grace and goodnesse. Thirdly, as Christ loued all the elect, without respect of persons, both old and young, rich and poore, base and noble, wise and simple; so ought we to loue all sorts and conditions of men, in whom we finde already, or may hope to finde hereafter, the signes and markes of Gods election. Fourthly, as Christ loued vs perfectly, in respect of the manner, with a sincere and ardent loue, and not in tongue and profession onely, but in deed and truth; so as no waters of affliction, nor death it selfe could drowne or dampe; so ought we strue to loue one another, and to be ready according to his example, when iust occasion is offered, to seale and approoue our loue towards them; euen with the shedding of our blood. Fifthly, as Christ loued vs, who were in him elected of his Father, in a speciall and peculiar manner aboue all others, and out of this loue hath giuen himselfe for vs, according to that of the Apostle, Who hath loued me, and giuen himselfe for mee: so ought we to loue all with a generall and common loue, but Gods elect with a peculiar and speciall loue aboue the rest, and be ready, as the Apostle speaketh, to doe good vnto all, but especially vnto those who are of the household of faith. Lastly, as Christ loueth vs with a constant loue, and to the end, and will not reiect vs for our frailties and infirmities, because in his loue he respecteth not his owne profit, but our saluation: So ought our loue to be constant towards our neighbours, and not to languish and faint vpon slight occasions, respecting herein not our owne profit, but their benefit, and aboue all, the euerlasting saluation of their bodies and soules.

CAP. X.

Of the reasons which may moue vs to imbrace charity.

§. Sect. 1.
Of the excellency of charity.

Mat. 22. 39.

Rom. 13. 8.

And thus haue I shewed what is that charity both towards our selues and our neighbours, which is required in the second Table: In the next place I will set downe some reasons which may moue vs to imbrace it, all which will reduce vnto these their heads, the excellency, vtility, and necessity of it. The excellency of this charity herein appeareth, in that our Sauour Christ maketh it the summe of all other duties and vertues required in the second Table; so that if we haue charity, we haue all morall vertues; if that be wanting, we are destitute of them all. Yea, the Apostles, not without the direction of his holy Spirit, doe seeme to goe further, making this charity the epitome and summe of the whole Law; He that loueth another (saith Paul) hath fulfilled the Law. If ye fulfill the royall Law (saith Iames) according to the Scripture, thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe, ye doe well. Where either by a Synecdoche of the whole for the part, we are, as some doe, to vnderstand the second Table onely, or because true obedience to

it,

it, doth necessarily inferre our obedience to the first, in that it is an inseparable fruit and vndoubted signe of it, it may not vnsistly comprehend our totall obedience to the whole Law. Secondly, in that the Apostle preferreth it before those chiefe and fundamentall vertues, Faith and Hope, and that both, because if we consider them meereley in themselves, it is of a more excellent nature, and also in respect of the extent, both of latitude and time; for whereas they respect our selues only and our owne saluation, this extendeth to the good and saluation of many others: and whereas they continue onely for this life, charity attaineth to its greatest perfection in the life to come, and shall euer remaine as a principall part of our euertlasting ioyes. And thus also the Apostle Peter commendeth charity vnto vs aboute all other duties; Above all things (saith he) haue seruent charity among your selues, for charity shall couer the multitude of sinnes. Finally, the Apostle sheweth the excellencie of charity, whereas hee exhorteth vs aboute all things to put on Charity, as being the bond of perfectnesse, or the most perfect bond, seeing wee are thereby vnited vnto Christ our Head, and as fellow-members one with another. For howsoeuer we are thus vnited first and principally by the Spirit of God and a lively faith, yet this bond of vnion is perfected and made more firme and strong, by this grace of charity, which transforming and changing vs into the very nature of the things beloued, doth cause vs to become one with them, and so inseparably vnited, that nothing in the world, no not death it selfe, is of sufficient force to pull vs asunder.

Secondly, charity is to be imbraced of vs as the most profitable vertue, both to others and our selues. To others, because it maketh vs willing and ready to performe all Christian duties of holinesse and righteounesse, which we desire of others to be done vnto vs; for it suffereth with all patience and long-suffering all wrongs and iniuries, and seeketh to gaine them who are thus iniurious, by all duties of loue. It is so kind, that being provoked, it seeketh not reuenge, but laboureth to overcome euill with goodnesse. It enuieth not the prosperity of those that are aboute vs, but causeth vs to reioyce with them in all their happinesse. It is not puffed up with pride, nor vaunteth it selfe aboute those who are inferiour vnto vs, either in vertues, or in those rewards, with which God in this life crowneth them. It doth not behaue it selfe vnseemely, but obserueth a iust decorum, and a modest and sober course in all conditions. It seeketh not her owne, but ioyntly aduanceth our neighbours good, in many things departing from her owne right, when greater benefit may redound to others; it is not easily provoked to vnjust anger, but beareth with many faults for their better reformation, in consideration of humane frailty and infirmity. It thinketh no euill, nor intendeth hurt vnto any, neither is it suspitious to take any thing in the worst part, which may admit of a more fauourable interpretation. It reioyceth not in iniquity, nor sporteth it selfe in other mens falls and infirmities, but rather in the sense of humane frailty, it lamenteth their sinnes, and desireth their repentance and reformation, that they may bee saved. And contrariwise it reioyceth, when as they approoue their profession of truth in their practice of righteounesse. It beareth all things with meekenesse and patience, and reuengeth not iniuries, but leaueth vengeance to God, vnto

of charity.

And as it is profitable to all others; so most of all vnto our selues. For it replenisheth our hearts with all sound ioy and true comfort, as it is an infallible signe of all good in vs, and belonging vnto vs, of all grace in this life, and glory and happinesse in the life to come. For hereby wee are assured that God loueth vs, and hath sent his holy Spirit to dwell in vs: If we loue one another (saith the Apostle) God dwelleth in vs, and his loue is perfect in vs. Hereby we know that we dwell in him, and hee in vs, because he hath giuen vs of his Spirit. It is an vndoubted signe, which assureth vs of our regeneration and new-birth. Let vs loue one another: for loue is of God: and every one that loueth, is borne of God. Of our illumination by the Spirit, and of sauing knowledge: for every one that loueth, is borne of God, and knoweth God, as it followeth in the same place. And againe; He that loueth his brother, abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling in him. It assureth vs of faith; for faith worketh by loue, as the Apostle speaketh; and that by it we are truly iustified before God: for if we bee so charitable, as to forgiue men their trespasses, then hath the Lord promised that he will forgiue vs our trespasses. So also it is an infallible note of our adoption; for in this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the diuell: whosoever doth not righteousness, is not of God, neither he that loueth not his brother; and assureth vs that we are the true Disciples of Iesus Christ, if in this we follow his example, and doe his will. For this is his Commandement, that we loue one another, as he hath loved vs. And by this shall all men know that we are his Disciples, if we haue loue one to another. It is an vndoubted signe of all other graces dwelling in vs, and principally of our loue of God; for every one who loueth him that begate, loueth him also that is begotten of him. And if any man say, I loue God, and hateth his brother, he is a lyer: for he that loueth not his brother whom hee hath seene, how can he loue God whom hee hath not seene? And of the truth of our Religion; for if wee loue not onely in word and tongue, but in deede and truth, we may hereby know that we are of the truth, and shall assure our hearts before God. It expelleth all seruile feare, and bringeth peace of conscience; for there is no feare in loue, but perfect loue casteth out feare. Yea it is a notable meanes also of outward peace with men, whilst it beareth with infirmities, passeth by offences, and couereth a multitude of sinnes. Finally, it assureth vs of euerlasting happinesse: for we know that we haue passed from death to life, because we loue the brethren.

Lastly, the necessity of charity may moue vs to imbrace it. For without charity humane society cannot subsist and stand, seeing it is the maine bond whereby they are combined and knit together. Neither is it alone a chiefe chiefe motive to make men entertaine mutuall fellowship and entercourse one with another, but also a principall meanes to make them to continue with delight and comfort in this society. For charity covereth a multitude of sinnes, and causeth vs to passe by many frailties and infirmities, and either not to see and take notice of them, or by extenuating and excusing them, to make them pardonable and easie to bee digested. Whereas if charity be wanting, there will easily creep in calumnies, suspitions, sinister interpretations, injuries both offered and received, deadly hatreds, and implacable contentions; for as the Wiseman saith, Harred friendship is strife, from whence must needs follow diuisions, and vnderbreking up of all society. For if we cannot walk together, unless we ship together (as the Prophet speaketh) with what bond can innumerable multitudes be knit together, if charity be wanting, and instead thereof, heartburnings and contentions be admitted? And as without charity there can bee no communion betwene man and man, so neither betwene man and God, which principally consisteth in fruition, and fruition in loue; seeing we cannot loue God, unless we also loue one another, as the Apostle telleth vs. We cannot without it haue any assurance that we belong to God, or that we are his children by adoption and grace; yea rather we may conclude that we are the children of the deuill, seeing the Apostle hath made the haueing or not haueing of charity, a prime marke of difference; whereby they may bee discerned the one from the other. Again, all our other graces and gifts, though they make neuer so glorious a shew, yet if charity be wanting, are all of no valur. If we could speake with the tongues of men and Angels, and haue not charity, we should become as sounding brass, or a tinkling Cymball; if we had the gifts of Prophecie, and vnderstood all mysteries and all knowledge; yea if we had all faith (namely, of working miracles) and could remooue mountaines, and had not charity, we were nothing. And though we could bestow all our goods to feed the poore, and could giue our bodies to be burned, and had not charity, it would profite vs nothing. Furthermore, where there is no charity, there faith also is wanting, or in stead of it, a dead faith, which hath no operation; for faith must shew by works; and if we haue a liuing faith, the Apostle James telleth vs, that we may shew it by our works; among which, the workes of mercy and charity haue a chiefe place. Whereas if these be wanting, our faith is (as he compareth it) like a body without breath, and no better then a stinking carcasse in Gods estimate. Finally, charity is most necessary, if euer we meane to attaine to eternall saluation, or to escape hellish destruction; seeing the sentence of life or death shall at the day of Iudgement be pronounced; according to the workes of charity, either performed or neglected by vs, as being the chiefe outward euidences, whereby our inward grade of faith, apprehending Christ vnto saluation, may, to the iustifying of Gods righteous Iudgements, be vnto all demonstrated and declared.

CAP. XL

Containing in it the duties which are required in the fifth Commandement.

§. Sect. 1.
Of the general
duties required
in the fifth
ment.

WE have more largely intreated of charity, righteousness, and sobriety, as those generall vertues and duties, which comprize in them the whole summe of the second Table, because wee would more briefly touch the particular duties which vnder them are contained, referring the Reader vnto such Catechismes and Common places of diuinity as handle them more fully and perfectly, especially to those exact Tables vpon the Commandements, lately published by the right reuerend, and my most honoured and deare brother, from whose full and living fountaine, I have in a great part deriued these streames: Not that I take any pleasure in doing that againe, which was much better done before, but because this Treatise of a godly life should haue bene maimed, if I had not in some manner handled the maine parts and principall duties required vnto it, and I could adde no more vnto that exact abstract in so short a discourse, then light vnto the Sunne, by setting vp a dimme shining candle, nor alter the method and manner of it, vnlesse I could haue bene content for varieties sake to haue made it worse, and to goe out of the right way, because I would not trauaile in the beaten path. The duties and vertues then required, and the vices and finnes forbidden in the second Table, are either peculiar to superiours and inferiours in the fifth Commandement, or common to all in the same other. The duties and vertues required in the fifth Commandement, are, either common to all superiours and inferiours, or peculiar to the diuers sorts of them. The generall duties belonging to all superiours, are first to approoue themselves worthy of honour, both in respect of their own vertues and good parts, & also in their carriage towards their inferiours, and as they desire the honour of parents, so to performe the duties which belong vnto them. Secondly, to behaue themselves moderately, modestly, and grauely towards their inferiours, and not with proud insolency and vaine lightnesse. Thirdly, to goe before them, according to knowledge, and to shine vnto them in a good example, and the light of a godly life. The duties common to all inferiours, are both inwardly to esteeme reuerently of them according to their place, acknowledging Gods Image in them, & honoring those gifts of excellency which he hath bestowed vpon them, and also outwardly to shew reuerence and respect of them both, in all signes of honour, as rising vp to them, putting off the hat, bowing the knee, going to meete them, giuing them precedence both in place and speech, and vsing vnto them words of reuerence and due respect, and also by our approouing of the inward reuerence of our hearts, and the outward reuerence shewed in these signes and complements, in truth and substance by all our actions, when we haue any occasion of performing this reall reuerence.

The speciall duties respect the diuers sorts of superiours and inferiours. For men are superiour vnto others, either in excellency onely, or in authority rity also and government. In excellency, as first, those who are indued with better gifts, whether inward or outward; Inward, as the gifts of the minde, to wit, vertue, wisdom, learning, arts, and sciences; whose duty is, that acknowledging them as talents lent vnto them by God, of which they must giue an account; they be not puffed vp in pride because they excell others, but rather bee the more humble, in respect of that straight reckoning which shall be required of them; and also, that with all care and good conscience they imploy these gifts principally to the glory of God that gaue them, and in the next place, to the good of their neighbours, and furthering of their owne saluation. The duties of inferiours, are first, to acknowledge their gifts, to the glory of God, and praying his bountie and goodnesse towards them. Secondly, to reuerence and respect the party indued with them, and to seeke to be profited by them, as our need requireth, and opportunity is offered. Superiours in outward gifts and place, are first the aged, whose duties are to bee in all their carriage and behauiour graue and sober, to counsell and instruct the yonger out of their greater wisdom and experience, and to bee examples and precedents vnto them of all good duties. And the duties of the yonger sort towards them, are to reuerence them inwardly and outwardly as fathers; to imitate their good example, and acknowledging their wisdom and better experience, to make vse of their counsell and instructions for their information and direction. Secondly, superiours in birth and place, as nobility and gentry; whose dutie is, that as they are Peeres of the Realme and pillars of the Common-wealth, so they aboue others seeke the good and flourishing estate of it, and bee as pillars of Marble, firme and strong, to vphold it with their strength, like those pillars, Iachin and Boaz, which Salomon built, and not through luxurie, prodigality, and all excesse, wasting their estates, and retayning onely their titles and honours, become like rotten posts, gilded and painted, which let the building fall when it leanes vpon them. Secondly, that they approoue themselues truly noble and generous, by being like the nobles of Berea, more forward in receiuing the Word, and imbracing true Religion, then ordinary men. Thirdly, that being placed like starres in this earthly firmament, they doe good to their inferiours, both by shining vnto them in the light of a good and holy example, and by those vitall influences of comfort, in the workes of protection, mercy, and Christian charity, vnto which, their greater meanes, high places and dignities doe inable them; and not like wandering Planets, which keepe no where any settled residence, and are so clouded with obscurity, that the poore know not where to finde them when they most need them.

 The duty of inferiours towards them is, that they giue vnto them that honour and respect which is due vnto their places; and not enuy vnto them their high dignities, knowing that promotion commeth neither from the East nor West, but from God onely wise, who pulleth downe one, and ferreth vp another, as it seemeth best to his godly wisdom.
 Thirdly, superiours in wealth and riches, whose duty is to vse them as great and notable instruments of doing good, both publicly in the Church and Common-wealth, and priuately to particular persons, as God

offereth vnto them occasion and opportunity; and not wastefully consume them on their owne lusts, nor niggardly hoord them vp, doing no good with them, either to themselves or others. The duty of inferiours, and the poorer sort towards them, is, that as God hath aduanced them aboue themselves in these temporall blessings, so in humility acknowledging their preferment, they giue vnto them that respect which their place and state requireth; and communicate vnto them the benefit of their labours, as the other vnto them the benefit of wages and rewards. Secondly, that they reuerence them, in respect of that ability with which God hath inabled them, to doe good publicly to Church and Commonwealth; and priuately vnto themselves and others. Lastly, among superiours in excellency, we are to number benefactors, whose duty is to giue their benefits cheerefully, without grudging and quarrellsome wrangling, which displeaseth more then the gift contenteth. Secondly, to giue freely, and not with sordid respect of greater aduantage. Thirdly, speedily, whilst there is power in their hands, and not after many delays. Fourthly, discreetly making choyce, either in respect of the parties worth, or at least, present necessity, and not rashly and carelessly, which is rather through neglect of the gift, then for loue of the party vpon whom it is bestowed. Lastly, hauing bestowed benefits, they must not boast of them to others, nor insult ouer the party to whom they haue done good, which were but to make their benefit as a golden chaine to bind them to slavery, nor finally to vpbraid them with what they haue done vpon euery slight occasion, which is no more pleasant to the party who hath fed of their fauours, then the distastefull vpbraidings which follow a surfet. The duties of inferiours towards their benefactors, are first, inward and hearty thankfulness, whereby they acknowledge them as Gods instruments in doing them good, and accordingly loue and respect them according to their desert. Secondly, they are not to vilifie the benefit, but highly to esteeme it, either for its worth, or their necessity and vse of it, or the minde and good will of the giuer. And outwardly also they are to testifie their thankfulness, both by word in thanksgiuing, praying their benefactor as opportunitie is offered, and magnifying the greatnesse of the benefit receiued; and also in deed, both by being alwayes ready to make requitall when God shall giue abilitie; and by supplying what is wanting in their power, by their seruent prayers for them vnto God, who is all-sufficient to recompence and reward their bountie towards them.

Superiours in authority are such, as haue not onely a place of excellency aboue vs, but also of power and iurisdiction as our gouernours. Whose duty in generall is to vse all good discipline, both in respect of rule and gouernement, and also due correction and punishment. They ought to gouerne them in the Lord as his deputies and in his stead, and therefore to doe the acts of iustice, as if God himselfe were present, or did but vse their bodies, tongues and parts to performe his owne will. In which respect their chiefe care must be, as to doe Iustice themselves, and administer righteous iudgement; so to containe their inferiours in the duties of piety and iustice, therein seeking not themselves or their owne gaine, by corrup-

corruption, bribery, extortion, or any kinde of wrong and oppression, but the glory of God chiefly, and next vnto it, the good of their societies, and of euery particular person vnder their government. In respect of correction and punishment, their duty is, to administer Iustice, according to the qualitie of their inferiours offence, wherein they are to vse discretion, rightly iudging both of the cause and the disposition of the offendour, and correcting lighter faults and infirmities, with rebukes and threatenings, and greater faults committed wilfully, with reall punishments, proceeding herein with wisdome, iudgement, loue and patience, seeking either the amendment of the parties if they bee corrigible, or of the societies in which they liue, by taking away sinne and euill, auerting Gods more searefull and generall iudgements, and causing others to feare, and so to auoide the like sinnes; and not out of passion, choller, and hatred of their persons. And secondly, they must vse herein equity and moderation, so mixing and tempering iustice with mercy, as that they bee in inflicting these corrections and punishments, neither indulgent and remisse, nor ouer-seuere and cruell. The duties of inferiours towards them, are to reuerence and stand in awe of them, standing in Gods place, and executing his iudgements, and not to contradict them or their government; to obey them in all things lawfull, and to submit themselves vnto their corrections, without resistance or murmuring; and to testifie their loue and thankfulness towards them, by their cheerefull seruice, and by communicating their goods vnto them, as their owne ability, and their necessity shall require.

The speciall duties of superiours in government and their inferiours, are to be distinguished according to their several sorts. For Gouvernours are either priuate in families, or publicke in the Church and Commonwealth. In families, as the husband, who is superiour in gouernement ouer his wife, parents ouer their children, and Masters and Mistresses ouer their seruants. The duties of man and wife are either common to both, or speciall belonging to either party. Common duties are first, coniugall loue, whereby being one flesh, they loue one another aboue all others, both in respect of their soules and bodies, temporall and spirituall good, and all that belong to either party, as kindred and friends. Secondly, communion and communication, first, of their bodies by mutuall beneuolence performed by one to the other; and coniugall fideliry, whereby either of them keepe themselves proper to the other, and preserue the marriage bond inuiolable; and finally, as a meanes of both the other, there is required cohabitation and dwelling together, vnlesse it bee for a time, and vpon necessary occasion. Secondly, communion of their goods, labours, indeuours and mutuall helpe for the good and comfort of one another. The peculiar duties of the husband are, to behaue himselfe as an head to the body; to carry himselfe in his place according to knowledge, gouerning, guiding and instructing his wife in all good duties; to protect her to the vttermost of his power against all euill and iniury; to beare with her infirmities, and to couer her weakenesses and frailties; to cherish her as the more tender part of himselfe; to prouide for her, according to his ability, all things needefull and comfortable; admitting her her to the ioynt fruition of all their goods, and finally, to rule her with a sweete and amiable gouernement, so as not onely her body, but also her will and heart may be subiect vnto him. The duties peculiar to the wife, are, to acknowledge her husband to be her head and gouernour, and accordingly, in her heart to reuerence and respect him, in her words to be dutifull, humble and pleasing, and in all her actions and behaiour, to bee meeke, submissiue and obedient, as vnto her Lord and head. To be amiable and gracious, indeuouring in all lawfull things to please him, and not to vsurpe dominion ouer him, or to vexe him, by being of an vnquiet and prouoking spirit. To cherish her husband as the better part of her selfe; and to minister vnto him all things necessary and comfortable; to keepe his secrets, and preferue his honour; to manage well, as becommeth a good huswife, all things committed to her charge, for the good of her husband and the whole familie, and to be a fit helper, and no lesse louing then carefull, assistant for the good of his body and soule, and for the well managing of their estate, and the wise gouernement of the whole family.

And these are the mutuall duties of man and wife betweene themselves. Besides which, there are diuers duties by them to be performed, as they are gouernours ouer the family; and those are either common to all the household, or else speciall, as they are parents ouer their children, or masters and mistresses ouer their seruants. The common duties are, First, to rule them in the Lord, keeping them in godly obedience: and Secondly, to provide for them. They are to be ruled both by instruction and discipline. By instruction, as by doctrine and example. By doctrine, respecting priuate catechizing, reading of the Scriptures, and religious writings, and the publike ministry, by causing them not onely to frequent it, but also by teaching them to vse it aright, both by preparation before they goe to heare, and examination afterwards. So likewise they must be no lesse carefull to teach them by example, both in their holy profession of Religion, and conscionable practice of all Christian duties; knowing that examples especially of gouernours, are no lesse powerfull then precepts, either to draw them to good, and withdraw them from euill, or contrariwise: vnto which instruction, discipline must be adioyned, both by rewarding those that deserue well, and correcting them that offend, either in words onely, as by reproofes and threatnings; or in deedes also, by blowes and stripes, to bee inflicted in wisdom, loue and moderation. Finally, as it is their duty to rule them; so also to provide for them all necessities, as foode, raiment, wages, rest and recreation.

The speciall duties of parents towards their children, are, that they loue them with parent-like affection, and take singular care of them; and both these, first, in regard of their naturall life, in which respect there is required, 1. that they nourish and bring them vp: 2. that they fit them for some honest calling according to their owne ability, and the disposition and gifts of their children: 3. that they gouerne and direct them in matters of moment, and chiefly in contracting marriage: and lastly, that they provide and lay vp for them, as God shall giue honest and lawfull

meanes, not wronging others, nor defrauding themselves of things necessary and comfortable. In respect of their spirituall life, their duty is, as they bring them into the covenant of grace, made not onely to them, but also to their seedes, so to procure for them the Sacrament of the covenant. Secondly, that they bring them vp in the feare of the Lord, both by instruction, example & discipline. Lastly, that they pray for them, and giue them their daily blessing. The duties of children towards their parents, are first, to be answerable to them in loue. Secondly, to reuerence them highly, though their state be neuer so meane, in and for the Lord.^a Thirdly, to stand in awe of them, and to haue respect to their very words and countenance. Fourthly, to obey them in all things lawfull and in the Lord.^f Fifthly, to shew themselves thankfull to their parents, by helping them, if neede require, with their goods or seruice. Sixthly, to hearken to their parents^b instructions, counsailes, admonitions and rebukes, and to beare with meekenesse and loue their chastizements andⁱ corrections. Seuenthly, to be contented and willing to bee ruled by their parents in matters of importance, as^k marriage. Eighthly, to preserue their parents goods, good name, and all that belongs vnto them. And finally, to loue and respect those who are neere and deare to their parents, for their sakes.

The duties of masters and mistresses towards their seruants, are, first, equity and moderation, both in their commandements, which ought to be lawfull, possible to them, profitable, proportionable to their abilities, and on the Sabbath necessary; and also in their gouernement, which ought to be mixed with loue, and sustaining the place of parents, to vse them as children, as brethren in Christ, and children of the same Father, and as fellow-seruants of the same heauenly Lord and Master. Secondly, they must vse towards them bounty, and liberally reward their well deserving, both by suffering them to thriue with them whilst they are in their seruice, by preferring and rewarding them when they depart vpon good tearmes and after a lawfull manner; and by esteeming them after they are departed, as their friends. The duties of seruants towards their gouernours are, First, that they loue them; and out of this loue, tender their credit and welfare, and beare all good affection to their children and friends. Secondly, that they reuerence, honour and feare them. Thirdly, that they^b submit themselves to their commandements, and obey them in all things in the Lord; and also to their^c corrections and chastizements. Fourthly, that they be diligent and painefull, not idle and slothfull. Fifthly, faithfull and true, doing their worke not with eye-seruice, but as well when their gouernours are absent as present. Sixthly, that they be quiet and patient, being reprov'd, and not stubborn, giuing one word for another. Seuenthly, that they bee secret, and not discover their masters secrets. Eighthly, that they bee thrifty, respecting in all things their masters profit, and not riotous and wastfull; And lastly, that they bee ready to please them in all things lawfull or indifferent.

And so much for the duties of superiours and inferiours in the family. Publike gouernours and their inferiours, are such as are in the Church or Common wealth. In the Church, superiours gouerning, are the

Ministers, and inferiours governed, are the people committed to their charge. For Ministers are the spirituall fathers of the people, being the ordinary meanes of begetting them, and of their regeneration and new birth, by the immortall seede of Gods Word; and the people are their children, begotten vnto God by their Ministry. The which should moue the Ministers to carry themselves towards their flocke, as it becommeth fathers, in all loue, care, vigilancie, diligence, in prouiding for the good of them by all meanes, especially the spirituall good of their soules, as they desire to haue the honour, reuerence, and respect, which is due to fathers; and the people to performe all duties of children towards their Ministers, louing, reuerencing, and obeying them in all things appertaining to the good of their soules, as they desire that they should receiue from them the priuiledges of children, and the benefit of their Ministry, for their regeneration and new birth. The speciall duties of Ministers respect either their Ministry, or their life and conuerfation, in both which, they are to goe before the people, both in doctrine and holy example. In regard of his Ministry, he is to preach the Word of God truly, sincerely, diligently, and powerfully, in season and out of season, respecting herein the performance of his owne duty to the glory of God, and the furtherance of his owne saluation, and the good of the people committed to his charge. In his life he ought to bee an example vnto his flocke. Vnto which is required generally, that his life be blamelesse, and more specially, that it be in respect of God, holy and religious, in respect of his neighbours, iust, charitable, meeke, courteous, and liberall; and in respect of himselfe, sober, temperate, chaste, and modest. The speciall duties of the people towards their Ministers, are first, that they loue them dearely. Secondly, that they haue them in high reuerence and esteeme for their workes sake. Thirdly, that they submit themselves to their Ministry, and obey them. Fourthly, that they allow them liberall maintenance.

In the Common-wealth politicall duties to bee performed, are either common to all the members of this body, which is, that they loue their country, and preferre in their iudgements, desires and indeuours the good of it, before the good of all others, or of themselves; or the speciall duties of superiours and inferiours, as the supreme Soueraigne and Magistrates, or subiects and people. The generall dutie of the former is, that as they desire the honour of parents, so to carry themselves in all things as fathers of their country and subiects. The speciall duty of Soueraigne Princes, is the good, lawfull, and commendable exercise of his soueraigne power, especially in making good Lawes, and seeing them duly executed; in creating and making good Magistrates of State, and containing them in their duty; in shewing mercy vnto those whom they may lawfully pardon, being obnoxious to the rigour of the Law, and Iustice towards those, who by the Lawes of God and the Common-wealth ought to die. In hearing of causes of great importance, which respect the good of the Common-wealth, and of particular persons, especially of high and last appeales; in waging warres, and concluding peace, so as they may be iust, profitable, and safe for their Countrey. In all which, hee is to aime chiefly chiefly at Gods glory, and the good of the Church and Common-wealth. Which duties that he may performe, he must be qualified and furnished with many excellent vertues; as ^a piety, religion, and the true feare of God; ^b iustice, ^c clemency, ^d bounty and liberality, ^e wisdom and learning, ^f fortitude and courage, ^g temperance and sobriety, ^h chastity, ⁱ modesty, and humility. The speciall duty of Magistrates is, that in executing of their office, they conscionably labour to aduance the glory of God, the honour of their Soueraigne, and the good of the whole Common-wealth, and of all the particular members of it. Vnto which these vertues are required in them, that they be men of ^k courage, fearing God, louers of iustice, haters of wrong and all euill, faithfull and true, free from couetousnesse, and haters of bribes and rewards, wise and prudent, iust and vnpartiall, hauing in iudgement no respect of any mans person. The speciall duties of subiects towards their Soueraigne, are first, a singular loue of them, approoued by their speciall care of their safety, by their high esteeme of them, and frequent and seruent prayers for them. Secondly, to honour and reuerence them as the supreme gouernours vnder Christ, ouer all persons, and in all causes. Thirdly, to be obedient and subiect vnto them in all things lawfull, and that in the Lord, and for conscience sake. Fourthly, to be seruiceable and helpfull vnto them, both with their bodies and states. The speciall duties of the people towards their Magistrates are, to loue and reuerence them as Gods deputies, to submit themselves to their lawfull Commandements and punishments, and finally to be thankfull vnto them, and ready with all chearefulnesse to allow vnto them such stipends and fees, as are due for their maintenance.

CAP. XII.

Of the duties required in the sixth Commandement.

IN the foure following Commandements are all those common vertues and duties required, which concerne all our neighbours in generall, and all the contrary vices and sinnes forbidden; all which concerne either their person and life, or the adiuncts belonging to them, as their chastity, goods and fame. Those vertues and vices which respect the person and life, are inioyned or forbidden in the sixth Commandement, in these words, Thou shalt not kill; which hath precedency before the other, because the person and life are of greater worth and excellency then the adiuncts that appertaine vnto them. The summe whereof is this, that wee in all our thoughts, words, and deedes, imbrace all vertues, and performe all duties which tend to the good of the person, and preseruacion of the life, both of our neighbours and our selues, and flee the contrary vices and sinnes, whether they be inward or outward. And these are either the rootes and fountaines from whence the rest doe spring and flow; as anger and hatred; or the fruits and streames which arise and issue from them. The first duty commanded, is iust anger against the sinnes of our neighbours and our selues; vnto which is required, that it arise from iust causes, and be directed to good ends, that it be in a lawfull manner and measure, and continue a fit and conuenient time. And heereunto are required as the meanes of it, patience, long-suffering, and mildnesse, goodnesse, slownesse to anger, and readinesse to forgiue. The contrary vice whereof is heere forbidden, of which I will not heere speake, hauing written largely of it in another place. The second vertue commanded, is an holy hatred of our owne and our neighbours sinnes, which is alwayes ioyned with the loue of the persons. Now the fruits of holy and iust anger and hatred, are to ^a passe by an offence, ^b freely to forgiue wrongs and iniuries, and euen to forget them; and to requite ^c good for euill to those who haue wronged ys, by ^d helping and ^e praying for them; and finally, to vse all ^f humanity and courtesie towards all men, acquaintance and strangers.

Other more speciall fruits may be distinguished, according to the difference of persons towards whom they are referred. As first, if our neighbours are in prosperity, we are not to enuie them if they bee our superiours, nor to emulate them being our equals, nor to disdain them being our inferiours; but contrariwise, ^g wish vnto them all good things which we haue, or they want, and congratulate their well-fare, and communicate with them in our ^h reioycing at their happinesse. If they be in aduersity, we are not to contemne, or to bee hard-hearted towards them, much lesse to reioyce at their euils and miseries, but to take ⁱ pittie and compassion on them, and according to our ability, to shew mercy vnto them. Vnto these vertues and duties wee may adde ^k Christian friendship in the Lord, which ought to be sincere and constant ^l Christian charity, whereby wee loue our enemies for the Lords sake, ^m placablenesse and desire of reconciliation, abstayning from all enmity, open hostility, and secret grudge; ⁿ a desire and forwardnesse to preserue friendship betweene others, and to restore it being dissolued, by making peace and amity. Toward those which are vnder our power, we must abstaine from all ^o cruelty, backed either with our authority or might, and vse all ^p clemency towards them, as much as will stand with their good; and contrariwise, from indulgence and sond cockering, not bearing with their sinnes, for foolish loue to the parties, but vsing due and necessary seuerity, when vices can no otherwise bee reformed and amended. Vnto those who dwell in the same society, wee are to vse concord and peaceablenesse, to which purpose we must resist the beginnings of contention, take away the occasions, and sometimes depart from our owne right, to preserue or redeeme peace. And towards strangers, our dutie is to vse good hospitality, especially to the poore and harbourlesse. Finally, as wee are to preserue our neighbours person and life, by performing all these inward duties vnto them, so are wee to shew the outward signes of them in our countenance, eyes, gesture, and voyce, which must be so milde, sweet, and gracious, that they promise to the beholders and hearers nothing but humanity, brotherly loue, and good will.

The outward duties, tending to the preseruatiō of our neighbours person and life, respect our words or deedes. In respect of the former, there is required, that wee haue a peaceable tongue, which speaketh all good and no euill, to and of our neighbours. Vnto them, wee must vse

louing and courteous speeches, and abstaine from all brawling and scolding, rayling and reuiling, scoffing and scorning, vnchristian menacings towards inferiours, and murmuring towards superiours; and curfings and imprecations towards any man. And of them, we must not behind their backs vse tale-bearing, and slander, nor lend our eares to those who offer these wrongs vnto them. In respect of our deeds, all our workes and actions must tend to the preservation and defence of our neighbours life and person, but especially of his immortall soule, which ought, as it is most precious in it selfe, so to be most deare vnto vs. In which regard, we must omit no duty which may defend and preserve the life and person of our neighbours, when we can and may lawfully performe it. We must not by our negligence leaue any thing vndone, nor by our wilfulnesse doe any thing whereby they may be indangered. Neither must we commit any act which tendeth to his hurt and hazard. But we must haue peaceable hands, and not in time of peace, quarrell and fight; and innocent hands, free and cleane from blood, neither hurting and wounding the body of our neighbours, nor killing and taking away his life; but contrariwise we must be beneficent, and in all our actions doe them all good; vsing humanity and mercy to all, and brotherly loue and kindnesse towards those who are of the household of faith.

The duties which tend to the preservation of the life of our neighbours soule, are either naturall or spirituall. In the former respect wee ought to preserve their liues, in cheering and comforting them by our sweete and Christian conuersation; and not vniustly offer vnto them any occasion whereby they may be vexed and grieved. In respect of the latter, we are not to hinder by any meanes the saluation of others, nor to be any wayes an offence vnto them, neglecting their saluation, as though it were a thing not belonging to vs; but contrariwise, vse all good meanes whereby they may be wonne to Christ, edified in their most holy faith, and furthered in the way of holinesse and righteousness, which will bring them to euerlasting happinesse. To which end, we must not commit any act whereby we may be scandalous vnto another, and a cause of his sinne, either by ^a prouocation, ^b euill counsell, or ^c bad example; but contrarywise performe cheerefully all duties belonging to the communion of Saints ^e in spirituall things, as mutuall ^f obseruation one of another, ^g instructing the ignorant, confuting, conuincing and reclaiming him that erreth, that he may be found in the faith, admonishing and ^h exhorting the negligent and backward, ⁱ reproouing those that offend, ^k comforting the comfortlesse; and ^l shining before all in the light of a good life and holy example.

Besides which duties which we owe to our neighbours, there are diuers others required in this Commandement, which are to bee performed to our selues, for the good, preservation, and defence of our persons and liues, and especially for the saluation of our soules. In respect of our bodies and liues heere is required, that wee vse all good and lawfull meanes whereby our health may be preserved, as temperance and sobriety in diet, moderate sleepe and labour; honest and moderate recreations of body and minde, cheerefulnesse and honest ioy, reioycing in the fruition of Gods

Gods blessings; or if it be lost and impaired, whereby wee may recouer it, as good diet, physicke, &c. Secondly, that we by all good and lawfull meanes preferue our safety, by auoyding vnneccessary dangers, or recouer our selues out of them, if we be false into them; by repelling grosse iniuries, and auoyding causelesse quarrels, and all other meanes, whereby our liues are needlessly hazarded. But aboue all, heere is required, that we earnestly indeuour in the vse of all good meanes which may further the saluation of our soules, and auoid the contrary whereby it may be hindred. The which must not be delayed, nor posted off from time to time, as it is the practice of those, who from day to day deferre their repentance; but we must first seeke the Kingdome of God and his righteousnesse, both in order and time, giuing it the precedencie; and also in degree, more earnestly in our iudgements esteeming, in our affections imbracing, and in our practice seeking and labouring after the meanes of our saluation, especially our effectuell calling and conuersion, our iustification by a liuely faith, and sanctification vnto holinesse of life, then in any thing in the world besides; yea contemning and reiecting all earthly pleasures, profits, and preferments, as vaine and vnprofitable in comparison of them. And with the like care and indeuour, we must auoyd all meanes whereby our saluation may be hindred, especially sinne, which is the bane of the soule, and not giue way to the committing of it wittingly and willingly, though for hire, the whole world were offered vnto vs, the gaine whereof, will in no sort recompence the losse of our soules, as our Saviour telleth vs. Or if we be ouertaken with it, and by the law of our members, warring against the law of our mindes, be led captiue vnto sinne: our next care must be, not to lye in it, no not for an houre, but to rise out of it speedily by vnfaigned repentance, and by humble confession and earnest suite for pardon and remission, seeke reconciliation with God through Iesus Christ.

C A P. XIII.

Of the duties required in the seuenth Commandement.

§. Sect. I.
The summe of the seuenth
Commande-
ment: The duties which it inioyneth, and vices which it forbiddeth.

He three following Commandements respect the adiuncts of our neighbours persons: for after that God had provided for the life and person of our neighbour and our selues (which is the chiefe and principall) in the former Commandement he descendeth downe lower, to make prouision for the good, and preservation of all that belong both vnto them and vs. And these are either internall or externall: internall, as the chastity and purity of our owne, and our neighbours persons, in the seuenth Commandement: externall, as the preservation of propriety in goods in the eighth, and our owne and neighbours good name in the ninth. Next vnto the Commandement that respecteth life, the seuenth Commandement which prouideth for the chastity and purity of the person, hath place, as comming neereft vnto life in worth and excellency, and to bee preferred before all outward things, either goods or good name. For if the persons of men bee vnchaste, and defiled with vncleane lusts, then must also marriage, which

which is the fountaine of life and generation, be defiled; and from such a fountaine what can spring, but an vncleane and filthy life, which is not to bee preferred before death it selfe? And therefore next vnto the preservation of our liues, our chiefeft care must bee to preserve our chastity and purity, which is the very life of our life, and without which, it would bring no true ioy or comfort vnto vs. The which, the Lord requireth of vs in the seventh Commandement, in these wordes; Thou shalt not commit adultery. In which wordes, the Lord forbiddeth all vncleane lusts, with all the meanes and signes of them, and also that wee should bee necessary vnto the vncleanness of others; and contrariwise commandeth the preservation of our chastity and purity, with the meanes and signes of it, and also, that as much as in vs lyeth, wee provide for the chastity of our neighbours. Now this chastity is either inward in the soule and heart, or outward in the body. First then, wee must preserve the inward chastity of the soule, from all motions and passions of vncleane lusts, and vnlawfull concupiscence of the flesh, which is the adultery of the heart, that our Saviour condemneth, and that concupiscence of the flesh, and euill concupiscence, which the Apostles forbid. Neither is all concupiscence euill and to bee condemned; for that is lawfull, whereby we desire the propagation of mankind by naturall generation, being Gods ordinance, and inioyned in the state of innocencie; if it bee neither immoderate, immodest, nor vnseasonable. Secondly, wee must preserve our outward chastity, and possesse our vessels in holiness and honour. Vnto which is required the chastity of our eyes, containing them from beholding wanton and vncleane obiects; of our eares, stopping them against all rotten, corrupt, and filthy communication; of our tongues, restraining them from all beastly and bawdy speaking; and of our actions, abstaining from all acts of vncleanness, wanton and vnchaste pleasures. And thus we are to preserve our chastity, either in single life, which is the gift of continency and pure abstinence, both from vncleane lusts, and also from marriage; or in wedlocke, vnto which is required coniugall fidelity, the moderate, modest, and seasonable vse of the marriage bed; and pure abstinence, vpon necessary and iust occasions, as in time of absence, and of the womans separation, or that vpon fit occasions we may wholly giue our selues to fasting and prayer.

But whosoever would thus preserve their chastity, they must bee no lesse carefull to vse all good meanes of it, and to shunne the contrary meanes and occasions. As first, they must begge it of God by prayer, seeing it is his gift alone. Secondly, they must haue no society and familiarity with the vnchaste and filthy, wanton and effeminate, drunken and gluttonous persons; but keepe company with those who are sober and chaste, modest and temperate. Thirdly, they must vse the preseruatiues of chastity, as sobriety, which consisteth, as it is heere considered, in moderating the delights of the taste, in the temperate vse of diet, and abstinence from gluttony and drunkenness, or the excessiue drinking of wine and strong drinkes; and also of the sight, in abstaining from vnchaste and immodest obiects; as beautifull and wanton persons, obscene pictures, vnchaste and wanton Enterludes, Playes, and

Bookes. Secondly, diligence and painefulnesse in our callings and honest labours, not giuing way to idlenesse and sloth; vigilancy and abstinence from immoderate sleepe; and finally, modesty in our eyes and countenance, in our speeches and communication, in our gesture and gate, and in our habit and attire. Which meanes if wee finde insufficient for the preserving of our soules and bodies in purity and chastity; then are we called of God, to vse the lawfull remedy, which is the holy and honest estate of marriage, that we may liue chastly in wedlocke, when we cannot doe it in single life.

THE eighth Commandement, expressed in these words, Thou shalt not steale, inioyneth vs to preserve and increase by all good meanes, as much as in vs lieth, our owne and neighbours good, respecting goods and possessions; and not only forbiddeth all those vices and sinnes whereby they are any way hindred or impaired, but also requireth all vertues and good duties, whereby they are preserved and aduanced. And these duties are either more generall or speciall. The generall duties stand in these degrees. First, that we be not hurtfull to our neighbours, in hindring or impairing their estate, by doing them any wrong or iniury; or if we haue, that we make them satisfaction and amends. Secondly, that we preserve, as much as in vs lieth, our owne and neighbours goods from all waste and dammage. Thirdly, that we be beneficiall and helpfull to all, as farre as we are able, and their necessity requireth, and imploy our goods as we ought, to our owne and others good. The speciall duties respect either the iust and honest possession of our goods, vnto which is required that we both get and keepe them in a good manner, & by iust and lawfull meanes; or the lawfull and laudable vse of those goods, which wee haue thus lawfully gotten. Vnto the iust getting of our goods, foure vertues are required. First, that we doe not immoderately loue money, which is the roote of alleuill, nor set our hearts vpon riches and the earthly Mammon. Secondly, contentednesse with that condition, which God in his wise, iust and Fatherly providence hath allotted vnto vs; for discontent disposeth men to couet and seeke more then is needefull, though it be by vnlawful meanes; to which vice they make themselves subiect, who haue not learned to liue within their compasse. Thirdly, a moderate desire of such things as are necessary and conuenient, both for our owne maintenance according to the necessity of nature, person and state; and also for the reliefe and benefit of others, and that both for priuate persons, and publike seruice of Church and Common-wealth. The which desire ought on the one side to bee free from a Frier-like affection of pouerty, and on the other side, from couetousnesse and ambition, whereby men setting their hearts immoderately vpon earthly profits and preferments, doe resolute that they will compassse them by what meanes soeuer, good or bad; and make all possible haste to archieue their ends, hauing, after they haue much, an insatiable desire of obtaining more. Lastly, a moderate, prouident and wise care to provide those things which are conuenient and necessary for vs and those that belong to vs, by honest and lawful meanes, so that we be neither carelesly improvident, nor vexe and turmoile our selues selues with an immoderate, diffident and carking care. And these are the things which are required inwardly in our owne hearts and affections vnto iust getting of our goods. Now goods are thus gotten either without contract, and that either by our selues, or receiued from others. By our selues either accidentally, as by finding things lost, the owners being vnknowne, though diligently enquired after, or ordinarily by our honest and painefull labour in a lawfull calling. Or else they are gotten in lawfull contracts, the general rule whereof is this, that in all our dealings, borrowing and lending, buying and selling, letting, setting, taking and hiring, &c. we behaue our selues vprightly without dissimulation or guile, as in the sight of God, obseruing in our words, truth; in our promises, faithfulness; in our deedes, iustice; and in all things keeping a good conscience towards God and men, not dealing deceitfully with any, nor vsing any fraud for the getting of our goods, either in respect of matter or manner, quantity or quality, or any other vniust meanes whatsoever. Or if we haue failed in any of these, and gotten any goods by fraud and deceit, we must repute it no better then theft, and therefore hold our selues bound to make restitution vnto those whom we haue wronged; or in case they cannot be found or knowne, vnto the poore or Church, or good vses; without which we can neuer approue our repentance for these sinnes to be found and sincere, so as it will be accepted of God, and bring comfort vnto our owne soules.

And these are the duties which we ought to performe, in respect of the lawfull getting and possessing of our goods; the duties which concerne the right vse of them, respect either our selues, which is the lawfull & comfortable fruition of them; or others, which consists in the free and wise communication of them. Concerning the former, hauing iustly gotten goods into our possession, we are comfortably to inioy them, as the good gifts and blessings of God; vnto which, two vertues are required; First, that (shunning niggardlinesse, which keepeth men not onely from the communicating of their goods to others, but also from inioying them for their owne benefit; committing therein a double theft) we doe imbrace parsimonie, which consisteth in the honest sauing and sparing of our goods, that they be not idley and vnprofitably wasted and spent. Secondly, that auoiding wastfulness, and misspending our wealth to vses either dishonest or aboue our meanes and ability; wee doe imbrace frugality, which consisteth in the discreete, sober and moderate spending of our goods, according to our calling and ability, to profitable, charitable and needefull vses, in which this rule is to be obserued, that our expences in some reasonable good proportion, be lesse then our commings in. To the free communication of our goods to the benefit of others, two other vertues are required. First, that shunning couetousnesse and hardhartednesse, which depriveth vs of all pity and compassion towards those that are in want, we doe imbrace bounty and liberality, whereby wee communicate our goods willingly and cheerefully vnto those that neede our helpe. And secondly, that auoiding prodigality and riotous wastfulness, wee doe imbrace iustice and equity, giuing onely our owne, without wronging others, and in such a discreete proportion and moderation, that we dry not vp the fountaine of our beneficence, ſo as wee cannot bee helpfull to our ſelues or others. Now this free communicating of our goods, is either for a time by ^a lending, or for euer by giuing, either publicly to good uſes, ^b ciuill or ^c eccleſiaſticall; or priuately, as by beſtowing benefits vpon them who haue well deſerued, or by ^d gi-uing almes; and relieuing the neceſſities of our poore brethren, of which I haue intreated more fully in ^e another place.

THE ninth Commandement is expreſſed in theſe words: Thou ſhalt not beare, or utter a falſe, or vaine testimony againſt thy neighbour. Wherein is commanded, that wee ſhould thinke and ſpeake concerning our neighbours, both that which is truth, and alſo that which is charitable, tendring his and our owne credit and good name; and auoiding all ſpeech which is falſe and vncharitable, eſpecially ſuch as tendeth to the reproch and diffamation of our ſelues and our neighbours. And conſequently, here is commanded the preſeruation of truth amongſt men, and of our owne and neighbours fame and good name. Now this truth is an agreement and conformity of our ſpeech with our minde, and of our minde, with the truth of the things themſelues; the which in all our ſpeech is religiously to be obſerued, and all falſhood in ſpeech to be auoided, whether we ſpeake that which is falſe, or the truth falſly, and with an intent to deceiue, whether it be in ieſt, or in earneſt, either to helpe our neighbour with an officious lye, or to hurt him with a pernicious lie. The manner how the truth is to be profeſſed, is firſt, that we doe it freely and charitably, ſimply and with diſcretion; auoiding in the exceſſe, vndiſcreete and vnreaſonable profeſſion of the truth, to the vnneceſſary hurt or danger of ourſelues or others; and in the defect, the denying or betraying of the truth, out of feare or any ſiniſter reſpect; as alſo a double and de-ceitfull tongue. The meanes of this truth are to be carefully uſed of vs, which are, Firſt, to know it; to which end we muſt be louers of it, and docible and teachable in learning and conceiuing of it, and not voluntarily affect ignorance, nor imbrace vntruth out of vaine credulity. Secondly, we muſt preſerue and maintaine it, uſing to this end conſtancie and ſted-faſtneſſe in the truth, and ſhunning vnconſtancy and pertinacie in er-rour. Thirdly, profitable ſpeech tending to Gods glory and our neighbours good, both ſpirituall, as tending to his edification, and tempo-rall, ſeruing for his honeſt delight and profit. Fourthly, that wee uſe the meanes of entertaining profitable ſpeech, as affability and pleaſing communication, and the remedy againſt vnprofitable ſpeech, which is taciturnity and reaſonable ſilence. And contrarywiſe, we are to auoide all ſpeech which is either vaine or hurtfull, tending to Gods diſhonour and our neighbours hurt; as all rotten and infeſting communication, ſcurrility, taunts and diſgraces, counterſeite complements, moroſity, vaine babbling, and ſmothering of profitable truth by ſilence.

The meanes of preſeruing our owne and our neighbours fame and name, is to haue an inward diſpoſition vnto it, and an high eſteeme and great regard of it. And ſecondly, an outward profeſſion of the truth concerning our neighbour, ioyned with charity and diſcretion. The inward diſ-poſition,

position is a true care of our owne and our neighbours fame and credit, with the fruits of it, whereby wee tender our owne and their good name, out of true loue and charity. The fruits of which care are referred either to the same it selfe, as to reioyce in it, if it bee good, and sorry, if it be bad; or else to our hearing, iudging and reporting of our neighbour. In respect of hearing, wee are not willingly to heare rumours and reports, tending to the infamie of our neighbours, but to repell talebearers; and contrariwise, with all readinesse to heare their praises and commendations. In respect of iudging, we are to be charitable, and to shew it by the fruits thereof, in not being suspicious, and in representing the vniust suspitions of others; in not beleeuing, or determining any thing rashly against our neighbour; and in interpreting good things well, and doubtfull things in the better part. In respect of reporting, we must report no ill of our neighbour, though it be true, vnlesse it bee in charity, when as it is either profitable for the party of whom we speake, that hee may be reformed; or for the party to whom we speake, for the preuention of danger intended, or infection like to ensue by his company, or else necessarie for our selues, when as silence will make vs guilty of his fault.

And these are the duties which respect our inward disposition: now of those which concerne our outward profession; in which respect, our testimonie of our neighbour, must bee both true and charitable; and neither false simply, nor in shew of words true, but false in sence; neither yet vncharitable and malicious; all which ought to bee obserued of vs in all our testimonies, both publike and priuate, being ready in all things, and at all times, to profess the truth concerning our neighbour, with charity, both in respect of his vertues, which (as iust occasion is offered) we ought to acknowledge and commend, both in his presence and absence; and also his vices, which wee are to tell him of before his face, and not suffer sinne to rest vpon him; and not to make mention of them behind his backe, but vpon necessity, as to those that may helpe to reforme him, or to those who may bee hurt or corrupted by his company or example, that they may, taking warning hereby, escape these dangers. And contrariwise wee ought to auoide flattery, wherein wee may offend in respect of the matter of our speech, as when wee praise men for their vices; or the manner, in commending, either fainedly or aboue measure; or the end, either seeking our owne profit like parasites, or the hurt of the party whom wee flatter. And on the other side wee must shunne euill and cursed speaking, which any wayes tendeth to the impayingring of our neighbours credit and good name. The which is vsed either in his presence, by reuiling and contumelious speaking; by deriding and scorning him; or in his absence, by whispering or talebearing, slandering and backbiting.

The duties which euery man is bound to performe vnto himselfe, are, first, a care to procure and preserue his good name and credit, and secondly, that he give a true testimonie of himselfe. Our care to procure and preserue our good name, consisteth in vsing the meanes whereby it is gotten; as glorifying God, seeking his kingdome and righteous-nesse, walking vprightly, being such as wee would seeme to bee, and in keeping a good conscience. And also in auoiding the meanes, both of vaine-glory; as seeking to please men more then God; hypocrisie, seeking commendation by vanity and vices, louing of flatterers; vsu-all censuring of others; attempting matters aboue our ability and gifts. And also of infamie, which either arise from our selues, as all finnes both open, with all apparances of them, and secret, which God to our shame will bring to light; or else from others, as all disgrace-full lies, slanders, and opprobrious speeches, against which we ought (especially if wee be publike persons) to defend and maintaine our eredit and good name. The true testimonie of our selues is either concerning good; which if it bee true, wee must vpon iust occasion con-fesse it with modestie to Gods glory; or if false, with modestie and humility to denie it; or else concerning euill, which if it be true, we must confesse it both to God with earnest desire of forgiuenesse, and also to man, when by our confession wee may aduance Gods glory, and either our owne or our neighbours good; or if it bee false, that wee constantly deny it. Contrariwise wee are by this Commandement bound to shun the contrary vices to these vertues; as to deny the good things in vs to Gods dishonour that gaue them, and to speake more basely and meanely of our owne gifts and good parts then there is cause, or then that which wee truly conceiue, either to auoide boasting, which is no better then a modest lie; or to draw commendations from others, which is counterfaite modesty, and a cunning kinde of arrogancy. And also on the other side, vaine and false boasting, wherein wee may offend, either in respect of the object, in boasting of that which is not good, but euill, or being good, is not in vs at all, or at least in that measure which wee assume vnto our selues.

Or else in respect of the ende, as when wee speake of the good things in vs, or done by vs, for our owne glory, especially when it is ioyned with neglect of Gods honour, or the disgrace of others, or else for our gaine and aduantage. Or finally in respect of euill, when out of pride and selfe-loue, wee deny that euill which is truly affirmed, or affirme that euill of our selues which is false, to gratifie others, or to picke a thanke.

IN the former Commandements, as we haue shewed, the Lord for-biddeth all externall finnes both in word and deede, together with the internall finnes of the heart commited against our neighbours, which are ioyned with consent of the will, and commandeth the contrary vertues: and now in the tenth and last Commandement, that hee might shew his Law to be spirituall, and of such large extent, that nothing, no not the least motions or first thoughts are exempted, and out of the reach of it, hee requireth the inward purity of the minde and imaginations, thoughts and intentions, heart and affections, and the rectitude, orderly and iust gouernement of them all for our owne and our neighbours good: and contrariwise condemneth and forbid-deth

Both, not onely those grosse kindes of concupiscence and lusts of the flesh, which are loyned with consent of will, but euen the first and least motions of euill concupiscence, which goe before consent, which are the rootes, seedes, and fountaines of all other finnes, as all euill thoughts, inclinations and desires which are repugnant with charity; yet thought of most, to be no finnes, and free from the censure of law, the which the papists doe lustily defend, making this concupiscence and lust after baptisme to be no sinne. Now this purity of minde and heart here required, consisteth of two parts, Originall righteousness, and perfect love of our neighbours and our selues, and the concupiscence of the Spirit. Originall righteousness, is both a cleanness from all vnrighteousnesse, and euill concupiscence against our neighbours, and a disposition and pronenesse to all the duties of charity; the which righteousness, the Lord hauing in our first creation planted in our natures, doth lustily require it of vs in his Law, though by our fall in the loynes of our first parents we haue lost it, and can neuer attaine vnto it in any perfection. Yea, he doth it not onely in iustice towards all, but also in mercy towards his elect, to this end, that seeing hereby their vnrighteousnesse, corruption and misery in themselves, they might bee forced to renounce themselves and their own righteousness, and flee vnto Christ, that both they might be clothed with his righteousness, and by his Spirit be renewed according to his Image, in wisdom, holines and righteousness. Contrariwise, here is forbidden euill concupiscence, which is either originall concupiscence, or sin, as it is referred against our neighbours; the which is that habituall corruption of our natures, and that euill inclination and pronenesse to lust against our neighbours, contrary to the Law of God: or actuall concupiscences, which are euill motions in our mindes and hearts against our neighbours, both hurtfull and foolish; which motions are either euill phantasies and thoughts of the minde, or euill affections and perturbations of the heart, all which inclining men to euill, are repugnant to charity.

The spiritual concupiscence here required, containeth the good motions of the Spirit, and the lusting of the Spirit against the flesh. The good motions of the Spirit, are righteous & charitable cogitations in our mindes concerning our neighbours, and like affections in our hearts towards them, which are to be imbraced and nourished in vs; and contrariwise, euill thoughts are to be shunned, which either are cast into mens mindes by the diuill, and are called his suggestions, or arise from originall corruption and habituall concupiscence; and both of them either sleeping or waking. The lusting of the Spirit against the flesh, whereby we fight against our corruptions, and crucifie the flesh with the lusts thereof, is here also commanded, and to be intreated and imbraced of vs. Of which I haue written more fully in another * Treatise.

The meanes whereby we may be enabled to yeeld obedience to this Commandement, are of two sorts, first, such as tend to the attayning and preseruing of the purenes of the heart, which are, First, to walke with God, seeking to approue our hearts vnto him, who searcheth and trieth as well our secret thoughts and inclinations, as our outward words and actions. Secondly, to obserue and watch ouer our hearts and senses, that no e-

Secondly, to watch over our selves, that no euill concupiscence do arise in vs, or enter into vs, to which end a twofold care is needfull, 1. When we are awake, to keepe our minds occupied in good and holy meditations, and exercised about lawfull things, not suffering them to be idle, or to wander about things vaine & vnlawfull. 2. When we are to sleepe, that we commend our soules into the hands of God, desiring him to keep them safe from tentations, and pure from concupiscences. Thirdly, to obserue and guard our senses (especially our sight) by whose ministry the objects of concupiscence are represented to the minde. Fourthly, that we put on, and keepe fast buckled vnto vs the whole spirituall Armour of God, which is mighty to cast downe imaginations, and to subdue euill thoughts. And finally, that we frequently vse seruent and effectuell prayer vnto almighty God, that he will assist and gouerne vs with his holy Spirit, against all tentations and suggestions of the diuell, the world, and our owne flesh.

THE THIRD BOOKE OF A GODLY LIFE, CONTAINING IN IT THOSE DV-ties which are required in our daily exercise, both generally at all times of the day, and upon all occasions, and specially in the severall parts of it.

C A P. I.

That the duties of a godly life ought daily and constantly to be performed, and not by fits and spurts onely.

AND thus have wee intreated of the duties which are to bee performed of all those who desire to leade a godly and Christian life. Now we are to shew how all these duties of piety, righteousness, and sobriety, are to be daily and continually exercised of vs, so farre forth as our callings and occasions, meanes and opportunity will suffer and inable vs. Neither is it possible that all these duties should be performed by euery man, seeing diuers of them are appropriate to diuers persons, sexes, and callings; in which respect, the subiect is not tied to performe the duties of the Prince, nor the Prince of the subiect; the husband of the wife, nor the wife of the husband, &c. nor yet that all duties, common to all Christians, should be performed euery day, seeing many times we want fit objects to exercise them vpon, as also convenient time and leasure, ability and opportunity. But this is required of vs, that at no time we commit any thing against the holy Law of God, or thinke that any time, company, or other circumstance, can make sinne seasonable, nor yet omit any of the former duties, when God requireth them at our hands, giuing vs fit objects, occasions, meanes, and ability to performe them. And that not onely some spare time bee allotted to these Christian duties, taking liberty to spend the remainder of our dayes after our owne sinfull lusts, or in the vnlawfull and base seruice of the world, and the prince thereof, for the worthlesse hire of earthly vanities; but we must bee wholly taken vp of them, and bee still exercised in the practice of some one or other of them, as shall be most conuenient, and will best fort with the advancing of the glory of God, and the spirituall and temporall good of our selves and our neighbours in respect of meanes and occasions offered vnto vs. Neither must we thinke it sufficient vnto a godly life to reserue his Sabbaths for Gods seruice, and spend the rest of the weeke in the seruice of the world and our owne lusts; nor that we serue him in some things, and these in others; nor on some other dayes besides the Sabbath, or some part onely of euery day, reseruing the rest to liue as we list. But wee must constantly and continually, in euery thing, and at euery time, performe seruice vnto God in all our actions, and throughout our whole course and conuersation; not onely in abstaining from all sinne which he hath forbidden, but also in performing of some Christian duty of holinesse, righteousnesse, and sobriety, which he hath commanded, or in vsing the meanes whereby wee may be inabled vnto them. Neither is God alone serued, when we performe some religious act, as praying, hearing the Word, singing Psalmes, or some eminent workes of charity and sobriety, but also in the meanest duties of the basest calling, yea euen in our eating and drinking, lawfull sports and recreations, when as wee doe them in faith, which not onely assureth vs that these actions are commanded of God and warranted by his Word, but that we and our workes are accepted of him; and so inableth vs to doe them with cheerefulnesse and delight, as being not chiefly the seruice of men but of God. And also when in doing these our ordinary businesses which belong to our callings, wee doe repose our trust and affiance in God, that hee will blesse vs in them, and giue them such successe, as shall be most for his glory and our good; and inioy the fruit and benefit of them, as blessings sent from God with praise and thanksgiuing. And when as in them we haue an eye and due respect to God, seeking in them chiefly his glory, and doing them in loue and obedience to his Commandements; and not for necessity only, praise or profit, feare of punishment, or hope of reward, which though we may respect secondarily and in some degree, in the ordinary actions of our liues, yet not first and principally, if we would be accounted to doe God seruice in them. And in the next place, to our owne and our neighbours mutuall good, especially the enriching of vs with spirituall graces, and the euerlasting saluation of their and our owne soules.

In which generall sense if we take the seruice of God, and thus largely with these references, vnderstand the Christian duties of a godly life, then is there no day, houre, or minute, wherein we are not to bee exercised in some of them. And this appeareth both by testimonies of Scriptures and firme reasons. The Scriptures require that our whole liues be spent in the seruice of God, and that we daily performe vnto him the duties of holinesse, righteousnesse, and sobriety. So the Apostle would haue vs to walke daily, according as God hath directed vs, and make his Word the rule of our conuersation, from which we must neuer swarme, neither on the right hand nor on the left; and to keepe a continuall watch ouer our selves, lest there be aduanytime in any of vs an euill heart of unbelieve, in departing from the liuing God; and to exhort one another daily, whilst it is called to day; lest any of vs should be hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. The Apostle Peter perswadeth vs to passe the whole time of our sojourn here in this

fear of God, and not some part of it onely, which we can best spare, and that we live no longer, the rest of our time in the flesh, according to the lusts of men, but the will of God, seeing the time past of our lives may be enough; yea farre too much, to have walked and wrought after the will of the Gentiles. The grace of God appearing, hath taught vs to deny all ungodlinesse and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly, whilst wee continue in this present world. And therefore hath the Lord redeemed vs, that being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, we might serve him without feare, in holinesse and righteousness before him, all the dayes of our life. Of which, we have also examples in the Scriptures, in the Saints and servants of God, who after their conversion, passed their whole time in his feare, and spent their strength, in doing vnto him continuall service. So Enoch is said to have walked with God, that is, in the whole course of his pilgrimage to have kept him in his sight, and to have carried himselfe in all his actions as in his presence, that he might be accepted of him. And David, as he maketh it a marke of a blessed man, to meditate and exercise himselfe in the Law of God day and night, so doth he in many places shew that it was his owne practice. My mouth (saith he) shall shew forth thy righteousnessse and thy saluation all the day, for I know not the numbers thereof. Evening, and morning, and at noone, will I pray and cry aloud. O how loue I thy Law! it is my meditation all the day. I haue inclined my heart to performe thy Statutes alway, euen vnto the end. Every day will I blesse thee, and will praise thy name for euer and euer. So the Apostle saith of the whole Church of the Iewes, that they did instantly serve God day night: and particularly of himselfe, that it was his continuall exercise to haue alwayes a good conscience, void of offence towards God and towards men. But the best president of all for our imitation, is our Sauour Christ, who spent his whole time in doing the workes of him that sent him, in the day time preaching and doing miracles and workes of mercie, that he might bring saluation vnto the lost sheepe of the house of Israel, and in the night sequestering himselfe for prayer & meditation in the mount of Oliues. Secondly, God hath given his Law, not that we should sometimes obserue his Commandements, and sometimes breake them, but that we might obserue them daily and continually, in all things and at all times; and that it might serue as a rule and squire, according vnto which we are to frame our whole liues, and every particular action. For there he prescribeth duties to be performed at all times; on his Sabbath, and on the fixe dayes besides, the generall duties which belong to all, and those that respect vs in our particular callings, the duties of piety, whereby we offer vnto him immediate service; and of righteousnessse and sobriety, whereby we serue him mediately, in doing the duties which hee hath commanded towards our neighbours and our selues, because in doing them, we obey him. Whereby it appeareth, that there ought to bee no time nor any action of our liues exempted from Gods service; seeing hee hath giuen vs his Law, to serue for our direction at all times and in all things. Finally, the Word of God giueth vnto vs directions and rules, according to which wee are to frame our whole liues, both in respect of persons and callings, as the duties of superiours and inferiours, fathers and children, magistrates and people, domesticall and politiciall, towards God, themselves, and one another; and also in respect of euery part of the day, for the well beginning, continuing, and ending of it, and of all states and conditions, whether we be merry and cheerefull, or sad and sorrowfull, in sicknesse or in health, in poore or rich estate, prosperity or aduersity; to shew vnto vs that there is no time or state, wherein any man is left to his owne liberty to liue as he list; but that continually and in all conditions, euery man is bound to conforme his life in euery particular action, according to Gods reuealed will. To which end, wee are inioyned at all times to meditate and speake of Gods Law and Commandements, to haue them in our hearts, to teach them vnto our children, at home and abroad, at our lying downe, and at our rising vp, and to binde them for a signe vpon our hands, and as frontlets betweene our eyes. And so the Wiseman commandeth, that we binde them continually vpon our hearts, and tye them about our neckes; because when we goe, it shall leade vs, when we sleepe, it shall keepe vs, and when we awake, it shall talke with vs; the Law being such a lampe and light, as is sufficient to guide and direct vs in all our wayes.

Secondly, this daily practice of all Christian duties, in the whole course of our liues, and in euery particular action of them, may be enforced with these reasons; first, because the Lord hath created and redeemed, and doth continually preferue vs to this end, that we should spend our whole liues in his seruice, by performing the duties of holinesse and righteousness; and not some part onely, reseruing the rest for the seruice of the world, and the satisfying of our carnall lusts. Secondly, he giueth vnto vs the continuall wages of his blessings and benefits for the present, and hath promised to giue vnto vs the euerlasting reward of heavenly happinesse in the life to come, not that we should doe our owne wills and workes, much lesse of his professed enemies, but that wee approoue our selues and our seruice vnto him in all things, who hath giuen vnto vs this rich wages; and chiefly respect his glory in whatsoeuer we doe, either in his immediate seruice, or in performing the duties which he hath commanded vs towards our neighbours and our owne persons; seeing wee are bought at an high price, that we might no longer be our owne, but his, and glorifie him both in our soules and body, by offering vnto him that seruice which he requirerh. Thirdly, seeing it is the best wisdom to imploy all and euery of our actions to the best purpose, and no time is so well imployed as in Gods seruice, whether we respect God our chiefe Goodnesse, to whose glory all should tend, as vnto their supreme end, or our owne saluation, which by this and no other meanes can be assured vnto vs; and contrariwise, the greatest folly to spend our liues or any part of them in vaine, to no purpose or profit, as all that time is, which is not taken vp in Gods seruice, by performing some duty of piety, righteousness, or sobriety, seeing those maine ends, at which we ought in all things to aime, namely, Gods glory in our owne saluation, are not hereby aduanced and furthered, but crossed and hindred. Fourthly, to be daily exercised in Christian duties, is the best meanes to keepe our soules in good plight and state, by nourishing in them all sauing graces; for as it is not enough to keepe our bodies in a good case and habitude, that we preserve the vigour and strength of them, by seasonable and conuenient foode, vnlesse wee also digest it, and confirme our strength by fit exercise; so for the preserving of our soules in good state, it is not sufficient that we nourish Gods graces in vs, by hearing the Word, and feeding on this spirituall Manna, vnlesse wee daily exercise them in the performance of all Christian duties. And as it is the best meanes to preserve our soules in health, when they are well, so also to recover them, when through surfeits in sinne, it declineth and is impaired; whereas if we haue onely some generall purposes of liuing Christianly, or performe these duties but by fits and starts, wee shall easily fall into spirituall consumptions of grace, and dangerous sicknesses of sinne before we be aware, and when they haue by neglect and customable continuing in them taken fast hold of vs, wee shall either not recover, or at least, with great difficultie.

Fifthly, we may bee moued to this daily and continuall exercise, by consideration of the many and great dangers which doe accompany the neglect of it; first, because we shall moue the Lord to withdraw from vs his graces, when as we are secure & slothfull in the exercise of them. For he giueth vnto vs these spirituall Talents, not that we should wastefully mispend them, or idly tye them vp (as it were) in a napkin, and cast them in a corner, where they doe no good; but that we should by imploying, improoue them to the glory of our Master, and good of our selues and our fellow-seruants; which when we neglect to doe, he will take them from vs, and giue them vnto others, who will vse them to more purpose and profit. And thus David growing secure, and beginning through sloth to remit something of his spirituall exercises, in which he had bene formerly zealous, was left vnto himselfe to fall into tentation, God withdrawing the assistance of his grace and holy Spirit, and so was ouertaken of soule and grosse finnes. Secondly, without this daily exercise wee shall soone fall off from all power of godlinesse, and grow by degrees from bad to worse, till there be no prints of goodnesse remaining in vs. For our course and proceedings in piety is no naturall motion, but against the current and streame, winde and tide of our corruption; and therefore we must at no time intermit our labour, for so we shall in short time be carried further backe, then we can recover in a great space and with much labour; but we must be in continuall exercise, and (as it were) with vnwearied diligence ply the oare, vntill by death we arriue at the haven of happinesse. Our hearts, like the plummets of a clocke, draw vs with the waight of their corruption downward, till they pitch themselves and rest vpon earthly vanities, vnlesse euery day, yea many times a day, we pull them vp, and giue spirituall motion vnto them by these Christian exercises. Thirdly, sinne is so wily and deceitfull, that if we cease from the duties of a Christian life, and intermit the keeping of a straight watch ouer our selues and actions, it will soone steale vpon vs, and fortifie it selfe against all vertue and goodnesse. For though at the first it seemeth content, that we should but for a little space, displace good duties, and giue but a little way for a small while to the pleasures of it, yet it will increase in strength, comming to liue (as it were) in its old home and proper element, and hardly leaue its hold, or giue way to the re-entry of those vertues and Christian duties which it formerly expelled. In which regard we shall be blessed, if fearing alwayes, alwayes, we stand continually vpon our watch, and not onely keepe our soules strongly manned with sauing graces, but take care that they may be daily trained and exercised in all Christian duties, that so we may not be beguiled and hardned through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. Lastly, there is no lesse danger from outward enemies, the world and the deuill, if we neglect the daily exercise of a godly life. For the world, if it once finde our hearts Dina-like, straying from God, will easily rauish and defile them with her filthy pleasures; and when we haue beene at some time inticed to accompany her fauourites in the delights of sinne, wee shall hardly get out of their imbracements, nor purge our selues from that pollution wherewith they haue tainted vs. The deuill also like a malicious enemy walketh about continually, and as a roaring Lyon seeketh to deuoure vs; and if he finde vs at any time cleane swept of Gods graces, and garnished with the hellish ornaments of vices and sinne, he will enter into vs, and taking possession, reserue vs for his owne vse. And therefore it behoueth vs with like diligence to preuent his wiles and malice, by keeping our soules continually furnished with Gods graces, and our selues exercised in all Christian duties, that so we may neuer be at leasure to admit of his tentations. And seeing this euill one is ready, euen whilst we sleepe, to sow his tares of tentations in our hearts (a ground too fruitfull for such a graine) our care must be with like diligence, to cast out this hellish seede, that it take no rooting, or if it haue, to weede them out as soone as they haue sprouted vp, and doe outwardly appeare in our words or actions.

The sixth reason to mooue vs to this daily exercise, is taken from our calling and profession; for wee are Citizens of heauen, and pilgrims on earth, and therefore though our bodies are here beneath, yet our conuersation should be in heauen, and our minds and affections should be on things aboue; our speeches should bee of those things that concerne our owne countrey, and in all our actions we must indeuour to further our journey towards our heauenly home; neither must we one while goe forward, and another while backward, or idly sit still; we must not one part of the day goe in the right way, and in another part erre and wander in the by-ways of sinne, but we must be still going forward and holding the right roade, neuer turning out of it, till we come to our heauenly home. We are called to be Gods seruants, and therefore we must not deuide our seruice betweene him and the world, seeing it is fit wee doe onely his worke from whom we receiue so liberall wages; neither can we serue God and Mammon which are of so contrary a disposition: but whilst wee incline to the one, we must of necessity neglect the other, as our Sauour hath taught vs. We are called to be his Souldiers, and therefore we must onely fight his battels, and not spend some part of our life and strength in his seruice, and some part in fighting on the deuils side, by quenching the good motions of Gods Spirit, and contrary to the light of our owne knowledge and consciences, neglect holy duties, and runne on in such courses as are displeasing vnto God. We are called to be Gods labourers; and therefore we must intend our businesse, that it may prosper in our hand, and not vndoe in one day, that which we haue done in another. We must not, like vnskilfull husbandmen, sometimes plant, and soone after plucke them vp, one while while sow good seed, & another while care, or like foolish builders, pull down one day, what we haue set vp in another, nor like infatigable Watchmen, one while sit in the watch Tower, and soone after slothfully sleep, and giue ouer our charge; nor like careless Pilots, guide the ship one day toward the wished haven, and the next, through sloth and negligence, let it roame whither the winde and tide will carry it, till it run vpon the sands, & split it selfe against the rocks: But we must in the whole & daily course of our liues, giue all diligence to make our calling and election sure, by holding a constant and continuall course, in the Christian exercises of a godly life.

2. Pet. 1. 10.

§. Sect. 6.

The last reason taken from the vncertainty of our liues.

Mat. 24. 46.

The last reason to moue vs vnto the continuall and daily exercise of Christian duties, is taken from the vncertainty of our liues, and when by death wee shall bee called to Iudgement; For seeing wee know not at what time our Master will come, it shall bee our wisdom to keepe our accounts alwayes euen, that wee may be ready at all times without feare, to yeeld vp our reckonings; and to carry our selues continually, like wise and faithfull seruants, in the exercise of holy, righteous, and Christian duties, that so we may bee blessed, when our Lord comming vpon the sudden, shall finde vs so doing: and because we are vncertain when the Bridegroom will come; let vs, like the five wise Virgins, haue our lampes and oyle of faith, and lights of a godly life alwayes prepared, that so we may enter with him into the marriage Chamber of heavenly happinesse, and there eternally solace our selues in the fruition of his loue; lest comming vpon the sudden, in an houre that wee thinke not, and taking vs vnprovided, without the lampe of profession, or the oyle of grace, or the light of an holy conuersation; either hunting after worldly profits and preferments by vnlawfull meanes, or with immoderate desires, or wallowing our selues in fleshly delights, he shut vs out of dores, and utterly exclude vs from hauing any communion, or interest with him in those heavenly ioyes.

Mat. 24. 44.

C A P. II.

Of some speciall duties of a godly life, which are to bee performed in our daily exercise: And first, of the renewing of our repentance.

§. Sect. 1.

Of the daily renewing of our covenant with God, by the renewing of our faith and repentance.

BY the testimonies and reasons before alledged, wee haue made it euident, that it is not sufficient to serue God by fits and at sometimes, neglecting his seruice, and seruing the world and our owne lusts at another; but that the daily exercise of a godly life, in the continuall performance of all Christian duties, is most profitable and necessary. And now it remaineth that we giue some directions, for the well performing of this daily exercise. To which end, wee are to know that these duties, wherein wee are daily to be exercised, are of two sorts, First, generall, which are not onely every day necessarily to be in some degree and measure performed, but also to be observed in every part of the day, and in all the particular acts and exercises of it, as occasion serueth. The second more speciall, and belonging more principally and properly vnto the diuers parts and seuerall occasions of euery day. The former are more internall and spirituall

betweene God and vs, serving to set our hearts in due frame, and to make them constant and resolute to consecrate our selues wholly to Gods service, and in all things to please him. The latter more externall for the most part, and visible, which are the outward exercises proceeding from the other, and (as it were) the pleasant fruit which spring from those inward and hidden rootes. The first mayne duty which ought to be of every Christian daily and duly performed, is to confirme, and in some sort to renew the Covenant of grace betweene God and vs in Iesus Christ, wherein God for his part doth of his free grace promise the remission of all our sinnes, his spirituall graces, his fauour and reconciliation, justification and adoption; his holy Spirit with all spirituall and temporall gifts and graces in this world, and queraasting life and saluation in the world to come, in and for his Sonne Christ. And we for our part doe promise and covenant, that we will receive and embrace Christ with all these benefits by a lively faith, and bring forth the fruits thereof in hearty repentance and new obedience. The which Covenant is the maine ground and foundation of all the good things we receive from God in this life; and of all the ioy and comfort which wee take in them, and of our future hopes and happinesse in the life to come. And therefore as Citizens doe chiefly looke to the preservation and establishment of the grand Charter, that containeth all their priviledges: And as Souldiers in time of a sieges doe every day looke vnto their mayne fortifications and bulwarke, and if they be any way shattered and shaken in the last assaults, doe with all care and diligence repaire and strengthen them: So must wee who professe our selues Citizens of the spirituall Sion and heavenly Ierusalem, vse all good meanes to ratifie this Charter, which is the chiefe assurance of all the good which we either now can haue, or hereafter expect; and seeing in the time of our spirituall warfare, Satan with his assistants seeke to shake and weaken this chiefe Tower of our strength, with the engines and Cannon shot of their tentations; therefore we must daily haue a speciall eye to this our principall Bulwarke, and vse continually all good meanes, whereby the breaches may be repaired and strengthened against the next assault. And howsoever we are after a more principall manner to renew and confirme our Covenant with God at set and solemne times, as generally before wee come to the Lords Table, and specially in the time of thanksgiving, for some singular and extraordinary benefits, or of extraordinary humiliation in respect of some sinnes, into which after our conuersion we haue relapsed; or some grievous afflictions, from which wee desire to be deliuered; or some dangerous sicknesses, the vsuall fore-runner of death and Iudgement, as wee shall more fully shew hereafter: yet seeing wee must daily and hourly liue by faith, and seeing faith hath no other ground to rest vpon, for the applying and appropriating of any of Gods benefits, but the Covenant of grace which hee hath made with vs, the which, though on Gods part it be more immoueuable then the rockes and mountaines, yet is often shaken in respect of our weak apprehension, euen as a rocke may seeme to moue, when it is lightly touched with a trembling hand, & a mountaine to shake, when as it is beheld with a weak and quivering eye, who seeth not how necessary it is to vse daily all good meanes, meanes, whereby wee may make this covenant which is so strong in it selfe, to be also strong vnto vs, and a firme foundation whereupon we may build our ioy and comfort?

Now the principall meanes of renewing and confirming this covenant of grace, is, daily to renew the condition on our part, which is a lively faith, approved by the fruits of it in vnsained repentance. The which latter, because it is the infallible signe and touchstone of the former, and the outward and sensible fruit, which assureth vs of the hidden roote, that it liueth and groweth, I will in the first place speake of our daily exercise in renewing of our repentance; vnto which is required, first, that we call to our remembrance our former sinnes, together with the cursed roote of original corruption from which they spring; but especially the sinnes, frailties and falls, which haue overtaken vs since the last time that wee performed this exercise, to which purpose it becometh vs to keepe a strict and narrow watch ouer all our thoughts, words and workes, that these spirituall enemies of our soules may not slyly passe by, or secretly lurke in vs vnespied, and consequently vnrepented of; and also to take speciall marke of them, that they doe not slip out of our minde and memory. For which end we must looke our selues often in the glasse of Gods Law, & examine our liues by this rule, that so we may take notice of our spirituall spots and deformities, of our errors and auersenes to good, & pronenesse to euill, and so bring them into the Court of conscience, that being thereby, in the presence of God our supreme Iudge, accused & condemned, our hearts may bee smitten with godly sorrow in the sight and sence of them, and affected with a loathing and dislike of our former euill proceedings; according to the practice of the faithfull, foretold by the Prophet: Then shall ye (saith he) remember your former euill wayes, and your doings that were not good, and shall loath your selues in your owne sight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations. The neglect of which duty is reprov'd and condemned in the people of the Iewes: I hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright, no man repented him of his wickednesse, saying, What haue I done? euerie one turned to his course, as the Horse rusheth into the battell. Secondly, Humiliation is here also required, in which, diuers things ought to concur; first, when we haue called our sinnes to our remembrance, and set them in order before vs, we must in the sight and sence of them haue melting, relenting, broken, and contrite hearts and spirits, wich will truely mourne with bitter griefe, because by our sinnes wee haue displeased so gracious and good a God, who hath multiplied vpon vs so innumerable benefits and blessings, both in temporall and spirituall things, especially in giuing his only Sonne to the death for vs, when as we were strangers and enemies vnto him. Vpon which consideration we must, looking vpon him whom wee haue pearced, mourne for him, as a man mourneth for his onely sonne, and be in bitternesse for him, as one that is in bitternesse for his first borne. We must not slight ouer our sorrow, but labour with Peter to weepe bitterly, and with the Israelites, to powre forth our melting soules before God, like water drawne out of a well; and finally, with Dauid we must labour to bring our mourning for sinne into daily practice; Euerie night (saith hee) make I my bedde to swimme, and I water my couch with my teares. And if through the hardnesse of our hearts, we cannot thus sorrow for our finnes, wee must bee grieved, because we can be no more grieved, and lament the hardnesse of our hearts, because we can no more hartily bewaile them. Which if it be vnfained, then will it moue vs to vse carefully the meanes whereby our griefe for sinne may bee increased; as to meditate on the innumerable multitude, and the grievous hainousnesse of our sinne, the manifold imperfections and corruptions of our best actions, the meeknesse, power and greatnesse, the infinite goodnesse and graciousnesse of God towards vs, against whom we haue committed them, our owne basenesse and vilenesse, who haue provoked to wrath so infinite a maiesty, the small and contemptible inducements which haue allured and inticed vs to offend so mercifull a Father, even the base baits of worldly vanities, our continuing in these finnes without repentance, notwithstanding that the Lord hath given vs so manifold and effectual meanes of reformation and amendment, as the preaching of the Gospell, admonitions, instructions, reprehensions, the good motions of his Spirit checking vs for our finnes, and inciting vs to holy duties; his promises alluring vs to serue him; his threatnings terrifying vs that we may not offend him; his mercies and benefits incouraging vs to all good; his chastisements and fatherly corrections discouraging and stopping vs in our euill courses; notwithstanding all which helpes and meanes, we haue impenitently continued in our finnes, without any reformation, our dishonouring of God hereby, who hath bene so gracious and bountifull vnto vs, and abusing of his mercies, patience and long suffering, which should haue led vs to repentance; our pearcings, wounding, and as it were, crucifying afresh the Lord of life, our blessed Sauour and Redeemer; and our vexing and greewing of the good Spirit of God, whereby wee are sanctified; by quenching the good motions which he hath suggested vnto vs, and by dulling and deadning his gifts and graces in vs. Secondly, we must bee much displeased with our selues, because we haue so many waies displeased God by our finnes, and be inflamed with a godly anger against our flesh and sinful lusts, which haue caused vs to breake out into al these impieties, the which must shew it selfe in our readinesse to be reuenged of them, by vsing all good meanes whereby they may be mortified and crucified. Thirdly, we must haue our hearts affected with confusion and astonishment, and our faces filled and discoloured with shame and blushing, that we haue thus many waies shewed our selues so vnkinde and vngratefull to so good a God; and when we see that God remembereth his covenant, to establish and make it good to such vnworthy wretches, we, with the Church of the Iewes, repenting of our finnes, must remember our former wicked waies, and be ashamed and confounded, in the sight and sence of our vnworthinesse. Finally, we must in the former considerations cast away all pride, carnall loue and selfe-conceitednesse of our owne worth and exaltation, and be humbled and cast downe in the apprehension and feeling of our owne basenesse and vilenesse, confessing that we are but dust and ashes, with Dauid, that we are wormes, and no men; and saying with Iob vnto corruption, I thou art my father, and to the worme, I thou art my mother and my sister; yea with him, we must abhorre our selues, and vnfainedly repent in dust and ashes.

ashes. The fruits of which humiliation we shall finde inestimable. For we shall hereby offer vnto God a sacrifice which he most delighteth in, and make him hereby propitious and gracious; yea to dwell with vs, and to replenish and cheare our hearts with our sweete communion and fellowship with him in the gracious comforts of his holy Spirit, according to that of the Psalmist, The Lord is nigh vnto them that are of a broken heart, and sauesth such as be of a contrite Spirit; And the Lords owne speech by his Prophet, Thus saith the high and lofty one that inhabiteth eternitie, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place; with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to reuie the spirit of the humble, and the heart of contrite ones. We shall bring our selues within the compasse of Christs call, and interresse our selues vnto his gracious promises of easing vs of the vnsupportable burthen of our sinnes, and curing vs of all our spirituall sicknesses and sores of sinnes: for he came to bee the Physicion, not of the whole, but of the sicke, and to call, not those who haue no sence and feeling of their sinnes, but such as labour and are heauie laden, not the righteous in their owne opinion and conceite, but sinners to repentance. We shall make our selues fit hearers of the glad tidings of the Gospell, and intitle our selues to all the gracious comforts of Gods holy Spirit, according to that of the Prophet, cited & applied by our Sauour; The Spirit of the Lord is vpon me, because he hath anointed me: to preach the Gospell to the poore and meeke, he hath sent me to binde vp and heale the broken-hearted, to preach liberty and deliuerance to captiues, and recouering of sight to the blinde, to set at liberty them that are bruized, to comfort them that mourne; giuing vnto them beautie for ashes, and the oyle of ioy for mourning, and the garment of praise, for the spirit of heauinesse. Moreouer, by this humiliation wee may come to the assurance of the remission of our sinnes; for if we humble our selues and pray, seeke Gods face and turne from our wicked waies; then will the Lord heare from heauen, and will forgie vs our sinnes, and heale our plagues; as wee see in the example of Manasses, one of the greatest sinners that euer liued, who humbling himselfe greatly before the God of his Father, and seeking and suing vnto him for pardon, the Lord was intreated of him; and heard his supplication. Finally, if wee thus dayly humble our selues; the Lord hath promised to lift vs vp and exalt vs, to furnish vs with all sauuing graces, to fill and replenish our emptie soules with all good things, to cheare vs in our mourning with the comforts of his Spirit, and to make vs blessed in the eternall fruition of his heauenly Kingdome.

Thirdly, vnto this daily renewing of our repentance, is required an humble confession of our sinnes, which must be of vnknowne sinnes generally, of knowne sinnes particularly, with the aggrauation of them by their seuerall circumstances. Especially wee must acknowledge and lay opne the roote and fountaine of them, our originall corruption, from which they haue sprung and flowe, and then the cursed fruits and filthy streames that haue issued from them; but aboue all, we must not forget in this our confession, those speciall sinnes, vnto which we are most enclined; and wherewith we haue most offended and dishonoured God; nor those sinnes which we haue committed lately, and since the last time of renew-

ing our repentance. And withall we must iudge and condemne our selues as vnworthy, by reason of our sinnes, the least of Gods mercies, and most worthy of the greatest of his iudgements and punishments, comming in to Gods presence as Benbadads followers before Ahab, and acknowledging, that if wee had our desert, death and condemnation were due vnto vs. And this we must doe, to iustifie the Lord when he iudgeth, and to glorifie his name, in giuing vnto him the praise of mercy and forgiuenesse, and that thus iudging our selues, we may not be condemned of the Lord. Neither are we to stay here vnder the sentence of the Law, but to flee vnto the throne of grace, begging mercy and forgiuenesse at the hands of God, for his owne names sake, for his truth sake in his couenant and gracious promises, and for his Christs sake, his merits, satisfaction and obedience performed for vs. The fruit and benefit of which humble confession, is the full assurance of the remission of all our sinnes, grounded vpon the truth of Gods promises; For, If we confesse our sinnes, hee is faithfull and iust to forgie vs our sinnes, and to cleanse vs from all vnrighteousnesse. And againe, Hee that hideth his sinnes, shall not prosper: but hee that confesseth and forsaketh them, shall haue mercy. Both which wee see verified in the example of Dauid, who whilst he concealed his sinne, found the hand of God beaue upon him, which vexed his very bones, and made him roare in sence of paine. But when hee confessed and acknowledged his sinne, the Lord forgane him all his iniquities.

Fourthly, there is required heereunto an hearty hatred and detestation of all sinne. To which end we must consider, that it is an offence against Gods infinite Maiesty, and supreme Iustice, and that nothing in the world is so contrary vnto his most pure and holy nature; nothing so odious and lothsome vnto him, as appeareth by his most iust seuerity, in punishing of it with most sharpe and grievous punishments. For though our first parents in the state of innocency, were his most excellent and best beloued creatures, yet for one transgression he reiected them, and punished not onely them, but also all their posterity with temporall punishments of all kinds, and euerlasting death and condemnation both of body and soule. Though the world and the creatures therein were his excellent workmanship, yet when it was defiled with the sinne of man, it was with all its inhabitants (sauing those which were reserued in the Arke) destroyed with an vniuersall deluge. For sinne hee consumed Sodom and Gomorrah with fire and brimstone from heauen, and reiected the whole nation of his beloued Israel from being his people. Yea, when our Sauour Iesus Christ, the Sonne of his loue, bore our sinnes as our surety, he spared him not, but caused him in his body to suffer most grievous punishments, and in his soule to beare the full viols of his wrath; till his Iustice, by his all-sufficient sufferings, was fully satisfied. The which considerations must make vs daily to renew our hatred against all our sinnes, which God so mortally hateth, and especially those which cleaue fastest to our corrupt nature, and vnto which we are most inclined, because by them wee doe most often displease and dishonour our gracious God and louing Father: And to proclaime continuall warre against them, that we may vanquish and subdue, mortifie and crucifie them; and seriously to resolute with our selues, selues, that we will vpon no conditions liue any longer in them, but renounce and forsake them with our vtermost indeuour, how pleasant and profitable soeuer they haue formerly seemed to our carnall appetite.

Fifthly, in consideration of our owne frailty and infirmity, and the malice and subtilty of our spirituall enemies, we must daily and continually feare that we be not ouertaken with the deceitfulnesse of sinne, nor caught in these snares of the deuill, which ought iustly to bee so odious and lothsome vnto vs; and haue our hearts taken vp with seruent and zealous desires, to preserve our soules and bodies in purity and honour, free from the pollution of any sinne. To which end, wee must daily with all conscionable care, keepe a diligent and straight watch ouer all our workes and wayes, but especially ouer our hearts, that they be not ouertaken with any loue or liking of sinne, but constantly repell the first motions and allurements of it, when they present themselves vnto vs; especially we must haue an eye to our naturall infirmities, and those sinnes, vnto which being most prone, we are most easily ouertaken of them. Yea, wee must in this watch carefully auoide, not onely the sinnes themselves, but also all the occasions and meanes which may draw vs to the committing of them; especially the familiar society of wicked men, who are most apt to corrupt and infect vs with their perswasions and euill examples. Finally, wee must daily resolute and indeuour, not onely to leaue and forsake all sinne, but also to serue the Lord, in performing all the contrary duties of holiness, righteousness, and sobriety, according to all good occasions and opportunities, which in the whole day, or any part thereof shall be offered vnto vs, and in all our thoughts, words, and deeds, to please the Lord, by yeelding cheerefull obedience vnto his holy will. Especially, our care and indeuour must be to perfect those graces, in which wee finde our selues most defectiue, and with extraordinary diligence to practise those duties towards God, our neighbours, and our selues, which our consciences tell vs we haue formerly most neglected, and vnto which we feele our corrupt natures to bee most backward and auerse, that so we may daily aspire to a greater growth in godlinesse, and bring forth, the longer we liue, the more and better fruits of new obedience.

And if wee would thus daily renew our repentance, the benefits arising vnto vs from this holy exercise would be inestimable. For first, we should preuent innumerable sinnes, into which, through the neglect of this duty, we fall daily, vnaduisedly, and at vnawares; but especially wee should bee armed heereby against all sinnes committed against knowledge and conscience. Secondly, if at any time through frailty we be ouertaken with any sinne, we should not lye in it, but rise againe by vnfeined repentance; and so heale the sores of sinne, whilest the wound is greene, with much greater ease, and not suffer them to fester and rankle, to our greater paine and danger. Thirdly, wee should much abate the violence of our fleshly lusts, when as though they with much labour put vs to a soyle, yet they shall not bee able, no not for one day, to keepe their hold and rule ouer vs; and who will take any great paines to so little purpose? or swallow downe that potion with any pleasure, which he must be forced to cast vp so quickly with much griefe? or imbrace that sinne vvith any great delight, which within a few houres shall be plucked from him with an holy violence and indignation? or offend so good a God, or hazard a precious soule, or disturbe the sweete peace of a good conscience, for the fruition of a sinfull pleasure so vaine, so momentany? Fourthly, though through infirmity we sometimes fall, yet shall wee hereby be preserved from sleeping in carnall security, and from being hardened through the deceitfulness of sinne, and though through weakenesse of the flesh, we slumber with the Spouse in the Canticles, yet shall we not fall into a dead sleepe, but say with her, I sleepe, but my heart waketh. Fifthly, we shall hereby preserve our consciences tender, so as they will giue vs warning when sinne maketh the least appearance, and our hearts pure and soft, so as they will easily relent with the least touch. Sixthly, we shall make the practice of a godly life, easie and familiar, and Christs yoke light, when as we are accustomed to beare it euery day. Seuenthly, wee shall either altogether keepe it from entring into our hearts, or at least from holding possession by pleading custome and prescription. Eighthly, we shall preserve peace with God, and an holy communion with him; and the peace also of a good conscience; or if there be any cause of inward iarres, we shall compound and take them vp before we sleepe. Ninthly, we shall goe to rest securely, when as we goe to bed with our quietus est, and sleepe quietly, when we haue our pardon vnder our pillow. Finally, we shall alwayes be prepared for the approach of death and Iudgement, when as we keepe alwayes our accounts ready made; and though with the five wise Virgins, we sometimes slumber and sleepe, as well as the foolish, yet hauing our oyle in our lampes, we shall be ready to rise at the first call, to enter with our Bridegroom into the marriage chamber, and communicate with him in all ioy and happinesse.

CAP. III.

Of our daily exercise in renewing of our faith.

6. Sect. I.
That the daily renewing of our faith is very profitable
and necessary.

Into this daily exercise of renewing of our repentance, wee must adde also the renewing of our faith, which is no lesse necessary then the other; for as the vertue and vigour of our bodies soone fainteth and decayeth, if they be not often and daily nourished with those elements whereof they are made and composed; so will the strength of faith be weakened and abated, if it bee not daily sustained and refreshed with those meanes and helps, by which it was begot and begun in vs, and therefore if vvhilest vve haue good stomacks in our youthfull dayes, vve thinke it not enough to refresh and nourish our bodies one day in a weeke, nor yet once in a day; but must haue our dinners and suppers, breakfasts and beuers; let vs not thinke, that it is enough for the nourishment of our soules, and strengthening of our faith, to vse spirituall repast on the Sabbath onely, vvhich though it may hold life and soule together, yet shall vve not be thriving and in good liking in our spirituall man, if vvee relieue and cherish it not vwith a more liberall hand, and allor some part of euery day to this spirituall

will be refreshed. Again, as faith in it self will faint and languish, it must be not daily refreshed and renewed, so are there also outward causes which faine and weaken it, which must daily be even daily nourished. For we daily wound and weaken it with our sins, whilst our inward guilt abateth our assurance of Gods loue, and confidence in his fauour, by laying to our charge our great unworthines of his least mercies. And therefore we had need to renew daily our faith, as we daily renew our sins, by laying hold on the Covenant of grace, which assurcth vs that our finnes shall not stop the course of Gods mercies, because their current is free, and if the streames bee not dammed vp (as it were) in the fountaine with vnbeliefe, it is not our unworthinesse can keepe them from vs. Finally, the spirituall enemies of our situation doe daily and continually assault vs, and the chiefe meanes to repell the fierie darts of their tentations, is the shield of faith; which in it selfe is not so insuperable and of high proofe, (were it not strengthened and made effectuell to preserue vs by Christs mediation) but that it is often much battered and bruised in the conflict of tentations. And therefore seeing this malice neuer ceaseth, which maketh this shield of faith alwayes necessary, and their daily assaults doe cause it to be of daily vse; it is our wisdom to let no day passe, without reuiuing and renewing it, that we may by such meanes as God hath appointed, repaire and strengthen it, so as it may be fit to preserue vs against all assaults of tentation. Ioyne we then with the daily exercise of renewing our repentance, this also of renewing our faith; and the rather, because they mutually further and strengthen one another being conioyned; but being seuered, both are weakened and dismembred, and either cannot at all be exercised of vs, or but lamely and to little purpose, in semblance and shew, not in deed and truth. For faith is the cause and very life of repentance, none truly mourning for sinne, but such as by faith being assured of Gods loue, are grieved in their hearts, that they haue grieved so louing a God; and without this filiall affection proceeding from faith, our repentance would be but like that of Cain and Judas, a worldly and desperate sorrow that worketh death. And contrariwise, repentance is the very breath of faith, which if it haue free passage, then faith not onely liueth, but flourisheth and thriuech, so that hereby, as by an infallible signe, we may know and discerne it from security and presumption; but if it faile, then the life of faith also faileth, and becommeth a dead carcasse, without all vertue and vigour, sense or motion.

Eph. 6. 16.

Luk. 22. 32.

2. Cor. 7. 10.

§. Sect. 2.

What this renewing our faith is, and the meanes whereby we may be enabled to doe it, which consist, first, in diuers meditations.

Now this daily renewing of our faith is nothing else, but after we haue humbled our soules in the sight and sense of our finnes by vnfained repentance, to refresh and strengthen it, and (as it were) to heale the wounds which our finnes haue made, by applying Christ with the soueraigne saluē of his precious blood, and the sweete promises of the Gospell made in him, assuring vs of the remission and pardon of all our finnes. Now the meanes and helpe whereby wee may be enabled to renew our faith, and in the application of these benefits, may confirme and strengthen it against doubting and incredulity, doe either respect meditation or action. We must meditate on the eternall and immutable, free and vnderferved loue of God, ouen before we were created, and after that by sinne wee had made our

our selues strangers and enemies; which moued him to giue his best beloved to the death for vs; and from hence conclude for the strengthening of our faith; that he will neuer cease to be gracious vnto vs; when as by Christ being reconciled, wee adhere and cleaue vnto him with vnfaigned loue and hearty affection. Secondly, on Gods inestimable and infinite mercies, which are farre aboue all his workes, and therefore may assure vs, that they will bee much more powerfull and all-sufficient to saue vs; then our sinnes, though neuer so innumerable and grievous, can bee to condemne vs. Thirdly, on Gods truth, which will neuer faile in any of his promises, and omnipotent power and wisdom, whereby he is infinitely able to accomplish them. Fourthly, on the all-sufficiency of Christs obedience and satisfaction, for the discharging of all our debts, and satisfying of Gods Iustice for all our sinnes, if wee make them our owne by a lively faith. Fifthly, on the Couenant of grace, which is free, and assureth vs of the pardon of our sinnes, and saluation of our soules, vpon no condition of workes or worthinesse, but onely of faith, bringing forth the fruits of vnfaigned repentance. Sixthly, on the promises of the Gospell, which being generall and indefinite, exclude none, though neuer so sinfull and unworthy; if they will thankfully receiue them as they are freely offered, and apply them to themselves by a lively faith. Seventhly, wee must meditate on the Sacraments and leales of the Couenant, whereby God hath giuen vnto vs (as it were) into our hands, Christ Iesus and all his benefits; and of his most infallible oath, whereby he hath confirmed his promises vnto vs; as also of his Spirit, whereby he hath inwardly sealed vnto vs our redemption and saluation. Eighthly, on the manifold examples of his mercy and goodnesse, extended to all repentant sinners, and that he being no respecter of persons, is as ready to make vs partakers of them, if wee doe not reiect them through vnbeliefe. Ninthly, on the manifold experience which we haue had of them towards our selues, both in temporall and spirituall benefits, and that being vchangeable in his nature and gifts, he is still ready to be alike good and gracious, if by faith we will rest and rely vpon him. Neither is it enough that wee know, and habitually beleue that God hath giuen vnto vs many and singular priuiledges; as his Sonne to be our Sauour and Redeemer; his Word, Sacraments, and holy Spirit, by which he hath effectually called vs to the knowledge and participation of this great worke of our redemption, iustification, and remission of all our sinnes, reconciliation and adoption, whereby we are made not onely children of God, but also heires of his Kingdome, assurance of continuall preservation in this life, and of saluation and glorification in the life to come; but we must actually exercise our faith, by allotting some part of the day to thinke and meditate on the excellency of these priuiledges; as what a blessed thing it is to bee saued by Christ, and deliuered out of the power of all our spirituall enemies, and to liue and die in the state of saluation: What a singular benefit it is to haue all our sinnes pardoned, and our debts cancelled, so that we neede not feare at any time to be called to Iudgement, and to giue vp our accounts, seeing Christ hath satisfied for all, and made our reckonings even for vs: What a sweet and comfortable a thing it is to haue peace with God, and peace of conscience, once, and the beames of his fauour continually shining vpon vs, and warming our hearts with ioy and gladnesse. What an inestimable priuiledge it is to be the child of God, and heire apparent to the Kingdome of heauen? which considerations, if wee seriously thinke on them, will be singular meanes to inflame our hearts with Gods loue, to iuistice them with spirituall ioy, and to make them cheerefull in Gods seruice, throughout the whole day, yea to the very end of the longest life.

And vnto these meditations, we are for the renewing of our faith to adde diuers actions; as first, we must daily renew our promises vnto God made in baptisme, and bewayling our manifold frailties and imperfections, whereby we haue often failed herein, we are to resolue and promise, that if God will accept of vs, and passe by our former infirmities, we will with more intire affection renounce sinne, Satan and all our spirituall enemies, and consecrate our selues wholly to his worship & seruice, and with greater zeale and deuotion labour in the vse of all good meanes, whereby we may attaine to more perfection. Secondly, wee must labour to finde and feele our hearts more and more inflamed with vnfaigned loue towards God, in respect of his infinite goodnesse and absolute perfection in himselfe, and graciousnesse towards vs, shining in his vspeakeable and innumerable blessings and benefits bestowed vpon vs, which loue towards God will strengthen our faith in assurance of his loue towards vs, seeing it is but a drop that distilleth from this fountaine, and but a sparke that ariseth from this infinite flame. Thirdly, we must exercise our selues in the daily practice of religious duties, as prayer, meditation, holy conferences, and such like, which will increase our communion and acquaintance with God, and more and more assure vs of his fauour. And finally, we must resolue to take all good occasions of doing daily the workes of mercy and Christian charity towards our neighbours for Gods sake, whereby our faith will get daily new assurance, that seeing we are willing and desirous to glorifie God in all things, by causing the light of our godly liues to shine before men, hee will bee no lesse willing to glorifie vs before his Saints and holy Angels in his heavenly Kingdome. For these duties of piety and righteousness, are the fruits which spring from the roote of faith, the flames and heate which proceed from this fire, the very breath whereby it liueth, and the actions and motions wherein it is exercised; and therefore if it bringeth not forth these fruits, it is but a barren tree and dead stocke, a vsclesse fire, which being couered, giueth no light or heate; a dead carcase without breath, an idle habite without vertue or vigour, and for want of exercise languisheth and decayeth daily in strength; whereas contrariwise, if the strength thereof were vsed, and seasonably employed in holy and righteous actions, it would (like the strength of the body) bee confirmed and redoubled by this daily exercise.

But that we may be the better perswaded vnto this daily exercise of renewing our faith, let vs consider more particularly the manifold and inestimable benefits which would thereby accrew vnto vs. For first we shall liue in covenant with God, haue assured title and interest vnto all his promises, without any intercession or intermission of our comfort and hope, seeing seeing God requireth of vs no other condition. Secondly, wee shall no longer liue the life of the flesh and corrupted nature, but the life of faith, which is principally sustained by God, and holdeth dependencie, not on earthly things, but chiefly on his Word and promise, which can neuer faile; and the life of Christ, subiecting our selues in all things to the reglement and gouernment of his holy Spirit; so as we may say with the Apostle, I liue, yet not I, but Christ liueth in me; and the life which I now liue in the flesh, I liue by the faith of the Sonne of God, who loued mee; and gaue himselfe for me; which life of grace certainly assureth vs of the life of glory. Thirdly, heereof it will follow, that all our thoughts, words, and workes, shall be voluntarily subiected to the good will and pleasure of God, and being daily in couenant with God, we shall, by vertue of his Spirit assisting vs, keepe all our faculties and functions, senses, and actions, in couenant with vs, that they shall in all things obey him; and doe nothing which is displeasing vnto him. Fourthly, by renewing our faith daily, we shall with it renew all the sanctifying and sauing graces which issue from it, and depend vpon it, and by watering the roote, giue vertue and vigour vnto all the branches and fruits which spring from it; whereas contrariwise wee shall spend all our labour in vaine, if neglecting faith, we vse all diligence and indeuour to increase in loue, patience, hope, or any other grace, or to bring forth plentiful fruits of them in a Christian conuersation, and the workes of mercy and charity; like those who take much paines in watering the boughes and branches of a tree, and neuer take care to water the roote. More especially, if wee daily renew our faith, wee shall heereby confirme our assurance and confidence in God, in all things, and at all times; for when we firmly by faith apply vnto our vse the power, wisdom, goodnesse, promises, and prouidence of God; and with strong imbrace-ments vnite them vnto vs, we may easily with all safety and security rest and rely vpon them. We shall heereby also strengthen our hope, which is nothing but an expectation of the things beleueed; and according as our faith is strong or weake in apprehension of the promises, so also is our hope which waiteth for their fruition. Wee shall increase by it our loue towards God: for the more and oftner we apprehend the diuine fire of his loue towards vs, the more our cold hearts are thereby inflamed with the heate of it, so that we returne vnto him loue for loue: And our zeale of Gods glory, there being no stronger argument to make vs in all things earnest to glorifie him, then to be fully assured that he will glorifie vs. It will worke in vs, and daily renew our patience, when as we daily renew our assurance, that all our afflictions are the chastizements of a louing Father, and not the punishments of a seuerer Iudge; that they are stinted and measured out vnto vs, both in respect of their quantity and continuance, by a most wise prouidence, which will not let them exceed either our strength or necessity; that they are inflicted out of meere loue, and are signes, not of our reiection, but adoption and saluation; that they shall haue a good issue, and worke together for the best, for the enriching of vs with spirituall grace, and the furthering of our eternall glory. It will increase our peace of conscience, when as our assurance is daily renewed of our peace with God, the remission of all our sinnes, and victory over all the

the enemies of our saluation; of our safety vnder his protection; and that nothing shall be able to separate his loue from vs. It will daily replenish our hearts with renewed ioyes in the holy Ghost; and after that they are exhausted with our infirmities and miseries, renewed faith will like a fresh hand draw new supplies from God the fountaine of our ioy, whill they be replenished and overflow. Yea, it will make our ioy, not like that of worldlings, in the fact, and not in the heart, momentary and mutable, like the cracking of thornes vnder a poe; whilst the bristlie fowell of prosperity feedeth in; but constant and permanent; euen in afflictions; and nothing shall be able to take it from vs. It will fill our hearts daily with the comforts of the Spirit, when as being daily renewed, it doth afresh assure vs of our communion with God; and that Christ and all his benefits doe belong vnto vs, which either respect this life, or the life to come.

Fifthly, the daily renewing of our faith, is the most effectuall meanes of our vnfeined repentance. For what can bee so powerfull an argument to make vs mourne for our sinnes with bitter griefe, as with the eye of faith to looke vpon him whom by our sinnes we haue peaced, and through the wound in his side, to see his heart so replenished with diuine loue; and as it were, supplying the place of that blood and water that issued out of him; and what can make vs more hate sinne, or to resolute please God in all holy and righteous duties, then beleeuing that the Lord being so infinitely iust, and abhorring sin with such implacable hatred, that he spared not his onely begotten and most dearly beloued Sonne, but when he bore our sinnes, caused him to beare also our griefes and sorrowes, wounded him for our transgressions, and bruiized him with the paines of death, and fearefull burthen of his wrath for our iniquities; to beleue also that he is towards vs, so infinitely merciful, that he gaue his Sonne to vs, and for vs to suffer all these torments for a time, that wee might not suffer them for euer; that he wounded him for our transgressions, that we might be healed by his hurts, cleansed and purified from the guilt, punishment and corruption of all our sinnes with the streames of his blood, acquitted by his condemnation, and reuiued by his death. For who is so audaciously desperate, as to dare by voluntarie sinning prouoke such a Iustice? who is so hard-hearted and vngatefull, as would be inticed with the baites of worldly vanities, to neglect in any thing to please so infinite a goodnesse? So what can more powerfully moue vs to flee all sinne, and to practise with all diligence all Christian duties, of holinesse and righteousness, then by faith not only to inioy Gods present blessings in their owne worth and excellency, but as earnest pennies and first fruits, pledges and pawnes of heauenly and eternall reward, where with God of his free grace hath promised to crowne all our labours and holy induours? whereas if there were no belife and expectation of reward, wee should faint vnder the waight of afflictions, languish in the performance of Christian duties, which are so ill esteemed and accepted in the world, and be wholly taken vp in the pursuite of earthly vanities, because we haue entertained no better hopes. For as one saith, They fauour earthly things, which beleue not heauenly promises, They wholly addiect themselves to things that belong vnto this transitory life, which apprehend not those things which are eternall. They feare not to sinne, who thinke that it shall haue no punishment; and finally, they become slaves to their vices, who expect not the future rewards of vertue. Sixthly, by this daily renewing of our faith, wee shall bee strengthened against all the tentations of our spirituall enemies, so as they shall not be able to hurt and wound vs, whether these daies be cast against vs from the right hand, or from the left. For faith, as an imperiectable Shield, enableth vs to ouercome and beate back tentations arising from worldly prosperity; whilst apprehending heavenly and euermlasting excellencies; it maketh vs to contemne these base and momentanie vanities; and the tentations which arise from crosses and afflictions, by perswading vs that they are the straight way that leadeth to happinesse, that they are not worthy the glory that shall be revealed; that these light and momentary afflictions worke for us a farre more exceeding and eternall weight of glory; and that if we suffer with Christ, we shall also reigne with him. Finally, faith thus dayly renewed, not onely effectually perswades vs vnto an holy resolution of leading a Christian and godly life, but also powerfully enables vs to performe all the duties thereunto required, with alacrity and cheerefulnesse, ioy and delight; for it moues vs to consecrate our selues wholly to the seruice of him, who hath graciously redeemed vs out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies, and to testifie our loue and thankfulnessse vnto him, who hath done all this for vs, by our new obedience. It vnites vs vnto Christ, and applieth vnto vs the vertue of his death, by which sin is mortified and crucified in vs, & we vnto it, & to the world, so that we wil no longer serue them in fulfilling worldly and carnall lusts, and the vertue of his resurrection, whereby we are enabled to rise from the death of sinne, to holinesse and newnesse of life. It giueth vnto vs with spirituall life, spirituall motion; it cleanseth and changeth our hearts, and taking away the old, it worketh in vs a new nature, which is actiue and operative in all holy and righteous duties, and diligent and cheerefull in the performance of them. And whereas before we either did them not at all, or but in outward shew formally and coldly, and that not without much paines and difficulty; it enableth vs now to performe them like naturall actions, with much ease and delight; so as wee can say with Dauid, that the Law of God is our chiefe delight, better vnto vs then thousands of gold and silver, and sweeter then the honey or honey-combe; And with our Sauiour, that it is our meate and drinke to doe the will of our heavenly Father. And as vnaturall motions are not without outward violence, lasting no longer then it lasteth, but naturall are easie and permanent, as the Sun shineth, and the riuer runneth of their owne accord, freely and without compulsion; so by helpe of this new nature which faith worketh in vs, our actions and motions in the waies of godlinesse are easie and pleasant, which vnto corrupt nature were, euen in respect of the outward act, harsh and difficult, continuing no longer then some outward cause of feare or reward doth fet them on going. And as the heate of a bath continueth alwaies, because it proceedeth from an inward cause, which changeth the nature of the water; whereas the waters of a pond cannot be made warme, but with much labour

bour and and difficultie, and continue in their heate no longer then the outward cause worketh it in them: so when as faith hath warmed our hearts with zeale of Gods glory, and made them actiue and operative in performing the duties of his seruice, this heate and motion continue with ease and cheerefulnesse, because they are spirituallly naturall, and proceede from an inward cause; whereas if worldly causes worke this heate of zeale (as honour and preferment in the heate of Iehu) it being vnnaturall and forced, soone returneth to its wonted coldnesse. Finally, faith thus renewed, will make vs to serue God with cheerefulnesse and delight, because it intourageth vs in our labours, by apprehending and putting into our hands, not onely the present pay of all Gods temporary blessings and benefits, but also the euidences and conueighances of our heauenly happinesse, which God of his free grace hath by his writings in the Word, and his seales the Sacraments, made ouer vnto vs. And who would not cheerefully and with ioy doe him faithfull seruice, who giueth vs present pay aboute the worth of our worke; and for our better encouragement assureth vs, that all this shall be but a small earnest in respect of the mayne bargaine, and but the first fruits of that full crop and plentiful harvest of heauenly happinesse?

C A P. III.

Of our daily exercise in seeking God, and what are the things which are required vnto it.

THe second mayne dutie, which wee are dayly, and euen throughout the day to performe, is, to seeke the Lord our God, by consecrating our selues wholly both in our soules and bodies vnto his worship and seruice. The which dutie is required in many places of the Scriptures. So Dauid exhorteth the Princes of Israel, to set their hearts and soules to seeke the Lord their God; and the Lord by his Prophet requireth it of all the people; Seeke ye the Lord whilst he may be found, and call yee vpon him while he is neere. And againe; Seeke yee the Lord, and yee shall liue. For howsoeuer the Lord, in respect of the infinitenesse and immensitie of his nature and essence, filleth all places with his presence, and therefore cannot be farre (as the Apostle speaketh) from euery one of vs; for in him we liue, and moue, and haue our being, as the heathens saw euen by the very light of nature; and though in the state of innocencie and integrity man had sweete communion with God, and inioyed the comfortable and liuely influences of his sauing graces, and dwelled in God, and God in him: yet through the fall of our first parents, and the ouerspredding corruption which did accompany it, man lost God, & was deprived of his presence; was wholly estranged from that happie and holy communion, and had all influence of his grace stopped from: And together with this inestimable losse, he lost also the sense of this losse, and of all the miseries which did accompany it, and therefore neuer cared or desired to seeke and finde him, that being againe reuinited vnto him, hee might thereby recouer his lost happinesse; till God, out of his free grace and infinite goodnesse pittying mans losse and misery, like the good Shepheard, sought vs first, who like wandring sheepe did stray from him, without any desire of returning, and carrying vs home to his sheepecfold, caused vs to finde him before we sought him, yea when wee gainelaid and refused to make this search, according to that of the Prophet cited by the Apostle, I was found of them who sought mee not; I was made manifest vnto them that enquired not after me: All the day long I haue stretched out my hands vnto a disobedient and gaine saying people. Yea, but seeing wee haue now found God, and haue him alwaies by his grace present with vs, what needeth (may some say) this daily search and disquisition, seeing that labour may seeme vaine and to little purpose, which is spent in seeking that which is already found? To which I answere, that we may doe that act in an higher degree of perfection, which in the first degrees is done already, yea, seeing wee can neuer in this world doe it so perfectly as we should, therefore we ought to doe it daily and continually, that we may aspire vnto more perfection. And this God, who by his preventing grace caused vs to seeke him for our owne good: requireth vs to doe daily and more and more for our greater good: and because all our happinesse doth consist in our finding and inioying him; not contenting himselfe that we should be in the first and least degrees happie, by finding and inioying him in some small measure, hee maketh it our daily taske to seeke him more and more, that finding him more perfectly, wee may perfect our happinesse in our full finding and fruition. Yea, in truth there is none that hath truely found him, who doth not daily indeuour to finde him more and more. For what hungry man that hath once tasted delicate meates, that can content himselfe with a taste onely, and doth not rather desire to feede on them, till he be satisfied and his hunger allayed? what wise Merchant finding a treasure in a field, which he hath long sought, contenteth himselfe onely to haue found it; and doth not rather purchase the field, that he may inioy the treasure hid in it? or finding a precious pearle, satisfieth himselfe with a slight sight of the lustre and beautie of it; and doth not rather sell all he hath, to buy it, being neuer at quiet till he safely possesseth it in his owne Cabinet? or who finding a rich mine of gold or siluer, is contented with the first oare which it offereth vnto his view; and doth not rather digge deeper and deeper, till hee haue made himselfe owner of the whole treasure? And therefore it is impossible for any man, that hath tasted how good God is to those that seeke him, to leaue off and so content himselfe; but hee will labour still to feede on him more and more, till he (as the Psalmist speaketh) be satisfied with his likenesse in the Kingdome of heauen, seeing in his greatest fruition in this life, hee knoweth that he wanteth much of him. And to leaue off further hungering after God, after that wee haue tasted of his loue, bounty and goodnesse, and to content our selues with a taste only, without further feeding on them, is an euident signe that we are in the number of those relapsed hypocrites, who cannot be renewed by repentance. It is impossible, that if euer we truely felt the incomparable pleasure of Gods presence, but that we should seeke to inioy it more and more, til we attaine vnto fulnes of ioy in our full fruitiō in Gods Kingdome.

Psal. 17. 15.

Heb. 6. 5, 6.

Let

Let vs then make it our daily exercise to seeke the Lord our God, whom to finde, and to bee happy and blessed, is all one; and whom to misse and lose, is to be miserable and accursed, though we should gaine and enjoy the whole world, and all the happinesse which it can offer vnto vs. And to this end, let vs consider what it is to seeke God, so as we may be sure to finde him. Secondly, the manner and properties of this seeking. Thirdly, the inestimable benefits which accrew vnto them who daily seeke and finde him. And lastly, the euils, miseries, and mischiefs, which befall all those that neglect this holy duty. For the first, to seeke God, is to labour daily in and through Christ, to recouer and make him our owne, whom wee haue lost through the fall of Adam, and our owne originall corruption and actuall transgressions; that being reconciled and reuinited vnto him, and so becoming one with him, and he with vs, we may bee happy and blessed in his fruition. For in and through Christ alone, God is to be sought of vs; and by him and no other possible meanes can we euer finde him; in him onely Gods Iustice is satisfied, and wrath appeased; in him, as our alone propitiatory sacrifice, he is well-pleased, and being reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, of a seuerer Iudge and terrible enemy, he is become our gracious Father and chiefest friend. And so perfectly hath hee made our peace through the blood of his Crosse, that hee hath left nothing for vs to doe, but ioyning with his holy Spirit, to labour that this inestimable benefit may be applyed vnto vs; which is chiefly done by seeking and suing, with earnest desires and hearty inducours to obtaine and make it our owne by faith.

And to this seeking of God and his fauour in Christ, there are diuers things required; first, that wee labour daily more and more perfectly to know him, not so much what he is in his owne nature, essence, and attributes; as what he is in Christ vnto vs, that is, infinitely wise to gouerne vs, and all sufficient by his Word and Spirit to make vs wise vnto saluation; that he is omnipotent to defend vs, and giue vs victory ouer all our enemies; that he is immutable, not onely in his owne nature, but in his loue, goodnesse, and gifts vnto vs; that he is true to performe vnto vs his gracious promises, and mercifull to forgive vs our finnes, and saue our soules; that Christ is an all-sufficient and perfect Redeemer, to deliuer vs out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies; and to bring vnto vs full redemption; that the Spirit is not onely holy in his owne nature, but also to worke in vs sanctification and holinesse. In all which, and all other respects, we are not so much to labour to know these things in speculation, as in practice and experience; nor to apprehend them in the braine, as to seele them in our hearts, nor to conceiue of their excellency and sufficiency as causes, but experimentally to seele and shade their efficacy, in producing their effects, and bringing forth their fruits in vs. And this is that excellent knowledge which the Apostle so much and continually laboured to attaine vnto, as a thing which being of most excellent vse, was also of great difficulty; and therefore he was content to be taken vp wholly of it, and in comparison of it, to neglect all other knowledge, not onely to know that Christ died and rose againe, and the vertue and sufficiency of them for his iustification and saluation, which were but the study of a few dayes or houres, and is easie to bee found and learned in every Catechisme, and therefore it is not to be thought that the Apostle, who was of such excellent gifts, and illuminated with such an extraordinary measure of knowledge, did take so much paines, and spend his chiefest time and strength in attaining vnto it; but to finde and feele the power and efficacy of Christs death and resurrection in his owne heart, for the strengthening of his faith, the inflaming of his loue, the mortifying of his corruptions, and his spirituall quickening vnto new obedience and holinesse of life. And as wee are thus daily to seek God, by labouring more perfectly and effectually to know him; so also by indepouring to haue these things thus knowne in continuall remembrance, that thinking and meditating on them, wee may take all good occasions to reape the fruit and benefit of them for our owne vse, to speake of them as opportunity is offered, for the good and edification of others, and to draw this knowledge into continuall practice, for the reforming and amending of our liues and conuersations. To which purpose, we must daily indepour to purge our memories, and to cast out of these store-houses the rubbish and trash of sinfull vanities, which doe but cumber the roome, and take vp the place of spirituall riches and heavenly provision, and as it were to blot out of these tables all lessons of impiety, which in the dayes of our ignorance were written in them, with all vaine, carnall, and corrupt motions and conceits, which will bee so many distractions to withdraw our minds from God and spirituall meditations; and in place hereof wee must strue to write in them all profitable instructions, which we haue formerly learned, and those especially which we haue obserued in our last holy and spirituall exercises. And if wee thus like scholers daily say our part, and recall to our remembrance the lessons which we haue learned the last Sabbath, or any day of the weeke besides, they will be so deeply imprinted in our memories, that they will not easily be forgotten, neither will the learning of new lessons, be a meanes to put out the old, and make vs forget what we haue formerly learned.

Secondly, vnto this daily exercise of seeking God, it is required, that wee doe continually adhere and cleaue vnto him with our hearts and affections; that wee labour and indepour daily more and more to weane them from the world and worldly vanities, that they may wholly be fixed and fastned vpon him, not affecting and doting vpon earthly and momentany trifles which profit not, but minding spirituall and heavenly excellencies, and seeking those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God; and that we doe not carry our selues as Citizens of the earth, where we haue no abiding place, but that we haue our conuersation in heauen, from whence wee expect a Saviour and Redeemer. More especially, wee must withdraw our alliance and trust from the armes of flesh, and earthly helps and props, which will most faile vs when wee most rely vpon them; and fasten them wholly vpon God the immouable Rocke of our saluation, and our chiefe Tower of strength, resting vpon him at all times, and for all things, provision in time of want, protection in time of danger, as well in the absence as presence of all inferiour meanes; knowing that he is infinitely gracious, and all-sufficient to pre-

secure and defend vs without, as well as with them. Wee must also fasten our hopes daily vpon God, who is the sure anchor-hold that will stay and secure vs against all the stormes of troubles and tentations; and daily comfort our selues in our earthly pilgrimage, and take encouragement in the performance of all good duties, euen when wee are crossed in them, and persecuted for them of the world, by continuall renewing our expectation of the performance of Gods gracious promises, especially those that concerne a better life, which will make vs to purge our selues, as he also is pure, and not to doe any thing which may any way hazard our heavenly happinesse. Moreover, wee must labour daily that the true feare of the Lord may more and more possesse our hearts, making vs to reuerence him as our heavenly Father, and to stand in awe of him as our supreme Lord and King. By which sonne-like & holy feare, we shalbe more powerfully restrained from all sinne, because it is displeasing vnto our louing Father, then by all humane lawes, shame of men, or the sharpest and sorest punishments; and inticed with more cheerefulnesse vnto all Christian duties, because they are pleasing in his sight, then by all earthly hopes or temporary rewards. By it all other seruile feare of men will bee expelled, because when they haue done their worst, they can but kill the body; and when they haue most severely whipped vs, put a Passport into our hands, for our more speedy conducting into our heavenly Countrey: and fearing onely God, we shall become bold and couragious in all good duties, and not caring greatly what men can say or doe, we will yeeld absolute obedience vnto Gods Commandements, and submit our selues in all things to be ruled by his Word and holy Spirit. And so shall wee approoue our selues to be true Israelites, sound members of the Church, and loyall Subjects of Christs Kingdome; of whom it is prophesied, that they shall returne and seek the Lord their God, and Dauid their King, and shall feare the Lord and his goodnesse in the latter dayes.

Fourthly, vnto this daily exercise there is required, that we doe adhere vnto him by most seruent loue, setting our affections vpon him, and louing him aboue all things with all our mindes, with all our soules and with all our strength: And that we daily and continually renew our loue, by considering that he is in himselfe the chiefe goodnesse, infinite in all excellencie, beauty, mercy and all perfection, and therefore most louely and amiable; and also towards vs most good and gracious, benigne and bountifull. In which respects we are to esteeme it our chiefe happinesse, to be by his loue towards vs and ours towards him, vnited vnto him, and to inioy him as our chiefe goodnesse and blessednesse. For if worldly men doe place all their happinesse in the fruition of those earthly things vnto which by loue their hearts are firmly vnited, as the ambitious man, in the inioying of his desired honours; the conetous man, of his beloued riches; the voluptuous man, of his wished pleasures; the carnall loue, in the obtaining of his loue; how much more ought we to esteeme it the top and perfection of our felicity, when by seruent loue we inioy God, being inseparably vnited vnto him, and hee vnto vs in the bonds of loue: how much more should our hearts bee rauished with delight (as the Spouse in the Canticles) with our mutuall and sweete imbracements;

entercourse of kindnesse, and tokens and testimonies of loue towards one another? In which loue if we would be truly happie, our daily care must bee to weane our hearts and affections more and more from the loue of the world and worldly vanities, that they may be wholly fastened and fixed vpon God; and as men, when they would intend the whole strength of their sight to the more perfect beholding of an obiekt, do winke with one eye, that all the visuall spirits being collected in the other, they may more vigourously and exactly discern and comprehend it: so if wee would haue the whole keyes and influences of our affections directed vnto God, we must shut and auert them from the world, that wee may comprehend and imbrace him with more perfection, when they are wholly and solely fixed on him. Besides, the Lord is a ieaious God, who can indure no competitors in his loue, and much lesse that wee should share and diuide our hearts betweene him and his enemies. He cannot abide, that professing our selues his chaste Spouse, we should like filthy strumpets haue our hearts goe a whoring after strange louers. To which purpose one saith, that that soule cannot be filled with the gracious visitations of the Lord, which is subiect to worldly distractions, and by how much the more it is emptied of them, by so much it shalbe the more filled of the other; if much, then much; if little, then little. For if the Apostles adhering to the Lords bodily presence, which was most holy, could not be filled with the Spirit, till he was taken from them; how canst thou hope, who art glued and fastened to the world and thy filthy flesh, to haue the sweete presence of God and comforts of his Spirit, vnlesse thou indeuourest to renounce these camall comforts?

Cant. 5. 2. 3.

Amos 3. 3.

Rom. 5. 1.

The fifth speciall duty required vnto our daily seeking of God, is, that wee labour more and more to haue our sweete communion with him increased, and the comfortable fellowship of his holy Spirit dwelling in our hearts, sealed and assured vnto vs. To which end it must bee our daily exercise, to purge and purifie them by faith from all noisome corruptions and sinfull thoughts; that they may bee fit temples and habitations for this pure and holy Spirit to dwell in; and to decke and adorne them with sanctifying graces, which will cause him to keepe his residence in vs with cheerefulness and delight: we must also submit our selues to be ruled by him, and not quench any good motion which hee suggesteth, either by rebellious and flat denials, or by vaine excuses and sluggish delaies, but presently put the duties in practice vnto which he moueth vs, and open the dore of our hearts at his first knock and call, that hee may come in, and supping with vs, feast vs with a most delicious banquet of Spirituall refections; lest putting off his kinde offers with slothfull excuses (like the Spouse in the Canticles) we moue him to depart, and hide from vs his gracious presence, and so moue vs by a sorrowfull and painefull search, before we can recouer and finde him, to make more precious account of his company when we doe againe inioy it. We must be carefull to preserue our peace with him, if we would inioy his company; for as the Prophet speaketh, How can two walke together, except they be agreed? To which end we must often renew our faith, and after any slip or infirmity, rely vpon the mediation of our Sauour Christ for our

reconciliation and renewing of our peace. Neither must we alone apply Christ vnto vs for iustification, but also for sanctification, endeavouring in all things to please God; and if we desire to haue the peace of him, wee must binde our soules to our good behauiour; labouring with feruent zeale to glorifie him in all our cogitations, words, and actions, not passing any of our time vnfruitfully and vnprofitably: but imploying it so, as some glory thereby may redound to God, and some comfort to our owne soules, by furthering the assurance of their saluation. Contrariwise our care must bee, that wee doe not vex and grieue the good Spirit of God, by quenching his good motions which hee suggesteth, or by defiling our soules with sinfull corruptions; especially, that we doe not suffer voluntarily and wilfully any knowne sinnes to dwell in vs, which will pollute our soules and bodies, and making them fitter to bee cages for vncleane Birds, and noysome styes for filthy Swine, then Temples and habitations for him to dwell in, will moue him, as weary of his lodging, to depart from vs. Moreouer, hauing this sweete communion with God, and comfortable fruition of his presence, by his holy Spirit dwelling in vs, wee must labour to preserue it inuiolable, by carrying our selues daily, and in all our thoughts, words, and actions, as in his sight, and not to doe any thing before him, which wee would bee ashamed to doe in the presence of a man that is iust and religious. And seeing wee haue such communion with God, wee must endeavour to bee holy, as he is holy; for the Lord will bee sanctified in all those that come so nigh him, either in his mercy or Iudgements; and being a consuming fire, wee must take heede that we bee not as stubble and chaffe, but as pure gold, which will not be consumed, but be made daily more pure by our communion with him. Finally, hauing this communion with God, wee must reioyce in him about all things in the world; and as this communion must not bee by fits and starts, like that with our worldly friends, whom wee visite onely at good times, or when wee haue got some leasure from our businesse, but constant, daily, and continuall, like the communion of man and wife, who should dwell together in the same house, or of the head with the members, and soule with the body, which whilest life lasteth, admit of no diuision or separation: so must our ioy and reioicing in God caused by this communion, be constant and continuall; according to that of the Apostle, Reioyce euermore: And againe, Reioyce in the Lord alwayes: and againe, I say, Reioyce; not onely in worldly prosperity; but also in affliction and tribulation; for if wee inioy this neere communion with God, hee may much more fitly say vnto vs, as Elcanah to Annah, Am not I much better vnto thee then all worldly comforts, which are vaine and worthlesse, for they last but a while, and leaue thee when thou most needest them? And this ioy will support vs, euen when all other forsake vs, and make our labour of loue light and easie, which wee undertake for the Lords sake; It will weane our hearts for all carnall delights, and make vs euen with great ioy and comfort to finish our tedious pilgrimage, when as wee haue the ioy and delight of so sweete a Companion in all our Trauailes.

Sixthly, to the daily seeking of God, is required, that we daily renew our repentance; for these in the Scriptures are vsually ioyned together, to intimate vnto vs that we then seeke God, when as wee doe vnfaignedly repent vs of our sinnes. Thus the Lord promiserh, that if the people of Israel would in their tribulation seeke the Lord, with all their heart, and with all their soule, and turne to the Lord their God, and bee obedient vnto his voyce, then they should finde him. And that if they should humble themselves and pray, and seeke his face, and turne from their euill wayes, then he would heare from heauen, forgieue their sinnes, and heale their land. So the Prophet Esay ioyneth these together: Seeke yee the Lord while hee may bee found; call ye vpon him while hee is neere. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the vniust man his thoughts, and let him returne vnto the Lord, and he will haue mercy vpon him. Without which vnfaigned repentance, we cannot truly be said to seeke God, or to haue any communion with him; for if wee say that wee haue any fellowship with him, and walke in darkenesse, we lye, and doe not the truth. More especially we must seeke the Lord, by humbling our selues in true contrition and sorrow for our sinnes, which haue estranged God from vs, and made vs lose the sense and assurance of his loue and fauour. And therefore the Lord exhorteth the meeke of the earth to seeke him, that they might be hid in the day of his anger: And saith, that Israel and Iudah should come together, going and weeping, and should goe and seeke the Lord their God. Secondly, we must seeke him, not onely by bewailing and forsaking our sinnes, but also by bringing foorth the fruits of new obedience. Whereof it is, that these also are conioyned in the Scriptures; Hearken vnto me, ye that follow after rightconfsnesse, ye that seeke the Lord. Thus Iudah is commanded to seeke the Lord God of their fathers, and to doe after the Law and the Commandement. And Iehoshaphat is commended, because he sought the Lord God of his father, and walked in his commandements: which duties, if we ioyne together, we shall be blessed; according to that of the Psalmist, Blessed are they that keepe his Testimonies, and that seeke him with their whole heart.

Finally, to this duty of seeking God, is required, that we seeke to haue and to hold his face and fauour in Iesus Christ; desiring nothing more in the world, then to haue the bright beames of his countenance continually shining vpon vs, and to finde and feele the sweete and vitall influences of his fauour, warming our hearts with ioy and comfort; for in him wee liue, and mooue, and haue our being: and if hee graciously behold vs with the benigne aspect of his mercy and loue, we liue and flourish; but if hee doe turne away his face, we are troubled; and if he but blow vpon vs with the breath of his displeasure, our breath will faile, and dying, we shall returne to our dust. He is the life-giuing Planet, and Sunne of all comfort and ioy, who by the beames and influences of his fauour, both giueth vs life, and preserueth vs in our well-being. And therefore as the inferiour creatures are much indammaged, when in the eclipses of the Sunne they are for a short time depriued of its presence and vitall influences; so cannot our soules but receiue much hurt and spirituall detriment, if the beames of Gods fauour be for the shortest moment eclipsed from vs. Heereof it is, that we are exhorted to seeke the Lord and his face, because in him, our life life and strength, vertue and vigour chiefly consisteth. Seek the Lord and his strength, seek his face euermore. And therefore no sooner was David moued to performe this duty, but presently he undertaketh it, as being aboue all other things most pleasant and profitable. When thou saydest (saith he) Seek ye my face, my heart said vnto thee, Thy face, Lord, will I seeke. And hence it is, that if the Lord did neuer so little estrange himselfe, he doth so earnestly pray that hee would not hide his face from him; and cryeth out at a man vnto a man, forlome and forsaken of all hope and comfort, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? why art thou so farre from helping me; and from the words of my roaring? And contrariwise, when he enioyed Gods face and fauour, he thought himselfe much more happy, then in the fruition of all earthly blessings. There are many (saith he) that say, Who will shew vs any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance vpon vs. Thou hast put gladnesse in my heart, more then in the time that their corne and wine increased. Now the meanes whereby we may preserue and assure vnto our selues, the face, fauour, and louing countenance of God, is daily to strue and labour after greater perfection in all spirituall graces, and in the duties of his seruice; as to know him more perfectly, to beleue in him more assuredly, to loue him more intirely, to feare him more reuerently, to trust in him more firmly, to hope in him more cheerefully and patiently, to call vpon him more deuoutly and feruently, to heare his Word more attentiuely, and to performe all the duties of piety, righteousness, and sobriety, more sincerely and diligently then we did the day before. And if we thus labour and indeuour to please God in all things, we shall be sure of his fauour, and notwithstanding our manifold infirmities, he will shine vpon vs with the light of his countenance, and graciously accept, and be well pleased with vs in the face of his Beloued, and our onely Saviour Iesus Christ.

*Of the right manner of seeking God, so as we may be sure to finde him:
and of the benefits which arise from it.*

AND these are the things which are required to this duty of seeking God daily. The second point propounded, was the manner how he is to be thus sought of vs. In which respect, wee are to seeke him rightly, according to the direction of his Word. Wherein is required, first, that we seeke God first and principally, that is, aboue all things in the world, more highly esteeming him in our iudgements, more often thinking on him in our meditations, more feruently cleauing vnto him, in our hearts, wils, and affections, more diligently seeking his grace and fauour in all our actions, then the greatest excellencies that heauen or earth can afford vnto vs. Secondly, wee must seeke him first in time, and before all other things, as men vse to seeke first things chiefly necessary, profitable, and of greatest value and excellency, and when they haue any spare time, things of lesse vse, vtility, or worth; as treasures, before lumber, meanes of life, foode, apparel, parell, liberty and peace, before superfluities and such things, as serve onely for ornament and delight. Thirdly, wee must seeke him in the opportune, seasonable, and acceptable time when he may bee found, that is, whilst the day of saluation lasteth, and whilst yet God offereth vnto vs his grace and fauour, and still vouchsafeth vnto vs his holy Ordinances, that seeking, we may find him in them. Yea, whilst God biddeth vs seeke his face, and euen as soone as the word is come out of his mouth, our hearts must answer, Thy face, O Lord, will I seeke. So the Lord by his Prophet exhorteth vs: Seeke ye the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is neere. And the Church and people of God perswade one another, Let vs goe speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seeke the Lord of hosts, and I will goe also. We must seeke the Bridegroom when hee is come into his Garden, and inuiterh vs to feast with him in his spirituall delicacies. And whilst he knocketh at the dore of our hearts with the finger of his Spirit, and calleth vnto vs by the ministry of his Word, saying, Open vnto me, my sister, my loue, my dove, my undefiled: Wee must not giue him a come againe, nor put him off with slight excuses; lest he punish our sloth, by withdrawing himselfe and the comforts of his Spirit from vs; and because we would not open when he knocked, nor answer when hee called, he make vs to knocke, and call and cry, before he will heare vs, and to seeke him with sorrow, before he will be found of vs, that so he may make vs afterwards to esteeme more of his gracious offers, and to make more precious account of his comfortable presence, when hee doth againe vouchsafe it vnto vs; which we did not greatly value, when as we might haue enjoyed it with ease and pleasure. Now the most seasonable time of seeking God, are the dayes of our youth, and when with good Iosias we seeke him in our tender age, for he seeketh him best and most acceptably, that seeketh him soonest and with best speede. Which if we haue neglected, then the best time of seeking him is the time present, and while yet the sound of his voyce in the ministry of his Word ringeth in our eares, calling vs to turne from our sinnes, and returne vnto him. For whilest God seeketh vs in his holy ordinances, it is fit time of seeking him, neither is the acceptable time and day of saluation past, whilest yet the light of the Gospell shineth vnto vs, and therefore to day if ye will heare his voyce, harden not your hearts. But if wee neglect this time, and let Christ goe away, through our prophanenesse or slothfull negligence, hee will say vnto vs as he did vnto the Iewes; Ye shall seeke me, and shall not finde me; and where I am, thither ye cannot come. And finally, as in respect of the time, we must seeke him seasonably, so also constantly, that is, continually, and to the end of our liues, when as hauing full fruition of him, we shall be secure in his presence, and without feare of losing him. Wee must seeke him, not onely in the day of aduersity and affliction, when wee most sensibly apprehend our neede of him: for this may be performed by the greatest hypocrites, and the most despisers of his grace at other times; but also in the time of our prosperity, when carnall reason would perswade vs, that hauing all things at our hearts desire, we haue lesse neede to sue and seeke vnto him. Not onely when he sheweth his glory and greatnesse vpon extraordinary occasions, as by terrible thunder, lightning, earthquakes, and such like, which caused the

the rebellious Israelites to seeke him, when they had formerly reiect-ed him; but wee must continue this duty at all times, according to that wish of the Lord, in the behalfe of the Israelites; O that there were such an heart in them, that they would feare me, and keepe my Commandments alwayes, &c.

And after this manner we ought to seeke God, in respect of the time;
in respect of the person in whom we must seeke him, it must be in the face of his Anointed, and the alone mediation of Iesus Christ, the Sonne of his loue, in whom onely he will be found of vs. For if wee seeke him in our owne merites, workes, and worthinesse, we shall, in regard of their imperfections and corruptions, be more estranged from him. In respect of our selues who are the seekers, we must seeke him, if we meane to find him, after a right manner; first, sincerely and vprightly, with all our hearts and soules, wills and affections. So Dauid exhorteth the Princes of Israel, to set their hearts and soules to seeke the Lord their God. And heerein propoun-deth himselfe; as an example for our imitation, professing that with his whole heart he had sought the Lord. Thus Asa and the people of Iuda entered into a covenent to seeke the Lord God of their fathers, with all their heart, and with all their soule. Which sincere seeking onely hath the promise of finding him; according to that in Deuteronomie, If from thence thou shalt seeke the Lord thy God, thou shalt finde him; if thou seeke him with all thine heart, and with all thy soule. And so the Lord promiseth the people of Judash, that if in the land of their captivity they would seeke the Lord, they should finde him, if they should search for him with all their heart. Secondly, we must seeke the Lord, not coldly and formally, as though we were care-lesse whether we found him or not, but zealously, and with all earnestnesse, as being the chiefe thing which we desire. And as the couetous man neg-lecteth his meate, that he may get money; and the famished man money, that he may get meate to satisfie his hunger: so must we couet and hunger after Gods presence, and labour to inioy his face and fauour, more then to injoy all our earthly desires. And this seruencie of affection in seeking God, is in most lively manner exprest in the example of the Spouse in the Canticles, seeking her Bridegroom, who like a woman rauished with the excellencies of her Louer, and euē mad with loue, hath her heart so fixed on him, that she can rest neither night nor day; but euē in her bed where shee should sleepe, her mind runneth on him; and betwene sleeping and waking, vp she starteth to let him in whom her soule loueth; of which hope, when she findeth her selfe frustrate, by his withdrawing himselfe, she calleth vnto him, and seeketh for him; and hauing neither an-swere, nor desired successe, she runneth about the streets of the Citie, euē in the night, and enquireth of the Watchmen, and every one shee met (as though the heate of loue, had made her to cast off the Vaile of modesty) if they could tell her no tidings of her Beloued; being neuer at rest till she had found him, and had againe gotten him within her imbracements.
Finally, vnto this seruency in affection, we must ioine diligence in action, indecouring and labouring in the vse of all good meanes, whereby we may finde God, and bee more and more assured of his grace and fauour. For vnto this sedulity in seeking God, are the promises made; and the Apostle tellet

telleth vs, that he is a bountifull rewarder of them that diligently seek him. As therefore they who haue lost some precious iewell wherein their chiefe wealth consisteth, doe not content themselues with a slight search, but set all other businesse aside to seeke it, and are so intent and wholly taken vp with their employment, that they can scarce finde any time to sit downe and rest them, yea to eate, drinke or sleepe, till they haue found it; and haue all their thoughts so intent vpon this one thing which they haue in hand, that they minde not what is spoken or done in other matters; so must wee vse the like or greater diligence in seeking God, who is of infinite more value then all the Iewels of the world. And if David was so wholly intent in preparing a visible place of Gods presence, that hee protesteth to neglect all other things in comparison of it; as that hee would not come into the tabernacle of his house, nor goe vp into his bed; nor giue sleepe vnto his eyes, nor slumber vnto his eye-liddes, vntill hee might finde a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Iacob: then how much more should wee bee diligent and earnest aboue all things in seeking God, that wee may haue him to reside and dwell with vs in the temple of our hearts?

The third point to be considered, is the manifold fruits and benefits which they receiue and inioy who thus daily seeke God. For first, they shall not be confounded by any shame, nor with the malice and might of all their enemies, according to that of the Psalmist, Let not those that seeke thee, be confounded for my sake, O God of Israel. Their infirmities shall not be laid to their charge, nor their imperfections, corruptions and failings in performing the duties of Gods seruice; as appeareth by the prayer of Hezekias for them, who had prepared their hearts to seeke God, whom God pardoned, though they were not cleansed according to the purification of the Sanctuary. They shall not lose their labour, nor spend their strength in vaine; for the Lord hath promised that those who thus seeke him, shall surely finde him. If thou seeke the Lord thy God, thou shalt finde him, if thou seeke him with all thine heart. So Azariah telleth Asa and the people, that the Lord would bee with them, while they were with him: and if they sought him, he would be found of them; the which he confirmeth by the experience which their fathers had hereof in former times, euen as afterwards they found the Word of God in his mouth confirmed in their owne experience; for no sooner did they set themselves to seeke the Lord with their whole desire, but he was found of them, and the Lord gaue them rest round about. And as wee shall by seeking God be freed from all euill, so shall we haue the fruition of all good; for we shall inioy God himselfe, and hee will dwell in vs as in his Temple, and communicate himselfe vnto vs as vnto his loue and Spouse. Neither will he come empty-handed, but bring with him his rich rewards: and as he is infinitely good in himselfe, so will he bee good vnto them that waite for him, and to the soule that seeketh him. He will not let any good thing bee wanting vnto them. They shall receiue the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of their saluation. They shall prosper in all their workes, be preferred from all dangers, and deliuered from all euill; for the hand of the Lord is vpon them for good that seeke him.

him, but his power and his wrath is against all them that forsake him. He will not forsake them; but will hide them in the day of his anger. They shall receive spirituall growth in all graces, through the beames of his brightness, and the sweet influences of his fauour, as the hearbes and trees receive growth and become fruitfull, by the vertue of the Sun that shineth vpon them. Yea, themselves shall be as the shining light, that shineth more and more to the perfect day; and in his light they shall see light, and be admitted to the sight and contemplation of his secret counsels. They shall haue their faith and affiance in God more and more confirmed through that familiarity and communion which they haue with him; and hauing peace with God, they shall haue also peace of conscience, and peace with all the creatures. They shall haue safety and Christian security in Gods presence, fauour, and protection, and he will give them rest on all sides, because they haue sought the Lord their God. So as they may say with Dauid; I will not bee affraide of ten thousand of people that haue set themselves against mee round about. Though I walke through the vale of the shaddow of death, I will feare no euill: for thou, Lord, art with me; thy rod and thy staffe they comfort me. God is our refuge and strength, a very present helpe in trouble; therefore will not we feare, though the earth be removed, and though the mountaines bee cast into the midst of the sea, &c. And in the greatest garboyles of worldly troubles, they may say with him, I will both lay mee downe and sleepe, for thou, Lord, onely makest me dwell in safety. They shall haue their hearts filled with ioy and gladnesse in the fruition of his fauour, and shall, aboue all others, haue continuall cause of reioycing; according to that of the Psalmist, Let all those that seeke thee, reioyce & be glad in thee, and let all such as loue thy saluation, say continually, Let God be magnified. And againe: Glory ye in his holy name, let the heart of them reioyce that seeke the Lord. They shall lead an holy and vnblameable life, when as they are alwaies taken vp in these pious exercises, and attaine daily vnto more and more perfection in all sauing graces, and in the performance of all Christian duties. Yea, they shall haue not onely abundance of grace and all Spirituall good in this life, but also of glory in the life to come. For they that seeke God now, shall then perfectly finde him, and with him eternall blessednesse in the fruition of the chiefe goodnesse, according to that of the Prophet Dauid: They that seeke the Lord with their whole heart, are blessed; for they shall liue the life of Grace here, and the life of glory in the world to come.

Finally, the euils and mischiefs are manifold which follow the neglect of this dutie of seeking God: for Gods power and wrath is against them, to bring vpon them the punishment of their neglect. Hee will withdraw from such his comfortable presence; and by grieuous afflictions enforce vpon them this dutie, which they will not doe cheerefully and of their owne accord, according to that in Hosea: I will goe and returne to my place, till they acknowledge their offence and seeke my face; in their afflictions they will seeke me early. They shall not prosper in any thing which they doe or take in hand, as the Lord threateneth the brutish pastors of Iudah. And as the flowres and plants cannot thriue and flourish, which inioy not the light and warmth of the Sun: so much lesse shall they prosper and grow

Finally, the Lord hath threatned to stretch out his hand, and take vengeance on them that have not sought the Lord, nor enquired for him; yea, that he will laugh at their destruction; and delight himselfe in their punishments, as he intimateth, by comparing the day of vengeance to a day of solemne sacrifice, vnto which he inuiteth his guests; that they may be spectators of these fearefull examples; and glorifie his Iustice in the deserved punishments of those who had not sought him.

CAP. VII.

Of the Christian Armour which we must put on daily, and of the benefits which wee shall reape thereby.

6. Sect. 1.
Of the seuerall
parts of the Christian armour.

WE haue intreated the more largely of that maine duty of seeking God, as being not onely the chiefe and principall of all that are to be performed in the daily exercise, but euen the roote and fountaine, summe and substance of all the rest from which they spring, and in which they are comprised. In which respect the other that remaine to be spoken of, may be passed ouer with greater breuity, as being all but speciall branches of the former duty, and streames that will readily & naturally flow from that fountaine. The third maine duty then in this daily exercise, is, that we put on the whole armour of God, which is, that we looke continually vnto our selues, that we bee thoroughly furnished, and as it were, armed at all points with the maine, fundamentall, sanctifying and sauing graces of Gods holy Spirit, whereby we may bee inabled to stand in the day of triall, and to resist those daily tentations wherewith we are assaulted by our spirituall enemies. The chiefe & principall whercof, the Apostle hath in the Epistle to the Ephesians prescribed vnto vs. The first is, the girdle of verity; wherby is meant, that we should not onely imbrace the truth of Religion, and frame our iudgements, affections and actions according to the sincere and pure Word of God; but also that our knowledge, profession and practice, be in truth and sincerity of heart, carrying our selues in all things vpriightly, and in the integrity of a good conscience. The second is, the breastplate of righteousness, whereby we vnderstand true sanctification and godlinesse, consisting in an earnest desire, a firme resolution, and constant indeuour of conforming our whole liues according to Gods reuealed will, that wee may please him in all things, and haue both our persons and actions accepted in his sight. The third is, that our feete bee shod with the preparation of the Gospell of peace: that is, as souldiers that haue good shooes and leg-harnesse, are thereby enabled to hold on their march in stonie and rough wayes, and thorow the midst of briers and thornes; whereas if they were barefooted, or ill shod, they would be pricked and gauled, and soone tire and faint in the way: So must we daily arme our affections, the seete of our soules, with all the sweete comforts and gracious promises of the Gospell, made

unto those who hold out vnto the end, and fight vntill they overcome, without which we shall soone be wearied, and faint in the way, seeing it is rough and vnpleasant to flesh and blood, and full of the thornes and briers of afflictions and persecutions. The fourth piece of the Christian armour is, the shield of faith, which also we must daily put on, applying a fresh vnto our selues Gods mercies in the merits of Christ, the gracious promises of the Gospell, and the satisfaction and obedience of our Saviour and Redeemer, whereby, though we be neuer so weake in our owne strength, we shall be enabled to resist all Satans tentations, and to quench and beate backe all the fiery darts of the wicked one, so as they shall not be able to wound or doe vs any harme. The fifth piece which we must daily put on, is, the helmet of saluation, that is, we must continually renew and reuine our hopes, and expect and waite for with patience, the accomplishment of all Gods gracious promises, which by faith we beleue and apprehend. And this will notably encourage vs in all Christian duties of a godly life, seeme they neuer so irksome and tedious vnto vs, when as we haue daily an eye to the recompence of reward; and to indure any hard measure at the hands of the world, and to drinke the deepest draught in the cup of affliction and persecution for Gods sake and the Gospels which wee profess; when as wee assuredly hope, that the greatest crosses and calamities are not worthy the glory which shall be reueiled, because they are light and momentanie, but the crowne of happinesse which they helpe to see vpon our heads, most excellent and eternall. The sixth and last piece, is, the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God, which being rightly managed, is sufficient to defend our selues, and offend and driue backe the Enemie, as wee see in the example of our Saviour Christ, who vsed no other weapon to vanquish Satan and all his tentons. We must therfore daily exercise our selues in reading and meditating in the holy Scriptures, which will serue as a light to guide vs in all our wayes, as a goade in our sides, if wee bee sluggish, as cordiall water, if wee bee ready to faint with feeblenesse, and as a two-handed sword, to defend vs against all enemies who assaile vs in the way, and labour to hinder and discourage vs in our Christian course and conuersation. And this armour we must put on, not piecemeale, but compleate and in all the parts. We must not put on some parts only, and let other pieces of it lye by, but, as the Apostle speaketh, we must put on the whole armour of God; for if any part be wanting, we shall lie open to the wounds of our spirituall enemies. Neither must we put it on one day on, and leaue it off another, but we must put it on daily, seeing we are continually assailed, and haue no one day of truce, till by death we haue gotten a full and finall victory. It must not like armour in the time of peace lie by, or hang rusting vpon the walles; but we must alwaies keepe it bright and furnished, fit for daily vse, & fast buckled vnto vs both day and night, sleeping and waking, seeing we are continually in the battaile, encountred at all times, and euen every houre, with the tentations of our spirituall enemies. And to this end we must continually keepe the Christian watch, as the Apostle exhorteth, that wee be not through our sloth and sluggishnesse surprized as vnawares. And because it is not armour of our owne making and prouiding, ding, but of Gods owne workmanship, and of his free gift, whereof it is called, The Armour of God: and seeing when we haue it, it is not in our power to put it on, but it is God alone, that both bestoweth and bucklith it vnto vs; therefore vnto our watchfulnesse, wee must adde seruent and daily prayer vnto God, both to giue it vnto vs, and to assist vs so with his holy Spirit, that we may be inabled, not onely to put it on, but also to keepe it continually fast buckled vnto vs. Neither let vs feare that the daily and continuall wearing of it will bee tedious and troublesome; for though at the first it may seeme so, when like fresh water Souldiers wee enter into the Christian warfare; yet by daily vse, it will become so easie and familiar, that it will trouble vs no more then our ordinary apparell.

6. Sect. 2.
That the putting on the Christian Armour is very necessary.

Now that we may be moued with cheerefulnesse to exercise our selues in this daily duty, let vs consider that the continuall putting on and wearing of this Armour, is both exceeding necessary and profitable. It is most necessary, because the spirituall enemies of our saluation are alwayes in readinesse, watching their opportunity, when by their fire assaults they may vanquish vs, and bring vs to destruction. And therefore it is, as necessary that we should vse like or greater diligence, and be alwayes in readinesse to withstand their encounters. Secondly, this daily vse of the Christian Armour is so necessary, that all other helpes are in vaine, if this be neglected. For though we should be continually exercised in religious duties, as prayer, hearing the Word, reading, conference and meditation, and in the works of iustice and charity, and the ordinary duties of our callings; yet if this Armor be not put on, they will do vs no good, seeing they will not bee done in truth and sincerity, faith and a good conscience: and therefore euen in them our spirituall enemies will set snares to catch vs, and finding vs naked of our Christian Armour, will lay secret ambushments, euen in these religious and charitable exercises, and assaulting vs at vnwares, will giue vs the foyle, and leade vs captiue vnto sinne.

6. Sect. 3.
Of the manifold benefits which arise from being thus daily armed.

Eph. 6. 11, 13.

2. Cor. 10. 4, 5.

Secondly, it is most profitable to be thus daily armed, as may appeare by the manifold fruits and benefits which will accrew vnto vs by it. For hereby we shall be strengthened against all the assaults of all our spirituall enemies, so as they shall neuer be able to preuaile against vs, but at last bee vanquished and overcome. And therefore hath God made for vs, and giuen vnto vs this spiritual Armour, and to this end he exhorteth vs to put it daily on, that we may be able to withstand in the euill day, and hauing done all, to stand against the wiles of the deuill, and all encounters and attempts of the enemies of our saluation. Therefore hath he put into our hands, not carnall weapons, which are farre vsfitting this spirituall warfare, but such as are mighty through God, to the pulling downe of strong holds, and casting downe imaginations, and euery high thing, that exalteth it selfe against the knowledge of God, and bringing into captiuitie euery thought to the obedience of Christ. And therefore we may be assured that God will not be disgraced with the weakenesse of his workmanship, nor faile of his end for which hee hath made it, and so spend his labour in vaine: but seeing hee hath made it, and put it into our hands for Armour of high prooffe, let vs assure our selues that that it will neuer faile; but will at all times be sufficient to beate backe the bullets of Satans tentations, and to defend vs against the assaults of all our spirituall enemies. Again, if we daily put on this Armour, it will make vs valiant and couragious, seeing before the fight it affureth vs of victory. Whereas, though wee haue neuer so much valor and fortitude, yet if we be but naked men, and so lyen open to bee wounded continually with the fardarts of the deuill, our courage will be soon couled, and like cowards, we shall beate our selues to a shamefull flight. It will make vs cheerful in our pilgrimage, and to goe on in the wayes of godliness and rightconnesse with much ioy and comfort; when as being armed, we shall not neede to feare any spirituall dangers that lie lurking in the way to rob vs of Gods graces, nor to goe out of the right way, either to the right hand or to the left, for any worldly terror or discouragement which shall affront vs in our course of Christianity. It will preserve vs from falling into such snares as will wound our soules and consciences, and strengthen vs also against our frailties and infirmities; so as they shall not preuaile against vs. It will bee a notable meanes to continue vs in peace; for as nothing more preserveth our worldly peace, which to be continually prepared for warre; so nothing bringeth vnto vs a more sound and secure peace, euen peace with God, peace of conscience; and peace also in respect of the malicious attempts of our spirituall enemies; then to keepe daily this Armour fast buckled vnto vs. Finally, it will bring with it much Christian security, when as we are assured that we are free from all dangers, and that none of our enemies shall be able to hurt vs; so we may lye downe in peace and take our rest, because the Lord onely maketh vs (truly) to dwell in safety.

And as the whole Armour in generall bringeth vnto vs singular profit, so euery seuerall piece and part of it is for speciall vse and benefit. For by the girdle of verity, wee shall be preserved against all errors and heresies, and keepe a right course in the way of truth; and our hearts being vp-right and sincere in the sight of God, we shall carry our selues as in his sight and presence, in all our thoughts, words, and actions, and bee kept safe from being sowed with the leauen of hypocrisie; from lamenesse, which causeth vs to halt betwene God and the world, and from guile and dissimulation, the poyson of the soule, which tainteth and infecteth all vertuous actions. By the breast plate of righteousness, whereby we desire, resolve, and endeavour to doe Gods will, and please him in all things, our vitall parts will bee preserved from being wounded with the poysonous darts of the deuill; and howsoeuer with his tentations hee may make vs slip through frailty and infirmity, and with his hellish darts, inflict some little scratches in the more remote and ignoble parts, yet he shall not bee able to pierce our hearts and vitall parts, with any mortall wounds of sinne, because they are strongly armed with this breast-plate of righteousness. By hauing our feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace, we shall be enabled to continue our march in the Christian warfare, and so prepared against all afflictions and troubles, which like thornes and briars molest vs in our journey, that we shall not be discouraged, nor faint in the way; but by that inward peace which the Gospel bringeth vnto vs, we shall be confirmed and comforted in the middelt of all worldly payboyles and troubles. By the shield of faith wee shall repell the fry darts of Satans tentations, and resist and beate him backe when he assaulteth vs with greatest fury; we shall also thereby overcome the world, on the one side tempting vs with the wages of earthly vanities, by countering it in comparison of heavenly happinesse, of which faith assureth vs; and on the other side, threatening and terrifying vs with crosses and afflictions, when it receiveth them as tokens of Gods love, and signes of our adoption, and perswadeth vs that they shall worke together for the best, and serve as meanes to further our saluation. By the helmer of saluation, wee are also notably strengthened in the spirituall conflict, so as though Satan the old Serpent may bite and bruise our heels; yet he shall not bee able to hurt our head; wee are also thereby encouraged to labour diligently after sanctification, and having hope of indwelling with Christ heavenly happinesse, it is a notable meanes to moue vs to purge and purifie our selues, as he also is pure. Finally, we are encouraged to fight valiantly the Lords battels, by assured hope of victory; and to passe with patience and comfort through our all worldly discouragements, because we expect, that after we haue trauailed thorow a little space of soule way, we shall come safely to a Palace of pleasure; and to all the loyes of our heavenly Countrey. Lastly, by the sword of the Spirit, if we can skillfully vse it, we shall be fitted for all purposes, strengthened against all enemies, overcome all difficulties, and were all obiections, repell all tentations. Yea, such a glorious light commeth from this glittering weapon, that it is sufficient not onely to defend vs, and beate downe (like that light which appeared to Saul and his company) with feare and astonishment all our enemies, but to guide and direct vs in all our wayes; and to make vs perfect and wise for attaining vnto saluation.

CHAP. VIII.
Of the fourth mayne duty, which is to arme our selues against all sinne; and to deuote our selues wholly to Gods seruice.

THe fourth mayne duty, daily to be performed, is to arme and strengthen our selues daily against sinne; and deuote our soules and bodies wholly to Gods seruice, in the performance of all Christian duties which may bee pleasing in his sight. Concerning the former: It is most necessary that wee continually arme our selues against sinne; and gather daily new strength, to withstand and mortifie our corruptions. First, because Satan like a roaring Lyon, walketh continually about, seeking to deuoure vs, laying at all times and in all places, his nets and snares of perdition, and many baits of worldly vanities, and leases of euill examples, to allure vs to stoop and giue ouer our heavenly flight; that so he may catch and inuade vs to our destruction. Secondly, because the world, as a strong enemy, daily royneth with him, labouring one while with her smiles and fauours, her allurements and proffers of prosperity, to intice vs to follow those patternes and precedents of euill, which she setteth before vs; and another while with frownes and threats, afflictions and persecutions, to thrust vs by mayne force into sinne. Thirdly, because we nourish continually a secret tray-tour in our besomes, which is daily ready to betray vs into their hands, euen our owne flesh and corrupt nature, which is prone to all euill, and taketh delight in nothing more then in glutting it selfe with the pleasures of sinne. So that no sooner doe we giue ouer fighting, but we are presently foyled; no sooner doe we desist rowing and tugging against the streame of our naturall corruptions, but they presently carry vs downe with a swift course, into some one or other sinfull action. Fourthly, because many are the wiles and deceits of sinne, which will easily circumnent vs, if wee doe not daily obserue and labour to defeat them. One while they will pretend friendship, and that they will doe vs good; or at least, that they are innocent, and will not hurt vs; and at another time necessity, that wee cannot liue without them, or if wee doe, a life no better then death, vncheerfull and vncomfortable. Sometime they will pleade custome and prescription, which entreth them into possession (as it were) by course of Law. And if we can answer this, they will offer themselves like ghests, crauing but one nights lodging, with promise then to be gone: but afterwards when they are admitted, either by force take possession, or else vpon further acquaintance and better liking, desire to make longer abode. Lastly, because the occasions of sinne daily are many, as the objects of vnlawfull pleasures, which bewitch vs with their alluring tunes; and of sinfull gaine and profit, which like golden chaines, draw vs into wicked courses; and of pride and vaine glory, which easily perswade vs, who are naturally ambitious, to vse any meanes which may further our aduancement. Vnto which, we may adde the daily occasions of vniust anger, thrusting vs on to reuenge; of enuy or disdain; of wantonnesse and vncleannesse; of vaine, vnflauoury, and rotten communication, through sinfull society and wicked company, and innumerable such others, all which will powerfully draw vs to sinne, if wee be not daily armed against it. In all which respects, it is most necessary that wee arme our selues, and make daily warre against all our sinnes, especially against those which cleave fastest to our corrupt natures, and vnto which we are most prone and apt to fall. Of which we may take the better and surer notice, if wee consider what they were, which before our conuersion did most raigne and rule in vs, seeing these in the state of regeneration, though they be deposed from their regency, yet will, of all others be most hardly expelled; or being in some measure driuen out, yet out of their experience of their former victories, will conceiue hope of repossessing their wonted hold, and to this end will lurke and houer about vs, that they may spie opportunity of re-entring, like Crowes and other birds of prey, which are beaten off a field, where they haue long vsed to feede. As also if we obserue what are those sinnes which our corruption most liketh and longeth after, and is most ready to extenuate and excuse, when we are touched and reprooued for them, making them light and veniall, by gilding them ouer with vaine, friuolous, or false pretences. And finally, wee may know them by our

our owne lamentable experience, when as we carefully obserue what finnes most distract vs in all good exercises, and hinder our growth in godlinesse, and what they bee, into which, though frailty we most often fall, and whereby we haue beene most ouertaken. And when wee haue by these meanes taken notice of them, we must with most diligence and resolution arme our selues against them, seeing by them wee haue most dishonoured God, and wounded our owne consciences, and are in greatest danger to be overcome, and led captiue to hell and destruction, being like bordering enemies, which haue a strong party in our selues, and haue best opportunity to take all aduantages against vs.

§. Sect. 2.

Of the meanes
to work in our hearts a true
hatred of sin.

Now the meanes whereby we may be armed against all finnes in generall, and these in particular, are many. The first and principall, is to worke our hearts to a deadly and vnreconcilable hatred against them, by meditating of the infinite Maiesty and goodnesse of God, against whom they are committed, how great and glorious he is in himselfe, and how good and gracious vnto vs, who hath giuen vs all the good things which wee ijoy or hope for, yea his chiefeest Iewell, his best beloued Sonne to die for vs: By considering that it is aboue all things most hatefull and displeasing vnto God, and maketh all creatures in whom it is most odious, though neuer so much beloued of him; As we see in the example of the reiected Iewes; Adam cast out of Paradise, the Sonne of God himselfe, who bearing our finnes, did beare all his Fathers wrath, and could not bee reconciled, till by his sufferings he had made full satisfaction to his Iustice. That it is most haynous and capitall, being committed against so infinite a Maiesty, as appeareth by those dreadfull and eternall punishments, which Gods righteous iudgement inflicteth on those that commit it, in this world and the world to come, that it is the greatest folly in the world, hazarding the eternall saluation of our most precious soules, which are of more worth then many Monarchies, and plunging them into hell and everlasting destruction, for the momentary and vncertaine fruition of earthly vanities. That it pierced the Lord of life, and nailed him to the Crosse, causing him to be condemned that came to saue vs, and to be put to a shamefull death, who came to giue vnto vs everlasting life. That the deepe dye of it so stained our soules, that nothing could wash away the filthy spots that it left behind it, but the precious blood of Christ. That it vexeth and grieueth the good Spirit of God dwelling in vs, & by defiling our bodies and soules which are his Temples, doth make him weary of his lodging. That aboue all things it delighteth the deuill, as being the child and darling of this hellish parent; and maketh vs to become fit roomes for him to reuell in, and to passe his time with most delight. Let vs consider of the manifold euils which it causeth vnto vs, both priuative and positive, in this life and in the life to come. For it depriueth vs of all good, and bringeth with it all euill. It separateth betweene our God and vs, and turneth the greatest loue into the most dangerous enmity. It defaceth his Image in vs, and stampeth vpon vs the image of the deuill. It frustrateth the end of our creation, which was, to glorifie God, by our worshipping and seruing him, yea of our Redemption by Christ, if wee liue and die in it without repentance. It casteth vs (like our lawes) out of Gods protection, rection, and maketh vs (like slaues) subiect to the tyranny of Satan. It is the cause of all the euils of punishment, which are inflicted vpon the creatures in this life and the life to come. It blindeth the minde, and hardeneth the heart, debarreth vs of all sweete communion with God, and deprieth vs of the inestimable comforts of his holy Spirit. It weakeneth our faith, and woundeth our conscience, taketh away all inward peace, and filleth our hearts with shame and sorrow, and our faces with blushing, or (which is worse) with impudency. It deprieth vs of Gods eternall and most comfortable presence, and of the ioyes of his heavenly Kingdome, and plungeth vs headlong into hell and destruction. Finally, let vs adde vnto these, whatsoeuer other euils we can imagine, and then conclude, that sinne, as the cursed mother of them all, hath bred them in her hellish wombe.

And when by these meditations wee haue wrought our hearts vnto a true hatred of all sinne; there are other meanes to be vsed of vs, that wee may be strongly armed against it. As first, that wee doe thorowout the whole day entertaine and nourish good and holy desires, and firme and constant resolutions, that we will resist and withstand it, in what manner or forme so euer it shall set vpon vs. For nothing will bring more easie and assured victory, then Christian courage and resolution, to fight and strue against it, grounded not on our owne strength, but vpon the power and promises of God, and that we will let passe no good meanes vnassayed whereby we may overcome. Secondly, wee must keepe a daily and continuall watch ouer our selues, and especially ouer our hearts, that wee be not surprisid on a sudden, nor hardened or hartened in any wicked course, through the deceitfulness of sinne; of which, we shall haue occasion to speake more fully heereafter. Thirdly, we must be no lesse careful in flying all occasions, inducements, and prouocations vnto sinne, then the sinfull acts themselves; for if we wilfully cast our selues into these tentations, it is iust with God to deliuer vs vnto euill. Fourthly, we must make conscience of committing of the least sinnes, which being admitted, will make roome for the greatest; and withstand sinnes in the first degrees, as soone as they are suggested by the deuill, the world, or our owne flesh; casting out this hellish wild-fire, before it hath by the least abode inflamed our concupiscence, or before this seede of impiety hath gotten any warmth or growth. Fifthly, we must be so bold and valorous in Gods assistance, as that in the meane time we be suspicious and fearefull, in respect of our owne weakenesse and frailty, and the might and malice of our innumerable enemies, taking good heede, whilest we stand, of falling, and working out our saluation with feare and trembling. Sixthly, wee must daily walke with God, and carry our selues continually as in his sight and presence, who not onely taketh notice of all our actions, but also will cause vs one day to giue a strict account of them, either to reward them graciously, if they bee good; or to punish them seuerely, if they be euill. Lastly, let vs daily and continually resigne our selues ouer into the hands of God, who is alone able to deliuer vs from all euill, and craue instantly his protection from all enemies, and the direction of his holy Spirit, that by the good guide thereof, we may thorowout the whole day be preserved and

and kept in the way of righteousness and holiness, and from erring and going astray in the by-paths of sinne.

And as we are thus daily to arme our selues against sinne; so, are wee constantly and continually to desire and resolve in our hearts, that we will imbrace all vertue, and performe all Christian duties, both vnto God, our neighbours and our selues, thorowout the whole day, not thinking any grace or good duty so small, that it may be neglected, or so difficult and of such an high nature, that it may not be attempted and sought after. Neither must we content our selues to take the occasions of well-doing, when they are offered & thrust vpon vs, but we must exercise our minds, by studying and aduising how we may get & gaine the best opportunities of doing most good, both for the aduancement of Gods glory, and our owne and our neighbours good. But especially wee must set our selues with most earnest study, and serious diligence to attaine vnto, and adorne our soules with those graces, wherein they are most defectiue, and to performe those duties which our consciences tell vs that wee haue in time past most neglected, not because they were in their owne nature lesse excellent, profitable, or necessary (for so when time and opportunity will not suffer vs to performe all, we may omit lawfully those duties which are of least vse and importance) but because our corrupt natures being most auerse vnto them, we finde them most difficult and vnpleasant vnto vs. For so shall we receiue a double benefit, not onely doing that which is good, but also in doing it, profit daily in the denying of our selues and our owne wils, in the mortifying of our corrupt nature, in that wherein it is most strong and rebellious, and in strengthening our regenerate part and new man, in that wherein it is most weake and defectiue. And if wee would thus daily enlarge our desires, and strengthen our resolutions, to the imbracing and practising of all vertuous actions and good duties, we should receiue singular profit by it. For we should not so easily as we doe, let slip the occasions of well-doing, but take hold of the opportunity when it is offered; we should not be so faint hearted, and weake handed in good duties, nor so easily daunted and discouraged in them, but should become strong and valorous, if we would thus daily confirme and strengthen our hearts and hands, by these good resolutions, that we will let passe no opportunity of performing those Christian duties which God requireth of vs. Finally, notwithstanding our many frailties and infirmities in our best actions, and slips and falls into sinne, we should be accepted of God through Christ, in this Euangelicall obedience, as though it were free from all imperfection; seeing he respecteth more our hearts then our hands, and our resolutions and indeuours, more then our abilities and performances.

C A P. IX.

Of the fifth and sixth daily duties, which are to conforme our selues to Gods Law, and to submit our selues to his good pleasure.

The fifth maine duty wherein we are daily to exercise our selues, is, that we rightly dispose of all our thoughts, words, and actions, so as they may in all things be conformable to the Law of God. In respect of our thoughts, our care must be, that we be not earthly minded, like Citizens of the world, nor suffer them to be fixed and fastened vpon earthly and momentany vanities, which profit not; as how we may get or keepe the honours, riches, and pleasures of the world, by camall and vnlawfull meanes, which are too base objects for them which are of so high and diuine a nature; but that they be chiefly taken vp, and exercised about spirituall, holy, and heauenly things: as of their excellency, profit, and necessity, by what meanes we may obtaine, or hauing them in some measure, may be more enriched with them; how we may safely keepe them and bee secured from feare of losing them. How wee may bee more and more vnited vnto Christ, and assured that both he and all his benefits doe belong vnto vs. How wee are so to carry our selues, that wee may more sensibly and feelingly apprehend the power and efficacie of his death and resurrection working in vs, and replenishing our hearts with sweete consolations, and joy in the holy Ghost. How we may be daily more assured of Gods grace and fauour, and feeble and discern the light and warmth of his louing countenance shining vpon vs, and inflaming our hearts with his loue. How we may withstand tentations, and get mastery ouer our strongest corruptions; and how wee may daily bee more renewed and strengthened in all grace and goodnesse, that we may increase in bringing forth more fruits of holinesse and righteousness. And with these and such like holy and heauenly meditations, our mindes must chiefly be taken vp; and when wee exercise them about earthly things, and the duties of our callings, it must be, as vpon meanes which tend to these endes, and (like birds) we must vse the earth as a helpe to raise vp our selues, and to gather wing, that wee may soare aloft in heauenly meditations. The which wee shall doe, if we performe the workes of our callings, in faith and a good conscience, in loue and obedience vnto God, as duties of his seruice which hee hath required at our hands, with prayer for good successe and thanksgiving, when by Gods blessing wee haue obtained it; and when wee vse them as meanes to further our maine ends, namely, the aduancement of Gods glory, and the eternall saluation of our soules.

The like care and indenuour we must daily vse in the right ordering of our tongues and speeches, either by seasonable silence, when wisdom, discretion, and grauity requireth it; of which, the generall rule is, that it is better to forbear and say nothing, then to vent that which is vaine, vnprofitable, or worse then silence: or else by speaking that which is vsfull and necessary for the aduancement of our maine ends, which are Gods glory,

glory, the profit of our brethren, and the comfort and saluation of our owne soules. God is glorified by our speech, when as we doe not presume to speake of him, his attributes and persons, his name, Word or workes, vpon any light or slight occasion, vainely or in iest; but when the cause is waighty and important, and then grauely and seriously, with all humility and due reuerence. Our neighbour is profited, when as our speech is gracious, powdred with the salt of wisdom, and either tending to spirituall edification, by instruction, admonition, exhortation, reprehension, counsaile or comfort; or to his temporall good in his worldly affaires. And our owne comfort and saluation is furthered, when vnto these former wee adde such speeches as more properly tend to our owne good, as to the increasing of our wisdom and knowledge, the strengthening of our faith, the increasing of any other sauing grace; as when we mutually informe one another, and stirre vp the graces of God in vs by holy conferences; or else such as are profitable in respect of our temporall estate, as about the ordinary businesses of our callings and earthly affaires, in which wee are daily conuersant. Now that wee may thus rule our tongues, and order our speeches in this holy manner, abstaining from all light and vaine words, friuolous and vnprofitable discourses, and rotten and vnfauoury communication; let vs consider, that God hath giuen vs this excellent gift of speech that wee might thereby glorific him, and benefit one another, especially in the best things; & therefore they who neglect these, and direct their speech to contrary ends, doe most fearefully abuse this excellent gift, and thereby iustly deserue to be deprived of it. Secondly let vs consider, that God is alwaies present with vs, and is an care-witnesse of all our speeches; and therefore let vs blush for shame, to speake any thing in his hearing, which we would not vtter in the presence of a graue, wise and religious superiour. Thirdly, let vs continually remember that fearefull saying of our Sauour, that wee shall giue an account of every idle word at the day of Iudgement, and that by our words we shall either be iustified or condemned. And therefore let vs not vainely and causelessly increase our accounts, not onely by idle and vnprofitable, but rotten and vnfauourie speeches, nor vse this winde of words, as bellowes to kindle against our selues the flame of Gods wrath here, and the fire of hell in the life to come. And to this purpose let vs with the Prophet Dauid, take heede to our waies, that we offend not with our tongue, and considering that it is an vnruely euill, and as the Apostle James compareth it, like an headstrong Horse, that will stand on no ground, let vs breake it with the terroures of Gods Iudgements, and curbe it in with the bridle of his feare, that it may not rush into any vnprofitable & wicked speeches. And because we cannot by all our force and skill, care and watchfulnesse, tame this wild and vnruely beast, but that it will breake out and vtter such things as are either vaine and vselesse, or hurtfull and sinfull, let vs often desire the Lord who gaue vs our tongues, that he will by his grace and holy spirit, rule and order them, and that he will set a watch before our mouthes, and keepe the doore of our lips, that we may speake onely those things which may tend to Gods glory and the mutuall good of one another.

Finally, our daily care and indetour must be, rightly to order and dispose pose of all our workes and actions, that they may be conformable to the Law of God, both in doing the duties which he hath commanded, and in leaving vndone the vices and sins which he hath forbidden and condemned, and that whether they respect God or our neighbours and our selues. For our time and strength must be spent either in the religious duties of Gods seruice, or in the workes of iustice, charity and mercy towards our neighbours, or of temperance, sobriety and Holinesse towards our selues, either in the generall duties of Christianity, or the speciall duties of our callings, or in vsing the meanes and helps whereby wee may bee the better fitted and enabled vnto all and euery of them: That so wee may glorifie our heauenly Father, by hauing the light of our godly liues shining before men, edifie our brethren by our good example, make our owne calling and election sure, walke worthy of our high calling, adorne our profession, gaine others to the profession and praetice of the true Religion, and by our fruitfullnesse of obedience obtaine a plentiful harvest of ioy and happinesse, when Christ shall come to Iudgement, and render vnto euery one according to their workes. Neither must we onely take care, that our mindes and hearts bee taken vp and furnished with good thoughts and holy affections, and our tongues exercised in Christian communication, and speeches saouring of grace and godlinesse; but also that wee bring them to good effect, by praetizing what wee thinke and speake, in all our workes and actions. Nor that wee mortifie sinne in our soules and affections, but also in our earthly members, and outward man; and if through frailty wee haue entertained into our minds and hearts sinfull thoughts and desires, or broken out into rash and inconsiderate speeches; yet at least, let vs stay heere, and not produce it into act, which is to giue this cursed birth full growth and strength, and to consummate and bring it to full maturity and perfection.

The sixth maine dutie which we are daily to performe, is, to submit our selues in all things to Gods good will and pleasure, and to resigne our soules, bodies and states to be gouerned and guided by his providence, without murmuring or repining, being contented with whatsoeuer hee sendeth, and to indure what he inflicteth, not onely with meekenesse and patience, but also with cheerefulnesse and spirituall ioy, of which wee haue the Apostle Paul an example for our imitation, who had learned in all estates to be content, so that he could be abased and abound, full and hungry, yea was able to doe all things, through the helpe of Christ that strengthened him. To the attaining of which contentation, we are to consider, that the Lord is infinitely wise, and knoweth what is better for vs then we our selues, infinite in power, and able to do that which in his wisdom he knoweth to be best, and infinite in goodnesse, mercy and compassion towards vs, and therefore that he will doe that vnto vs and for vs, which in his wisdom hee knoweth most profitable, especially for the eternall saluation of our soules. That by his providence he ruleth all things in heauen and earth, and most wisely and powerfully directeth them to the good of all that depend vpon him, that in an especiall manner he doth thereby watch ouer them that feare and trust in him, and will not suffer them to want any thing thing that is good. Finally, we are to remember his gracious promises, whereby he hath assured vs, that he will turne all things, even our troubles and afflictions, unto our good; that he will be a Sunne and a Shield; and will giue grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from them that walke uprightly; that if we first seeke the Kingdome of God and his righteousness, hee will giue vs all other things as aduantages to the bargaine. Vnto which, if we adde the consideration of Gods infallible Truth in making good all his gracious promises, we may well be contented in all estates, seeing hee will neuer faile nor forsake vs, as the Apostle speaketh. And lastly, if we would haue this contentation in all estates, wee must cast our eye as well vpon that which we haue, as vpon that which we want; and thinke vpon those innumerable blessings which we inioy, the least whereof we haue not deserved, as well as vpon those things wherein we are defective: wee must not so much looke vpon those few that are preferred before vs, as vpon those multitudes that come farre behinde vs, who want many of those good things which wee possesse, though it may bee, they haue deserved them better then we. And if by these and thelike meanes we nourish this contentation, then shall wee haue a salve in readinesse fit for all sores, a medicine against all maladies; and a cordiall water which will reuiue and comfort vs against all those qualmes of earthly discouragements, that hinder our proceedings in the waies of godlinesse, and make the seruice of God displeasing and irksome vnto vs. Wee shall goe on cheerefully and ioyfully in our Christian course, without murmuring and repining, when we finde a soule passage or stumbling blockes in our way; and the better please God in all things, when as in all things we are well pleased with him.

That we must pray daily and continually.

He last daily duty to be performed of vs, is, effectually and frequent prayer, from which not any day, nor any part of the day is to be exempted; for we must, as the Apostle speaketh, pray without ceasing, alwaies watching thereunto with all perseverance. To which end tendeth the parable of the vnrighteous Iudge, propounded by our Sauour Christ. In which regard, that may be said of prayer, which the Apostle requireth in preaching, namely, that it must be done in season and out of season; if at least any time may bee said vnseasonable for this holy duty; whereby we are not to vnderstand with those ancient Heretikes, that we must spend our whole time in prayer and doe nothing else; for the Apostle Paul himselfe spent much of his time in preaching, writing, disputing, and in other duties of his calling, and yet as hee exhorted others, so hee often professeth, that it was his owne practice to pray continually and without ceasing. And our Sauour Christ also, who requireth this at our hands, and propounded himselfe as a patterne of his owne precept, spent much of his time in other exercises, as preaching, conferring, doing miracles, and such suchlike: But that wee alwaies bee ready, and haue a disposition to prayer at all times; that we thinke no time exempted, when any fit and good occasion is offered, whether it bee night or day, or any part of either of them, nor any place excluded, if there bee cause and opportunity: for we must pray euery where, lifting up holy hands without wrath or doubting, at home and abroad, in our businesses and vacancie from labour. And thus hee expoundeth himselfe, interpreting these words, without ceasing and alwayes, of euery opportunity and seasonable time, when God either ordinarily or extraordinarily giueth vnto vs any fit occasion.

Of ordinary prayers at set times, and how often to bee performed.

Psal. 55. 17.
Dan. 6. 10.

1. Tim. 4. 5.

Concerning our ordinary prayers, they are for the most part limited to set and ordinary times, although we are not to be so strictly tied to our howres, but that they may be changed from one to another vpon necessary occasions. And they ought to be performed in a solemne manner, with due preparation, conioyning together the parts of prayer, confession, petition and thanksgiuing, with due respect both of place and time. Neither are these prayers to be continued throughout the whole day, but in the severall parts thereof, as shall best fit with our occasions, and also with our zeale and deuotion. Notwithstanding we are to pray euen after this manner, not once onely, but often; according to the examples of the Saints in former times. So Dauid professeth, that he praied vnto God in the morning, at noone and in the euening; and Daniel so stinteth himselfe to solemne prayer vpon his knees three times a day, that he would not neglect it vpon any occasion. And howsoeuer no man can stint these set times of praier vnto a certaine number, but it must be left to be measured out according to severall occasions, leisure, opportunity and the proportion of euery ones gift of grace, faith, zeale and deuotion, which they haue received; which being so various, diuers and different, it is no more possible to appoint a certaine measure vnto them, then a size of apparell to fit euery ones body, or a proportion of meate which should satisfy euery ones appetite. Or if we should, what were it, but (like the Tyrant, that would haue one bed to serue for men of all statures) to racke out and torture the ouer-short deuotion of those that are children in Christ; and to mayme and cut theirs shorter, who are men growne and come to a perfect age? Yet seeing all Scriptures are written for our learning, we thinke these examples should not bee in vaine, but well-befitting, for the most of Gods children to follow and imitate, especially in this light of the Gospell, and when the gifts of the Spirit doe so abound. And therefore I would perswade all good Christians, that besides their prayers and thanksgiuings before and after meales, whereby Gods blessing is obtained, and the creatures sanctified to their vse; they would at least thrice a day make their solemne and set prayers vnto almighty God; that is, first, betimes in the morning priuately by themselves; before they go about their ordinary affaires and workes of their calling. And then in the family, some time in the forenoone, when as the household may with most conueniency meet all together, and either before or after Supper, when as we are to goe vnto our rest, or if wee be vnder gouernement, and in such families wherein these duties are neglected, then must we performe them privately by our selues, wherein we are to pray in especiall manner for all those who dwell with vs, and principally for our gouernours; among other blessings, crauing this aboue others, that God will be pleased to giue them hearts to erect the exercises of Religion in their families, to the aduancement of his owne glory, and the saluation of themselves, and those who are committed to their charge. But yet let neither gouernours nor inferiours content themselves with these family duties, which they performe with others; but set some time and place apart for their private deuotions, that they may haue secret conference with God, confessing and bewaying their particular sinnes and corruptions, which being knowne onely to him and their owne consciences, they would not haue men to take notice of them by any open acknowledgments; laying open their speciall wants, and desiring earnestly a supply of those gifts and graces wherein they finde themselves most defectiue; and rendring thanks vnto God for those peculiar benefits and blessings, which in a speciall manner he hath conferred vpon them.

But it is not enough that we vse daily these set, solemne, and ordinary prayers, but we must, as our Saviour inioyneth vs, Pray alwayes, and as the Apostle speaketh, continually, and without ceasing. That is, we must be ready to pray, so often as God shall giue vs any occasion, or as the Apostle speaketh, in every thing; that is, crauing Gods blessing when we vndertake any businesse, and praying his name for his gracious assistance, whereby we haue beene inabled to atchieue it; crauing his protection at the approaching of any danger, and his helpe and strength for the ouercoming of any difficulty which affronteth vs in our way. In a word, we must pray in season, that is, at our ordinary times, and vpon common occasions; and out of season, that is, extraordinarily, when any speciall and new occasion offereth it selfe vnto vs. Vnto which prayers, there is not required that we should vse our voyce, or gestures of the body, which are used in set prayers; or that we should in any continued or long speech of the soule vnto God, expresse our selues in all the parts of prayer: but onely that we vse sudden and short ejaculations, lifting vp our hearts vnto God, and as it were darting vnto the Throne of grace our seruent desires, which we may doe, without being discerned in the middest of a crowd, and without any distraction from our ordinary affaires. And thus Nehemiah prayed vnto God in the presence of an heathenish King, for good successe in his suite. Moses in the middest of the Armie for helpe and deliuerance, when as they were pursued by the Egyptians: And our Saviour Christ himselfe, at the graue of Lazarus. And thus are we to pray continually and without ceasing, either in our set and solemne prayers, or these short expressions of our hearts desires in all companies, vpon all occasions, and at all times; not onely in the day time, but euen in the night also, either rising with Dauid to praise God, when our hearts are raiued with the ioyfull apprehension of some extraordinary benefits; according to that, At midnight will I rise to giue thanks vnto thee, because of thy righteous Iudgements; or with the Church in the Lamentations, to craue helpe and deliuerance when we lie vnder the waight of some grieuous afflictions. Arise (saith she) cry out in the night, in the beginning of the watches, poure out thine heart, heart, like water, before the face of the Lord; &c. And this if wee doe, our prayer will be more seruent and effectually, our senses and soules being sequestred from worldly affaires, and not incumbred and interrupted in these holy exercises, with any earthly distractions. Or at ordinarie times, and vpon vsuall occasions, lifting and raising vp our hearts and minds vnto God, when we wake out of our sleepe, praying him for all his mercies and goodnesse, and namely, for the rest which he hath given vs, and desiring the continuance of his loue and fauour, with all the signes and testimonies of it. But here our chiefe care must bee, that by this continuall custome and daily practice, we doe not grow to a lesse esteeme of this high and holy duty, that our hearts be not negligent and carelesse in the performance of it, and so our prayers become cold and formall, and performed more for custome then for conscience; but that wee pray with our whole hearts, in zeale and seruency of Spirit, accounting it the highest priuiledge in the world, that we haue daily and continually such sweete entercourse and communion with God, and such free accessse vnto the Throne of grace, at all times, and vpon all occasions, to make our suites and requests knowne vnto our Soueraigne King and gracious Father, with assurance to haue them heard and granted. The which must inflame our deuotion and zeale, and cause vs to powre forth our hearts vnto God; without which, the prayer of the lips, wanting the fire of zeale and deuotion, will become (as the Wise man speaketh) the sacrifice of fooles. And therefore we must with Dauid, powre out our soules vnto God; and with the afflicted Church, lift vp our hearts with our hands vnto the Lord of Heauen; or else we can haue no assurance to be heard, seeing these onely who thus doe haue the promise; according to that of the Psalmist, The Lord is nigh vnto all them that call vpon him, so all that call vpon him in truth. And if we would haue the sacrifice of our prayers accepted of God, we must not only offer vnto him our outward members and parts, but wash also our inwards, our hearts and affections, and so offer our selues as a whole burnt offering vnto God. And whilst we stretch out our hands, our hearts also must be enlarged with thirsting desires, after the liuing waters and springs of Gods gifts and graces, like vnto the thirsty land.

Vnto which daily and continuall prayers, with this zeale and seruency of Spirit, we may be moued; first, if we consider, that we stand in such neede of Gods continuall helpe and assistance, that wee cannot subsist without it the least minure, for in him we live, and mooue, and haue our being. Secondly, that we stand daily and continually in want of some gift and grace of God, and of all of them in some measure and degree; and also of some one or other of Gods temporall benefits, or at least, of the right and holy vse of them. And therefore seeing our wants are continuall, and God hath appointed prayer as the hand of the soule, to be thrust into his rich Treasury of all grace and goodnesse for a continuall supply, without which we can haue no assurance, that wee shall receiue any thing at the hands of God; heereby it manifestly appeareth that our prayers also ought to be daily and continuall. Thirdly, we are daily and continually subiect to innumerable dangers, in respect of the euils that may befall vs in our soules, bodies, and estates, and it is God onely watching ouer vs with his providence, that can both preserue vs from them, and deliuer vs out of them: the which, we cannot expect, vnlesse we serue his providence, by vsing this meanes of prayer, whereby onely his gracious helpe and assistance is obtained; and therefore our continuall dangers, needing continuall preseruatiō from them, commendeth vnto vs the necessary vse of our daily and continuall prayers. Finally, the many and mighty enenies of our saluation doe continually assault vs with their tentations, that ouercomming, they may bring vs to destruction. And prayer is the chiefe meanes, both of buckling vnto vs the whole Armour of God, whereby we are enabled to stand in the euill day; and of obtaining the helpe and assistance of his holy Spirit, whereby alone we are enabled to ouercome. And therefore as we are continually tempted to one sinne or other, so must we continually pray for grace to withstand the tentation; and as the Apostle speaketh, Pray alwayes, with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, watching thereunto with all perseverance, &c.

And as we are thus to pray daily & continually, by making our suites and petitions vnto God, so also by thankesgiuing, returning thanks and praise for all the benefits and blessings which wee receiue at his hands. Vnto which duty, diuers things are required; first, that it bee done in the name of Christ, according to that of the Apostle, By him therefore let vs offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giuing thanks to his name. Secondly, that it be done in a right manner, vnto which is required, that it be done, first, not onely in outward profession with the lips, but also inwardly with the soule, with all the powers and faculties of it, according to that of the Psalmist, Blesse the Lord, O my soule, and all that is within me, blesse his holy name. First, in our vnderstanding we are to take notice, and rightly to conceiue of Gods benefits, not onely in some generality, but also of those particular blessings, which we daily and continually receiue from him; that we may not be vngratefull, through ignorance and heedlesnesse, but haue thankfull mindes, and so, as the Psalmist speaketh, sing praises with vnderstanding. Neither must we onely know Gods benefits and blessings, but also acknowledge them to be his free gifts, and that he is the principall Author and fountaine of all the good which wee either presently inioy, or hope for in time to come; giuing him the whole glory of his gifts, and not attributing them to secondary causes and inferior meanes; which are onely his instruments by which hee conferreth these gifts vpon vs. In our iudgements, we must rightly value, and highly esteeme of Gods benefits, as well when we inioy them, as before we had them, or when they are taken from vs; not extenuating, but rather amplifying his gifts to the aduancing of his glory, and increasing of our thankfulness. In our memories we must thankfully retaine the remembrance of

of Gods manifold mercies and inestimable benefits; that wee may continually take occasion thereby to praise him for them; esteeming it one of the worst kinds of vngatitude, to forget our benefactor, or the gifts and blessings which wee haue received from him. And this God often imposeth vpon his people, that they should not forget him nor his blessings; and David vpon his owne soule, Blesse the Lord, O my soule, and forget not all his benefits. But above all, we must be thankfull vnto the Lord with all our hearts; according to that of David; I will praise thee, O Lord, with my whole heart. Or if we faile herein of that perfection which the Law requireth, yet at least let vs doe it in vprightnesse and integrity, which will be accepted of God in Iesus Christ. Vnto which thankfulness of the heart is required, first, that it be done in humility, giuing God the whole praise of his owne workes, and acknowledging his glory and greatnesse, his goodness and graciousnesse, who dayneth and vouchsafeth of his free grace to respect vs who are dust and ashes, base and contemptible, sinfull and miserable; and are so farre off from deseruing the least of his mercies and benefits; that we haue iustly merited the greatest of his iudgements and punishments. Secondly, we must shew our thankfulness, with all due reuerence, in respect of Gods glorious Maiesty, acknowledging it to be a singular priuiledge, that so mighty a King, and Soueraigne Lord of heauen and earth will receiue any thing at our hands. Thirdly, wee must performe it with all alacrity and cheerefulness, reioycing much, in that he giueth vs not onely the occasions of this duty, but hearts also to doe it in some poore and weak measure.

And after this manner must we shew our thankfulness vnto God: The object of our thankgiuing, or the cause and occasion of giuing thanks, is, all things, according to that of the Apostle, In euery thing giue thanks; And againe, giuing thanks alwayes, for all things, vnto God the Father, in the name of the Lord Iesus Christ. That is, we must giue thanks for all good things, which are so in their owne nature, or which through Gods wisdom, power, and goodness are made so vnto vs; for positiue good things, as all Gods blessings and benefits, both temporall, spirituall, and eternall; or priuatiue, when God in his loue and mercy freeth vs from those euils of punishment which our sinnes haue deserued, or at least, doth not inflict them in that measure and degree which hee might iustly impose vpon vs: in which respect, the Church in her greatest afflictions tooke occasion of praying God, and acknowledging his mercies, in that they were not vtterly consumed: And doth also turne these light and momentary afflictions to our good, as the mortification of our sinnes, the enriching of vs with spirituall graces, the furthering of our saluation, and the increasing of our heavenly ioy and happinesse.

And this thankfulness in all things we must shew at all times, that is, daily and continually, priuately and publickly; secretly in our hearts, and outwardly in our words and workes, so often as we haue any occasion and opportunity offered vnto vs, either ordinary or extraordinary: by consideration, either of positiue or priuatiue benefits, both at set times of prayer, and thorowout the whole day, by lifting vp our hearts with thankgiuing vnto God, for the continuall benefits, which in euery part of the day hee conferreth conferreth vpon vs: As our deliuerance from euils, with which wee see others ouertaken, our preservation from many dangers, to which wee are daily subiect: for the assistance of his grace and holy Spirit, against the tentations of our spirituall enemies; for keeping our hearts in his feare, and from wandring with the world, in the by-ways of sinne and wickednesse. For giuing vs hearts to seeke and serue him, and for accepting of vs and our imperfect actions, in the perfect obedience of Iesus Christ. For multiplying and continuall renewing of all his blessings and benefits vpon vs, and those that are neere and deare vnto vs, both in temporall and spirituall things, and for those assured hopes which he hath giuen vs of heavenly and euerlasting happinesse in the world to come. For those which hee bestoweth publicly vpon the Church and Common wealth, and priuately vpon our families and our owne persons. And this daily and continuall thankfulnesse and thanksgiuing vnto God, is required of vs in the Scriptures. The Apostle exhorteth vs, to speake to our selues in Psalmes, and Hymnes, and spirituall Songs, singing and making melody in our hearts to the Lord, giuing thanks alwayes for all things, &c. And that wee should by Christ, offer the sacrifices of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips, giuing thanks to his name. And this was Dauids daily practice, as he often professeth; I will blesse the Lord (saith he) at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth. And againe, Every day will I blesse thee, and I will praise thy name for euer and euer. Which resolutions, because he could not atchieue by his owne abilities, he craueth helpe and assistance from God: Let my mouth bee filled with thy praise, and with thine honour all the day; and then hee promiseth to performe it; I will (saith he) praise thee more and more. My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness and thy salvation all the day, for I know not the numbers thereof.

Besides which testimonies and examples of holy Scriptures, there are many reasons which may moue vs to the daily and continuall practice of this holy duty. As first the excellencie of it, seeing it is the continuall exercise of the holy Angels and Saints in heauen, in which a great part of their happinesse consisteth, and wee see in the Reuelation, where great multitudes of the Saints cry alowd, and say, Blesing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiuing, and honour, and power and might, bee vnto our God for euer and euer, Amen. And this exercize they continue day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. Secondly, it is most comely and decent, in respect of God, who being the chiefe goodnesse, all glory and praise of due belongeth to him, as being the end of all things, and the Author and fountaine of all our good. And therefore Dauid often repeateth it, and maketh it the foote of his song, that we must giue thanks to the Lord and praise him, because he is good, and his mercy endureth for euer. In respect of vs also, who daily receiue benefits at his hands: for seeing he reneweth his mercies vpon vs e. uery morning, as the Church confesseth, and followeth vs with his fauours, throughout the whole day, what better becometh vs, then to be thankful to such a gracious Benefactor, and to haue our hearts filled with thankfulnesse, and our mouthes with his praises? Again, we are spirituall Priests vnto God, to offer vnto him daily sacrifices: and what better becometh seemeth our office, then to offer vnto him praises and thanksgiuing, which are the sacrifices wherein his soule doth chiefly delight? For it is a principall part of his seruice, which most redoundeth to his glory, according to that of the Psalmist, Whosoever offereth praise, glorifieth mee; and is daily therefore to be performed by vs, as our Sauour teacheth vs in his perfect forme of prayer, the first petition whereof, is, that Gods name may be hallowed and glorified; and the conclusion, an acknowledgement that the Kingdome, power, and glory, doe belong vnto him alone. Thirdly, it is the mayne end for which God bestoweth all his blessings vpon vs, that wee should yeeld vnto him the praise and glory of his owne gifts; The which we will performe, if we be not too too vngratefull, seeing they are so inestimable and manifold, and yet he in loue of them all requireth nothing of vs, but that we daily shew our selues thankfull debtors. Yea, in truth we haue nothing else to returne vnto him, seeing all wee haue is his already; as wee see in the example of Dauid, who, though he were a King, yet confesseth after long deliberation, his nullity and insufficiency in this kinde, and therefore concludeth, that he would render vnto him thanks and praise. Yea, it is the end why God hath giuen vs our tongues, that with them we should glorifie him; whereof it is, that the Psalmist calleth his tongue his glory, because it was the instrument of glorifying God; and therefore they are vtterly vnworthy this excellent gift of speech, wherein we excell all the creatures, who doe not in the vse of it, ayme chiefly at this end for which it was giuen them.

Now the meanes of yeelding vnto God this daily and continuall thankfulnesse, is partly to remooue the causes and occasions of vngratitude, and partly to vse all helpes wherby we may be furthered in this duty. Concerning the former, wee must take heede of pride, and all opinion of our owne merits, which will make vs to thinke that all which we receiue, is lesse then we deserue; and contrariwise imbrace humility, and wholly deny our selues with our owne workes and worthinesse, and so we shall be thankfull for the least benefits, when we consider that they are more then we deserue. Secondly, we must not attribute the good things which we receiue, vnto secondary causes and inferiour meanes; as to our owne wisdom, power, and industry, but ascribe them wholly vnto God, whose gifts they are, for otherwise we shall not giue God the praise, but sacrifice to our owne nets. Thirdly, we must not thinke how much we want, but what we haue; not how many are preferred before vs, but how many better then we come behind vs, and wane the good things which wee inioy. The helpes wherby we may be furthered in this duty of thanksgiuing, are first, to take notice of those manifold blessings which the Lord heapeth vpon vs, & euen of his particular gifts, at the very time they are receiued; for whilest they are new, they more affect vs, and stirre vs vp to greater thankfulnesse. Secondly, we must highly value them in our iudgements, if not in their owne worth, yet as they are loue-tokens sent from God, pledges and pawnes of his fauour, and earnest pennies of euerlasting life and happinesse; for the better wee conceiue of Gods benefits, the more thankfull will we be vnto him for them. Thirdly, we must keepe blessings receiued in former times, in faithfull memories, that we may often recount them, them, and adding them to the new, wee may become more feruent and cheerefull in performing of this duty; especially those mayne benefites of Gods loue, our election, creation, redemption, vocation, iustification, sanctification, continuall preferuation, and assured hope of our glorification. The which we shall the more readily doe, if we consider, that it is an especiall meanes to moue the Lord to conferre vpon vs new benefites, when as we are truely thankfull vnto him for the old, which is the mayne end for which he gaue them, and to cast vpon vs the seeds of his blessings with a liberall hand, when as we are not barren grounds, but yeeld vnto him the fruits of thankgiuing.

CAP. XII.

Of the duties of the daily exercise, in euery seuerall part of the day. And first of waking with God, by Prayer and Meditation.

§. Sect. I.
Of lifting vp
our hearts vnto
God, as soone
as we awake,
that we may offer vnto him
our first seruice.

HAuing spoken of those Christian duties which are necessarily to bee performed thorowout the whole day, wee are now come to shew how the day is to bee spent in the particular parts of it, and what speciall duties are to be performed in them seuerally, as God shall giue vs conueniency and opportunity. The which we will diuide, as the naturall day consisting of foure and twenty houres is diuided, into such duties as respect either the day or night. The duties of the day, are either those which ordinarily and constantly are to be done in certaine parts of the day, without omission or alteration, vnlesse vpon some vrgent cause; or those which respect circumstances, persons, states, occurrents, not limited vnto any certaine time of the day, but wayting vpon the most opportune and fit occasions. Of the former sort are duties meere religious, and belonging to all Christians generally and indifferently; or ciuill duties, which notwithstanding ought to be performed of all the faithfull, after an holy and religious manner. The first religious duty wherewith wee are to beginne the day, is, that as soone as we awake out of our sleepe, wee offer vnto God a morning sacrifice, and (as it were) the first fruits of all our thoughts, affections, and indeuours, sequestering them from the world and earthly vanities, that they may bee fixed vpon God, and things heavenly and spirituall. And euen whilst our bodies lye still on our beds, and before we haue vnbarred the dore of our lips, to giue passage vnto our words, in this still silence, we must lift vp our hearts vnto God to commune with him, and (as it were) to salute him, by consecrating vnto him their first and best seruice. Of which duty we haue Dauid an example for our imitation, who no sooner awaked, but he was presently with God, as he professeth, and sought him earely, thirsting in his soule after him, like a dry and thirsty land. Yea, so diligent and feruent was he in doing this duty, that he prevented the dawning of the morning; and before he was thorowly awakened, and had all his senses set fully at liberty from the bands of sleepe, his heart is rowzed vp, and fixed vpon God to giue him praise; and then that being awaked, doth doth also awaken his tongue, and instruments of musicke, and his whole man to ioyne together in glorifying God. So the Church in Esayas song saith, that shee longed after God in the night, and resolueth, that with her Spirit within her, she would seeke him early. Which that wee may likewise praefise, let vs consider that the Lord our God is our chiefe treasure, and our soules sole delight, and therefore let our hearts bee first there where our treasure is, and seeing he is the onely true cause of all comfort and reioycing; let vs solace our selues in our fruition of him by this sweete communion. For if worldly men who haue fixed their hearts on earthly vanities, doe meditate on them in the night without wearinesse, and no sooner awake in the morning, but presently they consecrate vnto them their first thoughts and desires, as the couetous man, to his riches; the ambitious man, his honours; the voluptuous man, his pleasures; let vs be ashamed if wee cannot be as seruient and diligent in dedicating vnto God the first seruice of our hearts, who is infinitely more worthy of our loue. Again, there is no businesse in the world of like waight and worth vnto this, as bringing singular comfort to our hearts, & saluation to our soules, & therefore let vs giue it the priority, and precedencie, and not suffer euery pedling and pelting trifle take vp our hearts first, and make it to watch at the doores, and sometimes to depart away for want of admittance. And seeing God is the most worthy person, and offereth to conferre with vs about the waighriest occasions, let vs not after an vnmanly and foolish fashion, suffer him to attend our leisure, till we haue done conferring with the contemptible and worthlesse world, about earthly occasions, which are slight and of no value. Finally, the morning is the best and fittest time for the vndertaking and archieuing of any imployment, because of the freeness of our minds from all incumbrances, the viuacity and cheerefulness of the spirits, and the vigour and abilities of all our parts; by reason of our late rest, and therefore let vs consecrate the very prime of it vnto our gracious God, who best deserueth our best seruice.

Now this first seruice which we are to offer vnto God, consisteth in prayer and meditation, which are the two wings of our soules, whereby they soare aloft into heauen; and there inioy the presence of God. The first duty is prayer, whereby lifting vp our hearts vnto God with more feruency then prolixity; wee doe in some short manner, render vnto God praise and thanksgiuing for our quiet rest, whereby our bodies are refreshed; for preserving vs from all dangers of the night, both in our soules and bodies, especially from sinfull dreames, and the tentations and assaults of Satan, who would easily haue ouercome and vterly destroyed vs, had not God watched ouer and defended vs by his power and providence. For letting vs againe inioy the light, and granting vs another day wherein we may doe him further seruice; and so make our owne calling and election sure. Vnto which, with like breuity wee are to adioyne the confession of our sinnes, especially of that night, if any such come to our knowledge and remembrance, and by reason of them, our great vnworthinesse of these fauours and testimonies of Gods loue; desiring the pardon of them, and the sanctification of the Spirit; whereby wee may be more and more freed from them. And finally, wee are to cast our selues into the armes of his providence, commending our soules and bodies vnto his protection and direction, and desiring to bee so assisted with his grace and holy Spirit, that all the thoughts of our hearts, and words of our mouthes, and the workes of our hands, may the day following, and for euer be acceptable in his sight. And especially that he will so illighten, rule, and assist vs in our following meditations, that they may tend to his glory, and to our owne comfort and saluation.

And so we must from prayer proceed to meditation, the which may bee longer or shorter, according to our opportunity, occasions, and leasure, and the measure and feruency of our zeale and deuotion. In which, our maine scope must bee to glorifie God, to increase our communion with him, by these familiar conferences of our soules; to strengthen our faith, enlarge our hearts with loue and thankfulness, and to replenish them with ioy and comfort in the sweet fruition of God, and tokens of his loue. To which purpose we must fit the subiect matter of our meditations; and because present occasions are ready at hand, and not onely more familiar and easie to be remembred, but fit to affect our hearts, which are more apprehensiu of present then past benefits, we are to make vse of such by meditating on them. But yet principally we must begin with the fountaine, and raise our thoughts from the ground and foundation of all blessings, which is Gods infinite loue, testified chiefly, in giting vnto vs that singular pledge thereof, his onely Sonne to die for vs, that we might be freed from euerlasting death, and attaine vnto eternall life and happinesse. For whose sake hee hath freely forgien vs all our sinnes, and bestowed vpon vs, together with him, all things needfull for our soules and bodies, and what soeuer is necessary to life and godlinesse. From which, we may descend to the particular testimonies of Gods loue lately receiued, as that hee hath by his power and providence watching ouer vs the night past, preserved vs from all dangers, and out of the hands of our spirituall enemies, who otherwise wanted neither will nor power to haue brought vs to destruction. That he hath kept vs from all terrours of the night, with which others haue bene affrighted, and hath graciously preserved our liues from sudden death, with which others lying downe in health and security, haue been attached before the morning; adding vnto our dayes, and giuing vs still time of repentance, with ability to serue him, and to bee instruments of his glory. After which meditation on Gods mercies, we may take such occasions as are presently offred, to furnish our mindes with holy thoughts, and to worke in our hearts good affections and desires. As our awaking out of sleepe may put vs in mind, of our awakening out of the sleepe, or rather death, of sinne, to the life of righteousness, by the quickning power of Gods holy Spirit in our regeneration, and of the daily renewing of this our quickning and awaking by continuall sanctification. The light of the Sun may put vs in minde of the Sunne of righteousness; who first in his Kingdome of grace hath shined vnto vs by the light of the Gospel, who before sat in darknesse and the shadow of death, guiding our feet into the way of peace. With which light we are to desire our mindes may be more and more illightened, and freed powerfully and effectually from their naturall ignorance, without which spirituall illightning, the outward light of the Sun

and sight of our eyes will bring vnto our hearts no lesse comfort. Secondly, of the light of glory, which shall infinitely exceed the light of the Sun, and much more then it exceedeth a Gloworme or the heaten spark of fire. For if every one of the innumerable numbers of the glorious Saints shall be more glorious then the Sun in his chiefeft brightnesse, then how infinite is the glory of the (now) vnaccessable light, which we shall then see face to face, who giueth both vnto the Sun and them their beauty and brightnesse. Our rising out of our beds may put vs in mind of the rising of our bodies out of our graues, when as at the last day, by the sound of the Trumpet we shall be summoned before Gods Tribunal seate; to giue an account of all that we haue done in the flesh; the which should make vs to resolue of preparing our selues daily to meet our Iudge, because the time is vncertain when he will call vs to Iudgement. When we see our nakednesse, let it put vs in mind of our sin, which caused vs first to see and be ashamed of it, whereas when we were couered with innocency, and had the Image of God shining in vs, we no more needed garments to couer vs, then the Sun a cloud. And let this make vs to long after the garment of Christs righteousnesse, with which, when we are perfectly clothed, we shal be without sin or shame, & appeare glorious in the sight of God; yea, let vs earnestly desire to put on Christ not only for iustification, but also for sanctification, whereby that clothing of innocency before the fall, will be presently in part renewed & repaired, till at last it come to more perfection then it had in our first creation. When we put on our apparell, let vs remember that they were first giuen vs to couer our shame, not as ornaments to be proud of, but as coverings to hide our nakednesse, & to preserue vs from the iniuries of the weather. And as we are carefull, not only to prouide fit clothes for those ends, but also to put them on, and apply them to our vse, so let vs be no lesse carefull to prouide fit clothing for our soules, whereby their spirituall deformities may be couered, and they beautified in the eyes of God with his Saints & Angels, as the perfect garment of Christs righteousnesse, already thorowly finished by his death and resurrection, and those rich ornaments of his spirituall graces, which are now inchoate and begun, and shall be perfected in the life to come; and not stay here, but also as carefully apply and put them on by the hand of faith, as we doe our apparell with the hands of our bodies, which otherwise will doe vs no more good, then the best garments lying in our chests, and neuer applied to the vse of our bodies. And finally, seeing wee content not our selues to clothe some parts of our bodies that need clothing, and leaue others naked, but to haue them all couered with fit ornaments for euery senerall part, so let vs not rest contented to haue our soules in part clothed, and in part left naked, in their naturall deformities, but to haue all ornaments of sanctifying and sauing graces put on; taking daily most care to supply that, wherein we finde our selues most defective.

Now as we are thus to take these, & all other such like good occasions of holy and heavenly meditations; so our chiefe care must bee, that wee doe daily renew our repentance and faith in Christ, vnto this purpose, all those helpes and meanes which I haue formerly prescribed. For the better performance of which dutie, we must set a sure watch before the doores of our hearts, to keepe out all wandring thoughts and earthly desires from entering into them, which would distract vs in this holy exercise, or if any through heedlesse have crept in at vnawares, our second care must bee to strangle and choake them as soone as they are entred, and to checke our selves, in that we haue beene so negligent in keeping our watch. But aboue all things we must take heede, that wee doe not countenance and defend our infirmities and slips in this kinde, by objecting against this exercise, that it will take vp too much time, and our leisure will not serue in respect of the workes of our callings which we must not neglect, and our many and waightry occasions and affaires, which are sufficient to take vp our whole time, and exercise all our thoughts for the right ordering and managing of them. For there is no man so much imployed in worldly businesse, who doth not waste more time idely, and vpon vnnecessary things which bring no profit to his soule, body nor state, then is required for these spirituall meditations, which being short in themselves, may yet be more contracted into such a narrow roome, that lesse then one quarter of an houre may be sufficient for them. The which wee may reasonably thinke will be no hinderance to our profitable proceedings in our worldly affaires and duties of our callings, seeing a good beginning is a great furtherance to a good ending, and an ill conclusion in matters that concerne our earthly estate, cannot arise from such holy and heavenly premises. Yea rather we may with faith and a good conscience assure our selues, that seeing the Lord only buildeth the house, and without his blessings all our labours and endeouours are spent in vaine, he will so order all our affaires with his prouidence, that the haruest which we are to reape of our labours in the whole day following, will not be the worse, because we haue offered vnto him the first fruits of the morning; nor that he will abate vs of our wages, because we haue beene carefull to doe him better seruice. Or though hereby we should be somewhat scantied in earthly things, yet is there no reason why we should be discouraged fro performing these religious duties, seeing they are as much more excellent, waightry, and necessary, then all earthly affaires, and the profits and pleasures that do accompanie the, as the soule excelleth the body, spiritual graces, worldly trifles, and heavenly happinesse the momentany and mutable vanities of the earth.

Neither can our time be more profitably imployed then in these holy exercises, as will appeare, if we consider the manifold fruits and benefits which we shall reape by them. For we shall hereby preserue and increase the sincerity and vprightnesse of our hearts, and strengthen our resolutions in going on cheerfully and faithfully in the duties of Gods seruice the day following, with greater care and vigilancy then we did the day before; we shall keepe our hearts wel seasoned with the loue & feare of God throughout the whole day when as we fill them with this precious liquor betimes in the morning, before they be taken vp and tainted with carnall lusts and worldly vanities. We shall moue the Lord to sow in our hearts the seedes of his graces, when as like good grounds they are thus wel prepared to receiue them; and when they spring vp in vs, they will grow the better and faster, being well watered in the morning, and indure without withering when the sun of persecution ariseth, and euen scorseth with the heate of afflictions. We shall preserue our soules from the poysonous contagion of the sinfull times, when as before we goe abroad into the infectious ayre, we haue betimes in the morning taken our spirituall cordials and antidotes. We shall keepe the fort of our hearts from any danger of sacking and surprizing by Satans tentations, when as betimes in the morning we haue strengthened all our fortifications, and stopped the chiefe passages which leade vnto them. Our liues will be the better ordred throughout the whole day, when we haue thus well begun to order them in the morning, and wee shall performe all duties of holinesse and righteousnes with much more ease and facility, pleasure and delight, when as by these meditations wee haue acquainted our hearts with them, and haue made them familiar with vs by this sweete society. We shall not neede to feare the encounters of our spirituall enemies, when as we haue betimes betaken vs to our weapons, and put on our Christian armour, before wee haue put on our clothes. Our hearts will be filled with ioy and comfort in God, when as we do thus often reasssure our selues of his loue; and we shall be safe vnder his gracious protection, seeing if we thus wake with God, and seeke him betimes, he will awake for vs, and make the habitation of our righteousnesse prosperous, as Bildad speaketh. Finally, if our hearts be thus timely taken vp with these holy meditations, they will keepe the roome for such as are of their own nature & quality, nor suffering those which are sinfull, carnall, & meerly worldly to enter; and so shall we be fitted for the next following duty of prayer, when our hearts are prepared, and lifted vp from the earth in these religious thoughts, and are not distracted with worldly incumbrances. Whereas contrariwise, if in the morning we keep no watch ouer our selues, but suffer our hearts to take their liberty, and to giue entertainment vnto wicked and worldly thoughts, and the carnall and sensuall lusts of our corrupt flesh, they will so wholly seaze vpon them & hold their possession, that we shall hardly admit, or at least retaine any good meditations the whole day following; & if we set our selues to prayer or other religious duties, we shall be so distracted with worldly cogitations and fleshly lusts, that they will become cold and formall, and quite without any vigour and efficacie.

Of Prayer in the Morning, how profitable it is and necessary, and of our preparation vnto it.

And so much concerning the dutie of meditation, wherein we are to be exercised every morning. The next religious duty which is in the morning to be performed of vs, is, that we powre out our soules vnto God by seruent & effectuall prayer, which is a duty aboue all others to be daily put in practice. For it is a principall part of Gods seruice, whereby hee will be honoured of vs, whereof it is, that in the Scriptures it is put for the whole worship of God. It is required of vs by speciall^a commandement in many places, vnto which God hath encouraged vs to yeeld obedience by many sweete^b and gracious promises, whereby he hath assured vs, that he will heare vs, and grant our requests. It is the badge of true Religion, and the neglect thereof, of an viter Atheist. And therefore the Psalmist describing such an one, setteth him forth by these two properties, that he hath said in his heart, There is no God; and hee hath not called vpon the Lord. It is a duty most excellent, seeing thereby wee glorifie God, and hee also glorifieth vs, vouchsafing vnto vs, who are but dust and ashes, yea wretched sinners, this high and honourable priuiledge to haue free accessse vnto him, and to haue the care of our great King and Soueraigne, that we may make all our suites knowne vnto him, with vndoubted hope to haue them heard and granted. It is most profitable also vnto vs, as being the chiefe meanes whereby wee attaine at the hands of God, all the good things which we need, and are freed from all the euils which wee feare; and the key whereby we open the treasury of all Gods graces and rich gifts, and out of it furnish our selues with all blessings which are needfull for vs. It is most effectuall to preuaile with God for the obtaining of all the good things which we desire, as we see in innumerable places and examples of holy Scriptures. It is a notable meanes for the strengthening of our faith and affiance in God, when as we haue experience that he heareth vs, and granteth our requests; and for the inflaming of our hearts with most feruent loue, when we taste of his bounty and goodnesse, in giuing vnto vs the good things which wee desire. It increaseth our communion and fellowship with God, and bringeth vs into familiar acquaintance with him. It maketh our minds to soare aloft in heavenly meditations; and being on earth, it causeth vs to haue our conuersation in heauen. It assureth vs that we are the children of God, and heires of the heavenly inheritance, seeing the same Spirit, which is the spirit of supplication, sealeth also vnto vs our Adoption. Finally, let vs consider that it is a duty most necessary, if either we will auoyd Gods curse, or will, with Iacob, so wrastle with him, as we meane to preuaile and obtaine the blessing; that if we neglect it, it is a strong euidence vnto vs, that we haue cast off all feare of God, as Eliphaz reasoneth against Iob; and that we are vtterly destitute of all sauing grace, seeing the same Spirit is the spirit of grace and supplication.

Neither let any man pretend his small leisure, by reason of his waightry businesse and manifold employments, as an excuse to warrant him for the neglect of a duty so high and holy, so excellent, profitable and necessary: vnlesse he will say, that he hath no leisure to be saued; to glorifie God, or enrich himselfe with his graces and blessings, or to get the euidences of euerlasting glory and happinesse into his owne keeping: and that hee is so taken vp with worldly employments, that hee hath no leisure to seeke any acquaintance with God, to auoyd his curse, or obtaine his blessing; to goe to heauen, or escape hell. For shame therefore let vs cast away these no lesse prophane then friuolous excuses: and to this end further consider, that the greater and more important our businesse is, the more need wee haue to implore by hearty prayer, the blessing of God vpon our labours and indeuours, before we vndertake them, without which, all our policy, labour and indeuour, will be spent in vaine, either because wee shall not archiue the thing which we attempt; or if we do, yet in Gods iust iudgement it shall become vnto vs a curse, rather than a blessing. Consider further, how much time thou daily spendest in doing nothing, or that which is ill, and worse then nothing: How much time in needlesse curiosity about thy body, in dressing and feeding it, and in vaine discourses about things that profit not, yea corrupt rather then edifie thee: How much in vnlawfull or superfluous sports and recreations: in carding, dicing, masking, reuelling, hunting, hawking, beholding vaine sights and wanton enterludes: and blush for shame, that thou canst find time enough, in thy greatest employments, for the satisfying of thy fleshly lusts, and only wantest leisure to serue thy God, and saue thine owne soule. Finally, let vs consider the vnwearied watchfulness of all the Saints of God in all ages, in attending vpon this duty, that they might frequently and seruently performe it day and night, and set before vs the example of our Saviour Christ himselfe, who spent mornings and eueninges, yea whole nights in praying for vs. Which if we neglect to doe for our selues, what doe we but disclaime that holy communion, and shew plainly that we are not in that number? what doe we else but debarre our selues of the benefit of his intercession, when as we take no care by our prayers to haue it applied vnto vs? Neither let any say that his purpose is not to neglect this dutie altogether, but though he hath no leisure to pray euery day, yet he will finde some time for it, though not euery morning, yet in the euening before he goe to bed. For though this something be better then nothing, yet consider that the morning sacrifice was no lesse required of God then the euening; that the seruants of God haue risen betimes to call vpon him; that we cannot looke to prosper in any of our labours, if we haue not first craued Gods blessing vpon them; that we are daily subiect to many dangers, to fall into many snares of the diuell, to bee overcome of his tentations, to bee attached with Gods Iudgements, and to be plunged into many perils which are daily incident vnto the life of man: yea, that before night wee may be stricken with sudden death, as many others haue been whom we haue knowne and heard of, and so be arrested and called to the barre of Gods Iudgement, to plead guilty or not guilty, before wee haue presented our selues at the Throne of grace, to sue forth our pardon: and then how fearfull is our condition, if we are thus taken away in our sinnes? From all which dangers we shall be secured, if wee conscionably performe this daily duty of morning prayer, and neuer goe about our worldly businesse, till wee haue gotten our pardon to carry with vs.

Now being by these reasons perswaded to the daily practise of this duty; let vs in the next place consider how we may so performe it, as that it may be acceptable vnto God, and profitable for our owne saluation. And vnto this many things are required, before, in, and after our prayers. Before, is required preparation: for as David speaketh of praising God, so may we of prayer in all kindes, our hearts must bee prepared, and so must our tongues, before wee can pray. And as they that meane to make any good musicke, doe first set their instruments in tune; so must wee, before we can make any sweet melody in Gods hearing, tune our hearts, that they may be fit for this action. And if we will not speake vnto our Prince rashly and vnadvisedly, but prepare our selues by due meditation, both in respect of the matter, and manner of our speech; how much more should we auoyd rafhneſſe of mouth, and haſtineſſe of ſpeech, when as we ſpeake to the ſoueraigne King of heauen and earth? Now in this preparation wee muſt examine our finnes, that wee may afterwards humbly confeſſe them and craue pardon; eſpecially we are to ſearch out thoſe, whereby we haue moſt diſpleaſed God, and wounded our owne conſciences, and whereunto our corrupt nature is moſt inclined; and alſo labour to finde out our ſpeciall wants, and thoſe gifts and graces in which we are moſt defective, or of which, in reſpect of our preſent occaſion, wee moſt ſtand in need; that accordingly wee may frame out ſuits, and preſſe them vnto God with more efficacie and ſeruency of deſire. Secondly, we muſt look to our feet, that is, to our affections, as the Wiſe-man exhorteth, and examine with what diſpoſition we come vnto prayer, whether as earneſt ſuiters that will haue no deniall, or after a cold, careleſſe, and formall manner, for cuſtome, rather then conſcience ſake: eſpecially wee muſt be carefull to baniſh out of our minds and hearts, all worldly and wandring thoughts, carnall luſts, wrath, doubting, maliciousneſſe, &c: and that wee be heauenly-minded, and haue our hearts fraughted with holy deſires, hungry and thiſtling after the gifts and graces which we intend to beg at Gods hands. Finally, we muſt take heed, that wee doe not preſent our ſelues before God in our impenitency; but if wee be guilty of any ſinne, we muſt bewaile it, and promiſe amendment. For our finnes vnrepented of, ſtand as a wall of ſeparation betweene God and vs, hindring his bleſſings from descending, and our prayers from aſcending; eſpecially wee muſt bewaile our want of charity, and purpoſes of reuenge: for as wee forgive men their treſpaſſes, ſo will God forgive vs. And becauſe wee are ſo dull and auerſe to this holy duty, that by all our meditations we cannot, as we ought, prepare our ſelues vnto it: therefore let vs intreat the Lord, before we make any other ſuit vnto him, that hee will prepare our mindes and hearts aright, and ſo aſſiſt vs with his grace and holy Spirit, that wee may performe this high & holy duty, in ſome ſuch maner as may be acceptable in his ſight. In our prayers diuers things are required: As firſt, in reſpect of the obieſt, that we pray onely to God our Father in heauen, as our Sauiour hath taught vs. Secondly, in the alone mediation of Ieſus Chriſt: For as there is but one God, ſo there is but one Mediator betweene God and man, the man Chriſt Ieſus. Thirdly, ſeeing through our ignorance and corruption we cannot pray as wee ought; therefore wee muſt craue the aſſiſtance of God the holy Ghoſt, which helpeth our infirmities, and maketh interceſſion for vs, with ſighes and grones which cannot be expreſſed. In reſpect of the ſubieſt or party that prayeth, diuers things are required, firſt, in reſpect of his perſon: ſecondly, in reſpect of his action. In reſpect of his perſon, 1. that he be a faithfull and righteous man. For they that draw neere vnto God, muſt be holy, as he is holy; not in the perfect holineſſe and righteousneſſe which the Law, but which the Goſpell requireth: that is, in reſpect of ſincerity and integrity, deſire, reſolution and indeuour. For the prayer of the righteous man onely is effectuell; and the Lord ſatisfieth their deſires alone that ſeare him. Neither can our ſuites be acceptable vnto God, before our perſons are accepted: according to that of Salomon, The ſacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the righteous is acceptable vnto him. And so David saith, the eyes of the Lord are vpon the righteous, and his eyes are open in their cry. But the face of the Lord is against them that doe euill, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth. And therefore our care must be, if we would pray with hope to be heard, to lift vp pure hearts and hands vnto God, not in their owne naturall purity, but as they are washed with the blood of Christ. Besides which washing of Iustification, we must labour after the spirituall washing of Regeneration, that we may be cleansed by the water of the Spirit, applying vnto vs the verue of Christs death and Resurrection, and the washing of repentance, bathing our selues in the teares of heauy sorrow and contrition, because by our sinnes we haue displeased our gracious God. And if we prepare our hearts, and stretch out our hands towards him; if iniquity be in our hand, we must put it away, and not let wickednesse dwell in our tabernacles. For if we doe not wash and make vs cleane, and put away the euill of our doings, but come before him defiled in our sins; then though wee spread forth our hands, God will hide his eyes from vs, and when we make many prayers, he wil not heare.

C A P. XIII.

Of such things as are required as essentiall vnto prayer.

IN respect of the action, many things are required, both in regard of the substance, and circumstances. Of the former sort are the essentials of prayer: as 1. in generally, that it bee according to Gods revealed will; for if we frame not our prayers according to this rule, we shall goe awry, and asking amisse, obtaine nothing. More especially, there is required, that wee worship God internally with our hearts, as well as externally with our bodies, and that we powre forth our soules vnto him in our prayers as Hannah did, so as we may say with David, Vnto thee, (O Lord) I lift up my soule; and with the afflicted Church, Let vs lift up our hearts, with our hands vnto God in the heauens. For God is a Spirit, and will be worshipped in spirit and truth; and aboue all other seruice, he requireth the seruice of the heart; seeing all other without it, is but meere hypocrisie. Neither can we hope to obtaine any thing at Gods hands, vnlesse our prayers proceed from sincere and vpright hearts, seeing he hath limited his promise of hearing only to such, according to that of the Psalmist, The Lord is neere vnto all that call vpon him, to all that call vpon him in truth. Let vs therefore take heed, when wee call vpon God, that our prayer be in truth, and not onely the words of the mouth, but the prayer of the soule. And to this end, that we doe with like care auoyd praying with a lying tongue, and deceitfull lips, when as wee aske those things with our mouthes, which wee desire not in our hearts, like those hypocriticall Israelites of whom the Lord complaineth, that they had spoken lies against him, not crying vnto him with their heart, when they howled vpon their beds. Secondly, praying with wandring thoughts, hauing, when we direct our speech in prayer vnto God, our mindes and hearts rousing about worldly vanities, and our earthly affaires, without either respect to Gods presence, or the suites that we haue in hand. For this is a grosse abuse of Gods Maiesty, which wee are vnto offer to our superiours, yea euen to our equals, speaking vnto them, and yet not minding what we say. It discouereth great irreuerence and neglect of Gods glorious presence, who beholding the secrets of our hearts, seeth how far they and our tongues are one from another. It argueth great security and hardnesse of heart, when as we thus approach into his presence, and offer vnto him such heartlesse sacrifices, not fearing that dreadfull speech, tal- led and confirmed by such a terrible example, that the Lord will be sanctified and glorified in them that come nigh him, either in his mercies, or in his iudgements. It makes prayer to bee no prayer, but lip labour, and the wind of words, which is, not the language of the mouth, but the speech of the heart. It causeth vs to spend our labour in vaine, when as we minding not what we say. For how shall God vouchsafe to vnderstand our suites, when as we our selues will take no notice of them? Or how shall he giue vs his rich graces of greatest value; when as wee so meanely esteeme them, that we can coldly and carelesly aske them at his hands, and not thinke them worthy the minding and affecting in our soules and hearts?

And yet seeing through the malice of the diuell and our owne corruption we are, euen at our best, apt to fall into this soule infirmity, let vs with all care and diligence looke to our hearts when wee performe this duty, and earnestly desire the Lord to tye them fast vnto himselfe in the bonds of his feare, that they may not, in this holy exercise, slip aside and depart from him. And if wee finde our sinfull flesh so sluggish and secure, worldly and earthly minded, that it dulthe our deuotion, and stealeth and carryeth euery hand while, our hearts away after things inappertinent, if not worldly and carnall: I thinke it a good course, in our priuate prayer, to repeat that againe in which wee were distracted, labouring in our repetition to call our hearts backe to ioyne with our voyce; seeing heereof commeth a double benefit: first, that wee shall haue our suites more powerfully offered vnto God, when as they are propounded in this hearty manner. And secondly, hereby we shall tame the flesh, and make it not so eager to interrupt vs in these holy duties, when as the spirituall part imposeth vpon it this punishment by way of reuenge, for its sloth and worldlinesse, to make it to continue so much the longer at this exercise, vnto which naturally it is so backward and auerse; and not to feed it selfe vpon any worldly thoughts, wherein it wholly delighteth, till it haue first waited on the Spirit; and suffered it, without interruption, to refresh it selfe with this heavenly breakfast. Let vs meditate also on that glorious presence before whom we stand, who looketh not so much to the phrase of our words, and the well-running stile of our speech, as to the discourse of our soules and hearts; which being so full of distractions and senselesse rauings and rouings from the matter; one while speaking to God, and (as it were) with the same breath, and in the midst of a sentence breaking off, and speaking to the world; jumbling, and confusedly mingling things spirituall and carnall, heavenly and earthly, holy and profane; how can it be but vgly and mis-shapen in his sight: being like Anticke worke, consisting of monstrous compositions, wherein the body of a bird, and the taile of a serpent; the face and fore-part of a man, and the hind-part

and legs of a beast, or the taile of a fish are ioyned together? Let vs thinke vpon the excellency, profit, and necessity of those gifts and graces, which in our prayers wee desire of God, and how infinitely they excell those worldly vanities, which Satan and our owne flesh doe cast into our minds to distract vs in our suites. Vnto vvhose suggestions it is no lesse folly to listen, then for a malefactor vho is suing vnto his Prince for a pardon that concernes his life, to turne from him in the midst of his speech, and to hearken vnto the motions of his lewd companions; soliciting him to returne to his former courses; or for a child, who being suing vnto his father for his inheritance, and by him imployed about writing and sealing his Euidences, doth leaue all this waightry businesse, and runneth away with his play-fellows, to hunt after Butterflies. Finally, let vs meditate on that griefe and discontentment which followeth those prayers which are made with these distractions, and how with sorrow and late repentance vvee wish, that vvhath vvee haue done, had beene done otherwise; and contrariwise, of the ioy and comfort vvhich accompanieth and waiteth vpon the vvell-performance of these holy duties, out of the assurance that they giue vs of Gods loue, of the dwelling of his Spirit in our hearts, vvhich hath thus helped our infirmities; and that our prayers being acceptable vnto God, are surely granted; and then thinke with our selues, that it will not stand vvith our vvisedome to gaine all this griefe, and lose all this comfort and ioy, because vvee vvould not repell these vvordly thoughts and distractions; nor so much as force them to a short absence, vvhen as vvithin lesse then the lesser part of an houre, our hearts and they might lawfully meete together.

And these are the things generally required, that our prayers vnto God may be the speech of the soule; now wee are to speake more specially of those things which are required hereunto, both in our minds and hearts. In our minds it is required, that we pray with vnderstanding: vnto which, knowledge is necessary, both of the true God, vnto whom we pray; and of his will reuealed in his Word, according vnto which wee are to frame our prayers. Wee must know God in his owne nature and persons, and in his Sonne, Iesus Christ, in whom onely wee can know him aright. Wee must know him in himselfe, and in his sauing attributes towards vs, as that hee is a God all-sufficient, most mercifull, bountifull, and gracious; and our most louing Father in Iesus Christ, who listneth vnto our suites before wee make them; a God that heareth prayers, and is more ready to giue, then weeto aske. Secondly, wee must haue knowledge of Gods reuealed will, which ought to be the rule of all our suites; from which if wee swerue, we shall erre in our owne inuentions, and aske we know not what. We shall not pray in the Spirit, which teacheth vs to pray according to the will of God; and wanting this guide, and not knowing of our selues how to pray as wee ought, wee shall aske things hurtfull as well as profitable, and such as tend rather to the satisfying our carnall lusts, then the furthering of our eternall saluation. We shall aske amisse, and so obtaine nothing at Gods hands, seeing though we like foolish children aske things euill and hurtfull, yet our heavenly Father, onely wise, knoweth to giue good things alone vnto his children that aske him; neither neither hath he made any promise at large, that he will grant whatsoever we aske (which, because through our ignorance, wee are apt to aske that which is euill as well as that which is good, would be in this case a threatening rather then a promise) but that our suites shall be heard, if we pray according to his will.

Secondly, it is required that we pray in faith; for we cannot come vnto God, before we beleue that God is; and as the Apostle speaketh, How shall we call vpon God, in whom we haue not beleued? seeing no man is willing to pray, vnlesse it be for forme and fashion sake, but he who is perswaded that God will be gracious vnto him and giue eare vnto his requests. Secondly, without faith our persons are not accepted of God, and they can no other wise be accepted but in Christ, nor we be in Christ but by faith: and consequently our actions cannot please him, when our persons doe not, yet being tainted with our corruptions, they are turned into sinne. Thirdly, we can haue no accessse vnto God, but through Christ our Mediatour, being naturally dead in sinne; and the children of wrath as well as others; neither haue we any interest in Christ, till by a liuely faith we be ingrafted into him. Fourthly, without faith we haue no hope to be heard, seeing the prayer of the faithfull man onely auaieth with God, as the Apostle speaketh, and as we beleue, so it shal be vnto vs. For we haue no assurance but from Gods promises, which are alwayes made vpon the condition of faith, bringing forth the fruits of vnfained repentance. In all which respects, it is most necessary that we ioyne faith with our prayers, and first a iustifying faith, which applieth vnto vs in generall, the promises of the Gospell, Christ Iesus and all his benefits, and assureth vs of the remission of our finnes, of reconciliation with God, and that both our prayers and persons are accepted of him; whereby wee are imboldened to approach vnto the Throne of grace, that we may obtaine mercy, and finde grace to helpe in time of neede. And secondly, some more speciall acts and branches of this faith, which perswade in particular, 1. That our prayers in their seuerall parts are agreeable vnto Gods will and Word; that the things we pray for be good and lawfull, tending to the aduancement of Gods glory and our owne saluation, and such as the Lord hath promised to bestow vpon vs. Secondly, that thus praying according to Gods will, he will heare vs graciously, and grant vnto vs euen those particular blessings and benefits which wee haue craued, and God hath promised to bestow vpon vs; namely, in that manner which he hath promised to giue them: that is, when we begge spirituall graces and heauenly glory, which God hath absolutely promised without any condition, in some degree, as in his wisdom hee seeth fitting for vs, we must accordingly absolutely beleue that we shall receiue them; but when we craue temporall benefits which God hath promised conditionally, so farre forth, as they will stand with his glory, and our spirituall good and euerlasting saluation, we must beleue that wee shall obtaine them so farre forth as they will stand with these conditions. And thus in both kinds we must pray in faith, and as much as in vs lyeth, banish wauering and doubting; for he that wauereth, is like a wave of the sea, drinen with the winde, and tossed to and fro: neither let that man thinke that he shall receiue any thing of the Lord. Now the best meanes to strengthen this our our faith, when we come to pray, is vnto deny our selues and our owne righteousnesse, and casting away all opinion of our owne workes and worthinesse, to ground our faith wholly vpon Gods power and all-sufficiency, his truth in his promises, his infinite mercies, loue and goodnesse towards vs, & the perfite merits & mediation of Iesus Christ. Neither must we looke to the measure of our repentance, and other graces necessarily required in those that pray with hope to be heard, but to their sincerity and truth, nor vpon faith it selfe, in respect of the excellency and degree of it, as thinking thereby that we shall be accepted of God, but as it is the condition, vpon which all the promises are made, and the alone instrument whereby Christ and all his benefits are applied vnto vs. But of the meanes of faith we haue spoken before, and therefore referre the Reader to that which hath bin said.

In respect of our hearts there are diuers things required. First, humility, whereby wee abase our selues in the sight and sence of our owne vilenesse and vnworthinesse, vnfaignedly acknowledging, that we are not worthy to tread vpon the earth, or to looke vp vnto heaven, much lesse to appeare in Gods glorious presence, or to make any suites and supplications vnto him. And therefore reiecting all Pharisaicall conceit of our owne workes and worthinesse, we are to confesse with Abraham, that wee are but dust and ashes; with Iacob, that we are lesse then the least of Gods mercies; with Dauid, that wee are wormes, and no men; with Esay, that we are men of polluted lips; with the prodigall Sonne, that we are not worthy to be called Gods children; with the Publican, that wee are miserable sinners; yea with the Apostle Paul, that of all sinners we are the chiefe. And this humility will be a notable meanes to confirme our faith in this assurance, that we shall be receiued into grace and fauour with God, and that he will heare and grant all our Petitions. For he will looke vnto him that is poore and of a contrite spirit; he is neere vnto him, and will dwell with him; with this sacrifice of a broken and contrite heart, wherein he chiefly delighteth, he is made propitious; and will be ready to heare his suites; for he forgetteth not the cry of the humble, but he heareth their prayer, and will prepare their heart, and will cause his eare to heare, as the Psalmist speaketh. The second thing required in our hearts, is reuerence, vnto which Dauid exhorteth: Serue the Lord with reuerence, and reioyce with trembling; and performed in his owne practice; In thy feare (saith he) will I worship towards thy holy Temple. The which reuerence may be wrought in vs, by the consideration of Gods glorious presence before whom we stand, who being present with vs, seeth all our actions, and how wee behaue our selues in his seruice, and is infinite both in Iustice and power, to punish vs, if we take his name in vaine, and abuse his holy Ordinances, in performing vnto him a formall, cold, and carelesse seruice: and also in mercy, goodnesse, and bounty, if wee worship him aright. And secondly, if we consider withall, our owne basenesse and vilenesse, vnto whom notwithstanding, God, of his infinite grace and mercy, vouchsafeth this high honour and inestimable prerogative, to come into his glorious presence, and to make our suites knowne vnto him. The third thing required, is seruency of affection, and zealous deuotion, whereby we do with all earnestnes desire to haue all our sins pardoned, & our wants supplied, & with all hearty cheerefulness, without dulnesse and drowlines, coldnesse

CAP. XV.

Of the circumstances of Prayer, and of their quantity and quality.

6. Sect. I.
Of our gesture
and voyce in prayer.
1 Cor. 14. 40.

And these are the essentiall duties belonging vnto prayer, besides which, there are others which are circumstantiall and accidental, of which, there cannot for the most part be given any general and certaine rules, but that they be done in order, after a decent & comely maner, and so as shall be most fit and conuenient for the stirring vp of our deuotion, and the furthering of those internall duties before spoken of, which are essentiall and alwayes necessary. The first, is the gesture of the body, which ought to be such as may further our inward humility, reuerence, and seruency of deuotion; wherein we are to imitate the example of Gods Saints in former times, & the custome of the Church and Country where we liue, vsing those gestures which are vsed in them, to expresse externall worship, humility, and reuerence. As among vs, standing, kneeling, vncovering of the head, lifting vp of the eyes and hands; and in extraordinary and greater humiliation, prostrating our selues vpon the ground, casting down our eyes, as being ashamed to looke towards heauen, and knocking of the brest, as bewayling the sinfull corruption therein contained. In all which, our chiefest indenuour must be, that the inward affection and disposition of the heart, do answere vnto the outward gestures of the body, without which they are but hypocriticall shewes. The second, is the voyce which is to be vsed in prayer, so often as conueniently we may, seeing it is one speciall end, for which God hath giuen it vnto vs, that we might by it glorifie him, both in our prayers, and our praises and thanksgiuings. Not that he himselfe needeth it, for he searcheth the secrets of the heart and reines, but for the example and edification of others, as in publike prayer, and for the intention of our owne affections, the attention of our mindes, and stirring vp of our deuotions in our priuate prayers; which notwithstanding must be done with this caution, that seeing priuate prayer must be made in secret, we must not speake aloud in our Closet or Chamber, so as others may heare and vnderstand vs, or at least, we must not doe it to this end, seeing it is but grosse hypocrisie, which we must not only auoide, but euen the very shew and appearance of it, so farre forth as it doth not crosse Christian apologie and profession, nor that rule of piety and charity giuen by our Sauour Christ; Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good workes, and glorifie your Father which is in heauen. For we may easily fall (as diuers doe) into the contrary extreme, who so shun the shew of hypocrisie, that they auoyd all profession of Religion, and are as much ashamed to bee taken in the exercise of prayer, or such like pious duties, though it be at vnawares, especially by those who are not as forward in profession as themselves, as if they were doing something which is faulty and vnlawfull. But this vse of voyce is necessary only in such priuate prayers as are set and solemne, ordinary, and in a priuate place; for as for those short prayers & eiaculations which are to be vsed vpon all occasions, and in all companies, it is sufficient that we lift vp our hearts vnto God, without vsing the voyce, especially in the presence of others, whē the thing we pray for concerneth not them, but our selues; and least of all, when as they do not ioine with vs in the sincere profession of the same truth, as before wee shewed when we spoke of these short prayers and eiaculations.

And these are the things to be obserued in prayer, in respect of our gesture and voyce. In respect of the speech it selfe, or words whereby our prayers are expressed, diuers things are to be considered. First, in respect of the quantity and continuance of them: wee must auoyd affectation of prolixity, superfluity of words, vaine babbling and idle repetitions, which proceed not from any serueny of affection, and earnestnesse of desire to obtaine the things we pray for, arising from the sight and sense of our wants, (for in this case it may be lawfull and requisite to repeate often the same things, as pressing our suits with such importunity as will admit of no deniall: according to the example of Daniel, O our God, heare the prayer of thy seruant; O my God, incline thine eare and heare, O Lord heare, O Lord forgive, O Lord hearken and doe, &c. And of our Sauour Christ himselfe, praying often in the same words, that if it were possible, the bitter cup of his Passion might passe from him;) but out of an opinion that we shall be the rather heard for the length of our prayers, or out of an ostentation of our holinesse and deuotion, or our extraordinary gift aboue others, inabling vs to continue long in this exercise. For this our Sauour straitely forbiddeth: When ye pray, vse not vaine repetitions, as the Heathen doe, for they thinke that they shall be heard for their much speaking; prescribeth the contrary practice, in propounding that short and most pithy forme for our imitation: and condemneth as hypocriticall in the Pharises, who vnderpretence of long prayers, deuoured widowes houses. And Salomon likewise: Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart bee hasty to utter any thing before God, for God is in heauen, and thou vpon the earth, therefore let thy words be few: Of which our Sauour giueth this reason; Because our Father knoweth what things we haue need of, before we aske him; that is, being infinite in wisdom, he needeth not that wee should expresse our mindes in multitude of words, for he vnderstandeth the desires of our hearts, and being our gracious Father, our wants serue as a loud cry, and eloquent oration to moue him to supply them; and therefore hee needeth not that wee should vse multitude of words to giue him notice of those wants which he already knoweth before we aske, nor to perswade him to grant our suits, being more ready to giue, then we to craue. And Salomon rendereth another; Because in the multitude of words there wanteth not sin: which as it is generally true, so especially in the exercise of prayer: seeing, through our naturall corruption, we are so auerse vnto this duty, and in the performance of it, subiect to such coldnesse, dulnesse and wearinesse, that long prayers are often performed with much negligēce, and sub-icest to the interruptions and distractions of worldly cogitations and wandring thoughts. And yet we are not so to vnderstand Salomon, and our Saviour, as though they simply commended short prayers, and condemned those that are long: for the Wise-man himselfe, at the consecrating of the Temple, made one of the longest prayers that wee reade of in the Scriptures: and our Saviour is said to haue continued whole nights in prayer. And the Apostle exhorteth vs to pray continually, and with all manner of prayer and supplication in the Spirit, watching thereunto with all perseverance. But they onely forbid and condemne hypocriticall ostentation, and superfluity of words, vaine repetitions, and opinion of meriting to be heard for them: or when our words exceed our matter, in their multiplicity and much babbling, or both our words and matter, our zeale, deuotion, and attention. Neither are such prayers to be condemned for their prolixity, but rather much to be commended, when as there is no superfluity in our words, to expresse our matter and mindes, nor any negligence or want of zeale and attention in powring them forth before God: for if we haue with the length of our prayers, variety of good matter, attention, and seruency of affection, we cannot be too long in this holy exercise. And therefore the best rule of direction in this behalfe is, that wee fit and proportion our words to our matter, and both matter and words to our minds and hearts, our faith and seruency, deuotion and attention. For if there be store of this diuine fire to kindle it, the more fuell we cast on, the greater the blaze and heate will be; whereas if there be but some little fire and small sparkes, too much of this fuell cast on at once, will not helpe to kindle it, but rather extinguish and put it cleane out. In which regard wee are not alwaies to stint our selues to the same proportion and length of prayer, but to watch the best opportunities, and to diue our selues deepest in this Poole, when the Spirit of God hath descended and moued the waters. More specially we are ordinarily most fit for long prayers, when our soules are prepared thereunto, either by extraordinary afflictions, when as our hearts are full of sorrowes, and need a large vent to let them out, and powre out our complaints into Gods bosome; and replenished with seruent desires for helpe and deliuerance; or by extraordinary benefits, when as they are full of ioy and thankfulness, and so make vs to become earnest and vnwearied, in rendring vnto God praise and thankesgiuing: when as we obserue a solemne fast, and keepe vnto God a day of humiliation, consecrating it wholly to the exercises of religion and charity, especially prayer and meditation. And finally, at all other times, when we are fitted thereunto by Gods Spirit, and sufficiently qualified with the former graces. The which notwithstanding is to be vnderstood of private prayer by our selues, and not when we pray in the company of others; for then we are by the rule of charity to haue respect vnto them, and not to tyre their zeale and deuotion, and cause them to sinne (through our tedious prolixity) by wearinesse and wandring thoughts, although we our selues haue a good appetite to this exercise; for this were to force them to sit long at the table who haue quickly dined, to cloy the weake of digestion, with variety of dishes, because wee who beare them company haue good stomackes; and to constraîne young beginners and children in Christ, to hold out with vs in our pace, who are come to a ripe age, and so to tyre for wearinesse, before they come halfe way to their iourneys end. Which if it deserueth to be iudged vnequall, how much is our practice worthy to bee condemned, if in our meetings wee contend to outvie one another, struiuing who shall exceed in length of prayers, and variety of choyce words, for the apt expressing of our minds; heereby making prayer like vnto a mastery or race, wherein we contend for the prize of praise, which they are to win who are swiftest and best at length?

The second thing to be considered, is the quality of our speech, which ought to be such in our prayers, as is fittest both to stirre vp and expresse our zeale and deuotion. Wherein we are to auoyd two extremes; the first is, curious affectation of words, seeing the Lord respecteth not the eloquence of our speech, but the sincerity of our hearts, and the seruency of our desires, which are as loud cries, and most perswasive orations in his eares, when wee are most barren in words. The second is, rudenesse of speech, without any fit words, or good sense, order or coherence, which is cauled through negligence, want of preparation, and of due reuerence and respect of Gods glorious Maiesty, before whom wee stand, and vnto whom we speake, not caring what, nor how wee babble in his presence, though for our credit sake, wee would be more carefull in speaking to mortall man not much superiour vnto vs. For otherwise, if it proceed not from carelesnesse, but from naturall infirmity and want of vtterance (which we may iudge of, if we be so in other discourses, and vpon other occasions) our prayers notwithstanding proceeding from vpright hearts, and being ioyned with zeale and deuotion, will be acceptable vnto God; yea euen our imperfect speeches, sighes and grones, will as effectually moue him to heare vs, and grant our suits, as the most eloquent speeches which haue all the helpes and ornaments both of nature and art.

CAP. XVI.

Of the forme and method which are to be vsed and obserued in our prayers, &c.

THe last thing to be considered, respecteth the forme and manner of powring forth our soules in prayer vnto God, which is either by vsing set formes, or contriuing of prayers according to present occasions, as we are inabled therunto by the Spirit of God. The former sort are either such as are inuented by others, and learned by hearing, or reading their bookes and writings: or else by our selues vpon due study and meditation. Both which may be lawfully and commendably vsed of Christians according to their severall states and gifts. Written and printed formes by those who want ability to pray in their owne words, or to frame their suits and petitions, and expresse their minds in any good manner and order. The which was one end of perming Dauids Psalmes, that they might by skilfull Musicians be sung in the Congregation; and vsed also in priuate, both in families, and by our selues alone. And our Sauour prescribed that perfect forme of the Lords Prayer, not onely as a rule according to which we are to frame our prayers, but also as a prayer to be vsed it selfe; and therefore as it is said in one Euangelist, After this manner pray ye; so in another, When ye pray, say, Our Father. And therefore as children, before they can goe, are not suffred to sit still, but are trained and taught by others that hold them by the hand: so though wee want spirituall strength and skill to performe this exercise by our selues, yet wee must not neglect it altogether, but yeeld our selues to bee trained by others (as the Disciples did desire of our Sauour Christ) and (as it were holding them by the hand) to vse the helpe of their meditations. But wee are not to rest in this as sufficient, without any further proceedings; for though it be fit for a child in Christ, that he may be thus trained to goe alone, yet when wee come to a riper age, and in respect of our meanes should be able to teach others, it is a shame for vs, and argueth either great impotency and lamenesse in Religion, or else negligence, sloth, and want of exercise, if we cannot goe alone, but still like children, need leading by others. Besides, we cannot by others meditations vnburthen our selues of our owne particular finnes, of which God and our owne consciences onely are witnesses, nor expresse those speciall wants which most pinch vs, and which we most desire should be supplied, nor fit our occasions to their prayers, nor their prayers to our occasions; but wee must, as God requireth by the Prophet, when we come vnto him as suiters, take words vnto our selues, and frame our petitions and thanksgiuings according to our owne wants and occasions. Neither let any that hath beene long trained in the schoole of Christ, obiekt his want of gifts and abilities, seeing if he speake true, he proclaimeth his owne shame and non-proficiency. For if we had any sense of our wants and finnes, wee might finde some words to expresse them, that we might craue a supply of the one, and pardon for the other; especially to our heavenly Father, who is so gracious and willing to beare with our infirmities, and who better accepteth of such imperfect prayers as are indited by our selues, and vttered with zealous deuotion of honest hearts, then of such as are in the best manner penned for vs by others. Euen as euery wise father better accepteth of an Epistle inuented and written by his owne sonne himselfe, though full of imperfections, because it is the meanes to traine him vp to more perfection, then that which is done to his hand by one of his fellowes of an higher forme, though much more exact for matter and manner, because it is the trick of a trewant, and argueth not onely inability and want of skill, but also sloth and extreme negligence.

Formes of prayer inuented by our selues, are such, as vpon due meditation and sound deliberation we haue composed, out of the sight and sense of our finnes and wants, and Gods mercies multiplied vpon vs, not onely generall, but also speciall and particular, framing confessions, petitions and thanksgiuings, so as they may be most fitting for our owne peculiar vse. The which are necessary for such as are not thorowly grounded in knowledge, nor perfected in this duty by much experience and practice; and for such also as being well qualified in these respects, are notwithstanding defectiue in memory and vtterance, hauing no liberty of speech to expresse their mindes without much meditation, and for such also as are defectiue in courage and boldnesse, when they are to pray in the presence of others: And very profitable for all, if wee tye not our selues too strictly to words, but haue variety of formes for ordinary vse, and by helpe of meditation, doe vpon extraordinary occasions, conceiue new words for new matter, as the necessity and profit of our selues, our brethren, or the Church shall require; making particular confessions of sinnes which are lately committed, and doe most burthen the conscience, and speciall petitions for those speciall graces wherein wee finde our selues most defectiue, and whereof wee haue presently most vse, and speciall thanksgiuings, for Gods speciall mercies and fauours renewed vpon vs. The which variety of formes will take away that satiety and wearinesse, which alwayes accompanieth the daily and continuall vse of any thing, though neuer so excellent; and helpe much to keepe our mindes and hearts close to this holy exercise, which are apt to bee carried away with wandring thoughts, if, without any variety, wee tye our selues to one onely forme; like a man that goeth on in a way which he is accustomed to trauaile, and neuer thinketh on the passages and turnings that are in his iourney; or that singeth a tune familiar vnto him by much vse, and neuer thinketh of that he singeth.

Prayers conceiued, are such as vpon meditation we fit to all present occasions, not vsing any ordinary forme of words, but expressing our selues with such as come to our mindes; of which, we haue many examples in the Scriptures, both in the Patriarkes, Prophets, Apostles, and our Sauour Christ himselfe. The which, I acknowledge aboue all other kinds to bee most excellent; if God haue thorowly furnished vs with gifts fit for it, both because it is most free from distractions and wandring thoughts, and from satiety and wearinesse, this variety bringing with it much delight, and also because it is most opportune and seasonable, being fitted to the time, persons, and occasions. But heere the Prouerbe is verified, that things excellent are most hardly attained; there being few that haue this gift and ability, and those few not alwayes in like measure, although there are many that are willing to make shew of it. For there are diuers things which ought to concur in him that is to conceiue a prayer, which if any bee wanting, it cannot be done without much weakenesse and imperfection. First, he must be diligent in meditation, before he thus speake vnto God, calling to memory the sinnes which he is to confesse, the wants which he desireth should be supplied, and the blessings for which hee intendeth to giue thanks; that so he may with Dauid call his prayer a meditation, humble his soule in the sight of his vnworthinesse, inflame his heart with seruent desires, and not speake any thing rashly with his mouth vnto his God, as the Wise man aduizeth. In which respect, I cannot commend extemporall prayers; which are performed without any meditation going before, and am so farre from extolling them as most excellent, that I thinke them scarce tolerable or lawfull; vnlesse some vnexpected occasion and present necessity, doe thrust vs into extraordinary straights, so as wee may not deferre our prayer, nor haue for the present; opportunity to meditate, nor yet haue any former meditations fit for the present occasion, and the circumstances that attend vpon it. Secondly, he that thus prayeth must be grounded in knowledge, that he may frame his prayers according to Gods will. And therefore they who being children in knowledge, doe take vpon them this taske, they must needs faile much in this holy duty, asking according to their vngrounded conceits, and not Gods will, of which they are ignorant. And as children who will venture to runne alone, before they can goe in anothers hand, must needs catch many falles; and they also who will speake much, before they haue knowledge and wisdom to rule their tongues, must needs speake many things vaine and impertinent: so must it of necessity befall them in this case who are children in knowledge, and not well acquainted with Gods will and waies. Thirdly, he must be well experienced and practised in this duty; neither can we without much vse attaine to this perfection. Fourthly, besides a great measure of sanctifying grace, he must haue diuers common gifts of the Spirit, which are necessary to the well-performing of this duty, as a good memory, vtterance and liberty of speech, and holdnesse also when others ioyne with him; which will inable him to expresse readily what his mind conceiueth, and rather intend & inflame, then quench or coole the feruency of his desires. But if we want these, though our knowledge, and faith, and zeale, and all other sanctifying graces bee neuer so great, yet shall we faile much in prayer in this kind, because the powers of the soule will be so wholly occupied about memory, and inuention of fit matter, and words to expresse it, that there will little place be left to zeale, devotion, and feruency of affection. Lastly, it is necessary that hee who prayeth on this maner do carefully auoyd spirituall pride, and ostentation of his gifts, to which the greatest excellencies, through the malice of Satan and our owne corruption are most subiect; and also curious affectation of variety of words to expresse the same matter, as though it were a note of barrennesse to vse twice the same phrases to expresse the same things. But the maine thing which we are to aime at, is to bee feruent and deuout in our prayers, and to this end to vse such words and phrases as may most conueniently lay open vnto God the sincere desires of an vpright heart, whether it be in new variety, or in such words as wee haue often vsed to expresse the same things.

§ Sect. 4.
What method is best to be observed in disposing the parts of our prayers.

Vnto the forme of prayer, we may adde something of the method and right disposing of the parts. The parts of prayer to be vsed ordinarily of vs are three: confession, petition, and thanksgiving. In our priuate confessions of our sins, we are (hauing first a true sense and feeling, hatred & detestation of the) to acknowledge them, & bewaile them, not only generally, but also specially and particularly, and those about the rest which we haue last committed, and with which we haue most often and grievously displeased and dishonoured God, and wounded our owne consciences, according to the example of Dauid, in the one and fiftieth Psalm; and withall aggrauate them by their severall circumstances, especially the consideration of the person against whom they were committed, our glorious God and gracious Father in Iesus Christ; adiudging and condemning our selues in regard of them, to bee lesse then the least of Gods mercies, and worthy of his greatest plagues and punishments. Vnto which

which we are to adioyne petition, and first, that God for his mercies sake, his promise sake, and his Christs sake, will forgie vs all our finnes, and neuer lay them to our charge, seeing our Sauour hath fully satisfied his Iustice for them; and so, that being iustified and freed from the guilt and punishment of our finnes, he will be reconciled vnto vs, and receiue vs in to his loue and fauour. Secondly, that God will be pleased to seale vp the assurance hereof in our hearts and consciences, by the gracious testimony of his holy Spirit, and giue vnto vs the spirit of Adoption, crying in our hearts, Abba Father, and witnessing to our spirits, that wee are his children by adoption and grace. Thirdly, that he will sanctifie vs by the same Spirit, mortifying and crucifying in vs more and more our sinfull corruptions, so as they may not rule and raigne in vs, as at former times, and that he will also quicken vs vnto holinesse and newnesse of life, and inable vs to yeeld obedience to his holy and heavenly will. Fourthly, that he will to these ends graciously vouchsafe vnto vs the meanes which may inable vs vnto them, and make them effectuell by his good blessing vpon them. Especially, that he will indue vs with the sanctifying gifts and graces of his holy Spirit; as sauing knowledge, a liuely faith, vnfeined repentance, firme affiance, seruent loue, and ardent zeale, hope, patience, humility, the true feare of God, and the rest. Fifthly, that God will daily increase his graces in vs, and our strength and ability to serue him, that wee may grow from one measure to another, vntill we come to a perfect age in Christ. Sixthly, that he will establish vs with his free Spirit, that we may constantly perseuere in the profession and practice of true godlines, vnto the end, and in the end; and that he will thereby so assist and strengthen vs against all the assaults of our spirituall enemies, that we may haue victory ouer them, and not be hindred by their tentations, from proceeding in our course of godlinesse, or from finishing the great worke of our saluation. Seuenthly, we must heereunto adde petitions for speciall benefits, whereof wee stand in neede, concerning things either temporall, or spirituall and eternall; and particularly such as are necessary and profitable for the well passing of the day following, especially preservation from all dangers, direction in all our courses, our thoughts, words, and actions, and the blessing of God vpon all our labours, with a right vse of all Gods benefits and chastisements. Finally, we must pray for the good estate of the whole Church, of that in which wee liue, and for all the principall members of it; for our friends and benefactors, for the afflicted, for those of the same family, and such vnto whom wee are bound by any speciall bond of duty. And lastly, we must from petition descend to thankgiuing, praying God for all his blessings, both corporall, spirituall, and eternall; and especially for those peculiar benefits which he hath vouchsafed vnto vs in the whole course of our liues; for those of late receiued; and namely, the night past in our preservation and quiet rest. And this I hold to bee the best method and order to bee obserued in our prayers ordinarily, although I would tye no man vnto it, but that he may herein vse his discretion, beginning with confession, thankgiuing, or petition, as his heart leadeth him, and fit occasion shall be offered.

And these are the duties which are to bee daily performed in this holy exercise

Rom. 8. 15.

§. Sect. 5.
What duties are to be performed after

exercise of prayer. Now after wee haue thus prayed, there are certaine other things required of vs. First, a liuely faith, whereby we doe not onely giue our vnfaigned assent vnto our prayer made, but also rest perswaded, that the Lord hath heard vs in the things for which we haue prayed, and will assuredly accept of our humiliation and thanksgiuing, and grant all our suites and requests, as it will best stand with his owne glory, our spirituall good, and eternall happinesse. And this our Sauour requireth, What things soeuer yee desire when yee pray, beleue that yee shall receiue them, and ye shall haue them. Secondly, hope, patience, and humility, whereby we make no haste, nor prescribe vnto God any time of doing the things which we haue desired, but meekely acknowledging his infinite wisdom in himselfe, and goodnesse towards vs, doe resigne wholly our selues and suites vnto his good pleasure, expecting with all patience his leasure, when as he shall thinke it fittest to bestow vpon vs those gifts and graces which wee haue begged at his hands. Thirdly, there is required of vs after prayer, an earnest indeuour in the vse of all good meanes, whereby we may obtaine those things which wee haue prayed for: whereby wee shall serue Gods providence, and be his instruments to further the accomplishment of his promises, and also make it manifest, that in our hearts we sincerely desired those things which we begged with our mouthes. For example, after we haue prayed for the pardon of our sinnes, we must vse carefully all good meanes whereby we may be further assured that God hath forgien them; after we haue craued sanctification, we must labour and indeuour that we may be sanctified, and exercise our selues in the duties of holinesse; after we haue desired spirituall and sauing graces, we must vse all the helps and meanes whereby we may attaine vnto them. For otherwise we shall discouer our selues to be but meere hypocrites, who with our lips haue prayed for those things which we haue neither esteemed in our iudgements, nor affected in our hearts; and therefore receiue nothing at Gods hands, who giueth his gifts not to idle loyterers, but vnto such as pursue them with thirsting desires, and earnestly labour and indeuour in the vse of all good meanes whereby they may obtaine them.

§. Sect. 6.
Of the time in the morning when we are to vse priuate
prayer.

The last direction which I will set downe for our priuate prayer in the morning, respecteth the time when it is to bee performed; of which, though I can giue no necessary rule, because all mens occasions and opportunities are not alike, yet for the greatest part it is most conuenient that we doe it betimes, as soone as we are ready, before wee vndertake any worldly businesse, and haue our mindes taken vp with any earthly thoughts: Because wee shall then bee most free from all incumbrances which may distract vs in this holy exercise, and make vs lesse fit to performe it as wee ought; as also, because if we offer vnto God the first fruits of our thoughts and affections, they will sanctifie all our following indeuours, and season them so with holinesse, that they will become more acceptable vnto God. Or if some extraordinary occasion and waighty businesse haue caused vs to deferre it, our second care must bee, that wee doe not neglect it altogether, but sequestering our mindes and affections from all earthly thoughts and wordly employments, wee must take the next and best opportunity which shall bee offered vnto vs; and thinke

no excuse or businesse so important, as may make vs vitterly to omit it.

The next duty of piety after our priuate prayer, is prayer with the rest of the family; which is to be performed ordinarily by the master and gouernour, who is to be the mouth of the rest to commend them and their suits vnto God. For, according to the example of the Patriarches and holy men in times past, he ought to be not only a gouernour to rule them, and a Prophet to teach and instruct them, but also a Priest to offer the sacrifice of prayer and thanksgiuing, not onely for himselfe, but also for all those that are committed to his charge: neither ought any man to thinke that he may be exempted from this duty, or that in respect of his honour and greatnesse, he may be priuiledged from this holy seruice vnto God, and as an inferiour duty, delegate it to his deputy, if he himselfe bee able to performe it; but rather with the holy Patriarches to esteeme it an honourable prerogative, which he will no more put off from himselfe to another, then he will the regiment and gouernment of his house and family. Much lesse must we thinke it sufficient, that wee haue prayed alone, or content our selues with our priuate deuotions, if we haue others vnder our gouernment, and committed to our charge: seeing we are to take no lesse care of their soules then of their bodies; nor that they serue vs in the duties of their callings, then that they serue God in the duties of piety and Christianity, without which we can expect no blessing vpon their labors. For if Ioshua, though a great Captaine and Commander, and so greatly imployed both in warres and gouernment, would not hereby excuse himselfe, but vndertaketh for al in his family, that he and his household would serue the Lord: if Dauid, though a King, would not content himselfe with his integrity in the gouernment of the State, but voweth also that hee would performe all domesticall duties with a perfect heart: And if Salomon, though a mighty Monarch in the height of his honour, thought himselfe more honoured in being the mouth of the whole people to commend their suits vnto God; let not any man thinke himselfe so great, that hee is too good to performe this duty. But alas, the neglect hereof is growne so ancient among honourable personages, that it now pleadeth prescription; so that these family duties are wholly neglected, or else put off from themselves to be performed by a deputy. And little hope I haue that my writings and reasons should be so powerfull as to infringe this custome, which hath in it almost the strength of a law, and reuoke the practice of family duties vnto ancient perfection; and yet I thought it fit to speake the truth, and leaue the successe to the authour of it: neither thought I it conuenient in setting downe the rules of piety, that I should fit the straight square to the generall crookednesse of the worke, but to leaue it in its perfection, that the worke in Gods good time may be reduced vnto it. Let therefore all masters of families know, that it is their duty which God will require of them, not onely to pray by themselves, but also to call together all their family, and to ioyne with them in this holy exercise: vnto which they may be encouraged by Gods gracious promise, that where two or three be gathered together in Christs name, there hee will be in the midst of them. Secondly, because by making their house a house of prayer, they shall make it a little temple, which God will fill with his presence, and and replenish with his blessings, both temporall and spirituall. Thirdly, because nurturing their children and seruants in the feare of the Lord, and exercising them in this duty of Gods seruice, they shall make them more faithfull and conscionable in performing all duty and seruice vnto themselues, not onely formally and in outward appearance, but cheerfully and from the heart. Fourthly, because it is the chiefe meanes of the preservation of the whole house and family from sinne and from danger, and of deriuing Gods manifold blessings vpon the whole sociery. Lastly, because they can no otherwise expect that God will prosper their labours, to the good of the master, and the whole house and family, vnlesse they vse the meanes which he hath ordained, and obtaine his blessing by their daily prayers; without which they shall not thriue in their labours, but spend their indeuours and strength in vaine. Now for the time of the morning when this duty is to be performed, no certaine rule can bee prescribed; only this in generall, that it be then done, when as all, or the most of the family may, in respect of their common occasions, most conueniently assemble together. And although it were to be wished, that it may be betimes in the morning, before they goe about their worldly businesse, that they may be free from distraction, and sanctifie all their following labours by these good beginnings: yet because the employments are diuers in almost all the members of the family, and require that some should goe about them sooner, and some later; and because it often falleth out that the gouernours, by reason of age, weaknesse, or other infirmities, cannot rise so soone as others, because they must haue regard to their health, therefore if in these respects this time cannot be allotted to this seruice, some other which is most conuenient may be chosen: which if it can bee no sooner, in regard of the common meeting together of the whole household, it will be fit that it be done before dinner. Of which, the lesse inconuenience will follow, if euery one in the family, and the gouernours for all the rest, haue betimes performed this duty priuately by themselves.

1am. 5. 13.

VNto prayer we adioyne that holy exercise of singing Psalmes in the family, which though it bee not in practice next in order, according to ordinary vse, yet I would not seuer it from the former, seeing it is a religious duty, and like vnto it, being a notable meanes whereby wee praise God, and render vnto him thanks for all his benefits. And though it be not tyed vnto any part of the day; nor yet euery day to bee necessarily performed; and though in no family it be alwayes alike seasonable, as in the time of mourning for some priuate or publike calamity, but in the time of reioycing, when we haue occasion to praise Gods holy name for his gifts and blessings conferred on vs, according to the Apostles rule, Is any man among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing Psalmes. And though

in some families it can seldome be done for want of leasure and opportunity, vnlesse it be on the Sabbath, and in some places nor then, for want of conuenient company to ioyne together; yet where it may conueniently be performed in respect of company, leasure, and other occasions, it is an excellent duty, which is no wayes to be neglected. For first it is inioyned in the Scriptures. The Prophet Dauid in many places exhorteth to it, O come (saith he) let vs sing vnto the Lord; let vs make a ioyfull noise to the Rocks of our saluation. Let vs come before his presence with thanksgiuing, and make a ioyfull noise vnto him with Psalmes. Make a ioyfull noise vnto the Lord, all ye lands, serue the Lord with gladnesse, come before his presence with singing. Sing aloud vnto God our strength, make a ioyfull noise vnto the God of Iacob, &c. Sing vnto him a new song, play skilfully with a lowd noise. So the Prophet Esay, Sing vnto the Lord a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth. And Ieremy, Sing ye vnto the Lord, praise ye the Lord, for he hath deliuered the soule of the poore out of the hands of euill doers. The Apostle Paul likewise exhorteth vs, to speake vnto the Lord in Psalmes, and Hymnes, and spirituall songs, singing and making melody in our hearts to the Lord. Of which, wee haue the Saints of God in all ages examples for our imitation, in the time both of the Law and the Gospell, and in the purest ages of the primitiue Church, who were complained on to the persecuting Emperours, for their diligent performance of this duty day and night. Yea, our Sauour Christ himselfe at the celebration of his last Supper, is sayd with his Disciples to haue concluded that holy action, with singing of a Psalme. Which examples, that we may imitate, let vs further consider in the next place, that it is a notable meanes to rowze vp our drowzie and dead hearts, and by the sweete melody affecting our outward sense, to rapish them with ioyfull delight, and make them cheerefull in Gods seruice, which was the cause why Elizeus being to prophecie, and finding his Spirit dulled with the vnpleasing presence of the idolatrous King, who together with Iehosaphat was to haue the benefit of his good indeuours, desireth a Musician to play before him, to stirre vp his heart vnto the more cheerefull performance of this duty. Secondly, it is an acceptable seruice vnto God, as being a singular meanes to glorifie him, when as our hearts are filled with thankfulness, and our mouthes with his praises; according to that of the Psalmist, Who so offereth praise, glorifieth me; the which, in the same Psalme he preferreth before oblations and burnt sacrifices. Finally, it is an heauenly exercise of the glorified Saints, which we shall performe with them in that place of ioy and happinesse, if wee take delight in it whilst we liue in the earth.

Now if we would performe this in an acceptable maner, our care must be that it be done with our soules as wel as our tongue and lips. And first with our minds, both vnderstanding what we sing, so as we may say with the Apostle, I will sing with the Spirit, and I will sing with the vnderstanding also; and applying our minds vnto it with due attention, & not suffering them to be carried with wandring thoughts. Secondly, we must sing with our hearts also, according to that of the Apostle, Speake to your selues in Psalmes, singing and making melody in your heart vnto the Lord; which elsewhere he calleth, singing with grace in our hearts to the Lord; the which Dauid practised;

I will praise thee (saith he) with my whole heart. And this we shall doe, if we doe apply and fit them to the matter of the Psalme, and put on the same affection which David had in penning them; as humility in the confession of sinne, seruencie of desire in petitions and suites; alacrity and cheerefulness in prayes and thanksgiuings; assent and beliefe in prophecies and predictions; teachableness and willingness to learne in doctrines and instructions; readinesse to obey in commandements and exhortations, &c. and at all times and in all things, reuerence of Gods maiesty, in whose presence we performe this duty. In the meane time we must take heed, that we doe not apply his imprecations, which were vttered by a propheticall spirit against those who were desperate enemies to God as well as David, against our priuate enemies, with a reuengefull desire, that those euils may befall them, seeing our Sauour hath taught vs to pray for them. But wee must either make vse of them for doctrine and instruction, or if we apply them, it must not be against particular persons, but against all those whatsoever whom the Lord in his wisdom knoweth to be desperate enemies vnto him and his Church. Secondly, our care must bee that we doe not make it a bodily exercise, singing Psalmes for recreation only, and as wee doe other songs, for meere pleasure and sensuall delight, but we must performe it as a religious duty of Gods seruice, and striue in it to please him rather then our selues. We must not seeke to delight the eare, and affect the heart with the ayre, musicke and sweetnesse of the tune, but that there being an harmony betweene it and the voyce, we make sweete melody in Gods eares; which if it be wanting, our best musicke (as one saith) is no more acceptable to God, then the barking of Dogs, the lowing of Oxen, or the grunting of Hogs. Yea, as the same Author saith, If I be delighted more with the musicke then with the matter, in stead of seruing God, I fearefully sinne. And therefore diuision and fraction of voyce, broken repetitions and reports, which take away the sense, hinder the vnderstanding, both of the singer and hearer, and tend onely to affect the eare with the melody, and not the heart with the matter, are not to be vsed in this holy exercise. For this is to sing, not like men indued with reason, but rather like birds, which are sensible onely of the tune, but haue no vnderstanding of the matter and ditty.

Pro. 1. 4.

Vnto prayer and praying of God by singing of Psalmes, we are to adioyne another religious exercise, which is reading of the Scriptures and other holy writings; of which we will onely heere speake, as it is a daily duty to bee performed of vs, referring the more full handling of it vnto another place, when we are to intreate of the meanes whereby we may be enabled to leade a godly life. Here let it suffice to shew, that it is a duty no day to bee neglected, if wee can borrow any time from other necessary imployments, and find any conuenient leysure and fit opportunity to performe it. For whereas we should labor after a daily increase in spiritual graces, there is scarce any meanes more effectually for this purpose; seeing it is a notable helpe for the inlightning of our mindes in the knowledge of God and his will, according vnto which we are to frame our liues; for the Word of God is a lampe vnto our eyes, and a light vnto our paths; it inlighteneth the eyes, and giueth vnderstanding vnto the simple. It giueth wisdom to the ignorant,

rant,

rant, and to the young man knowledge and discretion. It is a singular helpe for the strengthening of our faith, when as we haue daily before our eyes the couenant of grace, and the sweete promises of the Gospell made vnto vs in Iesus Christ; and obserue the infinite mercies of God extended to all, without respect of persons who haue beleueed and trusted in him. It much inflameth our loue towards God, when in reading of them we obserue his loue towards vs; and maketh vs zealous of his glory, when we take notice of the infinite bounty of our Lord and Master, and what a rich rewarder he is of our poore and imperfect seruice. It will serue for a looking-glasse, wherein we may see our spots and spirituall deformities, and bee directed also by it to reforme and amend them. It is a fit guide in the time of prosperity, which will reach vs to vse Gods blessings aright, so as they may be, not onely truely comfortable in themselves, but also as they are pledges of Gods loue, and earnest pennies of our saluation. It will be our comforter in our aduersitie, whilst it teacheth vs so to profit by them, as that they may be signes of our adoption, and notable meanes to assure vs of Gods loue and our owne saluation. It containeth in it the euidences of our heavenly inheritance, and teacheth vs how to get them into our owne keeping without feare of losing them; and who cannot daily with much comfort spend some time in perusing these assurances, wherein so rich and glorious a Kingdome is ratified vnto him? It is a diuine treasury of all spirituall and heavenly riches; and who is so vnwisely moderate in his spirituall desires, as not once in a day to please his eye with the sight of these treasures? Finally, it is our spirituall armorie, in which is munition of all kinds, and all sorts of weapons, fit to defend our selues, and offend our enemies; and therefore seeing we are daily in the Christian warfare, and continually assaulted by the enemies of our saluation, why should we not also daily goe into this armory to fit our selues with spirituall armour, and to take out of it the most preuailing weapons? Now for the time of the day when this duty must bee performed; in respect of priuate reading it cannot bee limited, but must bee left to bee prescribed by mens leasure and opportunity. And for that which is vsed as a family-exercise, it is most seasonable, as I take it, before prayer, either morning or euening, because then they are assembled together, and multitudes of occasions will hardly admit of often meetings.

CAP. XVIII.

Of our daily exercise in the duties of our callings, and of diuers vertues required in them.

HAuing thus begun the day by the performance of these religious duties, we must in the next place betake our selues to the duties of our lawfull callings. Neither can we sufficiently approoue our selues vnto God, if we doe not ioyne these with the other, for he will be serued, not onely in the generall duties of Christianity, but also in those speciall duties which are peculiar vnto those places and callings in which he hath set vs, either in the Church

§ Sect. 1.

That we must make choyce of lawfull callings.

or Common-wealth. Neither is it sufficient for him who is called to be a Magistrate, Minister, Master of a family, or seruante, that hee performe those duties which are common vnto him with all Christians, vnlesse he also with like care and indeuour, performe those speciall duties which belong to his owne place and calling. And heere first is required, that our calling be lawfull, and agreeable to Gods will and Word; that is, such an one, as our labours in it may tend to Gods glory, the good of the Church and Common wealth, and the furthering not onely of our temporall, but also our spirituall good, and the eternall saluation of our soules; and not such as being vnlawfull hindreth these ends; as those that liue by vnlawfull Artes and Trades, Players, Gamesters, and such like; for then the greater paines wee take in such callings, the greater is our sinne, the more wee dishonour God, hurt our neighbours, and hinder our owne saluation. Secondly, that wee bee in some measure qualified with such gifts as are fit for our callings; for those whom God calleth vnto any place, hee furnisheth them with such competencie of gifts, as that they may profitably performe the duties required vnto it. And if our calling bee lawfull, and wee thus fitted for it, then may wee say with the Apostle Paul, that wee are called by the will of God, and may with cheerefulnesse and comfort goe on in it, expecting his blessing vpon our labours, and in the end of our liues, a rich reward for doing him therein faithfull seruice. Thirdly, our minds and hearts must be settled in our callings, so as we neither shift and change, vnlesse it be vpon waighty and necessary causes, nor intrude and busie our selues in the callings of others; for this were to ouerthrow all order, and bring confusion into Church and Common wealth; and to crosse Gods wise prouidence in the gouernment of the world, who hath giuen variety of gifts, which he hath appointed to be exercised in variety of callings, that being helpfull and seruiceable mutually vnto one another, humane societies might be preserved, & peace and loue nourished in them. And therefore as in a well-gouerned Army, euery one keepeth his place and station vnto which his Generall hath designed him, & not only serueth him generally as a Souldier, but in that place and office vnto which he is appointed and chosen: So must wee demean our selues towards our great Commander, and not thinke it enough to performe good duties, vnlesse we doe those which belong to our callings; not out of fancie and fickle vnconstancie, leauing our station; but as the Apostle requireth, abide in the same calling wherein God hath placed vs.

2. Cor. 1. 1.

1. Cor. 7. 20, 24.

§. Sect. 2.
That we must
be regenerate,
before we can serue God ac-ceptably in our callings.

But it is not sufficient that we be settled in a lawfull calling, and that we painfully performe the duties that are required in it (for this a meere worldling may doe out of carnall and earthly respects, either for his owne pleasure, credit, or profit) but that we so carry and demean our selues in it, as that we may by our labours and indeuours glorifie God, further our own saluation, and aduance the good of the Church & Common wealth. Vnto which, diuers things are required, some whereof respect our persons, and some the actions and duties which we performe. Vnto our persons there is required, that we be regenerate and sanctified. For our persons must be accepted, before any of our workes can please God, and bee holy and righteous, before we can bring forth the fruits of holinesse and righteousness.

For

For as vnto the pure all things are pure: so vnto them that are defiled and vnblessing, is nothing pure; but euen their minde and conscience is defiled. And if the sacrifices of the wicked are abominable, and their very prayers are turned into sinne; how much more are the ordinary vworkes of their callings sinfull and odious in Gods sight? Neither can such as are vnsanctified expect any blessing of God vpon their labour, or that they should prosper in any thing vvhich they doe or take in hand, seeing by Gods promise, this priuiledge is limited vnto the righteous and such as feare him.

Vnto the actions also and duties of our callings, that they may be acceptable vnto God, diuers things are required. And these are either such vertues and graces which goe before, as being the causes of all our good actions and proceedings, or such as doe accompany and attend vpon them. Of the former sort, the first and principall is a true and liuely faith, whereby I vnderstand not only a iustifying faith which assureth vs of the remission of our sinnes, and of the loue and fauour of God, and which by vnitng vs vnto the true vine Christ, doth inable vs in him to bring forth the fruits of righteousnesse, without which we cannot please God, nor doe any good thing, seeing all wee doe, is sinne; but also a particular act of this faith, whereby we are perswaded that our callings and the duties which wee performe in them being pleasing vnto God, the Lord wil giue a blessing vpon all our labours and indeyours. For which purpose our faith must haue a warrant and ground out of Gods Word, both inioyning these duties, and promising a blessing vnto the performance of them. And thus shall wee liue the life of faith, which is so often commended vnto vs in the Scriptures, when as therein wee doe not only the religious duties of Gods seruice, but also the duties of our callings, whereby wee shall bee encouraged to goe forward in them with all alacrity and cheerefulness, when as we are assured that God will blesse those labours which himselte hath required; and not bee dismayed with those crosses and troubles which befall vs in them, seeing we are sure, that by Gods blessing and gracious assistance, wee shall overcome them, and haue a good end and issue of all our labours.

Secondly, the duties of our callings must proceede out of vnfaigned loue towards God and our neighbours, which is the fountaine of all true obedience, and not principally from selfe-loue or loue of the world, which being poysonous rootes of all sinne, will taint all our workes and actions which spring from them. They must arise from the loue of God, which moueth those in whom it is, to consecrate wholly vnto him their liues and labours, in all things desiring to serue him, who so loueth vs, and whom we so loue, both in the immediate duties of his worship, and also in the ordinarie duties of our callings. And this is done, when as wee labour in them, not first and chiefly for worldly gaine and aduantage, thereby to please our selues; but in obedience to Gods Commandement, who requireth these duties of vs, studying in all things to please him, and that our actions both for the matter and manner may be approued and accepted in his sight. Secondly, wee must performe the duties of our callings out of loue towards our neighbours, seeking in them their good as well as our owne, seeing true charity seeketh not her owne, but is also seruiceable vnto others: which if wee doe, then will we not wrong them, to benefite our selues, nor gaine by thir losse; wee will not deprive them of some great good, to get vnto our selues some small aduantage; neither will we be so wholly intent and greedily gripple in following our owne businesse, but that wee will spare them some of our time, and afford them our best helpe, when their necessity shall require our assistance, and reason, charity and conscience shall binde vs to afford it.

§. Sect. 5.
That they must be directed to right
ends.
1. Cor. 10. 31.

Thirdly, as our labours must arise from these causes, so they must bee directed to right ends. As first and principally to Gods glory, which in all wee doe, wee must labour to aduance. Neither is God onely glorified when wee professe and practise religious duties, but also when wee walk conscienceably in our callings, and with all diligence performe the duties required in them in obedience to his Commandements. Secondly, we must propound vnto our selues in them the good of the Church and Common wealth, which wee are to preferre before our owne priuate, and so carry our selues in all things, as that we may be profitable members in these societies. In which regard wee must not seeke to gaine by the common losse, but neglect our owne particular, when as it will not stand with the publike and generall good. Thirdly, we must in all our labours ayme so at our owne profit, as that we ioyne therewith the welfare and benefite of our neighbours, whom by the Law of charity wee are to loue as wee loue our selues; and not raise our gaine out of their losse and disadvantage, as it is the common custome of the world. But as wee professe our selues members of the same body, so must wee, as becommeth members, ayme chiefly at the preservation of the whole, and then at the ioynt good one of another, not thinking those goods well gotten, which are raysed and gayned out of our neighbours losse.

§. Sect. 6.
That the duties of our callings must be performed after a right manner, and first, with heavenly mindes.

Phil. 3. 20.
Col. 3. 1. 2.

And these things are to bee obserued in the labours of our callings, in respect of their causes both efficient and finall. In the next place our care must be, that we performe them after a right manner; vnto which is required that wee be exercised in our earthly businesse, with heavenly mindes and affections, and not suffer our worldly imployments so wholly to take vs vp both in soule and body, as that thereby wee should bee hindered from hauing our conuersation in heauen. But like Citizens of heauen, and pilgrims on earth, whilst our bodies are traouailing in worldly imployments, we must haue our mindes, hearts and affections lifted vp in spirituall and heavenly meditations and desires, contemplating and longing after the ioyes of our owne countrey, and not so much minding the things beneath, as the things above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. Especially, we must not neglect in the midst of our ordinary businesse, to lift vp our hearts often vnto God, either craving his blessing in the beginning of our worke, or giuing him thanks and praise in the end; and not suffer our thoughts to be so wholly set vpon our bodily imployments, and earthly objects, as not sometimes to fixe them vpon spirituall and heavenly things. For if worldlings and citizens of the earth, are seldome or neuer so intent vpon their workes and present imployments, but that their minds and hearts will take liberty of wandring after those those carnall pleasures wherein they most delight; let it be a shame for vs, who professe our selues Citizens of heauen, so wholly to mind earthly objects, as neuer to finde leasure to thinke of the ioyes of our owne Country, or of the spirituall meanes whereby wee may be inabled to attaine vnto them. As therefore we are to auoide Monkish sloth and idlenesse, giuing ouer the painefull labours of our callings, vnder pretence of contemplation; so are we with no lesse care to auoyd the contrary extreme, of turning worldlings, and being earthly-minded; hauing our mindes and hearts so wholly fixed vpon worldly things, as that we can finde no leasure to thinke vpon those which are spirituall and heauenly. But we must be so imployed in the duties of our callings, as that we neglect not the generall duties of Christianity, and the exercises of Religion in their due time; nor be so intent and earnest in pursuing momentany gaine and worldly profit, as that in the meane time, through spirituall sloth, we suffer any of Gods sauing graces, heauenly thoughts, or holy affections and desires, to bee cooled and quenched in vs. Wee must so play the good husbands, as that we doe not forget Christs counsell; First seeke the Kingdome of God, and his righteousness, and not be so taken vp with our Oxen, farmes, and earthly matches and marriages, as to neglect the meanes whereby wee may bee fitted to come as worthy ghests to the marriage of the Kings sonne. Wee must chuse with the Philosopher, rather to neglect our farmes then our soules; and suffer some weedes to grow in our fields, rather then to haue our mindes ouergrowne with vices, or to lose any good opportunity of weeding them out, or of sowing in them the seeds of Gods graces.

Mat. 22. 3, 4.

Aristippus apud
Plut. de tranquil. animi.

Secondly, vnto the performing of the duties of our callings after a right manner, there is required that we sanctifie them by the Word and prayer. The former is done, when as we doe nothing but that for which we haue our warrant out of the holy Scriptures, and vse them as the rule and squire, according to which we frame all our actions, doing that which the Word of God requireth, and leauing that vndone which it forbideth and condemneth. The which is to be obserued, both in respect of the matter and workes themselves, and also the manner and circumstances, doing all things both in substance and forme, as it requireth and directeth. The latter is performed, when as by prayer wee desire Gods blessing vpon all our labours; and render vnto him praise and thanksgiving, when wee haue obtained it, and haue succeeded and prospered in the workes of our hands. And this the Apostle requireth in all our affaires; Whatsoeuer yee doe in word or deed, doe all in the name of the Lord Iesuu, giuing thanks to God, and the Father by him. The necessity whereof will plainly appeare, if we consider, that it is Gods blessing onely which maketh rich, and causeth vs to thrine and prosper in all the vworkes of our hands. That it alone inableth vs to build goodly houses, and causeth our heards and our flocks, our siluer and gold, and all that wee haue to multiply: and that hee onely giueth vs power to get wealth. That it is he, who at his pleasure giueth and taketh away, maketh poore and rich, bringeth low and lifteth vp, raising the poore out of the dust, and lifting vp the begger from the dung-hill, to set them among Princes, and to make them inherite the Throne of glory.

6. Sect. 8.

Of the vertues which must accompany vs
in the duties of our callings.

As we see in the example of Abraham and Lot, who by the blessing of God vpon their labours, waxed so rich, that the land was not able to beare them that they might dwell together; and of Isaac, who being a sojourner and stranger in the land, prospered in all his labours; and sowing the ground, receiued in the same yeere an hundred fold, because the Lord blessed him. And in Jacob, who passing ouer Iordane like a poore Pilgrim, with his staffe in his hand, at his returne backe againe was multiplyed in wealth. Whereas contrariwise, if Gods blessing be wanting (as wee are not likely to haue it vnlesse we craue it) all our labours and indeuours will be spent in vaine; For except the Lord build the house, they labour in vaine that build it; except the Lord keepe the City, the watchman waketh but in vaine; It is in vaine for vs to rise early, to sit vp late, and to eat the bread of sorrowes, not affording our selues a good meales meate, out of our earnest desire to become rich. For if wee neglect Gods seruice, the Lord will blow vpon our labours, and then though we sow much, we shall bring in little; wee shall eat, but not haue enough; we shall drinke, but not be satisfied; clothe our selues, and not bee warme; and earning wages for our worke, we shall not bee the richer, but put it all into a bag with holes. Or if our labours prosper for the increasing of worldly wealth; yet Gods blessing being wanting, it shall doe vs more hurt then good, bringing with it no sound comfort and contentment, but carking care, feare, and griefe; whereas the blessing of the Lord maketh rich, and hee addeth no sorrow with it, as the Wiseman speaketh. And if we thus performe the duties of our callings, in loue towards God, and in obedience to his commandement, and desire by prayer his blessing vpon our labours, and yeeld him praise when he hath vouchsafed to giue it, then shall we therein doe seruice vnto God, though our condition and the workes of our vocation be neuer so meane and base, as well as in hearing the Word, or receiuing the Sacrament, or in performing the most excellent duty which he hath commanded, seeing though they differ in the matter, yet not in respect of our minde, and manner of doing them. And so we may be assured, not only that the Lord will prosper vs in them, and giue them such good successe in this world, as shall be most fitting for his glory and our spirituall good, but also will richly reward them, among other duties of his seruice, with euerlasting ioy and happinesse in the life to come. The which argument the Apostle vseth to perswade seruants to walke faithfully in their calling, obeying their masters, according to the flesh, and herein performing their duty, with all cheerefulnesse and singlenesse of heart, as vnto the Lord, and not vnto men; knowing that of the Lord they should receiue the reward of the inheritance, because in seruing their masters, they serued him.

The next thing to be considered, is the vertues which ought to accompany vs in the right and religious performance of the duties of our callings. For howsoever all vertues and graces are necessary vnto the person that must thus walke acceptably before God, and scarce any can bee wanting to the well-performing of any good action; yet there are some which more specially and properly belong to these duties of our callings, and doe so immediately concerne them, that they can in no good sort bee done of vs, vnlesse in some measure we be qualified with them. As first, knowledge and

and iudgement, whereby we must be inabled to discern betweene good and euill, right and wrong, which must be our light to guide vs in all our wayes, and our loadestarre to direct vs in all our courses, which if it bee wanting, we shall walke in darkenesse, and be apt to fall into many errors. Secondly, affiance in God, whereby we cast our selues vpon his promises and prouidence in the vse of lawfull meanes; the which the Psalmist requireth of vs; Commit thy way (saith he) vnto the Lord, trust also in him, and he shall bring it to passe. The which we may more easily doe, if wee rightly consider our Saviours argument which he vseth to the same purpose; for if the Lord take care to feede the fowles of the aire, which take no care for themselves; and clotheth the lillies of the field, which neither toyle nor spin, how much more will hee prouide for vs all things necessary, who rest vpon him in the vse of all lawfull courses, and take moderate care, and conuenient paines to serue his prouidence? which affiance, if it bee wanting, we shall be subiect to innumerable discouragements, macerate our selues with carking care, and rush, vpon all occasions, into the vse of vnlawfull meanes, when lawfull are wanting; thereby shifting for our selues, because we haue no assurance that God will prouide for vs. Thirdly, wee must be accompanied with a good conscience both towards God and towards men, and willing with the Apostle, to liue honestly, wee must with him keep it in all things. For hauing alwayes in our company this Monitour and Iudge, it will notably preferue vs from all secret sinnes, and craftie conueyances, whereby we are naturally apt to wrong our neighbours, that we may benefit our selues; from all halting, dissembling, and double dealing, when as it may be so cuaningly and closely carried, that respect of our credit, worldly shame, nor legall punishment are no sufficient bonds to restraine vs from them; and from sloth and vnfaithfulnesse in performing our duties; when no eye of man can take notice of it. Fourthly, we must haue contentation for our companion, whereby we are in all things contented with Gods good pleasure, and thinke that estate and condition best for vs in which he hath placed vs, giuing indifferent welcome to prosperity or aduersity, pouerty or riches, gaine or losse, because they are messengers alike of his sending; and though some more then others doe in rougher tearmes deliver his message, yet when we doe entertaine them aright, they all assure vs of his loue, as being meanes to further our saluation. And of this we haue an example in the Apostle Paul; Who had learned both, how to be abased and how to abound, to be full and to be hungry, to excede and suffer want. Vnto which if we attaine; then shall we not be discontented with the basenesse of our callings; nor envie others their greater preferments, their lesse labours and more gaines; we shall not bee set vpon the racke of ambition, aspiring daily after higher dignity, seeing the place in which we are, being of Gods appointing, is most fitting for vs. Neither can any calling be thought too base for vs, wherein acceptable seruice may be offered vnto God, yea wherein he ioyneth with vs as our helper and assistant, and rewards the paines which we take in them, with no lesse wages then an heavenly inheritance. We shall be preferred from that deadly dropie of vnstable avarice; for our conuersation may bee without couetousnesse, if we come to thinke godlinesse the greatest gaine, and can bee content content with such things as we haue. And consequently, we shall walke honestly in our callings; when being contented with our estate and condition; we will vse no indirect and vnlawfull meanes, nor fraudulent, violent, or vniust courses, to enrich our selues with other mens goods. And goe on in our duty with much comfort and inward peace, when our heads are not vexed with carking cares; nor our hearts affrighted with the terrors, nor gnawed on with the worme of an euill conscience. But of this I haue spoken largely in another place. Fifthly, we must possesse our soules with patience, if we will, as we ought, walke in the duties of our callings; for besides that our labours in themselves are tedious and troublesome; we are daily subiect to many crosses and mis-carriages in them, which will discourage vs from going on; or if we doe, being constrained by necessity, yet with much discontentment and disquietnesse of minde, murmuring and repining, if we be not armed with patience, and resolution to suffer with meekenesse, whatsoeuer God shall be pleased to send. Sixthly, we must haue our hearts replenished with thankfulness vnto God, and bee ready at all times when we obserue his loue in blessing our labours, to lift them vp, rendring vnto him praise and thanksgiuing. And acknowledging that we are lesse then the least of Gods mercies, we must giue him the whole glory of them, and not sacrifice vnto our owne wits, nor attribute our well-proceeding and good successe to our owne policie and skill, industry and abilities, but knowing that whatsoeuer we haue, we haue receiued it from God, wee must take all occasions of rendring vnto him the praise which is due vnto him. Seuenthly, wee must performe the duties of our callings with alacrity and cheerefulness, and whatsoeuer we doe, we must doe it heartily, as vnto the Lord, and not vnto men, who will richly reward our labours with an heauenly inheritance. For as he loueth a cheerefull giuer, so also a cheerefull labourer, in all things more respecting our inward affections then our outward actions. And as it is acceptable to God; so will it bee most comfortable vnto vs, making all our labours easie; when our hearts and hands are conioyned in doing them. Eighthly, we must obserue Iustice in all the duties of our callings, doing nothing in them, but that which may aduance our neighbours good as well as our owne. And this will make vs auoyd all vniust and vnlawfull courses, which are commonly vsed to gather wealth; all fraud and deceit, extortion and oppression; all vnprofitable labours, which tend to the hurt, rather then the good of the Common-wealth; and deceitfull dealing, in those that are lawfull. Finally, by this Iustice wee shall bee mooued to giue euery man his due, and to doe no man wrong in the carriage of our callings; but so deale in them with others, as we would haue others in their callings to deale with vs.

CAP. XIX.

Diuers reasons which may perswade vs to be faithfull and diligent in duties of our callings.

NOW when we are thus qualified with these vertues and graces, the last thing required in the duties of our callings, is, that we walke in them with all painfulnesse and diligence, which because it is tedious to flesh and blood, and men are naturally giuen to ease and liberty, desiring no calling at all, or, if any bee put vpon them by necessity rather then choyce, to walke in them with as much sloth and negligence, as desire of their gaine and aduantage will permit; and few of many that are painfull, are diligent in their callings in obedience vnto God, or out of conscience of their duty, or any other religious consideration; labouring no otherwise in them then Infidels and Pagans, onely for worldly benefit and earthly respects. Therefore it will be profitable to propound some reasons out of the Scriptures, both to incite vs to honest labour in the workes of our callings; and to make vs auoyd sloth and idlenesse. First then let vs consider, that God hath ordained man as naturally to labour, as the sparkes to flee upwards, and in the state of innocency would not indure that man should be idle, but made his labour easie and comfortable, that he might labour with delight. And therefore much lesse will he now suffer man vnpunished to liue at his ease, seeing he hath imposed it vpon him as a penalty for his transgression, that in the sweate of his face he should eate his bread; and hath purposely cursed the earth with barrennesse without tilling and manuring; being content that it should want its naturall fruitfulnessse, rather then that man should want necessary cause and occasion of labour. And though hee would haue his Saints in heauen to keepe vnto him a perpetuall Sabbath (not that they should be idle, but wholly intent to his prayes) yet prescribing a Law vnto sinners on earth, he appointeth but one day for rest, and sixe for labour, to shew vnto vs, that in this world he will bee serued, not onely with religious duties, but in the greatest part of our time, by walking faithfully and conscionably before him in the duties of our callings, expressing and exercising our inward graces and religious vertues, in our vocations, and the outward duties required in them. And this Law hee hath backed with many speciall commandements and testimonies of holy Scripture, requiring at our hands that we should daily exercise our selues in the duties of our callings. Thus Salomon sendeth the sluggard to learne of the filly Ant diligence and industry in his labours, that at least, shame might driue him to the performance of his duty, when hee seeth himselfe a reasonable man, who hath so many motives to induce him, and ability to propound so many good ends vnto his paines, to bee exceeded heerein by a filly creature, who hath no other helpe nor inducement but the instinct of nature. So the Apostle Paul requireth of all men, that they studie to be quiet, and to doe their owne businesse, and condemneth them who worke not in their owne callings, but busie themselves in other mens matters, as inordinate persons, adiudging them to this punishment, that if they

they would not worke, neither should they eate; because they haue no right vnto it before they haue laboured for it, but are theeues, who liue by the sweate of other mens browes, and like idle drones, vniustly deuoure the fruit of their labours. And this the Apostle implieth, where hee first requireth them to worke with quietnesse, and then to eate their owne bread: for if earning it by our labours make it our owne, then it is not our owne before we haue earned it; neither will free gift of friends or inheritance giue iust title vnto it, vnlesse we strengthen it, by performing obedience to that first Law after the fall, In the sweate of thy face thou shalt eate thy bread. And therefore the Apostle seemeth to make stealing and not labouring to be all one; Let him (saith he) that stole; steale no more, but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing that is good. Vnto which precepts of holy Scriptures, prescribing labour in the duties of our callings, we may adde the examples of all the Saints of God in all ages, as fit patternes for our imitation; who haue alwayes liued in lawfull callings, and haue faithfully laboured in the duties of them, as of Abel and Noah before the flood, the one a Shepherd, the other an Husbandman; and after the flood, of the Patriarkes, Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and all their posterity that descended of them; of Moses, Dauid, the Kings and Prophets; of the Disciples of our Sauour Christ; and especially of the Apostle Paul, who, as he professeth, laboured more abundantly then they all, not onely imploying himselfe in his painefull Ministry and Apostleship, but labouring also with his hands, that he might not be offensiuē, but be a good example for others to imitate. Yea, our Sauour Christ himselfe, who though hee were free borne, and the onely begotten and dearly beloued Sonne of his Father, submitted himselfe as a seruant to the common Law of mankinde, tying himselfe by a voluntary necessity to labour in his calling, and to doe the workes of him that sent him. The which hee did with such cheerefulness and delight, that he professeth it to bee his meate and drinke to doe the will of him that sent him, and to finish his worke. And therefore if the Sonne and heire could not be free from labour, how should any of his seruants be exempted? If the Lord of the Vineyard could not bee priuiledged from taking paines, with what face can any of the hired labourers excuse their idleness?

Againe, let vs consider that the Lord himselfe is the Author of our callings, and that it is his ordinance that we should labour in them. It is he that created, and redeemed, and continually preserveth vs, who hath called and set vs in our places, and hath appointed vnto euery one their worke and taske; and hath not onely promised his helpe and assistance in all our labours, but also hath incouraged vs to take paines, by assuring vs, that he will richly reward them when wee haue finished our worke. And therefore, if after all this, we will detract our labour, and spend our time in sloth and idleness, what is it but to leaue our standings, and to withdraw our selues from vnder his gouernment? to neglect Gods worke, and to doe seruice vnto Satan, and the sinfull lusts of our owne flesh? what is it but to deprive our soules of that comfort which we might haue in his company and assistance; and by pretending difficulty in the atchieuing our labours, to argue and accuse him of insufficiency, who hath vnder-

taken to assist vs., and by his helpe to giue good successe vnto all our iust iudgements? what is it, but for the inioying of short and carnall ease to our flesh, to forfeit all hope of obtaining those rich, heavenly, and euertlasting rewards, which he hath promised vnto vs, as the free and gracious wages of our momentary labours?

Finally, let vs consider the manifold benefits wherewith God hath promised to blesse our labours, if we be painefull and diligent in the duties of our callings. And contrariwise, how much he abhorreth and condemneth sloth and idlenesse, punishing them that liue in it, with innumerable euils which he hath iustly caused to attend vpon it. Concerning the former, it may be a strong inducement to make vs diligent in our callings, if we consider the benefits which accrew vpon it. For whereas euery one is ready to aske, Who will shew vs any good? and is easily drawne to any course by the golden chaine of gaine and aduantage, the Wiseman telleth vs first generally, that in all labour there is profit, whereas idle talking with the lips tendeth onely to penurie. And in many other places he setteth forth more particularly the manifold benefits that doe accompany it. For it exalteth to honour and authority, according to that, The hand of the diligent shall beare rule, but the slothfull shall be vnder tribute. And againe, Seest thou a man diligent in his businesse? he shall stand before Kings, he shall not stand before meane men. It buildeth the house, and maketh and erecteth mansion places for themselves and their posterity. So saith Salomon, Prepare thy worke without, and make it fit for thy selfe in the field, and afterwards build thy house. Contrary to the practice of many in these times, who preferre building, and neglect husbandry, and take care to set vp faire houses, before they haue any land to lay vnto them; building themselves quite out of doores, and like fooles, making houses for wise men to dwell in. It is crowned by the Lord with riches and plenty; For he that tilleth the land, shall be satisfied with bread, and the hand of the diligent maketh rich. And whereas that which commeth lightly, is as idly spent; that which is gotten by honest labour, is preserued and multiplied; according to the saying of the Wiseman, Wealth gotten by vanity, shall be diminished, but he that gathereth by labour, shall increase. It preserueth the body in health, which languisheth with idlenesse, maketh the meate pleasant by quickning the appetite, and the sleepe sweete; whereas the idle turne vpon the bed, as a dore vpon the hinges, and not being able to rest, because they haue not laboured, toyle themselves with too much ease, and are tired with tumbling, euen vpon their beds of downe, being iustly punished by God, with restless tossing and sweating in the night, because they would take no paines to serue him in the day. It affordeth comfortable and liberall meanes, not only for the maintenance of our selues and those that belong vnto vs, but also whereby we may be beneficiall vnto others that neede our helpe, and exercise our charity in the workes of mercy, and in relieuing the poore members of Iesus Christ; which hee will richly reward and crowne with glory and happinesse at the day of Iudgement. For whereas the sluggard, whose hands refuse to labour, getteth nothing for himselfe to satisfie his desire, though hee conuetteth greedily all the day long, the righteous that is diligent in the workes of his calling, hath not onely sufficient for his owne vse, but giueeth liberally to others and spareth not. And this end the Apostle propoundeth to our paines in our honest callings, willing men to labour, working with their hands the thing that is good, that they may haue to give to him that needeth. Finally, if fearing God, wee walke painefully in our callings, wee shall not onely inioy the fruit of our labours, but also bee blessed in this fruition; according to that of the Psalmist, Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord, and walketh in his wayes, for thou shalt eat the labour of thy hands, happy shalt thou bee, and it shall bee well with thee. And if God seeth it fit that he should misse of this earthly happinesse, he will abundantly recompence it with euerlasting blessednesse in the life to come.

Contrariwise, the Lord abhorreth idlenesse and negligence in our callings, esteeming them that are slothfull, more brutish and without vnderstanding, then the dumbe & brute creatures, and therefore sendeth them to their Schoole to be instructed by them. Go to the Ant, thou sluggard, consider her wayes and be wise. And therefore it is condemned in the ^b Scriptures; reprooued in the Parable; Why stand ye here idle? Forbidden in all our affaires; ^d Be not slothfull in businesse; Matched and ranked with wasting our owne goods, and stealing from other men; for he that is slothfull in his worke, is the brother of him that is a great waster; and the Apostle implyeth by that Antithesis, Let him that stole, steale no more, but let him labour with his hands; that an idle person is no better then a thiefe. For he robberth the poore of their right, who depriueth them by his sloth of that reliefe, which he might yeeld vnto them out of his honest labour. And finally, to be wicked and slothfull, are words of like signification, and fit to describe a person desperately naught and designed to destruction. Whereof it is that our Sauour ioyneeth them together in the Parable of the talents; Thou wicked and slothfull servant, &c. But how much God hateth idlenesse and negligence in the duties of our callings; it will better appeare, if wee consider the manifold euils which hee causeth to accompany and attend vpon it.

The which are of two sorts, both the euils of sinne, and the euils of punishment, of both which it is the cause, producing the one, and by due desert drawing vpon vs the other. For the first, idlenesse is a mother sinne, and (as we vsually say) the roote of all euill; for when the deuill findeth vs not employed in Gods seruice, he entertaineth vs into his, and setting before vs the obiects and baits of worldly vanities, he offereth to giue them vnto vs as the wages of iniquity, if we will serue him in those sinfull lusts and workes of darkenesse wherein he will vse vs. When hee seeth vs like grounds vntilled and vnmanned, and therefore vnfit to receiue the seeds of Gods graces, he soweth in vs the weedes of all vice and sinne, besides all those which grow vp in our hearts naturally, and of their owne accord, being grounds which in themselues are too too fertile, to breed and bring forth all fruits of impiety. More especially, idlenesse and neglect of our callings is a notable cause of heresies, sects, and schismes. For when men want employment in their owne affaires, they grow curious and inquisitiue after other matters; propound many vaine questions and needlesse doubts, tending more to contention, then the vse of edifying, which when they haue haue resolved, according to their owne humour and phantasie, they goe (hauing nothing else to doe) from house to house to possesse others with their conceits, and when they haue priuately trained vp many in their opinions, at last they make a generall muster, and become heads and capitaines of that faction, which themselues haue raised; disturbing the peace of the Church, by renting themselves from it, and making warre against the truth; as the miserable experience of these times doth too euidently shew. Neither doth it alone make men busie and curious in matters of Religion, but also in ciuill affaires; for when men grow negligent in their owne businesse, they haue leasure to intermeddle with other mens, and hauing nothing to doe at home, they range abroad; carrying tales from house to house, and sowing the seeds of discord and dissension among neighbours. Of such idle busie-bodies, the Apostle complained in his time, who walked disorderly, and worked not at all, but busied themselves in other mens matters, and disquieted all whom they came among. And such were those yong idle widdowes, who wandred about from house to house, and by being idle, became rattlers also and busie-bodies, speaking things which they ought not. And as it is a cause of schisme in the Church, and dissension in families, so also of sedition and rebellion in the Common-wealth, whilst it maketh men inquisitiue after newes, and to pry curiously into matters of state; busie in censuring those that are in authority, and so filling both their owne and other mens minds with discontents, they become seditious, and vpon all occasions ready to rise and rebell, for want of other imployment; and the rather, that by fishing in troubled waters, they may supply those wants and necessities which negligence in their callings hath brought vpon them, therefore betaking themselves to Armes, because poerty and want (like an armed man) hath first assaulted them. And this was the reason why Pharaoh, fearing that the Israelites would rise and withdraw their neckes from vnder the yron yoke of his tyrannicall gouernement, probably, though falsly, coniectured that want of worke was the cause; out of that generall maxime and principle in policie, that idlenesse maketh men seditious and rebellious; whereas imployment in their callings so taketh vp their mindes, that they haue no leasure to thinke of things impertinent to their private estate and affaires. It is the cause also of couetousnesse, and all the euils that doe spring from it, as wrong and oppression in the mighty, fraud and deceitfull dealing in the weake, yea euen of theft, robbery, and piracie; for when men through idlenesse and negligence in their callings, become poore and haue nothing of their owne, they greedily desire other mens goods to supply their wants, and vse all vnlawfull meanes whereby they may compass them. Which caused the wise Agur to pray against penury & want of necessities, lest being poore he should steale, and so take the name of his God in vaine. And this made the Apostle inhibiting stealing, to inioyne labour, as being the best meanes to keepe men from this sinne. It is the cause likewise of gluttony and drunkennesse, if want keepe not from this excesse, and empriness of the purse preuent not this too much fulnesse of the belly. Whereof it is, that in the Scriptures they are ioyned as companions and mutuall causes one of another. So it is said, that the finnes of Sodom were pride, fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idlenesse; and that the Israelites sat down to eat and drinke, and rose up to play. For when mens mindes are not imployed about their callings, they are set vpon their bellies, not onely to please their appetite, but also to take away the tediousnesse of time, which is caused by idlenesse. Which I am perswaded is the chiefe cause of the excessiue and hurtfull vse of Tobacco in these dayes; for because mens heads are idle and empty of businesse, they fill them with smoke; and for want of better imployment, they betake themselves to this vaine exercise; making hereby their idle time lesse tedious, & taking away melancholy, the vsuall companion of sloth, by intoxicating their braines, & stupifying their senses, so as they become lesse apprehensiue of their mis-spent time, and the manifold euils which accompany their idlenesse; till by much vse and custome they grow to such an habit, that they now vse it not onely for delight, but also for necessity, hauing no power to forbear and weane themselves from it. Of which I am the rather perswaded, because I see it most vsed amongst those who are most idle, as inordinate youth and loose gallants, and by those who are otherwise industrious and laborious, when they intermit the workes of their callings, and vpon any occasion are at leasure from their imployments. Finally, idlenesse is the cause of whoredome and all yncleane lusts, not onely as it is a speciall meanes to pamper the flesh, and so to inable and prouoke it to these workes of darkenesse, but also because it giueth leasure and liberty to the heart and eyes, to wander and roue after wanton and lasciuious objects, as the lamentable example of holy David, and of innumerable others since his time, and euen in our owne dayes, haue too manifestly prooued.

Secondly, as idlenesse and negligence in our callings produceth these manifold euils of sinne; so is it no lesse fruitfull in bringing forth the euils of punishment, both in this life and in the life to come. For first, as it is the roote of all sin, so by consequence it generally bringeth with it all punishments that these sinnes deserue, of which it is the cause and roote, seeing they are but the after-fruits of the same tree. Besides which, it may be truly and properly said to be the cause of diuers speciall punishments. As first, of pouerty and penury of all Gods blessings, through neglect of the workes of our callings, which are the ordinary meanes ordained by him, whereby he deriueth vnto vs his gifts and benefits. And this Salomon often affirmeth, and much beateh vpon in many places: Hee becommeth poore, that dealeth with a slacke hand, but the hand of the diligent maketh rich. The soule of the sluggard desireth and hath nothing, but the soule of the diligent shall be made fat. The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold; therefore shall he beg in harvest and haue nothing. Loue not sleepe, lest thou come vnto pouerty, open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread. Yea it is punished, not onely with want of riches, but also of necessities, and with pinching hunger the worst of all corporall euils; For slothfulnesse casteth into a deepe sleepe, and an idle soule shall suffer hunger. For as they haue no store of their owne, but want in others greatest plenty, and beg through extreme penurie, euen in the time of harvest; so doe they deserue by their slothfulnesse to be neglected of others, and harden the hearts of those who are able and willing to giue, so as they thinke it no Almes-deed to relieue them out of their their store; for they that will not work, are not worthy to eat; seeing they are unprofitable burthens of the Common wealth, the blemish of a well governed Church, and idle Drones; who devour the fruit of other mens labours. Or if men seeing their wane and misery, giue charitably to their necessity, though they respect not their person, yet it is punished with servitude and base subiection. For through penury they are constrained to live vpon begging & borrowing, and as the Wiseman obserued, The rich ruleth ouer the poore, and the borrower is a seruant to the lender; & againe, The hand of the diligent shall beare rule, but the slothfull shall be vnder tribute. Finally, in the life to come it is punished with euermore death, for not only the wasteful and riotous seruant, which mispendeth and consumeth his Lords talents, but also the idle and unprofitable seruant, which doth nor increase them by his honest labour, shall be cast into ouer darknesse, where shall be weeping, and gnashing of teeth.

C. A. P. XX.

That all persons without exceptions, are bound by Gods Law to walke painefullly in the workes of their callings.

AND these are the reasons which may moue vs to be painefull in our callings, and preserue vs from idleness. But a question may bee made whom it concerneth to be thus daily employed, seeing common practice of the world doth plainly proclaim, that they thinke, all are not tied by these reasons to spend their time in paines and labour; and that many may liue without any calling at all, or hauing one, may onely labour so much as they neede, or will stand with their credit and place. As though there were no other bonds to tye them vnto any paines, but necessity among the poorer sort, increase of riches among those who desire to increase their wealth to an higher pitch, and honour and authority among those who are in place of gouernement. As for the rich that are contented with their wealth, and Gentlemen who liue vpon their lands and great reuenues, and desire not to haue the honour with the burthen of gouernement, they neede not to imploy themselves in any calling, but may spend their time in all ease and pleasure, in hunting, and hawking, in gaming, and reueling; with which conceits they are so possessed, that they hold it some disparagement to bee otherwise exercised, or to take any paines in any lawfull calling. For answering whereof, wee are to know, that these reasons concerne all men of all estates and conditions, rich and poore, noble and base, so long as they are able to take paines, and are not made vnfit by age and impotency, sickness and such other infirmities. For the Law imposed vpon Adam, bindeth also all his posterity, that in the sweate of their face they should eate their bread. By which borrowed speech, from the practice of those who labour with their hands, is meant that all, of all estates and conditions, should serue God with paines and diligence, according to the nature of that calling which they haue taken vpon them; as Magistrates in their gouernment, Ministers in their studies, preaching, and other Ministeriall functions; the Artificer and Craftman

in his Science and Trade; the Husbandman in the workes of Husbandry. And it is indefinitely said in Iob, that man is borne vnto labour, as the sparkes lie vnder the foot, so that he who would haue a passport to leade an idle life, must forgoe the priuiledge of being a man. Yea, not onely men, but women also are tyed to this taske of daily labour in their callings; neither may they eate the bread of idlenesse, as the Wiseman speaketh, but must take paines, according to their place and state, either in working with their hands, if they be poore, or by governing their families, and with the good huswife in the Prouerbes, looking well to the wayes of their household, or some other honest employment which may keepe them from idlenesse, fit them for a charge, and make them more helpfull vnto others, and in some kinde or other, profitable members of the Common wealth. For if they consume their time in sloth and idlenesse, and according to the common custome of many in the world, spend all the rest of the morning which they can spare from sleepe, in curious adorning of their bodies, in frizzling and curling the haire, painting the face, with such like vanities; and the after-noon in vaine talking and courting, idle visitations, carding, playing, and sporting themselves in such carnall delights, they (for ought I know to the contrary) shall as well as men bring vpon themselves all the former euils of sinne and punishment.

6. Sect. 2.
That Gentlemen haue no priuiledge
of idlenesse;
and how they should spend their time.

As for Gentlemen and those that haue attained vnto lands and riches, whereby they are able to maintaine themselves and their charge; though they are not, in respect that God hath thus aduanced them aboue others, to performe seruile workes, which were too much basenesse, nor to out-toyle themselves in bodily labour, which were needlesse and vnprofitable for the Common wealth, by taking from the poore their worke, and with it their wages and meanes of maintenance; yet they are not exempted from such labours and employments, as becometh their place and state. Yea, in all reason, because God hath beene so gracious vnto them aboue others, that hee hath aduanced them to more honourable callings, wherein they may exercise themselves in employments of a more excellent nature, and greater worth with greater ease; and hath richly rewarded them before-hand with such extraordinary pay and bountifull wages, aboue the rest of their fellowes, whose labours are more base and toyle some, lesse honourable and important; therefore of all others, they should be least idle in this faire, easie, and honourable seruice, and exceede all others in diligence, as farre as they exceede them in these many and rich priuiledges. And heere-of it is that Sodome was so much condemned and fearefully punished; because abounding in all wealth and plenty, they exceeded also in sloth, abusing the blessing of riches and prosperity, to pride, fulnesse of bread, and abundance of idlenesse. Besides then those religious duties, of praying, hearing the Word, reading, meditating, and such like, in which it be-cometh Gentlemen and rich men to bee most diligent, as hauing more leasure and better opportunity to performe these exercises, then the poorer fort: there are also many ciuill duties, in which their time and paines may be profitably employed; As first and chiefly, the duties of Magistracy, if they be furnished with fit gifts for it by God, and called thereunto by superiour authority; wherein they are chiefly to aime at Gods glory, and the good of the Church and Common wealth, by preserving Justice, truth, and peace, the beating downe of all vice and sinne, and the aduancing of vertue and godlinesse in them. And not the pleasing of their owne humours, the pleasuring of their friends, and the filling of their purses with gifts and bribes. But if they be not fit for these employments, or not called thereunto, then may they profitably be exercised in governing their owne families, appointing their seruants to their worke, overseeing their labours, and taking account of what they haue done; in husbanding and managing their estates, that they may, as much as in them lieth, preserve it intire, and leave it to their posterity. And what time they can spare from these employments, they may profitably spend; either, if they be of a martiall disposition, in seats of Armes, riding of great Horses, and such like exercises, whereby they may bee fitted for the seruice and defence of their Country. Or if they be naturally inclined to contemplation, and a quiet and peaceable life, they may apply themselves to the study of Law, Physicke, or Diuinity, that they may not onely bee able to direct themselves in all things that concerne their estates, bodies, and soules, but also may be helpfull vnto their neighbours about them, by directing them in their courses, and resolving them in all their doubts, when as they resort vnto them to aske their counsell. Vnto which studies, if our Gentility were inclined, I see no reason why they might not bee (like that worthy and renowned P. Mornay du Plessis of France, famous in all Countreys for his valour and learning) the greatest Schollers in the Common wealth, next vnto them that reside in the Vniuersities; seeing they haue most leasure and opportunity to follow their studies; and best purses to furnish their Libraries. Or if they haue not beene brought vp to learning, they may imploy their time profitably in according differences, and ending controuersies betweene their neighbours; in vsing all good meanes both by word and example, to discountenance sinne, and aduance vertue, in doing the workes of mercy, as overseeing the poore, and taking order for their prouision, relieuing the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sicke, to which duties God hath inabled them aboue others, by making them stewards in his family, and committing a greater portion to their ordring and disposing. And if Gentlemen would thus spend their time, they should be truly noble in the eyes of God and men, and reape more true & lasting honour in their Country, by this their Christian conuersation, then the antiquity of their house, their ancient and ennobled pedigree, their coates of Armes & Ensignes of Gentilitie, their gilded Coaches and gay apparell can yeeld vnto them. Yea, which is aboue all, they should by these courses haue the inward peace of a good conscience, and inioying their earthly priuiledges as pledges of Gods loue, and earnest pennies of their saluation, their hearts would not bee set vpon these, but vpon the mayne bargaine of heavenly happinesse assured by them; and would bee content with all cheerefulness to leave them, & to lay downe their talents at Gods feet, when as he shall call them to enter into the ioy of their Lord.

Now if the rich and noble are not priuiledged from diligent walking in their callings, then much lesse can any of the poorer sort, who are able to take paines, thinke themselves exempted, seeing they are tyed to the performance of their duty, not only by the same golden bond of conscience, but also by the yron chaine of necessity, that they may haue wherewithall to relieue and sustaine themselves and those that belong vnto them; which if they be not strong enough to tye them to their duty, but that they will liue like idle loyterers, and not labour for their liuing; it is fit, that vnto these two, there be added a third, which is the bond of authority, whereby they should bee compelled to take paines, and not liue as idle and vnprofitable Drones in the Common wealth. And if this treble bond will not hold them, then are they as inordinate liuers (according to the Apostles rule) to be cast out of all ciuill society, and not suffered to eate, because they will not worke; or else to feede vpon the bread of affliction and the water of sorrow, because they will not eate the bread of their honest labour, nor earne their liuing in the sweate of their face. Neither doth any law binde vs to relieue such as will be subiect to no law, nor to pittie their wants who will take no pittie on themselves. But what if being poore, they cannot maintaine themselves and their charge, either because it is so great, or the gaine so small that commeth of their labours; and what if their trade be so hard, and paines in it prized at such low rates, that there is no competencie in their earnings to minister vnto them and theirs necessary reliefe? In this case the poore are ready to say, that it is as good to sit still, as to rise and fall; and that they had as lief play for nothing, as worke for nothing. But it is farre otherwise; for howsoeuer if the case truly standeth thus (for it is not alwayes so when it is pretended; and oftentimes the trade is blamed, when the fault is in the negligence and sloth of them that loyter in it, as heereby it appeareth, in that many others of the same trade, by their laborious diligence, doe with their earnings comfortably maintaine themselves and their families) yet (as I say) if it be truth which they speake, howsoeuer they may in this case (if they can) change their calling for a better, which will affoord them more sufficient meanes and maintenance; for the labourer is worthy of his hire, and by Gods Law, if we be liberall in spending our sweate, wee should not bee scanted in eating our bread; yet so long as they hold their calling (as they ought to hold it till they can change for a better) they must not surcease and giue out their labour in it. To which end let them consider, that they doe not only thereby serue cruell man, who being straight in his bowels, will not suffer them to get their liuing by their labour, nor allow them soode to recouer that strength which they haue spent in his seruice; but that in all their workes and laborious paines, they serue as their chiefe Lord, the bountifull King of heauen and earth, which will richly reward their diligence, if it bee done in obedience to his Commandement, and supply abundantly whatsoeuer is defectiue and wanting on the behalfe of their earthly master. The which, if he doth not to their full content in this life, but, to humble them and weane them from the world, doth feede them with a sparing hand, yet if they will performe their duty, and possesse their soules with patience, what is wanting in full payment heere, hee will double and redouble, yea infinitely multiply, by crowning their paines and patience with vspeakeable ioy and endlesse glory, in the life to come. Yea if they will, making conscience of their duty, cast themselves into into the armes of Gods providence, he will assuredly provide for them, according to that of the Psalmist, Trust in the Lord and doe good, thou shalt dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. And either he will allow them more liberall maintenance, by powring out a larger blessing vpon their labours, or by opening the hearts of those who are rich, to contribute to their necessities; or else, seeing man liueth not by bread onely, but by every word that proceedeth out of Gods mouth, hee will giue such an extraordinary blessing vpon their little poore pittance, that like vnto the widdowes handfull of meale and cruize of oyle, and Daniels pulse and water, it shall be as sufficient to preferue their heath and strength, as the dainty fare and full tables of the rich. In the meane time, they whom God hath Blessed with sufficient plenty, are to be perswaded, to let the chiefe streames of their bounty and Christian beneficence runne into these dry and thirsty lands, and to take speciall care, that aboue all other poore, these who are painefull in their callings, and yet not able thereby to sustaine themselves and their families, may be relieued and comforted. For of seed so seasonably sowne in such choyce grounds, they may assuredly expect an heavenly haruest, and plentifull crop of ioy and happinesse. Whereas if they shut vp the bowels of their compassion, and will not communicate some little part of those many rich talents which God hath entrusted to their disposing, for the glory of their Master, and good of their fellow-seruants, but let them or theirs famish and starue for want of reliefe; their riches and they will perish together, and that little pittance of portion which they hold in their hands, and of right belongeth to the poore, shall bring them in the end no more comfort then Achans wedge of gold, or Dines riches, when he was in hell torments. For in this life it shall canker and corrupt the rest of their treasure, and the rust of it in the day of Iudgement witnessing against them, shall cause them to heare that fearefull and dreadful sentence, Depart from me, ye cursed, into euerlasting fire, prepared for the deuill and his angels; For I was hungry, and yee gaue me no meate, I was thirsty, and yee gaue mee no drinke, &c. In which respect, I should ten thousand times rather chuse to perish for hunger; then abounding in their wealth, to let others perish for want of charity; and with Lazarus, to die at the rich mans gate; then with Dines, to sit gorgeously apparelled at a full table.

Now concerning those who are impotent and cannot worke, being disabled by age, sicknesse, lamenesse, or other infirmities, they are not by the former reasons bound to labour in their callings, because God himselfe hath exempted them from the common rule and law, and hath left their consciences free from guilt of sinne, in the omitting of those duties, vnto the performing whereof he himselfe hath disabled them. And therefore if they be rich, they may liue at ease, and inioy thankfully their portion, as the gift and blessing of God. Or if they be poore, they may with good conscience liue vpon those charitable beneuolences which others shall be pleased to bestow vpon them; praising God for raising vp such good instruments to serue his providence for their reliefe and maintenance; and praying vnto him daily for their benefactors. Yea, in this case men are bound in conscience to lay open their wants, if others take no notice of them, them, and to craue and receive their helpe and assistance; which if out of an high stomacke in a low estate, or out of a proud modesty and bashfulnesse, they neglect to doe, and so perish for want of reliefe, they are injurious to their able and willing neighbours, in refusing to be subiects of their charity; and so hindring them of that heavenly haruest which they should reape of it; and guilty also of their owne death, in not vsing those lawfull meanes whereby their lines should be preserued. And of these also the rich are bound to take care, that according to order and Law in this case provided, nothing which is necessary be wanting vnto them; for God hath lent them their wealth to this end, that what they can spare from their owne necessary expences, they should cheerefully bestow for the reliefe of others; which if they neglect to doe, they shall haue a fearefull reckoning to make at the day of Iudgement. But of this I haue largely written in a Treatise of this Argument, and therefore heere passe it ouer.

Of Recreations, which are not onely lawfull, but also profitable and necessary, if wee bee exercised in them according to Gods Word.

¶ Sect. I.
That we cannot continually be exercised in the workes of
our callings.

Iob. 4. 34.

Heb. 4. 15.

Iob. 4. 6. 8.

HHe chiefe end for which God hath created, redeemed, and doth preserue and sustaine vs, is, that we should serue him, and the principall meanes whereby he is worshipped and serued, are the generall and religious duties of Christianity, and the speciall duties of our callings. In which regard, it were much to be desired that we could spend our whole times in the performance of them, and esteeme it our meate and drinke to doe the will of our heavenly Father, and our chiefe delight, to exercise our selues continually in these duties. But because this is impossible, in regard of humane frailtie and weaknesse, therefore hath God graciously permitted, yea inioyned vnto vs some time of intermission and cessation from these labours, wherein we may refresh our selues, and repaire our decayed strength, exhausted and spent in these Christian exercises, that so we may be the better inabled and fitted to returne vnto them againe with renewed vigour, reassume our taske, and performe our duties in them with more ability and dexterity. And these are the times which are allotted to recreation, taking of our repast by eating and drinking, and composing our bodies to rest and sleepe. For that we cannot alwayes labour in the duties of Christianity and of our callings, nature it selfe teacheth vs, and the experience of our weaknesse, which maketh vs to sinke vnder this burthen, if wee neuer lay it aside; and the example of our Sauour Christ himselfe, who though in his diuine nature he were omnipotent and needed not to rest, yet as he was man, who had taken vpon him, not onely our nature, but our infirmities also, after his painefull labours, he needed, being weary, to rest, and being hungry, to refresh himselfe and repaire his strength. And therefore after his journey, being weary and hungry, hee rested himselfe at Iacobs well, whilest

whilst he sent his Disciples into the City to buy him meate. And in another place being tired with the coming and going of the multitude whom he taught, so as he had no leasure so much as to eate, he commandeth his Disciples to accompany him, and to go apart into a desert place, that there they might rest a while and take their repast. Which whoso neglect, and thinke that they can spend their whole time in labour, they foolishly tempt God, in refusing his ordinance, and the meanes which he hath appointed to repaire their strength, and preserve their health; they proudly presume on their owne power, as though they were better able to doe the duties which God hath inioyned then Christ himselfe, and are no better then selfe-murderers, bringing themselves vnto an vntimely death, because they refuse to vse the meanes which God hath ordained and sanctified for the sustaining of their liues.

Mark. 6. 31.

§. Sect. 2.
What lawfull recreation is; and that it may be vsed with a good conscience.

Rom. 14. 23.

Seeing then it is not onely allowed as lawfull, but commended as necessary and profitable, that ordinarily we should spend some part of the day in vacancy from labour, and remission of the workes of our callings, therein taking our recreation, diet and repast, rest and sleepe, that wee may more cheerefully returne to our labours, and more ably performe them, when as our bodies and minds are refreshed by this intermission; we will in the next place speake of them seuerally, and shew how we may lawfully so vse them; as that they may be helpes and not hindrances to the well-performing of all Christian duties. And first we will speake of recreation; which is an intermission of our labours, and spending of conuenient time in some delightfull exercise, for the refreshing of our mindes and bodies, that their vigour and strength being repaired, wee may more cheerefully returne to our callings, and performe the duties of them with more ability. Which that wee may vse without scruple of conscience, (which would make it, though lawfull in it selfe, vnlawfull vnto vs, because whatsoever is not done of faith, is sinne) let vs know, that honest recreation is a thing not onely lawfull, but also profitable and necessary. The lawfulness of it hence appeareth, in that it is according to Gods will, which he hath manifested, both by his workes, in that he hath made man so finite in his powers and abilities both of body and minde, that he cannot hold out in continuall labour, nor long subsist in well-being, in health, and strength, vnlesse he be refreshed with seasonable recreation; and also by his Word. For the same Law which inioyneth painefull and profitable labour in our callings, requireth honest recreations as a speciall meanes which inableth vs vnto it, seeing in euery Commandement wherein a duty is imposed, all the helpes and furtherances which inable vs to doe it, are also inioyned. And though God hath appointed this world to be a place of pilgrimage and warfare, and not a Paradise of pleasure, and Chariot of triumph, reseruing that for his owne Kingdome, when hauing finished our iourney, and obtained victory, we shall rest from all our labours, and be compleate in all ioy and happinesse; in which regard it becommeth vs not heere to spend most of our time in sports and pastimes, but rather in painefull trauaile and sore conflicts with our spirituall enemies; yet because we could not hold out in our pilgrimage and warfare without some refreshing, he hath graciously allowed vs some time (as it were) to lye in our

our Inne and Garrison, to take our pleasure and delight, that being refreshed, we may more lustily proceede in our journey, and more courageously renew our warfart and fight; and to this end hath fitted his creatures, both for the vse of necessity; and also comfort and delight; and not onely alloweth man bread and water to sustaine him in life; but as the Psalmist obserued; wine that maketh glad the hearts of man; and oyle to make him looke with a cheerefull countenance.

Neither is recreation onely allowed as lawfull, but also, inioyned as profitable and necessary. It is profitable; because it inableth vs to hold out in our labours, and to performe all good duties with more vigour, and in much greater perfection. For as the strings of a Lute let down & remitted, doe sound sweeter when they are raised againe to their full pitch; and as our fields, being euery yeere sowed; become at length more barren in bearing; but being sometime laid fallow, repay the Husbandmans patience and forbearance with double increase: so our bodies and minds, if they haue no remission from our labours, will make but dull musick; if we doe not sometimes let them lye fallow, and giue them a Summer-tillth of seasonable recreation, they will remit much of their vigour, and become quickly more barren, to bring forth any good fruits; whereas by timely remission, they will afterwards make more harmonious melody, and double their fruitfulness, if, languishing with labour, we refresh them, and repaire their strength with some pleasant intermission. And as recreation in these respects is very profitable, so also is it no lesse necessary: for if (like bowes) wee should alwayes stand vpon our bent; wee would in a while proue starke slugges; and if (like Lute strings) wee should alwayes haue our strength stretched to the highest pitch; it would not onely be deadded and dull, but still in danger to cracke and faile. We are not made of God fit instruments for perpetuall motion, but rest is to hold interchangeable course with it. The which is to bee vnderstood, not onely of our bodies, but also of our minds; for both of them haue but a finite vertue, and their powers and faculties proportioned vnto finite actions and operations; and therefore as they cannot doe things about their strength, so neither can they continue in doing beyond their time; or if they doe, they are soone wearied and spent, and forced to leaue their labour vpon the necessity of impotency; which we would not intermit vpon the choyce of discretion. But chiefly this falleth out in the studies and labours of our minds, when as they are exercised about intellectuall objects, and intentiuely bent vpon discourses of reason. For sensible things are con-naturall and familiar vnto vs, and therefore being exercised about them, we doe it with ease and delight, as being (like the fish in the water, and the bird in the ayre) in our owne proper element; but when they are employed about things onely intellectuall, especially in diuine contemplations which are most contrary to corrupted nature, and are eleuated aboue their pitch, and wholly abstracted from all things sensible, as in diuine studies, prayer, and heavenly meditations; then they cannot (like men in the element of water) support themselves without much intention and labour. In which regard, as the body needeth rest, both when it is wearied by greatnesse of labour, or long continuance in that which is more easie, in the proper objects of its owne actions;

actions; and also after serious studies and contemplations of the minde, seeing it worketh not alone, but exerciseth its faculties by the body, and the chiefe parts of it, as organs and instruments: so likewise the minde and soule it selfe, after it is wearied with labours and studies, needs refreshing, not like the body by rest, but by delighting it selfe with change of objects and operations, leaving those which being serious, high, and difficult, need much intention and study, that we may conceiue and comprehend them; for those which being easie, familiar, and delightfull to the senses, recreate also the minde, and bring vnto it much ease and pleasure. And if it want these seasonable recreations, the powers and faculties of it will be soone blunted and dulled, and made vtterly vnfit for intellectuall studies and diuine contemplations. To which purpose there is a Story of the Apostle and Euangelist Iohn, recorded in the collations of the Fathers, and cited by Aquinas; who when one found him recreating and sporting himselfe with his disciples, and was offended at it, as a thing misbecoming his Apostle-like grauity; inioyned one in the company, to put his arrow into his bow and draw it to the head; which when he had done often, he willed him to continue drawing it still, vnto which when he answered, that if hee should so doe, his bow would either bee broken or become sluggish; the Apostle inferred, that so likewise the minde of man would bee broken, or grow dull and blockish, if it should alwayes stand vpon the bent, and neuer bee remitted from the earnest intension of serious studies.

*Aquin. secunda

And thus it appeareth that recreations are not onely lawfull, but also profitable and necessary. Now because many are apt to abuse this liberty vnto licentiousnesse, and to rush vpon all sports and pleasures without choyce or difference, or if they pitch vpon those which are allowable in themselves, care not how shamefully they abuse them, in respect of their ill carriage in the manner of vsing them: We are in the next place to know, that recreations are not absolutely good, but of an indifferent nature; good to those that vse them well, and euill to those who abuse them vnto sinne; not simply good being considered apart by themselves, but as they in their vse tend to the aduancing of those ends for which they are vsed. Finally, not good at all vnto vs, if we rush vpon them rashly and hand our head without choyce, and haue neither care nor conscience in our manner of vsing them; but when wee obserue diligently those lawes and cautions, wherewith wee are limited and bounded in their vse by the Word. And these either respect the matter or manner; the recreation it selfe, or our course and carriage in exercising our selues in it. For the recreation it selfe, our first care must be that it be lawfull, and either approved and warranted, or at least, not forbidden and condemned in the Scriptures. And here we are to obserue not onely those recreations which are particularly named, but likewise all those which haue some analogie and similitude with them. And these are either of the minde alone, or of the body and minde ioyntly together. The recreations of the minde, as the propounding of Riddles, and resoluing of them, for the exercise of wit, of which we haue an example in Samson, propounding vnto the Philistines at his marriage feast this Riddle, Out of the easter came forth meate, and out of the strong came forth sweetnesse, &c. Wherein wee are to obserue, that both the words and meaning bee modest and chaste, and not like many Riddles, propounded in obscene words, which men thinke excused by their modest resolution. So also the contemplation of Gods workes, flowers, and plants, birds, fishes and beasts, that out of their beauty and excellent properties and qualities, wee may take occasion to see and admire the infinite wisdom and power of their Creatour, without which, the bare sight of the creatures, and delight that ariseth out of them is vaine and fruitlesse, in respect that it faileth of one principall end, and will (as experience sheweth) rather distract vs from our callings, then fit vs for them. And this seemeth to haue beene one of Salomons recreations in his best times, who out of this exercise of contemplation, was able to speake of all trees, from the Cedar that was in Lebanon, euen to the byssope that sprung out of the wall, and also of beasts and fowles, creeping things, and fishes. Vnto which we may adde the delighting of our mindes one with another, with pleasant discourses and witty conceits, and by our selues by vsing the excellent Art of Poetry, either making Poems our selues, or reading those which are composed by others. In all which, and the like exercises of the minde, our care must be that our recreations, neither in respect of words, matter, or manner, be wanton or wicked, insulfe or corrupt, and neither bitter and biting, tending to the disgrace of others, nor prophane and filthy, tending to the poysoning of our hearts and affections, or to the corrupting of our manners and conditions; neither to the impeaching and losse of Christian grauity, nor to the hindring of that harmony and seemely decency which ought to be obserued in all our conuersation. The recreations of the minde and body ioyntly together are many, as the exercise of the senses, especially the eyes with delightfull sights, and the eares with harmonious musicke, which aboue all other recreations is commended in the Scriptures, and by the example of the Saints, who not onely vsed it in Gods worship, to cheere and fit the heart the better for holy duties, but also for ciuill recreation, that they might thereby be the better inabled for the duties of their callings. And thus the Prophet in almost innumerable places, stirreth vp both himselfe and others, with voyce and muscalle instruments to praise the Lord; & hauing penned the Psalmes for his owne vse and the benefit of the Church, appointeth them to be sung by the most skilfull Musicians to diuers instruments. Whose steps Salomon his sonne heerein followed, and appointed most exquisite musicke, not onely to be vsed in the Temple in Gods service, but also in his owne house for his recreation and delight. The which continued in the Church, euen in the time of their captiuitie; for howsoeuer they refused to gratifie the proud and scomefull heathens, by making them musicke in their misery, yet they continued this recreation for the solacing of themselves, as hereby appeareth, in that at their returne out of Babylon to their owne Countrey, they had amongst them two hundred, forty and sixe singing men and singing women. And vnto these wee may adde hunting, hawking, fishing, fowling; seates of actiuitie, running, leaping, wrastling, fencing, with all lawfull sports and games, amongst which that laudable exercise of shooting chiefly excelleth, as being not onely a manly exercise, most fit to preserue the health and strength of the body, and delightfull to the minde, in respect of that Art and skill which may be shewed in it; but also a good defence, both priuately for our selues, and publikely for our Countrey, if it were rightly vsed as in ancient times.

Contrariwise our care must be, that wee auoyd such recreations as are vnlawfull, which howsoeuer for the time they may bee pleasing vnto the flesh, yet leauing behind them the sting of sinne, they will, like the play of Iosb and Abners souldiers, be bitter in the end, and not bring vnto the mind any lasting delight, but at the best, mournfull repentance and afflicting grieffe. And such are all those sports as are so vaine and light, that they will not beseeeme Christian grauity; all those which tend to breake peace, and weaken loue, as bitter or scurrilous iesting, and rude horse-play; all lasciuious and effeminate sports which corrupt the minde, or weaken the body, inflame the lust, or poyson the manners, as vaine dalliance, and courting of women, chambring and wantonnesse, prophane stage-plays and Enterludes, which make the Theater a Schoole of all impiety and profanenesse, lust and vncleannesse, and wanton dancing of both sexes one with another; especially in those light and lewd Lauoltoes and Corrantoes vsed in these times, which are so full of lasciuious and immodest gestures and actions, Goate-like iumpes and friskes of women as well as men; proclaiming wanton immodesty, and tending onely to the inflaming of lust, that they would not well beseeeme an honest Pagan; and better fit a cunning Curtizan, who cast before men these alluring baites, that they may be caught in the snares of lust; then for a true Christian, who esteemeth modesty and chastity her best ornaments. Vnto these we may adde carding and dicing, as they are almost generally vsed. For suppose that all games at them are not simply vnlawfull, and that the argument of lots taketh no hold of them, because they are in nothing like, but as they are both disposed by Gods prouidence, which hath a chiefe stroke in disposing all things, or because (as they alledge) the most games stand not so much vpon chance and casualty, as on the Art and skill of the player, the which they thinke cleared by experience, in that a bungler playing with a cunning gamester, though he get some games, yet he is no constant winner, but if he continue long at play, is almost sure in the end to depart a loser; yea, let it be granted vnto them, either that they are not therefore vnlawfull, because prouidence ruleth them; which is not abused when we depend vpon it for decision of the least matters, but when it is ioyned with irreuerence and profanenesse, or that there is great Art and skill to be vsed in those games that are most casuall, without all deceit and imposture, which is allowed amongst all gamesters; yet can they not deny, but that they are lyable to many abuses, which are so generally incident vnto them that spend their time in them, that they are at least generally of euill report, in regard of their common abuse beseeeming Christians, and dangerous snares, in respect of common corruption to intangle vs in many sinnes, or else such multitudes would not be inueagled with them; as fretting and chafing, cursing and swearing, repining and murmuring against Gods prouidence, when it crosseth their pleasure, and doth not giue them such successe as they wish; sharpening their tongues like swords against it, and wounding

it with reproaches vnder the names, and (as it were) thorow the sides of lucke and fortune; that they are common theeuues which rob men of much precious time, because they doe not, like other exercises, weary them with labour either of body or minde, and draw them on with expectation of new variety; yea, also rob many of their purses and states, more then any other recreations. For whereas in other games which stand most vpon skill and cunning, men being beaten are willing to giue over with little losse, when they find themselves therein inferiour to those who play with them, in these which stand so much vpon hazzard, their losses draw them on further and further, out of an expectation of the changing of chance, and recovery of their losse. Now if any will say that they are neuer serious in these sports, and can so moderate their passions and affections, that they neuer bewray any such infirmities and corruptions, and can long play before they burst out into any of these finnes, playing for little which they respect not, and only for recreation, and hauing such power ouer themselves, that they can take vp at pleasure, and spend at them as little time as they list; To such I answere, that if by the arguments which by Diuines are ordinarily brought against them (as the abuse of lots, and Gods prouidence directing them) they are proued simply vnlawfull, or if by them they are brought to staggering and doubting whether they be lawfull or no, then can they not be lawfull vnto them, seeing he that playeth doubting, offendeth in playing, for whatsoeuer is not done of faith, is sin, though in it owne nature it be indifferent. But suppose that vpon thine owne grounds thou art perswaded, that such games are allowable; then my resolution is, that if withall thou hast such rule of thy passions and pleasures, that thou canst preserue thy selfe well enough, both from inward fretting and outward fuming, from couetous desiring gaine by play, and canst also moderate thy selfe in expence of time, then it were thy best course to forbear them altogether, and next vnto that to vse them rarely. For it is vnto thee a matter of small difficulty and labor, seeing he that hath truely such power ouer himselfe, that playing at these games he can with ease shun the abuses of them, may with much more ease refraine from vsing them; euen as it is much better and more safe to auoyd infected places, when we are at our choyce, then to goe into them, presuming vpon our Antidotes and preseruatiues; to keepe our selues (if we can) from danger of being hurt and wounded, then to vndertake quarrels, trusting to our valour and skill. Besides, if thou art a man of such excellent temper and moderation, it is pittie that so well a composed minde should not bee exercised in better employments; for make the best of these games that thou canst, yet are they but of euill report, in respect of the daily abuse vnto which they are subiect; and though they were lawfull vnto thine owne single selfe, yet they may prooue offensive to others, grieuing those who are well affected, and condemne these sports, to see thee so ill exercised, drawing on weakelings to follow thine example, who are apt to abuse them, wanting thy gouernement and moderation, and countenancing and encouraging those, who being loose and prophane, make these games their ordinary occupation, to continue in their course, when they can excuse themselves by such patternes and precedents as are vertuous and religious. Finally, these games which are vnto such multitudes the common causes of so much sinne and euill cannot bee but somewhat dangerous vnto vs. And who, that respecteth not his game more then his safety, will walke aloft vpon a rope with much difficulty and perill; when as hee may securely goe vpon the firme ground. For hee that thinketh danger shall perishe in it, is being iust vwith God, by withdrawing his helping hand; to let vs catch a fall; because wee rush into tentations, and take delight to walke in such slippery places.

Cap. XXII.

Of diuers Cautions which ought to be used in all our Recreations.

The next point to be considered in our recreations; is the rules and cautions which are to be obserued in the maner of vsing them. The first whereof is this, that as much as in vs lyeth, wee so compose our mindes and hearts, as that wee take our chiefe delight in those which most tend to Gods glory, and the furthering of our owne saluation. In which respect it were much to be desired, that we were so heavenly-minded, and so weaned from worldly vanities, as that wee could take our chiefe pleasure in holy duties, and esteeme it our meate and drinke to doe the will of our heavenly Father; recreating our mindes, like the Saints and Angels in heauen, in glorifying God by singing of his praises, holy conferencies tending to mutuall edification, and stirring vp one another to performe seruice vnto God with all cheerefulness and delight. Or if we cannot, being clogged with the flesh, attaine vnto this perfection, our next care must bee, that wee delight our selues in things indifferent, with such lawfull and lawdable recreations, as that we may in all things, and euen in our sports, haue, with the Apostle, a good conscience, willing to liue honestly. Secondly, because in nothing more then in recreation, we are apt to forget & ouerhoore our selues, by taking vnto vs an excesse and ouer-measure, we are to take speciall care that wee vse them with due moderation. For seeing recreation in the vse of things indifferent, is not simply and absolutely good, but only as it is rightly vsed according to the rule of reason; and that is superfluous which exceedeth this rule, and defectiue which commeth short of it; therefore wee must carefully conforme our selues vnto it, and not recreate our selues more or lesse then nature required; or then is necessary for the preseruing of our health and strength; and our better fitting for more serious imployments. More specially this moderation in our recreations must extend both to our mindes and hearts, and to the time which is spent in them. Wee must moderate our mindes that we doe not too highly value them, but esteeming them in the number of things indifferent, wee must cause them to giue place vnto duties which are simply good and of greater importance, when they cannot conueniently stand together. Our hearts also must bee bounded with moderation, in respect of our affections and passions, so as we burst not out into anger and rage when we are crossed in our sports (a visuall fault that accompanieth the pleasure of hauking and gaming) and neither wax proud of our owne skill and skilfulnes, nor be cautious against those which doe excell vs in them. But especially wee must watch ouer our selues, that they doe not slide away our hearts; for this were with Salomon, in seeking pleasure, to lose our selues in a labyrinth of delight, and for the inioying of trifles, to forget that Iewell wherein God chiefly delighteth, and desireth about all other things to haue in his keeping. And though wee vse them for our delight, yet we must take heede, that wee make them like seruants to waite in the out-rooms, to come at our call, and to depart when we haue no further neede of their seruice, and not like our best beloued admit them to keepe residence in the priuy Chamber of our hearts, so fixing and fastning our loue and affection vpon them, that we cannot indure to haue them out of our sight. For then wee shall not onely be in danger of spending too much time about them, but after wee haue done with them, they will so vsfettle our hearts, and weane our affections from all good duties, that we shall not without much labour reduce them into good frame, nor make them fit without distraction to performe any religious duty, as hearing, reading, praying, meditating, or else the workes of our ordinary callings. And therefore though we vse pleasures, yet we must take heede, that we doe not with Salomon, give our selues vnto them, for of such laughter, we may rightly say it is mad, and of such mirth, we may demand what good it doth vs?

In respect also of our time, which is spent in our recreations; we must vse great moderation, making them serue like sawces to our meate, to sharpen our appetite vnto the duties of our callings, and not to glut our selues with them, and so to make vs the more vnfit for any necessary imployments. Wee must remember that they are but recreations to refresh vs, and not occupations to tyre vs, and that they are allowed vs to cheere our spirits, and repaire our strength, that we may bee made more fit for the well-performing of the duties of Gods seruice and of our callings, and not that wee should by toyling our selues in them, spend and consume them, and so be disabled for any necessary imployment. We must consider that God hath not created and redeemed vs, that we should wholly follow our pleasures, and with the Israelites, sit downe to ease and drinke, and rise vp to play, but that we should spend our time and strength in the duties of his seruice, or in the meanes whereby we may be fitted for them. Neither hath he appointed recreation to be the end of our liues, but onely as a meane to preserve them, for more high and holy imployments, tending to the glory of God and the saluation of our owne soules. We must esteeme time the most precious treasure, and that the consumption of it is the most dangerous disease, and desperately vntreacurable; that it exceedeth all other losses, and that the wasting of it is the greatest vthriftnesse. And therefore wee must not turne our recreations into pastimes, as the English name importeth, making onely this vse of them, to cause idle houres seeme lesse tedious; for this were but to set spurres to a running Horse, which of it selfe posseth away speedily, and when it is once past, can neuer be recalled. Let vs not foole and trifle out this our most precious treasure, vpon euery base vanitie; or if we haue done it in the

dayes of our ignorance, when we did not know the worth of it, let vs according to the Apostles counsell, redeeme it at any price, and recover our losse, by redoubling our diligence in all good duties. Let vs learne to set a right value on these wares, and to this end let vs not goe to enquire of worldly Impostors, who will set a base price of this Jewell, so coozen vs of it, not to enrich themselves with our spoile, but to spoyle themselves also with our losse; but rather let vs thinke how they prize it in hell, and how willing they would be to giue millions of worlds, if they had them in their possession, for the purchase of one day, to repent of their former courses, especially the prodigall mis-spending of their time. Finally, let vs remember, that our workes and labours which must be here dispatched, are waighy and manifold, seeing in this world euermlasting life and happinesse is either gotten or lost, and that our time is so short, that we are in danger to be benighted before wee haue ended our businesse, and so (as the Apostle speaketh) to come short of the promised rest. That this short time is also vncertaine, seeing we know not at what houre our Lord will come and call vs to our reckoning; and therefore if we bee wise vnto our owne saluation, we will not spend much of this short and vncertaine time in sloth and idlenesse, sports and pastimes, but rather in making and keeping straight our accounts, and in preparing our selues with ioy and comfort to appeare before our Iudge. Especially considering that hee hath assured vs before hand, that he is most righteous, and without respect of persons, will reward euery man according to their workes; that hee will take an account of vs for euery idle word which wee esteeme as winde, and therefore much more will call vnto a reckoning our precious time spent in idlenesse and vanitie; and will make vs exceede in euermlasting punishments, as wee haue in this life exceeded in momentanie pleasures.

The third caution to be obserued in our recreations, is, that wee vse them so, as they may refresh the body, but not pamper the flesh, and that wee so indeuour by them to cheare our friend, as that wee doe not strengthen our enemy. For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh, and therefore wee must not vse such recreations, or after such a manner, as may seede and fat it with carnall delight; neither are wee debtors vnto it to liue after it, seeing this life bringeth death; but rather, as the Apostle exhorteth, let vs abstaine from fleshly lusts, because they fight against our soules; and so vse this gracious liberty which God hath giuen vs, that the spirituall part may take occasion of doing good duties, and not the flesh of plunging vs into sinne.

The fourth caution is, that in all our recreations wee doe not giue any scandall and offence, neither vsing such before our weak brethren, though lawfull in themselves, whereat they sticke or stumble with some scruple of conscience, nor yet carrying our selues offensively in such as they approue, either by spending vnseasonably our time in them, or too much of that which is in moderation allowable, or with any lightnesse and vanity, or by giuing our selues over to some vniuall passion. Yea, as much as in vs lieth, wee must abstaine not onely from these faultes themselves, but also from the least shew and appearance of them; and not onely take care to doe those things which are true and iust, pure and lovely, but also which are of good report; not onely taking care to be vertuous, but also to bee so esteemed, and haue the reputation and praise (all pride and vaine glory being auoided) which (as the shadow the body) doth attend and waite vpon it. And seeing recreations are things indifferent, we are rather vnto to forbear them, then to giue vnto our brethren any iust cause of offence, because the greatest danger that can heereof come vnto vs, is but the hazard of our health; whereas by offending them, wee may indanger the losse of their precious soules, for which Christ hath shed his blood. In which regard, if the Apostle was so charitable, that he would refrain from his lawfull foode, rather then offend his weake brother; then how small is our charity, if we will not forbear for this cause, or at least inoffensiuely vse our sports and recreations?

The fifth caution is, that we obserue in our recreations all due circumstances. As first, that it be decent and becomming our person, place, and calling; neither is it fit that age and youth, Magistrates and common people, should vse the same recreations, lest for the gaining of a little vaine sport, they lose their grauity, and with it their authority, and that reuerence which is due vnto them from their inferiours, in respect of their age and gouernment. Secondly, that it be apt and fit for our callings, and to refresh and make vs more able for the well-performing of the duties belonging to them. For that recreation is best which commeth neere to the end for which we vse it, and best fitteth vs to attaine vnto it; as rest of the body, and exercise of the minde, for those that are wearied with corporall labours; and bodily exercise for them whose callings doe wholly stand in the study of the minde. Or at least some easie exercise after the greater labour of the body, or some slight and pleasant imployment of the minde, after that it is wearied with more serious and earnest studies. In which regard I haue always thought the play at Chests most vsit for Students and Schollers, because it as much occupieth and weariech their intellectuall faculties as their other studies; and on the other side, violent exercises vnmeet recreations for those vvhoe ordinarily spend their strength in painefull labours of the body, because both these faile of their proper end, which is to refresh the body and minde: but contrariwise doe more weary and tyre them, and so make them vsit for the duties of their callings. And although (as I confesse) there is some recreation and delight in change and variety of imployment both of body and minde; yet it tendeth not greatly to the refreshing of either, but rather deludeth men with a false shew, and remedieth not the euill, but onely depriveth them of the sense of it whilst their pleasure lasts, and causeth them to spend and consume themselues with more delight. Thirdly, in respect of the circumstance of time, there is required that our recreations be seasonable, according to the saying of the wise Salomon; To euery thing there is a season, and a time to euery purpose vnder beauen; a time to weepe, and a time to laugh; a time to mourne, and a time to dance. In which regard there is required, that first our recreations doe not goe before, but succeed the labours of our callings, vnlesse in case we may thereby be the better inabled, for the performance of them; as when they shake off dulnesse and drowns-

nesse, and make vs more active and cheerefull for imployment, which rarely happeneth in the labours of the body, but sometime falleth out in the studies of the minde, as we see in the example of Elisha, who by musick was better fitted for prophecie, whilst it made him more apt to receive diuine reuelations. For wearinesse is a kinde of disease, and recreation is of the nature of a medicine; and therefore as it is preposterous, that the cure should precede and goe before the malady, or the medicine the sicknesse, vnlesse it be such as is fit to preuent it; so, that wee should refresh our selues with recreation, before labour hath caused wearinesse; for this were to apply the salve to a sound place, which doth no good, but if it hath any great strength and attractive vertue, will rather cause it to pimple and draw off the skin. And therefore as Salomon saith of the vse of wine; Giue strong drinke vnto him that is ready to perish, and wine vnto those that are of heavy hearts, that he may forget his pouerty, and remember his misery no more; so may I say of sports and recreations; Giue them not to them who neede them not, hauing no vse of refreshing before they haue laboured, nor of repairing their strength before it is spent, but vnto those who are wearied with paines-taking, that they may more freshly returne to their labours. Secondly, in respect of time, there is required that recreations be onely vsed in such seasons as by God are allowed and allotted vnto them. And that is not on the dayes of our rest, but on the dayes of our labour, not on Gods Sabbaths, which he hath appropriated to his seruice; but vpon the weeke dayes, which he hath allowed for our owne vse. For if the Lord hath inhibited the workes of our callings, which in themselves are in their seasons lawfull and necessary, and cannot be neglected without sinne; yea, if he will not allow vs on his Day, to speake our owne words, or to thinke our owne thoughts, because hee would haue vs wholly deuoted and consecrated to the duties of his seruice; then much more doth he inhibit sports and recreations, which tend not at all to the sanctification of his Sabbaths, and are of an inferiour nature and lesse excellency and necessity, and which also, in respect of their carnall delight most pleasing to the flesh, are more likely to steale away our hearts, and to distract vs in the performance of holy duties. And therefore on this Day the recreation of our bodies, ought to be their resting from all labour, which is not necessary to the duties of the Sabbath; and the recreation of our mindes, must be in changing their object, not imploying them in worldly cogitations, but about spirituall exercises, hearing the Word, praying, and praying of God, holy conferences, and lifting them vp in heavenly meditations. And the like also may be said of the Sabbaths of humiliation, when wee humble our selues solemnly in the congregation, or priuately by our selues, in the sight and sense of our sinnes by fasting and prayer, or when some iudgement and affliction is feared or inflicted, either vpon our selues or the Church, or some speciall members of it, which wee desire to preuent, or that being inflicted it should bee remooued. For if it were not lawfull at those times for Gods people to delight themselves with the vse of their best clothes, no nor to refresh their bodies with their ordinary foode; then much lesse is it lawfull at such times to feast and sport our selues with pleasures and recreations. And this is the sinne which the Lord taxeth in the Iewes. In that day (saith the Prophet) did the Lord of hosts call to weeping and to mourning, and to baldnesse, and to girding with sackcloth, and behold, joy and gladnesse, slaying oxen, and killing sheepe, eating fleshe, and drinking wine; Saying, Let vs eat and drinke, for to morrow we shall dye. And also in the Israelites; who when the Church of God was afflicted, and they therby called to humiliation, did lye at ease, pamper their bellies with full diet, chanted to the sound of the Viole, and inuented vnto themselves instruments of musicke, like David; dranke wine in bolles, and anoynted themselves with the chiefe oymments; but were not grieved for the affliction of Ioseph.

The sixth caution is, that for our recreation sake we doe not willingly confort our selues with euill company; obseruing heerein the Apostles rule, Haue no fellowship with the vnfruitfull workes of darkenesse, but rather reprove them. Wherein our care ought to be the greater, because nothing more causeth neere familiarity and friendly acquaintance, then agreement and communion in the same delights, and nothing sooner breedeth likenesse of manners and conditions, then when in our pleasures wee iumpe and conioyne together with one minde and affection. So that as our recreations with them that truly feare God, are strong bonds to tye vs vnto them in loue, and forcible motiues to make vs also ioyne with them, whom wee so loue in all good duties and vertuous actions; so contrariwise communicating with prophane persons and carnall worldlings, in our sports and pastimes, causeth vs in time to proccede from liking of the pleasure, to like the party that ioyneth with vs in it, and from affecting of the man, wee come at last to affect his manners. Neither is there more danger in the time of plague, for one that is sound, to keepe in the same house with those that are sicke; then for a true Christian, to confort in pleasure with such as make no conscience of their wayes; seeing as well from the one as from the other, there issueth and spreadeth a secret poyson, which with its contagion, infecteth those that come into their company.

Seuenthly, wee must take care that in our recreations wee forget not God, and that they doe not steale our hearts from him vnto worldly vanities, lest by degrees we dote so much vpon them, that wee come vnder that censure of the Apostle; of being louers of pleasures, more then louers of God; and grow like those Israelites, against whom the Prophet denounced a fearefull woe; who spent the day in quaffing and carousing, and had the Harpe and the Viole, the Tabret and the Pipe, and wine at their feasts, but regarded not the worke of the Lord, neither considered the operation of his hands. Which if we would auoid, we must often take occasion from our pleasures to thinke of the Author of them; and bee ashamed that an Heathen Poet should be more forward in the fruition of his peace and pleasure, to acknowledge Augustus as his God that sent them; then wee to remember and acknowledge the bounty and goodnesse of our gracious Lord, who hath multiplied his blessings vpon vs, not onely seruing for necessity, but also for pleasure and delight. Secondly, if wee would not forget God in our sports and recreations, nor haue our hearts drawne away from him; wee must sanctifie them to our vse by the Word and prayer. Thinking before we vndertake any, if it bee agreeable with Gods will reuealed in the Scriptures, or at least of an indifferent nature, and not forbidden. And being being perswaded that it is lawfull in it selfe, we must, before we enter vpon it, make it lawfull vnto vs by hearty prayer for Gods blessing vpon it, not vning (if we be in company) audible words and visible gestures and actions, which would saue too much of hypocriticall ostentation, but lifting vp our hearts and soules onely vnto God by short prayers and ejaculations. And as wee are thus to begin them with prayer, so we must end them with thanksgiving, praying the holy Name of our gracious God, who hath by these recreations refreshed and fited vs for his seruice; and hath given vnto vs this ioy in earth, as a signe of his saueur, and a pledge and earnest of those everlasting ioyes of his heavenly Kingdome.

C A P. XXIII.

The last caution is, that our Recreation be a liberrall exercise, and not sordid for gaine.

He last caution to be obserued, is, that we vse our recreations as a liberrall exercise, and not as a sordid trade to get money. To which end let vs know, that if we vse gaming with a greedy and couetous desire, to inrich our selues by impoverishing others, it is but an inordinate course, which God neuer appointed and blessed to get wealth, and consequently no better then theft; yea heerein worse then the most thefts, in that other theues rob strangers, but these commonly their friends and familiar acquaintance, and in that it is committed by mutuall agreement, whereby the loser becommeth an accessary to the theft of the winner, and so is as well as hee a robber, not onely of himselfe, but also of his wife and children. As also because the couetous delight which they take in this kinde of gaming, not onely robbeth them of their riches; in which respect, the saying of the Wise man may be applied and appropriated heereunto, that he who lonch pleasure, shall be a poore man; but also spoileth them of their hearts, so that after much losse and great experience of this gamesome misery, they haue neither power nor will to leaue their folly, and to be better husbands for the time to come. Let vs know, that by such kinde of greedy gaming, we set our hearts and mindes vpon a strange kinde of racke, which pleaseth in tormenting, and tormenteth in pleasing; even the racke of tumultuous passions, which draw and distract vs diuers wayes; one while hoping, another while fearing; now reioycing, and soone after grieuing and fretting at our losse. Finally, that such will haue a fearefull reckoning to make at the day of Iudgement, not onely of their precious time, lawlessly mispent in these vaine and wicked exercises, but also of their wealth lewdly wasted and consumed, when in their accounts there shall be found so much wasted in gaming, and so little given to the poore, and to religious and charitable vses, or employed in those workes of mercy, which Christ hath graciously promised should be so richly rewarded at the last day.

But heere it may be demanded, whether it bee altogether vnlawfull to play for money? or if it be, whether wagering for money, and the winning or

Whether it be simply vnlawfull to game for money.

or losing of it in gaming be simply to be condemned? To the first I answer, that to play for money, that is, to make the winning of money the maine and chiefe end of our recreation, which ought to be the sitting of vs the better for Gods seruice and the duties of our callings, is vtterly vnlawfull; seeing it is a corrupt and couetous desire to get money by an inordinate way which God neuer appointed. To the other I answer, that howsoeuer it were to be desired, that our mindes were so well composed, and so weaned from all worldly things, that they might purely ayme at their chiefe and mayne ends, without their helpe or any respect vnto them; yet take vs as we are, needing earthly helpes to further vs, even to the attaining of spirituall and heavenly ends, I cannot see (sauing the better iudgement of the wise and religious) that all kinds of interposing money in gaming, by way of winning and losing, is simply sinfull and vnlawfull, if these cautions be obserued. First, that it bee but a trifle and small matter for which we game, which is to be measured according to the state and meanes of those that play; seeing an halfe penny is more to a poore man then a shilling to a rich. For I call that a trifle, the losing whereof hurteth not him that loseth it, in respect of the smalnesse of it, and the greatnesse of his meanes. Euen as a few drops are not missed in a whole bucket, nor many buckets full abate the height of the riuer, nor many riuers running by their fountaines from the sea, make it any whit at all the lesse full; and so it is in this case, because (as betweene the riuers and the sea) there is a reuolution of these small winnings and losings, one winning at one time that which he lost at another, which will make a small difference betweene them at the yeeres end. But heere care must be taken, that this caution extend to both parties; neither is it enough that the money for which I play be a trifle vnto me, vnlesse it be so also to the party that gameth with me. For if I be rich and may well beare it, though I often lose; and he that playeth with me be poore, and vnable to sustaine the losse, there is inequality and want of charity; seeing in drawing him or consenting to accompany him in such great game, or small game, yet greater then his poore ability can afford to lose; I shall doe him hurt, and those perhaps that belong vnto him. The second caution is, that the chiefe motiue inducing men to play, be not greedinesse of gaine and couetousnesse, which may possibly creepe into little trifles, seeing it will play at small game rather then sit out, and being an hungry disease, will snatch at a crust, when as no better prouision is set before it. But this small play must chiefly tend to our recreation and refreshing of our bodies and minds, for which it is more fit then greater, because it leaueth no place (vnlesse there bee more fault in the party then in the play) vnto tumultuous and disordered passions. And if these cautions be obserued, playing for money (as I thinke) is not sinfull and vnlawfull, because it neither offendeth against charity nor against Iustice. Nor against charity, seeing it tendeth not either to the hurt of our neighbour or of our selues, but to the good of both, seruing to make our recreation more pleasant and delightfull; seeing it causeth vs to be more earnest at our sport, and setteth an edge on our appetite; whereas otherwise we should be slacke and carelesse, not regarding whether we winne or lose; in which sloth and remisnesse, there can be

be no delight; and maketh men carefull to obserue the rules and orders of the game, which otherwise would be neglected, the one not caring to vse, nor the other to require true and faire play; seeing bare conquest, vnlesse it be crowned, is little regarded. Neither is iustice violated, if true owners take vpon them to dispose of some small part of their goods, which they can well spare from their necessary vses, for their honest recreation and delight; and by mutuall agreement consent to hazzard a small wager (which is to be the reward of him that getteth the victory) to bee either wonne or lost betweene them. Now if any obiekt, that this kinde of gaming is against charity, because losse of a little is a little hurt, though he that loseth be not sensible of it, because it cannot be missed, by reason of the greatnesse of his meanes: To this I answere, that it deserueth not the name of hurt, which is so little that it is not sensible; or though it were so indeed, it is sufficiently recompensed by that delight which it addeth to our recreation of which I haue spoken. Neither is it vnlawfull to purchase our pleasure, or any acceffe vnto it, when as we may haue it at so easie a rate. Nor is this obiection of any moment to say, that though that wee lose be of small value, as an halfe-penny or penny, yet it might better be employed and giuen to the poore, seeing we are not bound to giue all that we can spare from our necessary occasions vnto these vses, but may lawfully spend somewhat for our honest delight; for by the same reason we should be bound to vse onely meane apparell and few suites, though wee were neuer so rich, and but one or two dishes at our table, if our company be small, because this is sufficient to keepe vs warme, and satisfie hunger. Neither can our play hinder our almes, if our game be so little, that wee haue plenty for both vses. Yea, though we would giue all we can spare from our necessary imployments, to the reliefe of the poore, yet playing for a little would not hinder our charity, seeing we winne at these games as well as lose, and being so charitably affected, are more ready to giue out of our winnings, then hauing plenty and sufficiency, to forbear giuing because of our losings. Again, whereas it may be obiekted that such kind of gaming is against iustice, because we play with a desire to winne other mens goods, and so fall into the sinne of couetousnesse: To this I answere, that simply to desire other mens goods, were iniustice, but not so, when it being vpon equall hazzard of our owne, we may lose as well as winne. Or if we should desire their goods against their will, it were vniustice; but not when they are willing we should haue them, not absolutely, but vpon a contract and agreement betweene vs, which hath this condition, that they shall haue them that winne them. Yea, but can we be excused of inward couetousnesse, although there be no outward iniustice, seeing we stand not equally affected, but desire to winne rather then to lose? I answere, that desire of winning doth not simply argue couetousnesse; but to propound gaine as the maine end of our play, and not our recreation; not when we desire to winne in playing, but when wee play out of a greedy desire of winning. For play being a kinde of friendly combate and contention, wherein we striue who shall shew most skill and actiuity, every one doth naturally desire to get the victory, not simply in regard of the gaine that ariseth of it, but because it is a signe and euidence, that in Art and cunning he excelleth him with whom he contendeth; and contrariwise auoideth losse, not for the value of that he loseth, but because it argueth his defect and insufficiencie in skill, and that therein he is inferiour vnto him with whom he playeth, seeing he hath got the victory. Euen as in hunting, those that are rich or noble, take great paines in pursuing their game, not out of a desire to kill it, that the poore Hare may furnish their table, which in respect of gaine were but a small reward for their great labour; for in this regard when she is killed, they could willingly wish, that shee were aliuie againe, that by renewing her life, they might haue a fit subiect for the renewing of their pleasure, and yet whilest they are hunting, they desire not onely their sport and exercise, but euen to kill her, because it is the consummation of their pastime, and the Trophy of their victory. But yet lest there should be any feare that couetousnesse (which is a cunning insinuator, and sticketh as fast to corrupted nature, as the shirt to the skin, yea as the skin to the flesh) doth yet lye lurking in our recreation, we may agree in our gaming, that the winnings shall not come into the winners purse, (although in this respect it lawfully may, that his winnings at one time may make amends for his losses at another, which if there be no quitting, will come to more then he is willing to spare) but that it be conuerted to the vse of the poore, or bestowed when it commeth to a conuenient sum, partly this way, and partly vpon loue-feasts, for the preserving and increasing of amity and friendship one with another.

A serious admonition that none abuse their liberty in recreations of this nature.

And these are the reasons that induce mee to thinke that playing for money, if the former cautions be obserued, is not vnlawfull. Now if any abuse this liberty vnto licenciousnesse, and vnder colour that it is in some cases lawfull, will vse, or rather abuse it vnlawfully, without any care to obserue these cautions; his sinne bee vpon his owne soule; seeing it is farre from mine intention to encourage any in their sinfull courses, or that my writings should be any cause or occasion of hartening any in those shamefull abuses of gaming for money, which are too too common in these dayes, whereby mis-spending their precious time, they also consume their substance, and vtterly spoile one another with much more pernicious robbery then can bee committed by common theeues by the high-way side. For they seldome take any one mans purse; but these often, and with it euen their houses and lands, and all that they possesse, which are free enough from the others violence; besides innumerable other mischiefs which accompany these losses, and many outragious sinnes committed against God, their neighbours and themselues. Yea seeing the end of lawfull liberty, is to preserve men from lawlesse licenciousnesse, I was willing to extend it as farre as the Word of God would permit, that it might moue all men more willingly to containe themselues within the compasse of their duties, when as they may haue sufficient meanes of comfort and refreshing allowed them, within those lawfull bounds which God hath limited. Now if any be rich, and yet will steale, he is twice worthy to bee hanged; if any be such vnruely beasts, that hauing pleasant pastures, watered with the delightfull streames of Christian comforts, which like liuing waters are constant in their flowing, without the stops and checks of conscience, out of Gods rich bounty allotted vnto them, and yet will not be

be contented, nor quietly graze vnder the conduct of our heavenly Shepherd, but will leape ouer hedge and ditch, and breake thorow all fences, that they may come into forbidden pastures; because they haue rancker grasse, not so sweete in it selfe as their owne feede, but more pleasing to their carnall appetite, because they can deuoure it with full mouthes; and out of a desire to drinke of stolne waters; because they are sweeter to a fleshly palate; then surely such are well worthy to be turned out into the bare commons of penury and misery in this life, and if they repent not of their folly, to be eternally pounded in hell in the life to come. And so much of the first kinde of cessation from our labours by lawfull recreations; of which I haue spoken much more largely then at the first I intended, because howsoeuer it may seeme but a light subiect to bestow much paines vpon; yet I plainly perceiued, that it is of no light consequence; seeing it is a matter that concernes all men, and not seldome, but almost euery day of their liues; seeing also nothing is more commonly abused vnto sinne, it being one of Satans most alluring baits, to intice vs to come within the compasse of his pernicious nets and snares of wickednesse; and finally, because that many who truly feare God, and desire to vse them with a good conscience, indeuouring to please him as well in their recreations as their labours, yet know not how to doe it as they ought, and so out of scruple and timorous doubting forbear them altogether, or else transported with their pleasure, take greater liberty then God hath allowed them, which though it bee sweete for the present, yet in the end it turneth to bitternesse. In all which respects there are few other things in the whole courle and carriage of our liues, for which wee stand in more neede of counsell and direction, and the rather because there are few particular rules heereof in the Scriptures, of which chiefly the weaker sort of Christians are capeable, but onely some generals, out of which they cannot so easily gather speciall directions in this behalfe, vnlesse they haue some guide to goe before them.

CAP. XXIII.

*Of the duties which ought daily to bee performed
at our meales.*

He second kind of cessation from our labours, is that time which is spent daily in taking our repast and refreshing of our bodies, by receiuing of our food, whereby our decayed strength is repaired, our health preserued, and we enabled to the better performance of the duties of our callings. The which is to be performed of vs, not as meere naturall men, but as Christians, vsing therein such rules and cautions as the Word of God prescribeth vnto vs, that we doe not famish our soules, whilest wee feed our bodies, nor weaken our spirituall part and defile our selues with sinne, whilest our outward man is refreshed and strengthened with the vse of Gods creatures. For as the deuill layeth in euery place baits and snares to intrap vs, so especially vpon our tables, and minglith

the poison of sinnefull corruption with our meates and drinckes, that if we doe not vse them in the feare of God, and keepe a narrow watch ouer our selues that we offend not in them, they will prooue no lesse dangerous to our soules, then necessary and profitable for the refreshing of our bodies. And this Dauid implyeth, where making many fearefull imprecations against his owne, and our Sauour Christis desperate enemies, he prayeth that their table might become a snare before them, and that that which should haue bene for their welfare, should become a trap. The which made holy Iab so carefull to sanctifie his children after the dayes of their feasting, and to offer burnt sacrifices to expiate their sins, because he well knew how prone they were through humane frailty, to offend against God, by abusing of his blessings.

Let vs therefore in the next place consider the duties which belong to all Christians in receiuing of their food; the which are to be performed, either before we eate, at our meales, or afterwards. Before we eate, our duty is to sanctifie the creatures by the Word and prayer; for howsoeuer euery creature of God is good in it selfe, yet it is not so vnto vs, vnlesse it be sanctified vnto our vse. They are sanctified by the Word, when as the vse of them is warranted vnto vs by the Scriptures, that is, when as we doe not receiue them as absolute owners of them, but acknowledging God the Author and chiefe Lord both of them and vs, doe receiue them at his hands as his free gifts, the which he bestowed vpon vs, first, by his law of creation, not onely making all the creatures for mans vse, but also by his word, giuing him dominion and lordship ouer them, and liberty to vse them for his food and nourishment. But this first gift and donation from God is no sufficient warrant vnto vs, seeing through the fall of our first parents we lost all our dominion, right and interest which we had vnto the creatures, vnlesse our Charter be renewed by Christ, who by satisfying Gods Iustice for our sinnes, hath recouered our right, and reentered vs into our possession which we lost by Adam; and hath purchased for vs that glorious liberty of the sonnes of God, whereby we may with a good conscience freely vse all Gods creatures, without any doubting, scruple or superstition, for our necessity and profit, yea for our comfort and delight. So that now we are not to put any difference betweene meates, seeing vnto the pure all things are pure, and euery creature thus sanctified is good; and if for conscience sake we abstaine from flesh more then fish, or any one meate more then another, we shall shew heereby that wee are not taught of Christ, but that we haue (as the Apostle plainly speaketh) learned this lesson in the schoole of the deuill. Onely our care must bee, that we bee ingrafted into Christ by a liuely faith, by whom onely wee haue right vnto the creatures, and that wee know our liberty, to the end we may vse it without doubting. For otherwise we are intruders and vsurpers, who hauing no right vnto any of Gods blessings, shall haue a fearefull account to make for inroaching vpon them, and (as it were) like theeues living vpon the spoile.

But howsoeuer it is necessary that we be alwayes in this state of Christian liberty, and haue the knowledge and acknowledgement of it habitually in vs; yet not that we should, euery time we eate, particularly meditate of all

all these things; onely it is sufficient, that hauing this Charter of our liberty in our keeping, we bring it out as oft as wee haue occasion, especially when our right vnto the creatures is called into question, either by the deuill, the world or our owne flesh. And that acknowledging God to bee the Author of all these blessings which we receiue, who not onely giueth them vnto vs, but also all their vertue and power, whereby they become effectuell for our nourishment, we doe take them not chiefly as our owne prouision, but at his hands as his gracious gifts, which cannot nourish vs by their owne vertue, but as he inableth them heereunto by his blessing. In which regard it is necessary, that before we receive the creatures, we doe in the next place sanctifie them vnto our vse by prayer and thanksgiving, crauing Gods blessing vpon our meates and drinckes, that being thereby made effectuell for our nourishment, we may in the strength of them doe him more diligent and faithfull seruice. For to this end God hath created our meates and drinckes, that they should bee received with thanksgiving of them which beleue and know the truth, as the Apostle teacheth vs, seeing every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving; for it is sanctified by the Word of God and prayer. And this hath bene the practice of the faithfull in all ages. So we reade that the people would not eate before Samuel came, because he did first blesse the sacrifice, and afterwards they did eate that were bidden. And the Apostle Paul, though he were among Heathens, Infidels, and common souldiers, yet before he falleth to meate with them, gaue thanks vnto the onely true God in the presence of them all. And this also was the ordinary and constant custome of our Sauour Christ himselfe, which was the reason why the two disciples knew him by his blessing of the bread, before he brake it and gaue it vnto them. Which examples that we may imitate, let vs consider that no creature hath vertue and power in it selfe to nourish vs, vnlesse God that made it, doe by his blessing sustaine it, and giue vigour and strength vnto it, that it may be effectuell for this vse. For as our Sauour saith, Man liueth not by bread onely, but by every word which proceedeth out of Gods mouth, that is, that speciall and powerfull word, whereby he appointeth and commandeth it to nourish vs. And if the Lord doe take away the staffe of bread, that is, the vertue and strength of it, we shall eate, and not bee satisfied, be famished in the midst of our plenty, and euen consume and waste away in our iniquity. Yea, if the Lord curse his blessings for our ingratitude, we shall either haue no power to feede vpon them, or in stead of nourishing vs, they will be the causes of vweakenesse, sicknesse, and death it selfe. Of the former not long since my selfe, with many others, saw a fearefull example, in one vvhom I visited in his sicknesse of vvhich hee died; vvhose strength being little abated, and his appetite very good to his meate, vvhould often and earnestly desire to haue some brought vnto him; but no sooner did it come into his sight, but presently hee fell into horrible shaking and trembling, distortions and terrible conuulsions of all his parts, so as the bed vvhould scarce hold him vvhoeon he lay, all vvhich presently ceased, as soone as the meate vvas taken away. And this vvas done so often, till at length he grevv vveary of so many attempts in vaine, and prepared himselfe for death, giuing vnto vs all many signes of earnest repentance. Among others he penitently confessed, that this punishment was iustly inflicted vpon him for his abuse of Gods good creatures, especially because he would neither of himselfe, nor by the perswasion of his friends, giue thanks vnto God when hee receiued his food, which he conceived to be the cause why now God would not suffer him to haue the vse of his creatures, which he had so often abused by his grosse ingratitude; and earnestly desired that hee might bee an example vnto all men in this fearefull iudgement, that they might escape the like by shunning his sinne. The which being so notorious, I thought fit in this place to insert, though no man is more sparing in such particular relations. Neither let any man here say, that all this might proceede from some naturall causes, and that there might be some such like reason giuen of it, as of that disease which Physicians call idiotismus, when one bitten by a mad dog, feareth the water, like the dog that did bite him. For howsoeuer it was an example strange and wonderfull, yet doe I not say nor thinke, that any thing in it was supernaturall and miraculous. But let vs not for this cause neglect to make an holy vse of it, in auoyding this sinne, which God by this fearefull iudgement brought home to this poore mans conscience, vnlesse we would proclaime, that nothing but miracles can affect vs. For howsoeuer God bringeth these things to passe by naturall causes, yet because they are so farre out of the ordinary course of nature, and doe so rarely happen; and seeing by a speciall providence, God causeth a concurrence of seldome meeting causes; that they may produce such strange effects after a wonderfull and vnwonted manner; such examples should not bee much lesse effectuell to worke vpon our hearts and consciences, then miracles themselues, seeing they are purposely sent of God for this end. And as God may iustly for our vnthankfulnesse vtterly deprive vs of the vse of his creatures; so doth he often in their vse turne his blessings into curses, making them through our abuse the causes of all diseases, yea of death it selfe, as common experience sheweth; yea, he may iustly cause the least bit of meate or crum of bread to choake in stead of nourishing vs, the which also hath sometime happened. Againe, let vs consider that it is brutish and swinish vngratitude, if when God openeth his hand, and filleth vs with plenty of his good pleasure, we doe not by the eye of faith looke vp to the Author of all our good, to render vnto him thanks for all his blessings; yea, heerein we shall be much worse then beasts, in that diuers of them acknowledge their masters, and recompence their care and cost, by their profitable labour, according to that of the Prophet, The Oxe knoweth his owner, and the Asse his masters crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider.

Vnto this prayer and thanksgiuing, let vs adde in the next place, as opportunity will serue and our company and occasions permit, some short meditations, before we eate, or in the beginning of our meale; as first of Gods infinite goodnesse and bounty, who preserveth and nourisheth all his creatures, especially vs by a more speciall providence, providing for vs sufficient plenty of all good blessings, and causing vs to inioy them with peace and safety. Whereas there are many afflicted and poore seruants of God, who would be glad to feede vpon our reuerſions and leauings; and are in danger before they rise from their table, to haue their throats cut, and their meates mingled with their blood. Yea, consider that thou inioyest from God, not onely this plenty with peace and safety of body and state, but also with it the light of the Gospell, and the food of thy soule, whereby thou mayest be strengthened in all grace, and nourished vnto life euerlasting, which many poore soules haue not at all, or secretly and by stealth, with extreme hazzard of their states and liues. Vnto which meditation of Gods mercy and bounty, let vs ioine the consideration of our owne vilnesse and vnworthinesse, in which, if God should looke vpon vs, he might iustly depriue vs of all his benefits, and not suffer vs to haue a bit of bread to satisfie our hunger, nor a drop of drinke to quench our thirst. Let vs remember that at our meales we are to nourish two ghests, the soule as well as the body, and let our chiefe care be to giue best welcome to our best ghest; the which will bring vnto vs chiefeest comfort. For what food our body receiueth, it keepeth not, but within a few houres is againe vexed with hunger; but the foode of the soule shall still remaine, and wee shall haue the fruit and benefit of it in this life and the life to come. Let vs consider, that as we feed in great part vpon mortall and corruptible creatures, so our bodies like our meates are mortall and corruptible; and therefore following our Sauours counsell, let our chiefe care be for our immortall soules, and to labour, not for the meate that perisbeth, but for that which endureth to euerlasting life. Finally let vs remember, that this our food is part of that allowance which our heavenly Father giueth vnto vs as his household seruants, that being strengthened heereby, we may more cheerefully doe him seruice, in performing those duties which he requireth of vs; and therefore as God maketh his creatures to serue vs, so let vs dedicate and deuote our selues wholly to the seruice of our great Lord and Creatour, vsing so his blessings, as that they may bee helpes and furtherances, and no impediments and lets, vnto the well-performing of all Christian duties.

And these are the duties which we are (as much as conueniently wee can) to performe before or at the beginning of our meales. The duties which we are to practise whilst we are eating and drinking, are diuers. First our care must be, that wee vse the creatures of God with temperance and sobriety, so as they may serue for the satisfying of our hunger, and the sustentation and strengthening of our fraile nature (which if it be not misguided by our corruption, is in it selfe content with a little.) and not tend to their weakning and disabling vnto all good imployments; for the feeding and refreshing of our bodies, that they may bee fit seruants for our soules in all Christian duties, and not the filling and glutting of them, whereby they become till they be emptied, vnprofitable burthens to the soule, and good for nothing but sloth and sleepe. Now this temperance must shew it selfe in two kinds; first, in our prouision; and secondly, in the applying of it to our owne vse. Our prouision of meates and drinckes ought not to be ouer-costly and curious, excessive and superfluous, which becommeth not Christians which professe sobriety, but rather heathens, epicures, and belly-gods; who place a great part of their happinesse in pampering their flesh with all kinds of voluptuousnesse. But ordinarily our prouisions bought to be comperent, not excessiue and curious; and rather sauour of frugality, then of lauish, waste, and prodigall superfluity. Yet that our Christian moderation and frugality may not be pretended and abused of any as a maske, to hide vnder it, their base and sordid avarice and niggardlinesse, we are in this temperance of our prouisions to obserue these cautions. First, that therein we haue respect to our place and calling, our meanes and ability, making our prouision for our tables so, as it may be fitting and suteable in these respects; on the one side not exceeding our meanes, seeing frugality is the nurse and fountaine of true bounty, and on the other, that it doe not come much short of them, our charge and other necessary expences being considered. And thus Dauid a King numbred it among Gods speciall fauours, that he had not only giuen him sufficient maintenance and conuenient food, but had thorowly furnished his table as becomed a King, and had not onely filled his cup, but caused it also to ouerflow. Secondly, that we haue respect to the times: for howsoeuer ordinarily our moderation must be bounded with parcimony, yet at times extraordinary, as at our solempne feasts, and when we giue entertainment, either to strangers, or our superiour friends much respected of vs; it must inlarge it selfe euen vnto liberality and large bounty. And thus Abraham feasted his friends at the weaning of Isaac; and Leui is said to haue made a great feast to giue our Sauour Christ entertainment; and our Sauour himselfe at the marriage-feast turned the water into wine by miracle, that there might be sufficient plenty. Thirdly, wee must take heed, that our moderation in our prouisions tend to the maintenance, and not the decay of good hospitality, which is so much commended vnto vs in the Scriptures. Neither doth one vertue or Christian duty, if it be right & true, exclude another, but cōtrariwise are inseparably linked, giuing to each other mutuall support and ayde; and they which seeme to be in this number and doe not thus, are but shaddowes, false and counterfeit. Fourthly, we must be carefull that it be no hindrance to the poore, and to the workes of mercy and Christian charity, but contrariwise what we saue by this moderation in prouision, from that which our state and ability might wel afford to spend, we must not hoord it vp for our priuate vse, but liberally bestow it in almes-deeds and other religious and Christian vses, knowing that our riches are not absolutely our owne, but lent vnto vs of God, to be employed for the glory of our Master, and good of our fellow-seruants.

But especially our temperance and Christian moderation must shew it selfe in our eating and drinking, and that both in respect of the quantity and also the quality of our food. First, for the quantity, our care must be, that we at least ordinarily eate and drinke no more then is fit for the sustaining of nature, and the preserving of our health and strength. For howsoeuer some may lawfully haue their tables thorowly furnished, yet none may rise from them with full and gluttred bellies; though our cups with Dauids, may be filled till they runne ouer, yet the ouerflow must nor bee into our owne bellies, and much lesse mount so high as to our heads, but like Salomons cisternes, they must haue their waste into the streets, and serue as fountaines to water and refresh the thirsty lands. Though it be a blessing of God promised vnto the faithfull, that they shall eate in plenty, and be satisfied, that they may take occasion thereby to praise the name of the Lord for all his bounty and goodnesse; yet it is a fearefull curse and heauy iudgement, to be giuen ouer vnto our owne carnall appetite, and a grievous sinne to minde so our bellies, as that we take more care and paines to please them, then to please God; which is to be a right belly-god indeed, to be transformed from men to beasts, who are led more by their sense and appetite, then by reason and Religion, and haue their gluttonous panch the chiefe state of their soules, and not in their head and heart; herein like as Clemens compareth them to the sea-Asse, which onely among all other liuing and sensible creatures hath his heart in his belly, as the Philosopher hath obserued. It is true that we may lawfully vse the creatures, not only for the necessity of nature, but also for our comfort and seasonable delight; and that we may at some times more then other, take our liberty to feed vpon them more liberally, as at the time of our feasting and reioycing one with another; for it is one chiefe end of the blessing of plenty, that wee should haue the fruition and benefit of it; and a punishment which God threatneth for sinne, that the people should be scantied in their food, and haue only sufficient for necessity of nature, to hold life and soule together, but not enough to satisfie the appetite and strengthen the body. But to exceede in gluttony, and to pamper the belly with superfluous excesse; to surcharge the stomacke, and to oppresse the minde and heart; to make the body with too much eating and drinking heauy and lumpish, and the minde dull and blockish, is neuer seasonable at any time, nor suiteable for any person. For this is expressly forbidden in many places of Scripture, and of our Sauour Christ himselfe by a speciall Mandate and Memento; Take heede to your selues, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkennesse, and so that day come vpon you at vnawares, &c. So that we are with equall care to auoyd excesse in meates as well as drinckes; for howsoeuer drunkennesse about gluttony exposeth to worldly shame, because it hath not so many colours and excuses to hide and couer it, and hath nor, like the other, the wits at home to make apologies in its owne defence; yet is it no lesse to bee auoided, as being a sinne alike odious vnto God; and pernicious and hurtfull vnto vs, and our poore neighbours. For it is a shamefull abuse of Gods rich bounty, when wee take occasion thereby to disable our selues vnto the duties of his seruice; and a miserable seruitude which we bring vpon his good creatures, when as we make them serue our filthy lusts. It is a notable meanes to weaken our bodies, and fill them with diseases, to impaire our strength, and shorten our liues. It filleth them with crudities, noysome humours, and dangerous obstructions, quencheth the naturall heate, dulleth the senses, and deaddeth both the vitall and animall spirits. And consequently, it disableth all the faculties of the soule vnto their functions and operations, seeing it worketh by the body as by its instrument, and so maketh it vnfit and vnable, slothfull and sluggish vnto all good duties. It maketh vs slaues vnto our meates and drinckes, ouer which God hath made vs Lords and rulers, and hurtfull and iniurious vnto the poore, whilest we deuoure that portion of our superfluity, which God as their right hath allotted vnto them. It maketh vs foolishly, for a short delight, which lasteth no longer then

then the meate is in eating and swallowing downe, to indure many houres grieuances through the discension of the belly, the oppression of the stomacke, the paine of the head, yea oftentimes dangerous surfets and sicknesses accompanying them which hazzard life it selfe. Yea in truth, for a forced and false delight (for what true pleasure is there in eating and drinking, when hunger and thirst are fully satisfied?) it forfeiteth that pleasure of the meale following, making vs to forgoe our meate, or to eat it with loathing, which would be equally delightfull with that which went before, if wee came vnto it with like appetites. Finally, this worse then brutish delight, which is so short and momentany, depriueth vs of those heauenly ioyes which are euclasting, and plungeth vs into woes and miseries which neuer haue end, whilst it armeth the flesh against the Spirit, and inableth it to foyle and cast vs head-long into many sinnes, as our Sauour hath implied in the parable of the rich glutton, who tooke his chiefe pleasure in going richly apparelled, and faring deliciously euery day.

Other directions concerning the quantity of our meates and drinckes.

Now for the quantity of our food which euery one ought to eate and drinke, no certaine rule can be giuen, no more then wee can appoint any one size of apparell to fit men of all statures, seeing one mans stomacke, health, and strength, requireth more, and another mans lesse, and that which is but sufficient to satisfie one, is excessiue and superfluous to another, and would cause him to surfer with too much fulnesse. And therefore the proportion of our meates and drinckes is to bee measured vnto euery one by Christian prudence, which we may helpe by obseruing these generall rules. As first, euery man must carefully obserue out of his owne experience, how much is ordinarily sufficient for the nourishing of his body, and the preseruing and increasing of his health and strength, and keepe himselfe vnto this proportion as neere as hee can, not pleasing his greedy appetite, by adding to this sufficiency that which by experience he findeth to be superfluous and more then enough. Secondly, that being in health and strength, or troubled with such infirmities, which cause greater appetite then good digestion, they doe not fully satisfie hunger, nor eate so much as the stomacke craueth, seeing this fulnesse within a few houres will turne to a superfluous burthen, and this enough will proue too much, but they must (as we say) rise with an appetite, and not make such a churlish feast as we can eate no more. For heerein Christian temperance is exercised, when we stin the stomacke of its desire, and teach it good manners, following heerein the direction of reason, and not (like brute beasts) of sense and appetite. In which respect, one giueth this rule, that our ordinary diet should be a daily abstinence, and our refection without all glutting satiety; for it profiteth not to goe two or three dayes with empty bellies, if afterwards we surcharge them with too much fulnesse, and recompence our fast with saturity and excessse. Lastly, seeing the end of our eating and drinking is, that we may bee fitted and better inabled for the seruice of God, in the common duties of Christianity, and the particular duties of our callings, wee must therein respect grace as well as nature, the glory of God, as well as the preseruing of our health and strength, and the thriving of our soules, as well as the nourishment of our bodies. In which regard, regard, the best rule of Christian moderation in our diet is, that we eate and drinke so much onely, as may make vs fit to serue God in religious duties, as hearing, reading, conferring, praying, and in the duties of our callings, that we may, hauing our spirits refreshed, and our strength repaired, more cheerefully and vigorously vndertake and performe them; and not so much as dulleth our spirits, and maketh our bodies heauie and sluggish, whereby we faile of our ends, and become lesse fit for any good duties. And this the wise Salomon requireth euen of Princes themselues, that they eate in due season, for strength, and not for drunkenesse. And our Saviour Christ would haue vs so to eate and drinke, as that thereby we should not be disabled vnto continuall watchfulnesse and prayer. To which purpose one saith well, that when we rise in the night to prayer, our stomakes should rather ypbraide vs with their emptinesse, then with their crudities and indigestion. And as we must auoide excesse in quantity, so also in variety; not that it is vnlawfull to eate of diuers dishes, so farre forth as it will stand with our health and strength; but that we doe not too much affect it, and pitch our studie vpon it. For if wee doe, it will be a notable meanes to draw vs on to excesse and gluttony, when as hauing eaten enough, we will still feede on new and more dainty dishes then the former, because we would please our taste with this variety. It is a notable meanes, vnlesse we haue Ostridge stomakes, to disturbe concoction, and impair the health, when we make them like a Noble mans kitchen, furnished and fraughted with all varieties which land and sea can yeeld vnto them, iumbling together (like wares in a Brokers shop) things of a farre different nature, some whereof are of easie digestion, and some of hard, and some also of a middle nature; as if herein also they would make this Microcosme and little world of man, like vnto the greater world, containing in it, at least, some small fragments of innumerable creatures. Finally, as it is hurtfull for the body, so not good for the soule, the which is wained from spirituall comforts, whilest it is too much affected with these carnall delights. For as one saith, When the body is resolu'd, and as it were, melteth in this pleasure of refection, the heart is loosened vnto vaine ioy and sensuall delight.

In respect of the qualitie of our meates and drinckes, Christian temperance and moderation must be vsed, in bridling our appetite and taste, that they doe not licourously long after, at least in our ordinary dyet, such as are curious and costly, daynty and delicious, which was the sinne of the rich Glutton, who in the parable was condemned vnto hell, and tormented in that part wherein he had chiefly offended. For howsoeuer it is lawfull for all men at some times to feede vpon the choyselt of the creatures, if the cost exceede not their state and meanes, and if they bee not much affected, but come into their way without any great care or trouble; and though it be lawfull at all times for those that are weake and sickly, and cannot safely eate courser and ordinarie meates, to provide, if they be able, such dainties and meates of good nourishment and easie concoction, as will agree with their stomacks; yet for those that are healthy and strong, it is not lawfull that they should, with the rich Glutton, euery day fare deliciously, nor conuenient, though it were lawfull, to doe it often and ordinarily, seeing he who will doe all that is lawfull, will within awhile doe also that which is vnlawfull; he that will walke vpon the brinke, is still in danger of falling into the water, though yet he be vpon firme ground; and hee that will follow his desires to the extreme borders of vertue, is within one step of vice, which was typically implied at the giuing of the Law, where the Lord forbade both the people, not only to come into the Mount, but also to touch the borders of it. And therefore if we would shun intemperance in diet which is vtterly vnlawfull, we must moderate our appetite euen about those things which are lawfull; and auoide carefully all meanes that tend vnto it. Among which, one of the chiefeft is delicie of meates, which draweth on the appetite vnto excessse, with the strong Cable of bewitching delight. And not much lesse dangerous are pleasant sawces curiously cooked; both which are to be ordinarily shunned of all who would be temperate in their diet. For as wee cannot attaine vnto Iustice by coueting much wealth, nor vnto temperance by the meanes of intemperancie; so neither (as one saith) can we be brought vnto a Christian-like course in our diet by curious-cooked cates, and alluring delicacies. In which regard the same author saith, and Socrates long before him, that we are to take heede of those meates, which allure vs to eate when we are not hungry, and of those drinke, which intice vs to drinke when we are not thirsty, because like witchcrafts they delude our appetites, the deuill the great deuourer of mankind, hauing a great hand in them. For howsoeuer all things were made for man, yet it is not good for him to vse all things, nor at all times, but the circumstances of time, occasion, manner, and other relations and respects to the things vsed, are of great moment to make them profitable or hurtfull. Adde heereunto that these dainty cates require much expense of time, and trouble both of body and mind in those that prouide them, which made Epicurus the Philosopher himselfe, who placed mans chiefe felicitie in voluptuous pleasure, in teaching rules of diet, which might bring with it most delight, to appoint notwithstanding vnto his disciples for their ordinary diet, herbes, rootes, fruits, and common fare, because these were at hand and easily cooked, whereas the tedious trouble in prouiding dainty fare is so great, that the short delight of fruition will in no sort recompence it. And how much more then should we, who profess Christianity, restraîne our appetite from affecting these delicacies, euen for conscience sake; seeing, if not we our selues, yet some other for vs (which charity maketh much alike) doe spend the strength of their minds and bodies, in making and cooking these curious prouisions, and waste and mispend their precious time, for the base purchase of these voluptuous pleasures? And as they require great labour and expence of time in him that prouideth them; so also excessive cost in him who payeth for them; in which respect I appeale vnto their consciences, with what comfort they can hope to appeare before their Iudge, calling them before his Tribunall to giue vp their accounts; when as it shall appeare that they haue consumed so many of his Talents entrusted vnto them, in riotous and dainty cheere; and haue bestowed so little vpon the poore members of Iesus Christ, to supply their necessities and keepe them from famishing. Now how little profit doe they purchase vnto vnto themselves at these deare rates? If indeed by bestowing treble cost vpon their diet, they could but double their strength, health, and all their abilities both of body and minde, and so become twice themselves, and as much outstrip other men in these things, as they exceede them in these costly curiosities, they should haue laid out their moneys vpon a reasonable good purchase; but wee see the cleane contrary in daily experience; namely, that those who ordinarily feede on courser fare, haue good complections and sound temperature, and are healthy and lusty, strong and vigorous for all manly imployments; whereas the other looke pale and thin, as though they had but single nourishment by their double cost, and are so effeminated in their mindes with luxury and excessse, and disabled in their strength, that they are more fit for venereall courtings, and to combe before a Carpet, then for any manlike exercises or martiall atchieuements. Yea oftentimes by glutting them with these dainties, they fill their bodies with diseases, as gowts, pallsies, stone, collicke, and sicknesses of all sorts, from which a more spare diet, which commonly accompanieth courser fare, would haue priuiledged and exempted them.

C A P. XXV.

*Of diuers other duties which wee ought to performe
at our meales.*

Ther duties there are which at our meales ought to bee performed, in which I will be more brieue and sparing, because I haue beene larger in the other then I purposed, the excessse of diet in these times drawing me on, and making me also exceed in prescribing rules of moderation. The next duty then which we are to obserue at our meales, is, that we bee contented with our cheare, as being that portion which God in his wise prouidence hath thought fitting for vs; and not suffer our mindes to surfet by feeding on idle wishes of better cheere, when our sensuall appetites are stinted with ordinary fare and short commons. Neither let vs murmur and repine because we haue such meane allowance, nor enuie others their full tables; much lesse let vs (as it is the manner of many nice wantons) excuse our too little or too meane fare, when euen their owne consciences tell them that they haue too much, yea, when they are so proud of their cheare, that their dispraises serue but (as their salt meates to their drinckes) to draw on their ghests to giue more commendations. Nor yet let vs (like the same persons vpon other occasions) fret and fume when as our meate is not so curiously cooked as standeth with our nice appetite, chafing as much at the small errorrs of the Cooke, as if the good of the Common wealth, and our owne safetie and saluation wholly rested on it. But let vs that professe Christianity leaue these vanities, and learne of the Apostle to be contented with such food as sufficeth nature, and is fit to preserue our health and strength; for if we would but consider how vnworthy wee are of the least part of our prouisions, and how farre the smallest of Gods fauours doe exceede our greatest deserts: and how many of Gods deare children come

§. Sect. 2.

That we may be merry at our meales.

Ecc. 2. 24.

Psal. 104. 15.

Act. 2. 46.

Thirdly, so farre as will stand with Christian grauity and the occasions that shall be offred, wee must be merry at our meales; for seeing then the Lord conferreth his blessings vpon vs, and giueth vnto vs these testimonies of his loue, shewing that hee watcheth ouer vs with his prouidence to preserue and nourish vs, it is a time of reioycing in the fruition of his fauours. And this is one speciall end for which the Lord giueth vs his benefits of meate and drinke, that in eating and drinking wee should delight our soules in ioying the fruit of our labours; and therefore hee hath bestowed vpon man, not onely bread and meat to nourish and strengthen him, but also wine to make his heart glad, and oyle to make him looke with a chearefull countenance. Which liberty and comfort of reioycing at their meales, the holy Saints of the Primitiue Church tooke vnto themselues, and breaking bread from house to house, did eate their meate with gladnesse and singlenesse of heart, praying God in the fruition of his benefits. Againe, the chiefe end of our eating and drinking is, that being thereby refreshed, we may be made more fit for the duties of Gods seruice; now the body is no more cheared with wholesome meates, then the heart and mind with honest mirth, and consequently the one is no lesse profitable then the other. Neither is it onely necessary for the soule, whose refreshing and recreation consisteth in delight, but also for the body and preseruing of health; and therefore mirth is worthily esteemed one of the chiefe doctors amongst Physicians, because if it be seasonable and moderate, it cheareth the spirits, and so causeth better concoction; whereas contrariwise, melancholy and lumpish heauinesse, damping and dulling them, doth turne much of our nourishment into the same humour. But yet our care must be, that as wee season our meate with mirth, so our mirth with the salt of grace, that wee may glorifie God in it, who is the chiefe cause of our reioycing; and mutually profit one another. In which regard, we must take heede that our liberty burst not out into licentiousnes, and that wee doe not make our selues merry with prophane iests, by abusing the Scriptures, and taking Gods holy name in vaine; nor with ribauldrie and scurrilous conceits, which tend to the corrupting of manners, and the poysoning of our owne hearts and theirs that heare vs; nor with biting and bitter gibes and frumps, which wound the good name of our neighbour, and as much vex his heart with anger, griefe and discontent, as wee are delighted with the salty wittinesse of the conceits. Finally we must be carefull (because here going with the winde and tide, we may easily ouer-shoote our selues) that wee bee not immoderate in our mirth, but keepe our selues within the bounds of sobriety, lest our mirth degenerate into phrensie, and so iustly incurre the Wise mans censure, I said of laughter, It is madde; in which respect it is fit, that wee bee carefull to keepe the reines still in our hand, that we may checke and curbe in our mirth when it beginneth to gallop, lest it giue vs a fall, and cause vs to discouer much weakenesse and infirmite. But as the Lord is the cause of our mirth, so hee must bee the chiefe end of it; and as our reioycing

reioycing is of and from him, so it must bee for him and in him; according to that of the Apostle, Reioyce in the Lord alwayes, and againe, I say, Reioyce; so that wee may reioyce, euen with a double ioy, not onely in spirituall, but also in ciuill and temporall things, if our ioy and mirth be honest and harmelesse, witty, without the froth of vanity; and so ingenuous and charitable; that it tend not onely to make our selues merry, but to delight them also that beare vs company.

The fourth Christian duty to be done at our meales, respecteth our speeches and conferences, vnto which is required that they be profitable, tending to make vs more holy and religious; or more wise and morally vertuous; or more liuely and cheerefull vnto the performance of all good duties. The first kinde of Colloquies and discourses are chiefly to bee preferred, seeing wee must first seeke the Kingdome of God and his righteousness, and worldly things in an inferiour place, which are incomparably of lesse worth. Of which conferences wee may reape more fruit and benefit then of our bodily nourishment, seeing that preserveth the outward man onely, but these are the spirituall food and repast of the soule, which is by much the more excellent part; that is but perishing food which corrupteth, and wee with it, but this food of our soules will indure to life eternall. Now because, our hearts being barren in good meditations, wee cannot easily finde out vpon a sudden, fit matter for these discourses, and when wee doe, are easily put out, and drawne vpon euery occasion to fall againe to worldly and idle talke; therefore it were good for vs to thinke before-hand on some profitable subiect whereon wee may discourse and conferre; or at least, that wee doe lay hold on the best opportunities that for the present are offered vnto vs, and slightly passing ouer things which are impertinent and vnprofitable, as wee doe those meates which doe not please vs, pitch vpon that which best maketh for our purpose, and make our spirituall meale of it, as beeing that wholesome and well-relishing dish, for which, putting all the other backe, wee haue all the while reserved our stomackes. But though these religious conferences at meales bee most profitable, yet may wee also lawfully talke of ciuill and morall points; yea, euen of our owne affaires and ordinary businesse, or things some way pertinent to the bettering of our selues, or some in our company, either for the increasing of our wisdom and prudence, or the fitting of vs for action and employment, especially when wee obserue that our company cannot bee easily drawne to entertaine such speech as wholly tendeth to piety and Religion. Yet may wee, as occasion serueth, powder euen these discourses with piety, and lying (as it were) at the spirituall lurch, take all good aduantages to insert and interlace into these discourses something profitable for the soule, and to bring, as much as wee can, ciuill premises to pious conclusions. Finally, it is neither vnprofitable nor vnseasonable, if our speeches at our meales doe sometimes tend to the refreshing of our wearied mindes after serious studies, with pleasant conceits and honest mirth, because though these bee of no great worth in themselves, yet they looke to things of more value, and serue as helpe and meanes to fit and prepare vs for employments of an higher nature.

Phil. 4. 4.

6. Sect. 3.

Of our conferences and discourses at our tables.

Matth. 6. 33.

The which, being a thing which wee chiefly ayme at in taking our repast, and in refreshing thereby both our mindes and bodies; I dare not exclude all pleasant discourse from such meetings; for though wee may not make our spirituall meale of such light meates, yet may they well serue as sawce to quicken our appetite; and though wee may not dwell in such merry conceits; yet when our wits are dulled and blunted with more serious discourses, wee may vse them (as the Israelites did the Philistines forges) for our necessity, and descend vnto them for a while to sharpen our tooles. The which course in our conferences I doe not commend as most excellent in it owne nature: for it were to be wished that wee were so spiritually and heavenly-minded, that our hearts might be at all times euen raiued with delight, when wee are exercised in high and holy meditations and speeches, or bringing them to their full effect in our workes and actions; but I onely allow it as lawfull and well agreeing and fiteable to our present estate full of frailty and infirmitie. Vnto which, hauing respect, I will conclude this point with this one caueat; that neither in matters appertaining to Religion nor ciuill wisdom, we doe in these table-conferences, either propound or admit knotty and hard questions, or polemicall disputes, and difficult and subtill controuersies, both because these often-times through pride and over-eager handling, doe heat the heart, and cause wrangling and contention; and also because they are not fiteable and seasonable to the time and the ends at which wee ayme. For it is a time of refection and refreshing, and not of toyle and labour either to body or mind, and we must let our bowes stand vnbeent, that they may afterwards be more fit for shooting, and not be still drawing our arrow to the head. It is a time to recouer our spent spirits, & not to consume and waste them; which will not onely make our mindes vnfit for imployment (for if we toyle them when they should rest, they will bee dull and slothfull when they should labour) but also much hurt our bodies and impeach our health, whilst these over-earnest discourses about points of great difficultie, doe disperse the naturall heate, and dissipate the spirits, calling them away from the worke in hand, to assist the soule in the exercise of the braine, and so cause ill concoction and indigested crudities.

The last duty in our eating and drinking respecteth the choyce of our company: for if we be of ability, it were to be wished, that we would follow Iobs practice, who would not eat his morsels alone, making to this end choyce of fit company to consort with vs. Neither is it commendable in a Christian to keepe open house for all commers, and so to make it worse then a common Inne, a cage of vnclane birds, and a place of all misrule and disorder, which was the hospitality of able men in the dayes of ignorance, who are more to be praised for their bounty and zeale to house-keeping, then for their piety and prudence. But seeing our ghests must be our companions for the time, of which there ought to be made great choyce; therefore besides those whom bonds of society, kindred, trading and commerce, and such like respects; and those that resort vnto vs as strangers, or by some casuall and extraordinary accidents; wee are in our common course, as neere as we can, to make choyce of such only, as are knowne vnto vs (at least in the iudgement of charity) to be vertuous and religious; and among among these, such especially as are most fit for our spirituall trading, either to make vs more rich in knowledge, faith, obedience, and all spirituall graces, or at least to be enriched of vs. By which kind of meetings we might receive singular comfort and benefit, seeing this good society and kind familiarity between Christians, is a notable bond of loue, and an excellent and effectual meanes for the mutual stirring vp of Gods graces in one another, and for their strengthening & encouraging vnto euery good duty. In which respect it were much to be desired, that that ancient custome in the Primitive Church, of loue feasts among Christians, were more in vse in these dayes, that we might not so deseruedly lye open to that aspersiō of worldlings, namely, that where Religion is planted, there all good neighborhood and friendly meetings are almost quite laid aside. To which end let vs take notice of the causes of this decay, that so they being removed, this communion and fellowship among the faithfull may be restored. And first, when men are wholly carnall, and set altogether on fleshly delights, it is no maruaile if they take pleasure in one anothers company, seeing they are mutual helpers in this worldly ioy; and so if we were in any perfection spiritually minded, we would take much more delight in consorting together; because it would tend much to the increasing of our Christian comfort; but when by the preaching of the Gospell those carnall ioyes and vnlawfull pleasures are so cryed downe, that some forbear them out of conscience, and some, to auoyd the shame of profanenesse, there followeth a breach of society and familiarity, because the bond is broken that held it together. The which is not repaired and re-vnited, till in stead thereof there be a spirituall bond to linke vs together; and this being so weake among most Christians, which still remaine more flesh then Spirit; it is no maruaile, if there be feldome any good meetings, seeing the bond is no stronger of such society and familiarity; whereas if they were more spirituall, they would finde in them more spirituall ioy, and so entertaine them with more ardencie of affection. Another cause, which is but a branch of the former, is, that in the time of the Gospell, carnall loue, which was of old a strong bond of fellowship, is not so hot and strong as it was, neither to mens persons, nor yet to the pleasures of sinne and delights of the flesh; nor spirituall loue so frequent as it should be, either vnto our neighbours themselves, or yet to Christian conferences, religious duties and exercises, and those sweet comforts which we should take in mutuall society, and should be the chiefe motiue to bring vs together; for were we inflamed with this ardent loue, it would make vs greatly delight in one another, and to seeke all good occasions of such sweete society.

Vnto these we may adde the many abuses of these meetings, which are notable meanes of their dissolution; as because we faile in the maine ends of them, not chiefly ayiming at our spirituall good, and that we may mutually stirre vp Gods graces in vs by Christian conferences, edifie and strengthen one another vnto all good duties, and reioyce together in the Lord by setting foorth his praises, the which were the ends that the Saints in the Primitive Church propounded to their feasts of loue; but for the most part inuiring one another to pamper the belly with good cheere, and to please the flesh with carnall pleasures, which leaning behind them a sting of conscience, it is no mannaile if we take small comfort to meete after this manner often together, seeing the sweete is exceeded by the sowre, and keepe our hand from tasting of the honey, which indangereth vs to be wounded with the sting of sinne; and though it be sweete in the mouth, yet is turned in the digestion into bitter choller. And as wee faile in our ends of meeting, so also in our carriage, when wee are met together, in which regard we iustly deserue the Apostles censure, that wee come together not for the better, but for the worse. For either the time is spent in idle and vaine talking, vnprofitable discourses, hurtfull inuitations, to excesse in eating and drinking. Or if some religious conference bee admitted, yet through pride and want of charity it is often crossed of the mayne ends. For not being, as we ought, fast linked together in the bond of loue, every difference in opinion disioynteth our affections; and wanting charity to beare with one another, and humility to thinke that we may erre as well as our brethren, of patience to waite vpon Gods leasure till he be pleased to reueale the truth vnto them as well as vnto vs; and vnanimity to walke by the same rule, and minde the same thing, whereto we haue already attained; we commonly take delight to spend our speech in questions and controuerfies, and in shewing wherein we dissent, rather then wherein we agree, which oftentimes draw men to heate and contention, yea to wrangling and hard speeches, which alienate their hearts, and make them part more cold in loue, and remisse in friendship, then when they met together. Whereas if selfe-loue did not wed them to their own opinions, and pride made them not impatient that any should dissent from them, but that in charity and Christian humility, they desired to edifie one another, not so much desiring to make them their schollers in imbracing their priuate opinions, as the Disciples of Christ, by knowing better the mayne points of Christian Religion, or more conscionable in imbracing holinesse and righteousnesse in their liues and conuersations; there would bee much more fruit and benefit of such conferences, and much more encouragement vnto our often meetings. Finally, the great cheere, and excessive cost, and trouble to provide it, which is commonly vsed at these meetings, is one speciall cause why we meete so seldome. Which though all mislike and speake against, because they cannot meete, often that meete so chargeably, their state and meanes being not able to beare it, yet it fareth heerein as in the case of braue apparell; all complaine of it because of the cost, but none will reforme it because of their pride; whereby in their mutuall entertainment, one seeketh to out-vie another, till at length it come to that height of excesse, and groweth so over-chargeable to their purse, that they leaue off such meetings altogether. Let no man therefore complaine of the hardnesse of the times, which will scarce affoord meanes of necessary maintenance, and much lesse of entertaining our friends to eate and drinke together. For howsoever it may bee true that these times will not beare vs out, if wee bee resolved to bee still excessive in our cheere and cost; yet if wee would chiefly ayme in our meetings, at the maintaining of loue, comfort and ioy in one anothers company, stirring vp Gods graces in vs, and our building vp vnto all good duties; I see no cause why wee should not, to inioy these Christian comforts forts, and spirituall benefits, be contented with lesser cheare in our neighbours house, then when wee eate our meate solemnely at home; and consequently, no reason why the hardnesse of the times should be pretended, vnlesse our hearts be more hard then they, and will by no meanes be reclaimed from this fault of excessse. Now as we are for these ends to inuite one another, so are wee especially according to our ability to make the poore our ordinary ghests, because therein wee shall doe a worke of mercy acceptable vnto God, who hath giuen vnto vs our greater prouision, that wee may impart it vnto those who haue lesse, and out of our plenty minister vnto them that want necessaries. And thus our Sauour requireth, that when wee make a dinner or supper, wee should not inuite our friends, brethren, kinsmen and rich neighbours, namely, not to these ends, eyther to receiue recompence by the like inuitation, or to approue our charitie, seeing men out of naturall selfe-loue or carnall affection, may doe the like; but the poore, maymed, lame and blind, because they being vnable to make any recompence, it will bee a good signe, that wee doe it out of simple charity, and pure respect vnto Gods Commandement, and not out of selfe-loue, and such respects as are naturall and worldly. And this was Iobs practice, who as hee did not eate his morsels alone, so the ghests whereof hee made choyce, were the poore, widdow and fatherlesse, as he professeth. Which example if wee imitate, we shall in them feede Iesus Christ himselfe, and be richly rewarded at his appearing. Or if wee cannot inuite all to our table whom wee desire to relieue; our care must be to send, according to our ability, such reliefe as wee can spare from our selues and families, vnto those whom we know doe stand in neede; for though God alloweth vs to eate the fat, and drinke the sweete, yet withall hee requireth, that wee send portions vnto the poore for whom nothing is prepared; according to the example of the Iewes at their feasts of Purim, who sent portions one to another, and gifts to the poore. To which end wee ought to vse all good prouidence and frugality, not suffering any thing to bee lost, though we haue neuer so much; for if our Sauour, after that hee had fed the poore by miracle, though he was able as easily to haue done it againe, yet would not let any thing bee lost of his prouision through negligence, but would haue all the remainder reserued for another time; then how much more should wee be prouident, whose bounty is limited by our meanes, that we may releue those poore, who are still hungry, and neede our help for their comfort and reliefe?

And these are the duties which ought to be performed at our meales. The dutie to be performed afterwards, is true thankfulnessse in the heart, and outwardly expressed both by our words and actions. Vnto inward thankfulnessse of the heart is required, that wee know and acknowledge that wee haue receiued our foode at Gods hand, and that by his bounty and gracious prouidence we are fed and nourished, and not by our owne policy and power, industry and labour. The which Moses preseth vpon the Israelites to make them thankfull; for if wee know, that God of his rich mercy hath bestowed these blessings vpon vs, and hath fed and nourished vs with his good creatures, it is a notable meanes

to make vs also acknowledge it, with all due thankfulness. Euen as contrariwise when we take no notice of this bounty and providence of God in feeding vs, wee are ready to sacrifice vnto our owne nets, and to ascribe the prayse of our prouision to our owne wisdom, and indeuours, and so to make Idols of them. And of this we haue an example in the Israelites, who receiued Gods blessings for their vse, but not as frō his hand, and therefore were not thankful vnto him, but gaue the praise to their louers. The which vngratitude God will punish by depriuing vs of his blessings, that by our wants we may be driuen to goe vnto him by prayer for a supply, who in the time of plenty would not goe vnto him by thankesgiuing, as not acknowledging the Author of these benefits; the which also the Lord threatneth against his people of Israel in the same place. Secondly, vnto this inward thankfulness there is required, not onely that wee know and acknowledge the Lord to be the Author of our food and nourishment habitually, but that we also actually remember this his bounty and goodnesse, and hauing them in fresh memory, that vpon all new occasions we blesse his name for them: According to that commandement: When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt blesse the Lord thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee; beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, &c. Outwardly vnto this thankfulness is required, that wee expresse it, first, by our words, in returning thanks and praise vnto God for our food and nourishment, and for all other good blessings spirituall and temporall which wee haue receiued at his hands; the which in companie is to be performed by one as the mouth of all the rest, and most conueniently by the master of the family and feast; and ioyntly together, as occasion, company and other circumstances will permit, by adding hereunto singing of a Psalm, according to the example of our Sauiour Christ himselfe at his last Supper with his Apostles. Secondly, we must expresse our thankfulness outwardly in our workes, in imploying that strength which wee haue renewed by our nourishment, in the seruice of God, by performing the generall duties of Christianity, and the speciall duties of our callings, that by both wee may glorifie his most holy name, who hath so graciously fed and nourished vs. For if wee expect this at the hands of our seruants; that being nourished at our cost and finding, they should not waite vpon themselves and spend their time about their owne pleasures, but in our seruice from whom they haue their maintenance; which if they neglect, we are ready to turne them out of the doores, as vnprofitable drōnes good for nothing, but to liue vpon the spoile of our goods: the how much more wil the Lord, who is a much more absolute owner then we, iustly require at our hands, that after he hath refreshed vs with his creatures, we doe not spend our strength in fulfilling the lusts of our owne flesh and the pleasures of sinne, but imploy it in all such good duties, as most tend to the aduancement of his glory from whom we haue all our maintenance? And so much concerning the second kinde of cessation from our labours; of the third and last kinde, which is taking of our rest by sleepe, I will not here speake, hauing a more conuenient place for it, when wee haue finished all our day labours, and are come to speake of the duties in the night.

CAP. XXVI.

Of the duties which wee ought to performe, when we are solitary and alone.

Besides those Christian duties which are ordinarily and constantly to be done in some part of every day, there are others which are more accidentall, vnto which wee are not tyed every day or any certaine time of the weeke, but to be done when as we shall haue fittest occasions and best opportunities offered vnto vs. And which belong not to all persons, or to the same persons at all times, but waite vpon vncertaine occurrents, variety of estates, and such like circumstances. As for example, wee are sometimes by our selues alone, and sometimes in company with others, sometimes in prosperity and ioy, and sometime in aduersitie and trouble, and vncertaine it is in what day or what part of the day any of these shall happen; notwithstanding there are diuers duties which belong to these several conditions, which with no lesse conscience & constancy are to be performed then the other, of which we are now come to intreate. And first, wee will shew what are those Christian duties which belong vnto vs when wee are alone, and then what those are which wee ought to performe in the company of others. Concerning the former, wee must, when we are solitary and alone, keepe a narrow watch ouer our selues, that wee be neither idle and vnfruitfull, nor ill employed and taken vp with bad exercises. We must not suffer our mindes to be slothfull and sluggish, and so to languish for want of spirituall exercise; nor our hearts to remaine in vs dull and dead, barraine and empty of all good desires and holy resolutions; neither yet must we in respect of action and bodily employment, giue our selues ouer vnto ease and sloth; for if we thus (as it were) lye fallow without any seede of grace sowne in vs, the diuell knowing vs to be fit grounds for his husbandry, will sow in vs the cockle and tares of all sinne and wickednesse; if hee finde vs thus swept and empty of all good, wee shall bee fitly garnished for his dwelling, as our Saviour hath taught vs. If wee be not employed in some good dutie of Gods seruice, the deuill will take vs vp like masterlesse men, and allure vs with the pay of worldly vanities, to serue him in the workes of darkenesse. As wee see in the example of Dauid, who spending his time in sloth when Kings went out to warre, and the Armie of God was in the field, the deuill taking him at this aduantage, put his presse money of carnall pleasure into his hand, and so employed him for the time to fight his battailes, euen to the shedding of the blood of innocent Vriah and other of his faithfull seruants.

And as our care must bee, that we be not idle, so much more that wee do not spend our solitary houres in doing that which is ill, the which notwithstanding inseparably accompanieth the other. For no sooner doe we cease to doe good, but we begin to doe euill; no sooner doe we leaue the Oare, as we are rowing towards the haven of rest, but the winde and tide of our corruption carrieth vs downe the streame towards the dead sea of death.

That we must spend our solitary houres in good exercises, shunning vaine thoughts and intertaining Christian meditations.

death and destruction. And therefore if we would not be drawne vnto ill, we must still be employed in good exercises; keeping alwayes a narrow watch ouer our minds, hearts, and actions, that on the one side they be not ouertaken with any euill, nor prostituted vnto any sinne; and on the other side, that they be wholly taken vp and exercised in all Christian and holy duties. First, aboue all obseruations wee must looke to our deceitfull minds and hearts, that they bee not stolne from vs by the subtilty of the deuill when we are alone; and that they doe not (as naturally they are apt) wander in this solitarinesse, and goe astray from the way of Gods commandements, and so losing themselues (like Lambes in the Desart) in the by-ways of sinne, become an easie prey to the rauening Wolfe. In which regard we must keepe a carefull watch ouer our mindes and cogitations, that they doe not take their liberty when we are alone, to roue and range after worldly vanities, the pleasures of sinne, and things that being vterly vnprofitable doe vs no good, though we spend many houres in thinking on them. For what sinne and pittie is it, that such excellent faculties of the soule, the minde, imagination, and discourse of reason, should be so vainely employed, either about things euill and hurtful, or fruitlesse and impertinent, that if, after much time thus spent, we should call our selues to account, and say; Soule, what good hast thou reaped by so many houres study and Meditation, either for the subduing of thy corruption, or thine enriching with grace, and inabling vnto any holy duty; either for thy better securing from sinne and death, or further assurance of life and happinesse; it would be stricken dumbe, and not able to answere any word? Contrariwise our care must be, that in our solitarinesse our mindes and imaginations be exercised in good Meditations; as in the consideration of Gods nature and sauing attributes, his Wisedome and power, his Iustice and mercy, his infinite Goodnes in himselfe and graciousnesse towards vs, the excellency and perfection of his Law, and his admirable workes of creation and providence; the great mystery of our Redemption by Iesus Christ, and of the meanes whereby we may be assured of the fruit and benefit of it; of the inestimable priuiledges, which belong to all true Christians, and of the innumerable miseries which are incident vnto them who liue still in the state of infidelity and corruption; of the excellency of spirituall graces, and of those heauenly ioyes, wherewith they shall be eternally crowned in the life to come; or of the meanes wherby we may attaine vnto them, and bee more and more assured of them; of the foulnessse and odiousnesse of vice and sinne, and of the fearefull condemnation, and horrible torments of the wicked, who liue & die in them without repentance. So also wee are to meditate of mans misery through the fall, and of the meanes wherby we may be freed from it; & more particularly, of those speciall sins, vnto which by nature we are most inclined, and wherewith we are most often ouertaken; and of the meanes whereby we may be strengthened against them, and inabled to mortifie and subdue them; and contrariwise, in what vertues and graces wee are most defectiue, and of the meanes whereby they may bee increased in vs; with what tentations wee are most often and dangerously assaulted; what part of Christian Armour is most wanting, and what place in body or soule being weakest, is likely to giue aduan-aduantage vnto our spirituall enemies in their assaults of tentation, and to indanger vs to be surprized and ouercome. Or if our minds bee not thus taken vp in things appertaining to the good of our soules, yet at least, they must be exercised about matters that concerne our temporall estate and the workes of our callings; and how wee may so well contriue our worldly busineses, as that they may by our care and prouidence succeed the better when we vndertake them. But heere our care must bee, that our mindes be so exercised about these worldly things, as that they bee not wholly swallowed vp of them, and that like Eagles they stoope downe to them as vnto their prey, for the relieuing of our present necessities, but that they doe not wholly dwell vpon them, but, according to their diuine and excellent nature, they doe againe raise themselves vpon the wings of faith, and soare aloft in diuine contemplations; spending some part of our solitary houres, in our holy soli-loquies and conferences with God, diuine Meditations, Prayer at least by short ejaculations, and thanksgiuing vnto God for all his benefits, reading of the Scriptures, and other holy and religious bookes, for the increasing of our knowledge, and strengthening of our faith, and the directing and reforming of our liues, with such other religious exercises.

With like care we must in our solitarinesse watch ouer our hearts, that they be not poysoned with carnall concupiscence, nor inueagled and inamoured with the pleasures of sinne, and that they doe not affect and fasten themselves vpon worldly vanities, nor dote vpon vncertaine riches, voluptuous delights, and vaine honours, vnto which naturally they are so much inclined, and so commit with them a kinde of contemplatiue idolatry, when as they are debarred of actuall fruition, and cannot, in this solitary absence, performe vnto them any reall worship. But seeing God requireth to haue them as his owne peculiar and chiefe possession, we must keepe them fast linked vnto him, and so fasten them vpon spirituall and heavenly excellencies, that no worldly thing may cause a separation. And because we haue no bond strong enough to tie them together in this inseparable vnion, we must often pray with Dauid, that the Lord will knit our hearts vnto him with his holy Spirit, and so ingraue his Law, and put his feare in them, that they may neuer depart from him. And that they may not bee fixed and fast glewed vnto earthly things, we must with an holy violence pull them often asunder, and lift them vp with holy desires, affecting, yea hungry and thirsting after such things as are spirituall and heavenly, as after the food of our soules, and Gods presence in the Sanctuary, after Christ and his righteousness, and the meanes of our saluation, after the perfect and full fruition of God, when as beholding his face in righteousness, we shall be satisfied with his Image. The which our desires and affections must be seruent and earnest, like those of little children after their mothers brest, when as they are newly weaned, or of women with child, which are so sicke with longing, that they are ready to miscarry, if their desires bee not satisfied, or of men neere famished with hunger and thirst after their meates and drinckes.

Finally, though our mindes and hearts doe sometimes breake thorow the watch at vnawares, yet at least let vs not so negligently keepe it, as to be

be ouertaken in our actions with any grosse sinne, as either by spending our time in idlenesse without any imployment, because there is none to take notice of our sloth, or by committing any sinne which wee would bee loth to doe if wee were in company, and had the eyes of men to looke vpon vs. And to this end let vs consider, that in the greatest solitude wee haue God present to beare vs company, who beholdeth our most secret actions, not as an idle spectatour, but as a righteous Iudge, who will call all our workes to account, to reward them if they be good, or to punish them if they be euill; and what extreme folly and madnesse is it, to make no scruple of committing those sinnes in the presence of our Iudge, which with all care wee hide from our fellowes, who, it may be, are guilty of the same or like crimes? Let vs also consider, that we carry our owne consciences euer about vs, which are such witnesses as will not bee bribed and corrupted, but will one day giue in true euidence before Gods Tribunall, either to acquit or condemne vs; besides all those present accusations wherewith they are alwayes ready to vpbraide vs after our ill-doing, and those horrors and terrours wherewith they affright vs, after we haue wounded them with knowne, wilfull, and haynous sinnes; if at least by impudencie in sinning and customable wickednesse, they be not for the time seared and senselesse. Let vs remember, that there is nothing hid which shall not bee made manifest, and that all our workes and actions which are done in the most secret corners, shall, as our Sauour speaketh, be proclaimed vpon the house tops; yea shall one day come to be viewed and scanned before all the holy Saints and Angels, and be either applauded and commended, or else derided and condemned. Finally, that it is grosse hypocrisie to seeme more carefull and conscionable of our workes and wayes, when we are in company and in the sight of men, then when we are alone and in the presence of God; the which abuse of his Maiesty hee will not indure, but will, vnlesse wee repent of it, pull off the vayne and vizard of hypocrisie, and lay open our nakednesse and filthinesse to the view of the world. Or if he forbear vs so long, yet will hee not faile to vncape and vnmaske vs at the day of Iudgement, and giue vs our portion with the rest of our fellow hypocrites, where shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

And thus are we in our solitarinesse to watch ouer our minds and imaginations, our hearts and affections, our workes and actions, that they may be preserued from all sinne, and wholly taken vp and exercised in religious and honest duties; which that we may obserue with more vigilancy and diligence, let vs consider that it is a course, pleasant, profitable, and necessary. For what can be more pleasant, then so to carry our selues in our solitarinesse, as that we may conuerse with God, & feele within vs the beames of his fauour warming our hearts, and the sweet communion and gracious influences of his holy Spirit directing, comforting, and encouraging vs in these good courses? what greater ioy in this life, then thus to inioy God in some first fruits and small beginnings, which shall be the perfection of our happinesse, when we come to full fruition? We shall find it also most profitable both for our selues and others. For if wee make this vse of our solitarinesse, our minds will be the better fitted for diuine contemplation, when

when as they are sequestred for the time from the world, as our bodies are from company, and so freed from all those distractions and interruptions, which when we are in company, doe hinder vs in this exercise. And this benefit of solitude for holy Meditations the Psalmist noteth; Stand in awe (saith he) and sinne not; commune with your owne heart upon your bed, and be still. And our Sauour Christ inioyneth it as a notable helpe to fit vs the better for prayer; When thou prayest (saith he) enter into thy Chamber, and when thou hast shut to the doore, pray to thy Father which is in secret. And as we are hereby made more fit to conuerse with God, so also with men; seeing if we keepe our mindes and hearts thus well seasoned in our solitari- nesse, all our words and actions will hold the same taste when we come in- to company; and if when we are alone, our hearts be the inditers of good mat- ter, when wee come among others, our tongues will bee as the pen of a ready writer, to discouer and lay open for the good of others, the things which we priuately haue conceiued. If when we are alone, wee thus furnish and enrich our selues with these prouisions of spirituall and heavenly trea- sures, we shall be able out of our store to spend liberally when we come in- to company, & to enrich others also with our plenty. Finally, it is necessary that we keepe this watch ouer our thoughts, hearts, and actions, when we are solitary, because then we are more in danger to fall into sinne, and to become slothfull and negligent in all good duties; for then the bond of feare and worldly shame, that restraineth the flesh from many disorders, which otherwise it would willingly rush into; being taken away, it will eagerly desire more liberty to sinne, and then also we want the encourage- ment of fame and commendation, which is due vnto well-doing, and is a notable spur to pricke vs forward in vertuous actions; the which moo- ued our Sauour to encourage vs in our priuate prayers, by telling vs, that howsoeuer by performing this holy duty in secret, we should want the ap- plause and praises of men, yet there is sufficient cause to make vs perseuere in it, seeing our heavenly Father would abundantly supply this defect, who seeing vs in secret, would reward vs openly. Againe, when we are solitary and alone, we are destitute of the helpe of our religious friends, who by their counsell, exhortations, and encouragements, make vs more ready to vndertake, and more able to performe Christian duties, and by their ad- monitions and reprehensions, doe raise vs vp by repentance when as wee are falne into any sinne. In which regard the Wise man saith, that two are better then one, because if they fall, the one will helpe vp his fellow; and de- nounceth a woe against him that is alone when he falleth; because hee hath not another to helpe him vp. And therefore in this respect also we neede to dou- ble our care, in watching ouer our selues when we are alone, because wee haue no other to watch ouer vs, who might supply those defects in which we are wanting. Adde hereunto, that when we are alone, we are more ex- posed to the danger of tentations, seeing Satan our spirituall enemy is ready to take the aduantage of our solitude, and to assault vs in single combat, when we haue no seconds nor succours to assist vs in our foyles. And this made him to tempt Eue when she was alone, that she might not haue the counsell and helpe of her husband to make resistance. And Iosiph when there was none with him but his vnchaste mistresse, whom hee vsed

as his wicked instrument to assault his chastity. And thus hee assaulted righteous Lot vnto incestuous lust, not in Abrahams company, nor yet in Sodom it selfe, though in respect of their professed filthinesse, it was a fit Theater for such a fearefull Tragedy; but when hee liued solitarily in the mountaine, and had none but his daughters to beare him company, who were to prouoke him vnto this vncleannesse. And thus when hee would tempt David vnto lust, he chooseth his time when hee walked alone vpon the roofof his house, and then allured him, by presenting vnto his sight a fit obiect of vncleannesse. The which he found by often experience to be so great an aduantage, that when he was to combate with our Saviour Christ, he made choyce to set vp his lists in the wildernesse, that hauing in this solitary place, none of the former helpes, hee might haue full liberty to bend against him all his engines of battery, and vie without any interruption the vttermost of his power and skill to giue him a foyle. Finally, as solitary places are fittest for Satans filthy imbracements, and to pollute the soule with sinne, so also for the vnlawfull conceptions of our wicked lusts, which afterwards are brought to the birth, and grow to their full maturity in outward actions, when wee come into company, as the Apostle Iames implyeth in the like Allegory. Thus also the Prophet Micah denounced a woe against them who deuised iniquity, and in their meditations plotted the worke of wickednesse vpon their beds, and when the morning is light, practised it, because it was in the power of their hands. And when they had by themselues coueted their neighbours fields, they did afterwards seaze vpon them with open violence, &c. In which regard, wee are in our solitarinesse to watch most carefully ouer the purity of our soules, because they are then most indangered to these spirituall rapes; and in vaine shall we labour to hinder the birth and growth of sinne when wee company, if when vve are alone, we be not as carefull to shunne Satans imbracements, and so to preuent its first conception.

tarinesse.

Vt howsoeuer there is a fit time for solitarinesse, wherein the former duties belonging to it, are to be practised of vs; yet we are not chiefly to affect it, much lesse to put such perfection in it, as to deuote our liues wholly vnto it, concerning and shunning all ciuill conuersation, and all entercourse and dealings with one another; but leauing vnto it due place, and deserved commendation if it bee seasonable, we are, if they come in comparison, generally, both in respect of persons and times, to preferre ciuill conuersation before solitarinesse, and a life taken vp in vertuous action, before that which is spent in bare theorie and contemplations; for God is more glorified, the Kingdome of Christ aduanced and enlarged, the good both of Church and Common wealth with all the members of them, both more furthered and increased, and our owne present comfort and future ioyes in

in our heavenly happinesse, much more multiplied and augmented, when by our Christian conuersation and vertuous actions, our holy profession and good example, our admonitions, exhortations, counsaile, consolation; our workes of iustice, charity and mercy, and all other good offices mutually performed, we edifie and build vp those which are about vs, in their most holy faith, and draw many others to accompany vs vnto the Kingdome of heauen; then in the strictest course of a solitary life, to goe by our selues alone vnto this place of happinesse. And this the Lord hath ratified by his Word, when as he said, that it was not good for man to bee alone: and two are better then one, because they haue a good reward for their labour, (namely, in that mutuall society, and in those good offices of piety and Christian charity which they performe to one another) for if they fall, one will lift up his fellow, but noe to him that is alone when he falleth: for hee hath not another to helpe him up. And the Apostle layeth it as a charge vpon all men, that they should consider and watch ouer one another, to prouoke vnto loue and to good workes, not forsaking the assembling of our selues together, as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another, &c. The which also is commended vnto vs by his workes both of creation and renouation; For he hath made vs in our natures, not like vnto wilde beasts, who take their pleasure to lurke alone in their denues, but politicall and sociable creatures, who take all their chiefe ioy and comfort in conuersing with one another; and so in his wise prouidence hee hath disposed of vs, that we should not bee absolute, and able to liue of our selues, but neede the mutuall helpe one of another, so that the King needeth the subiect, as much as the subiect the King; the rich the helpe of the poore, as well as the poore the hire of the rich; the city the countrey, as well as the countrey the city; and so hath hee combined and linked all men together into societies, as it were particular members of the same bodies; and hath so furnished them with diuersity of gifts and seuerall abilities vnto sundry offices, that no sort of men can bee wanting without a maime, nor any part vterly pulled from the whole, but that hee must necessarily become a dead and vnprofitable member, and worke his owne ruine by this diuulsion and separation. So in our renouation wee are as it were anew created into one body, where of Christ Iesus is the Head; and as diuers members, haue our seuerall functions and offices allotted vnto vs, which are not onely for our peculiar vse, but for the good of the whole body, and of euery other of our fellow members, as the Apostle excellently sheweth in his first Epistle to the Corinthians. So as none are so perfect in themselves, that they neede not their fellowes, that there might not bee any schisme in the body, but that the members should haue the same care one for another, and that they might both suffer together and reioyce together. Of which sweete society singular benefits redound to the whole body, and to all the particular members of it; for they are linked together by the same Spirit, and in the bond of loue, performing all mutuall offices of Christian charity which may aduance their good. They communicate in the same blessings, and reioycing in one anothers good, haue according to their number their ioyes redoubled; in their troubles and afflictions they also communicate municate in one anothers griefe, every one comforting his fellow, and making the burthen much more light, by compassion and fellow-feeling, and by bearing of it vpon many shoulders. Finally, they stirre vp Gods graces in one another, both by word and good example, helping to remooue impediments that lye in the way; and exhorting one another to cheerefulnesse in their iourney, they hasten their speed towards the Kingdome of heauen.

That we must not rashly rush into all companies, but with good choyce and aduice; and also with due preparation.

Now if any of these benefits bee wanting in societies, or the contrary evils fall out through this conuersation and mutuall conuersing one with another, the fault is not in the things themselves, but in their finfull corruptions, vho peruert them from their first institution, and grossly abuse them to ill ends. For as it is generally obserued, that the more any thing excelleth in excellency, the greater is the difficultie in attaining vnto it; and the greatest benefits in temporall things, are most lyable vnto abuse; so cannot it bee denyed, but that it is much more hard to attaine vnto the right vse of society then of solitarinesse; and lamentable experience teacheth vs, that those who make conscience of their vvayes, and desire to carry themselves in all places as in Gods presence, doe more often forget him and their duty when they are in company, then when they are alone, and fall into many more errors and sinnes, because they haue more occasions, and doe lye open vnto many tentations of the world, if they doe not make the better choyce of their companions, or at least, keepe not a strict watch ouer their words and wayes, that they bee not overtaken. In which regard, it is necessary vnto this Treatise of a godly life, that wee set downe some directions, which may serue to guide vs in our course when we conuerse vvith others. And these either generally respect the duties that concerne society vvith all men, or more specially those vvich belong to our ovvne families. The duties that concerne society vvithall, either respect our preparation before wee goe into company, or bee such as wee ought to performe when wee are come into it. The first generall dutie in our preparation, is, that vvee doe not rashly rush into all companies; but seeing there are amongst men many more bad, by vvhole society vvee may be made much vvorse, then good, by vvhom vvee may in our conuersing vvith them, receiue much fruit and benefit, that therefore before vve resort vnto them, vvee make carefull choyce of such, as may either in all likelihood doe vs good, or at least receiue some good from vs. And because we are often mistaken in our choyce, not knowing the course and conuersation, and much lesse the hearts and affections of men, before we haue had some tryall of them, therefore it is fit that we pray vnto God, that he will direct vs in our choice, and make our meeting and society profitable for the aduancing of his glory and our good. The which is to be vnderstood, when as we are free, and left to the choice of our companions, and not when they are put vpon vs, or we vpon them, by some vrgent necessity, the duties of our calling, some waightry businesse or other vnlooked for accident. Secondly, let vs pray also vnto God, that hee will by his grace and holy Spirit so assist vs, as that our meeting & society may tend to the advancement of his glory, & good one of another. Thirdly, seeing the enemy of our saluation doth in all places lay

so many nets and snares to intrap vs, and especially in our companie, if it be not well chosen, whereby it commeth to passe, that we are often caught at vnawares, and depart away worse then when we came into it; therefore we must resolue beforehand, that wee will arme our selues against all these dangers, and keepe a narrow watch, that wee be not ensnared or overcome of any euill. Fourthly, we must not propound this as the end of our society, to passe away the time with lesse tediousnesse, or to delight our flesh with carnall pleasure, but goe into it with this resolution, that we will doe our best indeuour, either to receiue some good thereby, especially to our soules, by gayning more wisdom and knowledge, or better our desires and affections, or more power and cheerefulness in the seruice of God, and in the performance of all Christian duties; or to doe some good vnto those who consort with vs, by our words, examples and actions, either by keeping them from sinne when they are ready to fall into it, and pulling them (as the Apostle Iude speaketh) like firebrands out of the fire; or instructing them that erre from the truth, in the right way, or performing vnto them some other Christian dutie which may further their salvation, either as a meanes of their conuersion, whereby they may be gained vnto Christ, or for their further building in their most holy faith, the which we are chiefly to intend as an excellent worke: for hee that conuerteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall saue a soule from death, and hide a multitude of sinnes, as the Apostle Iames speaketh. And if wee be not thus resolued before wee come into companie, but rather goe with a purpose to fit our selues to euery bodies humour, and rather to please then to profit either them or our selues (like reedes that will bend with euery breath, or writing tables, which being newly made cleane, are fit to receiue any impression of good or euill) it were much better to refraine companie and to be alone, seeing there is more danger of hurt, then hope of being made ere a whit the better. Finally, wee must be no more carefull in putting off our rags and old clothes, & in making our selues handsome, in our outward habit and attire, before we goe into respected company, then in putting off and casting from vs turbulent passions and disorderly affections; and in decking and adorning our selues with the contrary graces of Gods Spirit. As for example, wee must subdue our pride, which maketh all meetings vnprofitable, by stirring vp heart-burnings and contention amongst men, either about preeminence and precedency, or when they are crossed in their proud humours and conceits; so also our wrath and frowardnesse of nature, which is prouoked with euery small occasion, enuy towards superiours, and dildayne towards our inferiours. And contrariwise, we must put on brotherly loue, which is the best ornament to fit vs for Christian society, as freeing vs from many corruptions which make company vnprofitable, and inabling vs vnto many duties which are necessary vnto it; For charity suffereth long, and is kinde, enuiereth not, vaunteth not it selfe, is not puffed vp, doth not behaue it selfe vnseemely, seeketh not her owne, is not easily prouoked, thinketh no euill, reioyceth not in iniquity, but reioyceth in the truth; beareth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. And with it wee must put on the Spirit of meekenesse and patience, which will enable vs to put vp iniuries, and to pass by offences, and to beare with the infirmities of our brethren, till by some good meanes they may bee amended; the Spirit of humility, which will make vs to deny our selues, our owne wills and obstinate conceits, and to thinke better of the good parts of our brethren then our owne; candidous and ingenuous simplicitie, whereby we are apt to interpret the words and actions of our brethren in the best sence, and euen to season them, if they be somewhat sowre or bitter, with the sweetnesse of our nature and disposition.

And thus we are to prepare our selues before we goe into company, if we desire to profit by it. Now after we are come into it, diuers duties are to be performed of vs; some whereof generally concerne our whole conuersation, and some more specially respect our workes and words. Generally there is required, that our carriage and conuersation bee holy and religious in respect of spirituall things; and ciuill and honest in respect of the things of this life. And first, that chiefly ayming at Gods glory and our owne saluation, wee labour by all meanes to aduance them, and shunne all occasions in our whole conuersation, whereby they may bee anywaies impeached and hindred. Secondly, that wee be innocent and vnblameable in all our words and actions, and giue no ill example, scandall or offence vnto any that keepe companie with vs, but shine before them in our faith and holy profession, and in the light of a godly life, that so they seeing our good workes, may glorifie our heavenly Father, and by our holy example may be gayned vnto Christ. So the Apostle exhorteth vs to abstaine, not onely from all euill, but also from all appearance of it, propounding himselfe an example of it vnto the Thessalonians for their imitation. Ye are witnesses, saith he, and God also, how holily, and iustly, and vnblameably we haue behaued our selues among them that beleene; for whom hee also prayeth, that their whole spirit and body might be preserved blamelesse vnto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. Thirdly, wee must bee iust and righteous in all our conuersation, obseruing truth in our words, and equitie in our actions, giuing vnto euery one their due, and dealing with others as wee would haue them to deale with vs; which is a mayne bond of all good society, and maketh it to hold together with peace and comfort. And thus the Apostle exhorteth the Philippians to imbrace, whatsoeuer things are true, honest, iust, pure, lovely, and of good report, vertuous and praise-worthy; and then the God of peace would dwell with them. And telleth vs, that they, vnto whom the grace of God bringing saluation, hath appeared, are thereby taught not onely to liue holily towards God, and soberly towards themselues, but also righteously towards all that conuerse with them. Fourthly, we must be feruent in loue towards those with whom we consort, which will make vs ready to performe all other duties vnto them, according to that of the Apostle, Owe no man any thing but to loue one another: for he that loueth another, hath fulfilled the Law. Loue worketh no ill to his neighbour, &c. And this loue will vnite vs together, for it is the bond of perfection, or a most perfect bond, which knitteth vs together one with another. Fifthly, As we are of the same company, so wee must labour to be of the same minde, and to minde the same things, and to bee of the same affections, reioycing with them that reioyce, and weeping with them that weepe, weepe, and to walke by the same rule, as the Apostle speaketh, so farre forth as will stand with truth and iustice. For if our bodies be vnited by society, our minds and hearts being disioyned and disioynted, wee shall bee but tyed together like Samsons Foxes by the railes, with firebrands betwene them; and looking with our faces a contrary way, shall hinder one another in all good proceedings. Sixthly, we must not carry our selues proudly towards one another, nor being wise in our owne conceits, mind high things; for this will make vs so stiffe in our opinions, that we will not bow vnto any mans iudgement, but rather breake off all friendship and society about euery trifle, then we will seeme to take the least foyle. But contrariwise, we must be of humble mindes and meeke spirits towards one another, condescending to men euen of low estate, in matters of truth, and things indifferent and of small waight, or dissenting from them in loue, and after a meeke and peaceable manner. Finally, wee must bee patient and peaceable in all our conuersation, and be much more ready to beare, then offer iniuries, according to the Apostles rule; Recompence vnto no man euill for euill. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. Bee not overcome of euill, but overcome euill with good. To which end wee must (as elsewhere hee exhorteth vs) Put on (as the elect of God, holy and beloved) bowels of mercies, kindness, humblenesse of minde, meekenesse, long-suffering; forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man haue a quarrell against any, euen as Christ forgauē vs.

Phil. 2. 15.

Tit. 2. 7, 8.

And this ought to be our conuersation when we come in company with our brethren. But what if by accident, or by our necessary occasions, wee fall into the company of meere worldlings, and such as are irreligious and prophane? Surely we are not to cast off the cloake of our profession, and the badge and cognizance of vertuous and religious behauiour, as though we were ashamed of our Master; for if we thus deny him before men, he also will deny vs before his Father which is in heauen. And much lesse ought we to approue and applaude them in their wicked courses, or because we would not displease them, & indure their reproches & disgracefull taunts for our profession and practice of Religion, countenance their ribaudry, swearing, and profane iests, with our smiles, or ioyne in the same gracelesse courses, running together with them into the same excessse of riot, that they may not speake euill of vs. But so long as we are in their company, we must labor by all meanes to reclaime them, and to gaine them to Christ, out-countenancing their leuity and profanenesse, by our grauity and piety shining in our words, countenance, and conuersation. And first our care must bee, that in all our carriage we be vnblameable, although their malice will not allow vs as commendable. So the Apostle exhorteth vs to doe all good duties without murmuring and disputings, that we may be blamelesse and harmless, the sonnes of God without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and peruerse nation, among whom we should shine as lights in the world. Heerein indeede like the Sunne, which though wicked men may at some times hate, because it discovereth their workes of darkenesse, yet are they so conuincted with its beauty and excellency, that they cannot for shame speake against it. Thus also he exhorteth Titus, to shew himselfe in all things a patterne of good workes; in doctrine shewing vncorruptnesse, grauity, sincerity, sound speech that cannot be condemned, that he who is of the contrary part, may bee ashamed, hauing no euill to say of him. And thus the Apostle Peter perswadeth vs, not onely to sanctifie the Lord in our hearts, but also to make profession of the hope that is in vs, vpon all good occasions; hauing a good conscience, that whereas they who speake euill of vs, as of euill doers, they may bee ashamed that falsly accuse our good conuersation in Christ. Secondly, it is not enough that we be vnblameable in our cōuersation, and without the spots & blemishes of knowne sins, but we must also walke worthy our high calling, and adorne our profession by our practice of holinesse and righteousness, that so wee may not only stop their mouthes, but also (if it be possible) may be meanes of their conuersion, when they shall see the light of our holy conuersation.

 So our Sauour requireth of vs, that our lights should shine so before men, that they, seeing our good workes, may glorifie our Father which is in heauen.
 And the Apostle Peter exhorteth Christians to abstaine from fleshly lusts, and to haue their conuersation honest among the Gentiles, that whereas they spake against them as euill doers, they might, by their good workes which they should behold, glorifie God in the day of visitation. And though wee cannot bring forth alike fruits of piety, when we are in company with them that will not ioyne with vs in holy exercises, yet at least let vs not neglect ciuility and morality, & as the Apostle speaketh, provide things honest in the sight of all men. Thirdly, though they will not be reclaimed, neither by our words nor example, yet we must not for this mingle spleene and choller with our zeale, but carry our selues in all meekenesse and mildnesse, patience and forbearance; and though wee cannot by all our indeuours vnite them vnto vs in the bonds of loue; yet let vs by all good meanes moue them to keepe the peace, and binde them to their good behaviour whilest they are in our company; assuring our selues, that if meekenesse and loue ioyned with strong reasons and good perswasions, will not preuaile with them, then much lesse will rough words and chollericke speeches: for heere the Apostle James saying is fitly verified; The wrath of man doth not accomplish the righteousness of God. And this the Apostle presseth with great vche-mency; If it be possible (saith he) as much as in you lyeth, liue peaceably with all men. But yet we must not be so zealous of peace, that we doe cowardly betray the truth, nor for peace sake forgoe our owne piety; For wee must so follow peace with all men, as that we follow holinesse also, without which no man shall see the Lord; or hereby lose any opportunity of furthering our neighbours saluation. For we must, by the Apostles direction, so follow after the things which make for peace, as that wee by no meanes neglect the things whereby one may edifie another. And therefore if those with whom we conuerse, be not desperate sinners, and more likely to hurt vs for our good will, then to receiue any good to themselves by our reproofes, we may admonish and rebuke them in the spirit of meekenesse and loue for their sinnes, that we may reclaime them, or at least, if they be such as in Christian prudence we may not make so bold with them, yet at least, let vs shew our dislike, when wee see God dishonoured by our countenance or some other signes, that wee doe not become accessaries to their wickednesse.
 Neither let any man account it Christian meekenesse and patience to sit by and say nothing, when Gods holy Name is prophaned, Religion scor-ned,

ned, and the banners of wickednesse displayed, seeing the Angel of the Church of Ephesus, which was so much commended for patience, had also this praise annexed; that he could not beare with them which were euill. And therefore it is no patience, when we let men goe on in their wickednesse, and giue them neither by word nor countenance, any signe of our dislike, but want of zeale and Christian courage, yea dastardly cowardize and too much loue of the world, which maketh vs more carefull to please men then God himselfe. Finally, we must not by such wicked company bee out-countenanced in any good, nor be moued to neglect any Christian duty, which present occasion maketh necessary. For if they be not ashamed to serue the deuill by their professed wickednes, let vs not be ashamed to serue our gracious God, by performing such duties as he requireth of vs; If they with all boldnesse glory in their prophanenesse; let not vs bee bashfull in the profession and practice of religious and pious actions: But as the Apostle Paul gaue thanks, and blessed the creatures in the midst of Infidels, before he would feede on them; so let vs with like boldnesse vse good communication, reade the Scriptures, sing Psalmes, & performe all other Christian duties, notwithstanding that prophane men bee in the company. Seeing thereby we shall keepe a good conscience before God and men, and may, if God giue a blessing to these holy exercises, not onely edifie those who are alike minded with vs, but also gaine them likewise vnto vs, by our good example, who are as yet otherwise disposed. By all which good duties if we preuaile nothing at all, our best course will be, as soone as wee can, to quit our selues of such company, and more carefully afterwards make choyce of better. For consorting with such companions longer then we heede, indangereth vs to be tainted and corrupted with their euill manners: and if we continue with such as we can by no good meanes make better, we are in great hazzard to be made worse, as hereafter we shall more fully shew.

CAP. XXVIII.

Of Christian conferences, which we must vse when we are in company, for our mutuall good.

AND these are the duties which generally concerne our whole conuersation in company. The speciall duties respect either our words and conferences, or our workes and actions; In all our conferences with our brethren wee are to obserue two things. First, that our speech bee gracious. Secondly, that it be wise and prudent. Both which are required by the Apostle; Let your speech (saith he) be alwayes with grace, seasoned with salt, that is, wisely fitted to the time, persons, occasions, and other circumstances, and vttered prudently in due season. Our speech is gracious, when it fauoureth of grace and goodnesse, and appeareth to proceed from the Spirit of God dwelling in vs, as though he vsed our tongues to deliuer by them that which hee suggesteth and inspireth into vs; whereby it becommeth gracious and acceptable in the eares of God and all good men. And vnto this

Of Christian admonition,
and what is required to the right performing of this duty.

this there is required, that it be not onely gracious in it selfe, but also to all that heare vs. In it selfe it is gracious, when as it is either holy and about spirituall and heauenly things, points of diuinity, and religious matters, our saluation it selfe, or the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto it; Gods mercies and blessings multiplied vpon vs, or his iudgements and chastizements inflicted for sinne, and such like; or else when as it is honest and ciuill, & about the things of this life, appertaining to our temporall profit, or our comfort and delight. Our speech is gracious to the hearers, when as it tendeth to their profit, either in respect of their soules, or bodies and states. It is profitable for their soules, when as it is referred to edification, and to the enriching of them with spirituall grace, and the strengthening and inabling them vnto all Christian and holy duties. Vnto which kinde of speech the Apostle exhorteth; Let (saith he) no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good for the use of edifying, that it may minister grace vnto the hearers. And againe, Comfort your selues together, and edifie one another. The which dutie is diuersly performed; first, by instructing those which are ignorant in the knowledge of God and his truth, that so seeing the way of life and saluation, they may walke in it. In which, those especially faile, who like rich misers barrell and hoord vp the treasures of knowledge in their owne braines, but enuying their brethren the vse of it, will neuer communicate it in their conferences, nor let any be the wiser by their speeches that come into their company. Secondly, by informing erroneous iudgements, and reducing them out of their errors into the way of truth. The which, the Apostle Iames commendeth vnto vs as an excellent worke; Brethren (saith he) if any of you doe erre from the truth, and one conuert him; let him know, that he who conuerteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall saue a soule from death, and shall hide a multitude of sinnes. Thirdly, by giuing good counsell vnto those that want it, and prudent aduice how they shall carry themselves in all their courses, so as they may in all particular actions please God, and preserue the peace of a good conscience. Fourthly, by exhorting and pricking those forward whom we see sluggish and negligent, and to slacken their pace in the wayes of godlinesse; according to that of the Apostle; Exhort one another daily, whilst it is called to day, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. Fifthly, by comforting those that want consolation, in respect of their afflictions, temporall or spirituall, inflicted vpon their body, mind, or state. So the Apostle exhorteth vs to comfort the feeble-minded, and to support the weak; And againe, Comfort your selues together, and edifie one another. And the Prophet Esa likewise, Strengthen yee the weak hands, and confirme the feeble knees. The which duty was performed by holy Iob, as Eliphaz testifieth of him, Thou hast instructed many, and thou hast strengthened the weak hands: Thy words haue upholden him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the feeble knees. And is highly commended by the Prophet as a speciall gift of God; The Lord (saith he) hath giuen mee the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speake a word in season to him that is weary.

Sixthly, by admonishing those who are ready to fall, that wee may uphold them, and such as are already falne through ignorance, frailty, and infirmity, that wee may raise them vp againe. And this the Apostle requi-

reth; Brethren (saith he) if any man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meeknesse, considering thy selfe, lest thou also be tempted. Vnto which dutie that it may be well performed, diuers things are required. First, wisdom and knowledge in him that admonisheth. So the Apostle saith of the Romanes, that they were filled with all knowledge, and able to admonish one another. And first we must know, that the thing whereof we admonish our brother, be a sinne, and not either lawfull, or indifferent and rightly vsed of him. In which the Israelites failed, when they sent to admonish the Reubenites about building the Altar, and Eli in admonishing Anna to put away her drunkennesse. Secondly, we must know, that being a sinne, it is indeed committed by our brother, either vpon that sure notice which our selues haue taken, or by the credible testimony of others who are men of credit; and not when wee haue a blinde ieaalousie or vngrounded suspition, nor when we haue heard it from busie-bodies and talebearers, who will not stand vnto any thing they say; vnlesse out of loue and tendernesse of his credit, wee speake of it to this end chiefly, that he may the better cleare himselfe of these false imputations, or that we may take occasion to admonish him if we finde them true. Thirdly, we must haue knowledge and wisdom to doe it after a right manner, with obseruation of all due cautions and circumstances. As first, we must make choyce of a seasonable time, not when our brethren are at their feasts, and desirous to be cheerefull and merry; nor when they are cast downe with afflictions, the which themselves sufficiently admonish, vnlesse we see that they make no vse of them, nor are brought by them to a sight of their sinnes; but rather in their prosperity, when as they thrive in their euill courses. Not in the company of others, if the fault be secret, and not open and scandalous; in which case also Christian wisdom will finde priuate admonition best for many persons, who out of their greatnesse and naturall pride, will burst out into rage and impatiencie, when as in company we take notice of their faults. Especially, we must take heed that we doe not admonish them of their faults, before those vnto whom they desire chiefly to bee approoued, and to maintaine their credit; for this will make them either to deny the fault, or to defend it, or to excuse and extenuate it; or if they can doe none of these, to burst out into choller, as holding themselves to be much disgraced. Neither is admonition seasonable towards others, when they haue begun first to admonish vs, because it will seeme to proceed, not from loue, but from spleene; not from any dislike of their faults, but too much liking of our owne; not out of a friendly liberty to doe them good by reclaiming them from their sinne, but out of impatiencie to beare reproofe, which maketh vs to returne like for like, because we would haue both lye vnder the same guilt; whereas if we take admonition well, and performe the like dutie at another time to our neighbour, it will be imputed to the friendly liberty of loue, which seeketh to reforme the faulty, and not to anger and reuenge, which vpbraideth the like faultinesse to countenance our owne. Secondly, there is required, that we take fit occasions to admonish; as when our neighbours, either by their words and speeches, or their actions and behaviour doe offer vnto vs some fit opportunity; for if it come thus by accident, it findeth deth more easie entrance, whereas if we seeme to come of purpose prepared and armed, it will seeme more harsh to them whom wee admonish, and but cause them to prepare also to make resistance. Or when being sharply taunted for their faults by their enemies, they are vexed and grieved with their reproches, then may wee take fit occasion to giue them admonition for them, that they may not be lyable to such disgraces; for this will seeme to spring out of loue, which seeketh their credit, and will moue them to take it well, when as we of the poyson of other mens raylings and reuilings, doe make an antidote by our friendly admonitions, to preferue them from taking any hurt from them for the time to come. Thirdly, we must be carefull in admonishing others, that we our selues be not guilty of the same faulrs which we task in them, lest they pay vs in our owne coyne, mete vnto vs by the same measure, and bring vs vnder the same condemnation. Yea perhaps we may incurre thereby the suspicion of hypocrites, who tell others of their sinnes to hide our owne, or like subtill thecues, raise a clamour against our neighbours, that wee may the better escape in the Hiew and Cry; or of disliking their person more then their sinne, seeing we nourish the like in our owne bosome. Or if Christian loue moue vs to admonish them in this kinde, because such sinnes beare more sway in them then in vs, being committed by them wilfully and with settled resolution, by vs through frailty, infirmity, and at vnawares, seeing they defend them, and we bewaile them, they cherish and nourish them, we condemne and labour to mortifie them; we may, being our selues faulty in this case, admonish others: but then it is best to preuent their vprauiding by confessing our owne frailty, and by applying our admonition to our selues together with them, as thereby seeking our mutuall reformation. Fourthly, our admonitions must proceed from brotherly loue, the which being a grace hidden in our hearts, wee must make knowne by the fruits of it. To which end we must vse all lenity, meekenesse of spirit, compassion in the sense of the like infirmities in our selues, with milde and gentle speeches, shewing in our hatred of their sinne, the loue of their person. And though the party may discern them, yet if we would doe any good, we may not vse any insulting speeches, contumelious words, scoffes, scornes, or byting iests; and howloeuver in some cases for lesser faults, or when we haue to deale with a froward nature, we may sweeten our admonition, by speaking merrily, and in a pleasant manner, yet wee must take heed that we retaine our grauity, lest it bee turned into a iest, and so lose all its force and efficacy. But especially wee are to take heed that our admonitions doe not appeare to haue risen out of selfe-loue, and respect to our owne particular, but out of our loue of them whom we admonish; for if this be but suspected, it will neuer take any place, because wee seeke not their good, but our owne. And secondly, that they proceed not from anger and choller, which will make it seeme a chiding and brawling, rather then an admonition; and an action of rauing, rather then of loue. In which respect, our admonitions will be the more powerfull, when as they haue no reference to our selues, either of profit or hurt, but rather such as by the faults which we reprove, accrew vnto others. Againe, to shew our loue, we are with the notice which we take of their faults, to acknowledge ledge their good parts, and to giue them due praise for their well-deseruing. Or if their defects will afford no such occasion, wee may intermixe the vertues of their parents or deare friends; both which will sweeten our admonition, and serue like sugar to take away the distaste of their bitternesse. Neither must wee bee alwayes beating vpon one string, nor vse this soueraigne Salve for euery slight scratch; but vpon some vrgent necessitie and waighy occasion, passing by petty matters of small value, as not seeing them, or at least refering them, like little pieces of coyne, till they bee come to a summe. For to bee still admonishing for euery trifle, will make vs seeme curious busie-bodies and harsh censures, to bee voyde of loue, which maketh vs passe by infirmities, and will cause our company to bee tedious and irksome, and our admonitions by their frequencie vnrespected and of no force. Fifthly, if the parties wee admonish bee of stout spirits, and are bold enough to beare it, wee may deale plainely and particularly with them for their sinnes; but if they haue tender foreheads, and are so ingenuously bashfull, that they are apt to bee daunted, and put out of countenance, by our taking notice of their faults; it is Christian wisdom to nourish this modestie and shamesfastenesse, seeing there is no great danger, that such will bee hardened in their sinnes. And to this end, it is good to admonish them of their faults in other mens persons, which are alike knowne vnto them, and to let them see the foulennesse of their vices, when, like vnpartiall beholders, they take a view of them in other subiects. The which course also is sometimes good, when it is propounded by way of Parable in another person, as when wee haue to deale with our superiours (as Nathan with Dauid) or such as will not by plaine and direct dealing bee so easily conuincd of their sinnes. Againe, to cherish ingenuity, and to preserue men from boldnesse and impudency, it is not good in our admonitions to presse our reproofes too farre, but to giue them some little euasion, that they may not turne againe as desperate, and flie in our faces. And therefore wee are sometimes to admit of their excuses and extenuations; yea, sometimes our selues after a charitable manner, to doe it for them, giuing the best interpretation we can, either of the matter or manner of their actions, or their minde in doing them; but in the meane time these extenuations and excuses must bee referred to the person, but not to the sinne it selfe, which must bee mainly beaten downe, euen whilest wee keepe the party from sincking vnder it. Finally, as with our admonitions wee must intermixe louing and kinde speeches; so especially our care must be, that we alwayes make a friendly conclusion; and not let the admonished depart discontented and exasperated, but so winne him by our kinde vsage, that (if it be possible) he may depart, as farre in loue with our persons, as in hatred of his owne sinne; like a Patient cured of some grieuous wounds, who loueth his skilfull and faithfull Chyrurgion, when the cure is perfected, though hee complained of his rough handling him, when hee was searching them to the quicke. But if when wee haue done our best by admonition, wee cannot reclaime our neighbours from their sinnes, but that they still wilfully commit them, and continue in them without repentance; then is it our dutie, with due respect had to our place and calling, and also their persons and condition, freely to rebuke and reprooue them. And this the Lord commandeth as a testimonie of our brotherly loue; Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart; thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sinne vpon him. And our Sauour Christ requireth it as an action that concerneth our selues as well as them, seeing if wee neglect it when wee haue a calling to performe it, wee also are accessary vnto their sinnes. Take heede (saith he) to your selues: if thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him, and if he repent, forgive him. But howsoever here more severity and sharpenesse is to be vsed then in our admonitions, and these old festered sores are to bee handled with a rougher hand, then if they were greene wounds, yet we must take heede, that loue shine through these cloudes of iust anger, that it may appeare to the par-tie reprov'd, that wee intend the cure, and not to hurt the person.

To which end all scolding and brawling, rayling and reuiling speeches are vtterly to bee auoided, which neuer doe good, but worke in them spleene and malice towards them that vse them, rather then any reformation of their faults, or hatred of their sinnes.

And thus we are in cōpany to frame our speeches vpon all occasions, that they may tend to the spirituall edification of our brethren. But though such conference in companie is to bee performed as most excellent, yet may such speeches haue their due place, which concerne morall and ciuill things, about any subiect which may better and improve our knowledge for the service of the Church or common wealth, or mutuall good duties to bee performed towards one another; about the health and wel-fare of our bodies, or our common affaires and busineses which we haue in the world one with another, and such matters as concerne the good of our estates, of which wee may lawfully aduize and take counsell one of another, for the better directing and managing of all our actions and endeouours.
Yea sometime our speeches and conferences may tend to honest delight, and to the mutuall comfort and refreshing of one another, that our spirits being cheered and reuiued, wee may bee the better fitted for duties of an higher nature. For howsoever it be lawfull sometimes to vse speeches tending to our worldly profit and delight, yet let vs carefully take heede, that wee be not (like most men at their meetings) wholly taken vp with them, talking of nothing else but of carnall and earthly things;
but seeing God is the Author and giuer of this excellent faculty of speech, let our tongues bee chiefly imployed (when wee are at our free choyse, and not straightened in our desired liberty by our earthly necessities that presse vpon vs) in such conferences as tend to Gods glory, and the mutuall edification one of another; that so it may appeare that wee are pilgrims on earth, and Citizens of heauen, when as our conuersation is about heauently matters; and that we are free Burgeses of the new Ierusalem, when as we speake the language of Canaan.

Much more let vs carefully auoid in our conferences, the speech of Ashtod, which who so vseth, professing himselfe an Israelite, deserueth to be cursed, and that there were some good Nehemials to smite him with the hand of Iustice, and to plucke off his hayre. As all hurtfull speech, which

which tendeth to Gods dishonour, swearing, blaspheming, cursing, and such as sauoureth of irreligion, profanenesse and Atheisme; or to the destruction of our owne and neighbours soules, for which Christ died; as all euill words which corrupt good manners; all filthy communication and rotten speech, which infecteth and poysoneth the hearers; all scurrility, vsauorie and obscene iests; all scoffes and bitter frumps, scornfull taunts and spitefull iests, impeaching the credit and reputation of our neighbours, which proceede, for the most part, from an affectation of the praise of wit, and so farre bewitch men, that they are ready (as wee say) to lose their friend rather then their iest, and so foolishly to exchange a precious iewell, for a trifling bable. And hereinto we may adde all speeches directly contrary vnto those that tend to edification, as such as tend to the corrupting of the iudgement of our neighbours, and to the leading of them into error, euill counsaile, and all such as discourage them in the waies of Godlinesse. Such as grieue the afflicted spirit, and make him to sinke vnder his burthen; such as incourage men vnto sinne, and countenance those, who are fearefull and bashfull, in wicked courses, or which hinder those that are salne, from rising againe, and turning vnto God by true repentance. And as wee are to auoide in all our conferences these hurtfull and pernicious speeches, so also such as are vaine and vnprofitable, as not attaining vnto our chiefe endes, the glory of God; and our own and our neighbours good; in which notwithstanding the most men spend their time, and as the Psalmist complaineth, speake vanity euery one with his neighbour; thinking themselves sufficiently excused, because they say no hurt. But such forget in the meane time, that the Wise man prayeth against this vanity, that the Apostle doth forbid and condemne it; and that our Sauour Christ at the day of Iudgement will call into account not onely such speeches as are hurtful, but such also as are idle and vnprofitable.

CAP. XXIX.

*Of Christian prudence, which wee ought to vse
in all our conferences.*

And thus we haue spoken of graciousnesse of speech to be vsed in our conferences, and of the contrary corruptions which ought to bee shunned. The next duty required, is, that our speeches bee powdred with the salt of Christian wisdom and prudence, which not onely enableth vs to speake good things, but also to fit these speeches to the persons with whom we conferre, to occasions and opportunities, to the present purpose, vse and necessitie, so as they may be most seasonable, powerfull and effectuell for the furthering of our owne good, and theirs also that beare vs company. And this the Apostle vnderstandeth, when as hee requireth, that our speech should bee alwaies gracious, and seasoned with salt, that wee may know how to answere euery man, for their speciall vse and benefit. This is that fit and seasonable speech which the Wise man compareth to apples of gold, in pictures pictures of silver; and this is, to haue the tongue of the learned, when as wee know how to speake a word in season to him that is weary. And when as wee can fit our speeches to present occasions, and so apply them to euery sort and condition of men, as that they may be behoouefull and beneficiall to them all in their seuerall kinde. As for example, when wee conferre with such as excell vs in grace and piety, wisdom and knowledge, we must, reuerencing Gods graces and greater gifts in them, yeeld vnto them priority of speech, and attentiuely harken vnto those gracious words which proceede out of their mouthes; not spending of our small stocke which cannot enrich them, but laying vp their speeches as good treasures in our hearts, that wee may increase our spirituall store, which wee may afterwards lay out when wee come among those that haue more neede. And vnto this the wise Salomon aduise vs, Bow downe thine care (saith he) and heare the words of the Wise, and apply thine heart vnto my knowledge. For it is a pleasant thing if thou keepe them within thee, they shall withall bee fitted in thy lips. And againe; Hearken vnto me now therefore, O ye children, and attend vnto the words of my mouth. Heare: for I will speake excellent things, and the opening of my lips shall bee right things. And here the Apostle Iames rule is especially to bee obserued; Let euery man be swift to heare, and slow to speake. For the words of the Wise are of great vse and profit, power and efficacie, like goads pricking men forward in the waies of Godlinesse, and like nayles fastening and confirming their hearts in all vertuous courses. In which regard if we interrupt them in their holy and wise speeches, by interposing our vnseasonable and lesse profitable talke, wee shall, by disturbing their discourse, wrong our selues and the rest of the companie; and bee more foolish then the foolish virgins, who did not desire to put out and extinguish the lights of the wise, but that they might share and communicate with them. And therefore when wee come into such companie, let vs thinke that wee are in a rich and plentifull market, wherein wee may store our selues with what we want. In which respect let vs wholly intend to enrich our hearts with all needefull graces, by trading with these rich Marchants who abound in them; and labour by communicating with them in these holy conferences, to increase our knowledge, strengthen our faith, confirme our affiance, nourish our hopes, mortifie our corruptions, and to bee more and more enabled to new obedience and holinesse of life. On the other side, when we are in the company of those which are weake and inferiour vnto vs in knowledge and other of Gods graces, wee must bee as ready to speake vnto their instruction and edification, as to heare those which are superiour vnto vs. And as those who are of meane estate, may lawfully desire and receiue gifts from the rich, that they may impart them vnto those who are poorer then themselves, so must wee also doe in our spirituall trading one with another. Which wee neede not grudge to doe, seeing wee shall not lose by their gaine, but mutually thrive together, not much lesse increasing our owne knowledge and other graces, by teaching and communicating them, then they by learning and receiuing; these spirituall gifts herein resembling the Widdowes Cruze of Oyle which filled in emptying, and when much was taken out of it for the reliefe of the whole family, afforded no lesse store store the next meale, or like the milke in the mothers brest, which if it be sucked by the child, continueth and increaseth, but if it be not drawne, soone faileth and dryeth vp. Neither must wee in this case bee so proud and lofty in our own conceits, as to scorne or refuse conference with those who are not equall with vs in gifts, but as the Apostle exhorteth, wee must condescend vnto men of low estate, & stoop vnto the vnderstanding of the meaneest, thinking it as necessary an office in Gods family, to put milke into the mouthes of little babes, as to set stronger meate before those that are able to sit at the table with vs and feede themselues. Vnto the performance of which dutie, Christian wisdome and discretion is very necessary, to giue vnto euery one a fit portion as they are able to beare, and not to glut and ouercloy weake stomacks with these spiritual dainties, till, like the Israelites Quails, they come out of their nostrils. For if they surfet through satiety, and bee crammed till it bee ready to come vp againe, they shall for the present offend God thereby, and loath this Spirituall food for the time to come. And therefore when wee meete with weakelings, let vs haue respect vnto them, and not so much consider what we could willingly giue, as what thier weake stomackes are able to digest; intermixing (as it were sawces to their meate) ciuill, morall and pleasant speeches tending to their profit or delight, that thereby, their appetite being quickned, they may feede vpon more solid and wholesome nourishment with lesse satiety.

Rom. 12. 16.

How we must behaue our selues when we conferre with ciuill worldlings,

Again, if those with whom wee conferre are but meere worldlings, wee must wisely consider whether they bee morally ciuill, or openly prophane and desperately wicked. If they be of the former sort, we must cherish those common gifts and graces of the Spirit, which we obserue in them, yet so, as we doe our best to worke them out of a Pharisaicall conceit of them, as though they needed nomore to assure them of their saluation. To which purpose we are to take all good occasions to shew their insufficiencie, that being beaten off from this pernicious opinion, they may denie themselves vtterly, and all their owne righteousness in the worke of their iustification and saluation, and may flie vnto Christ by faith, who is onely able and all sufficient to effect them. With which we must ioyne all other good meanes, which opportunity shall offer vnto vs for the gayning of them to Christ, and making of them truly religious. And to this end wee must heedfully watch for all good occasions, which either their words or actions shall offer vnto vs, of speaking something which may bee for the vse of edifying; liking and approving any thing which is well said or done by them (as our Saviour dealt with the young man that answered him discreetly) shewing that they are not farre from the Kingdome of God; and as Paul with King Agrippa, who watched and tooke hold vpon euery word which he spake, to draw him to Christianity. Yea when none are offered by them of speaking any good, wee must seeke our occasions our selues, making choysse of such as we thinke will be most plausible, and likely to finde entertainment, as some workes, mercies, or Iudgements of God, which are fresh in memorie. And if the companie be such, as that wee cannot directly propound vnto them such sauourie discourse, let vs vse our best art and policie to scrow and winde it in by degrees,

Mat. 23. 29.

grees and by little and little; endenoring to drive in our wedges into these knottie pieces with many blowes and diuers breathings and intermissions, when as we are not able to doe it once. Or if we cannot preuaile thus farre, nor draw them to ioyne with vs in any Christian conference, yet at least let vs ioyne with them in their speeches and discourses, which are most ciuill and morally honest, that if wee can doe them no further good, yet at least wee may hereby preuent rotten, filthy, and vnfauoury speech, and so preferue our own eares from being polluted, and our hearts from being grieued with such ribauldry and corrupt communication, as is often vented in such societies.

Phil. 2. 15.

But if our company into which we are come, either by accident or some vrgent occasion, bee notoriously prophane and wicked, who would but make a scoffe at any speech which sauoureth of Religion; our Sauious hath giuen vs this rule for our direction, that we must not cast holy things before dogges, nor pearles before swine, lest they trample them vnder their feet, and turning againe, all to rent vs. Vnto which the Wise man hath adioyned another, that wee must get our selues out of such company as soone as we can: Goe (saith hee) from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceiuest not in him the lips of knowledge. In the meane time, though wee haue some sociery with them, in respect of our persons, yet let vs be carefull that wee haue no fellowship with their vnfruitfull works of darkenesse, by too much familiarity, applauding their speeches, and blaunching over their vices and faults; but if wee cannot without danger take liberty of reproofing them by direct words, yet let vs doe it by shewing dislike, either by our silence or by our countenance. At least let vs giue them a reall reproofe by our contrary example, being (as the Apostle speaketh) blamelesse and harmelesse, the sonnes of God without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and peruerse nation, and shining among them as lights in the world. But if they be so peaceable, that we may conceiue any hope of their patience, and that they will hearken vnto any good speech, louing admonition, or gentle reproofe, we must not neglect it, handling these festred sores with a soft hand, that so they may more quietly indure to haue afterwards salues applied which shalbe fit for their curing. Neither will it stand with Christian charity to neglect any meanes, when there is the least hope of doing the good, nor with Christian wisdom to do it after a rough and boystrous manner, proudly and imperiously, with sharpe rebukes and bitter reproofes, which like strong medicines in a weake stomacke and clogged with corrupt humours, will not stay with them, but will presently be cast vp againe, before they haue had any time to work, and so do them no good for their spirituall cure. But we must vse first prepartiuues and gentle purges, as they are able to beare: as louing insinuations, and mild admonitions, which must alwaies fauour more of the strength of argument and reason, then of choller or any other turbulent passion. And though when wee haue done all the good wee can, wee doe not presently see any fruit of our labours, yet must wee not bee discouraged, but patiently leaue the successe vnto God, and craue his blessing vpon our indeuours, knowing that the best seede commeth not vp as soone as it is sowne; and the physicke which cureth the disease, doth not as soone as it is taken, giue any euidence of the patients recovery, yea oftentimes maketh him much more sicke, whilst it is in working; both to the iudgement of others, and in his owne feeling and apprehension. Yea, though they cast vp this spirituall Physicke presently after it is taken, yet may it doe them some good, seeing some hurtfull humours may be raised with it, as some cold flegme of sluggish sloth and carelesse security, and some hot choller, which so imbittered their stomackes, that they had no appetite to any wholesome nourishment; and something also may remaine behind, which will worke vpon them when we least thinke of it.

And these are the duties which are to bee obserued in our society and conuersation one with another, in respect of our speeches and conferences. The which in these dayes, are all for the most part lamentably neglected, to the great dishonour of God, and our owne exceeding hindrance in our Christian progresse. And contrariwise, as wee finde by daily and wofull experience, all our time at our meetings, is wholly spent about earthly trifles, and things of no value. Of which neglect of the one, and too much vse of the other, there are diuers causes. As first, the malice and subtilty of the deuill, who knowing how much religious conferences doe weaken his kingdome, and build vs vp in all spirituall graces, and how much they strengthen vs vnto all Christian duties, doth vse all his Art and skill to hinder and interrupt them, by putting into mens minds matters of no vse and profit, earthly vanities, and things vterly impertinent to our persons, states, and callings. Or if we will needs talke of Religion, he is ready to propound vnto vs by some of his instruments, captious questions, or wrangling controuersies about trifles of no value, which tend not to the vse of edifying, but to cause heart-burning, and alienation of affections, strife, and contention; that so for the present he may keepe out all profitable conferences, about sanctification and the maine points of Christian Religion, and at length may breake off all such meetings, when as men finde by experience, that little or no good commeth of them. And with him ioyneth the world and worldly men to hinder these conferences; not onely by offering earthly things vnto vs, for the subiect of our speech, but also by interrupting vs, when wee haue entred into any good conference, by speaking of worldly matters, that so they may diuert our speech from going on in any Christian discourse. Vnto both which our enemies, our corrupt flesh is ready to betray vs, which is soone weary of spirituall and heavenly things, because it findeth no taste or saour in them, and is neuer satisfied in thinking and speaking of things worldly, carnall, and sensuall, as best relishing to our corrupt and fleshly appetite. A second cause is, because we are not mortified in our loue to the world, nor haue our hearts and affections weaned from it. For if they, like good instruments, were well in tune, they would vtter by our tongues heavenly harmony; but doing as they doe vpon worldly vanities, it is no maruaile, if out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, and if the chiefe fountaine being defiled, there issue from it the polluted streames of vnprofitable discourses. A third cause, is our too little loue of spirituall & heavenly things; for if our hearts were set vpon them, as our chiefe treasure, we would take delight to be still talking of them. If they were our chiefe comforts and cordials to cheare our hearts, so as they could with delight exercise themselves (with David) in meditating on them day and night; then would they also be sweeter to our mouthes, then the honey or the honey-combe. Neither would our tongues be so vnready and barren of words, when we come to speake of holy things, if our hearts and affections were set vpon them; for as the Diuine Philosopher among the Heathens obserued, Loue maketh euen those which are rude of speech eloquent, when they speake of the things beloued. Lastly, our great ignorance of holy and heauenly matters, ioyned with a pernicious feare and shame, left by our speech wee should discouer it to our disgrace, is one speciall cause which hindreth these conferences. For such is the pride of mens hearts, and their small esteeme of these spirituall treasures, that they had rather remaine penurious, then discouer their pouerty; and empty of all grace, by neglecting the meanes whereby they might bee replenished, then that men should take any notice of their emptinesse; to hide their wounds, rather then to lay them open that they might bee cured; and like foolish and beggerly Shop-keepers, they content themselves with a vaine shew, and with painted papers stuffed with straw or rags, rather then they will vse any spirituall trading with others, or lose the name and opinion of wealthy men, by taking vp such wares as they want.

§. Sect. 5.
That Christian and religious conferences are exceeding profitable.

But that wee may breake thorow all these difficulties, and remoouing these causes of hindrance, bring these neglected holy conferences into more vse, let vs consider that they are exceeding profitable, first, for the increasing of our knowledge in spirituall and heauenly things, when wee bring all wee know (as it were) to a common stocke, out of which every one may take that which best fitteth him for his particular vse, and supply his defects out of others abundance, they in the meane time hauing neuer the lesse. And as it is a singular benefit vnto every one of any Trade or Mystery, when they haue their common Halls where they may meete together, and conferre of the best courses for the managing of their affaires, seeing it doth not onely much improoue their skill, but also further them greatly in all good proceedings; so doth it exceedingly aduantage vs in our spirituall trading, both for the increasing of our knowledge, and furthering of our practice, when as wee often meete together, and conferre of those things that belong to our Christian profession. For it doth not onely improoue and better our iudgements, by communicating with others in all that they know, but also inflame our hearts and affections with the loue of spirituall things, when as we stirre vp Gods graces mutually in one another, and like coales which are heaped vp together, not onely preserve the heate of the loue, and zeale which is kindled in vs, and would coole and die if wee were scattered from one another, but also inflame those which are next vnto vs with our heate, which being set on fire, will also kindle those who are neere vnto them. In which regard, that of the Wise man is truly verified; The lips of the righteous feede many; but fooles (who refuse all communion and fellowship with them) die and perishe for want of wisdom. And as it is a singular meanes to inlighten our minds with the knowledge of the truth, and to inflame our hearts with the loue of it; so also to make vse of all wee know and affect by our holy practice, when

Pro. 10. 21.

when as by our mutuall exhortations, we incourage and stirre vp one another vnto new obedience, and to performe all good duties of a Christian life, and helpe both our selues and others, with such good counsels and directions, which being obserued, will make the wayes of holinesse and righteousness easie, familiar, and pleasant vnto vs. Adde heereunto the great necessity of these religious conferences, and of what great moment the use or neglect of them is for our saluation or damnation. Neither are wee with the common sort to esteeme words as winde, or if we doe; such a winde as will bring great profit, or hurt; either much furthering vs towards the Hauen of happinesse, or like a tempestuous storme, blowing vs vpon the rockes of perdition. For the Wise man saith, A mans belly shall be satisfied with the fruit of his mouth, and with the increase of his lips shall hee be filled; Death and life are in the power of the tongue, and they that love it, shall eate the fruit thereof. And as he expoundeth himselfe in another place; A man shall eate good by the fruit of his mouth, namely, if his tongue vttereth good things, but the soule of the transgressours shall eate violence. And our Saviour hath taught vs, that we shall be called to account for euery idle word at the day of Iudgement, and that by our words we shall be iustified, and by our words we shall be condemned. Finally, let vs remember how faithfull in this kind the wicked are in the devils seruice, being neuer weary in vttering such speeches as are vaine and vnprofitable, or hurtfull and pernicious; and let this make vs ashamed of our negligence, if we seldome admit such holy conferences as tend to Gods glory, whom we haue found so gracious and beautifull a Master, or being entred into them, doe waxe weary, and soone giue them ouer, vpon euery slight occasion, for want of loue and zeale to his seruice. Yea, let vs consider with what pleasure and delight our selues haue beene taken vp in the dayes of our ignorance, with idle and hurtfull communication, and let this make vs to redeeme our lost time, by being diligent and frequent in good conferences; and seeing wicked men are, and we were, not ashamed to spend much time, in speaking to Gods dishonour, and our owne and our neighbours hurt; let it now bee a shame vnto vs to bee backward and bashfull, slacke and meale-mouthed, to speake freely vnto his praise, or to omit any good occasion of discourse, which may further the saluation of our selues or our brethren.

CAP. XXX.

Of those duties which concerne our workes and actions one with another, both out of contracts, and in our buying and selling.

AND thus much concerning those duties which are to be performed in our society and conuersation, respecting our speeches and conferences. Now we are to speake of those which concerne our workes and actions. And these either respect our simple and ordinary dealings out of contract, or those which are to bee obserued in contracts and bargaines one with another. Concerning the former, I shall not neede to say much more then I haue written

§. Sect. i.

That we must labour both to do and receiue all the good we can, in our dealings with others.

written before of those duties, which are generally to be performed in our whole conuersation and society with our neighbours. Only let vs obserue this principall rule, that when wee come in any company with our brethren, wee indeuour by all good meanes, both to receiue, and doe all the good wee can vnto our selues and them, improouing our society for the best aduantage to all parties. And first for our selues, we must not idly and vainely spend our time, when we are in company, but labour as much as in vs lyeth, to reape what fruit and benefit we can by it, setting our selues to listen vnto, and lay vp for our vse the good speeches, instructions, counsels, exhortations, admonitions or reproofes, which we shall heare from any, and those especially which are superiour vnto vs in Gods gifts and graces; as also to take notice of those good examples of piety or Iustice, faith, affiance in God, humility, meekenesse, patience, and such other vertues, that they may serue as patternes for our imitation; according to that of the Apostle; Brethren, be followers together of mee, and marke them which walke so as ye haue vs for an example; and elswhere hee exhorteth the Hebrewes to follow the faith of those who were set over them, and had spoken vnto them the Word of God. But because such rules through humane frailty doe sometime faile, we are not hand ouer head to conforme our selues to such ensamples, but in any doubtfull case to bring them to the maine Standard, the Word of God, and to consider, if they agree or swarue from it; and to our chiefe Patterne and Precedent Iesus Christ, to see how their example agrees with his; seeing the Apostle, though excellently graced, would not propound himselfe as an absolute patterne to be followed in all things; but only so farre soorth as he was a follower of Christ.

And as we must labour when we are in company to receiue, so also to doe what good we can vnto those who associate vs. Especially, wee must indeuour to take and seeke all good occasions and opportunities, of speaking or doing any thing which may further their saluation, and to vse all good meanes, both to gaine them vnto Christ, if we see no signes of their conuersion; or to build them vp in him, to enrich them with all spirituall graces, and to confirme and strengthen them vnto all Christian duties, if being conuerted, they belong to the same household of faith. Of the former, we haue the Apostle Paul a worthy example for our imitation, who though (as he professeth) he were free from all men, yet he made himselfe seruant vnto all, that he might gaine the more. To the Iewes hee became a Iew, that hee might gaine the Iewes (that is, as he expoundeth himselfe in the next words) to them that were vnder the Law, as vnder the Law, that hee might gaine them that were vnder the Law; to them which were without Law, as without Law (though hee were not without Law to God, but vnder the Law to Christ) that hee might gaine them that were without Law. To the weake hee became as weake, that hee might gaine the weake; and in a word, made himselfe all things to all men, that he might by all meanes saue some. And in the next Chapter he saith, that he indeuoured to please all men in all things, not seeking his owne profit, but the profit of many, that they might be saued. In respect of our brethren, which are already conuerted, we must, when we keepe them company, performe all Christian duties which may enrich, or confirme and strengthen in them all the gifts and graces of Gods holy Spirit. To which end, we must obserue and watch ouer one another, not as curious busie-bodies, to intermeddle with their affaires, which belong not vnto vs, or to spie out their infirmities, that wee may blaze them abroad to others; but seeing their weaknesses, that we may helpe and support them and their wants, that we may vse all good meanes to supply them, and in the meane time, to couer them vnder the vaile of charity. And finally, that we may prouoke and stirre vp one another, to the imbracing of all holy vertues, and the practising of all Christian duties, according to that of the Apostle, Let vs consider one another, to prouoke vnto loue and good workes.

Ch. 21. 8.

In our contracts and bargaines, whereby we alienate or exchange the things which of right appertaine vnto vs vpon some equall and honest conditions, diuers duties are to bee obserued of all Christians, who haue trading and dealings one with another, some whereof are generall to all contracts, and some more specially respect selling and buying. In all our contracts and dealings, there is generally required, that we carry and behaue our selues simply and vprightly, honestly, and with a good conscience, as in the sight and presence of God, who seeth not onely our outward actions and dealings, but also the inward thoughts of our hearts, and our most secret and hidden intentions, according to that of the Apostle, We trust we haue a good conscience in all things, willing to liue honestly. And contrariwise in all our contracts, we must carefully shunne and auoyd all guile and deceit, all hollow and double dealing, tending to the vndermining and circumventing of our neighbours. So the Apostle exhorreth, that no man goe beyond or defraud his brother in any matter, because the Lord is the auenger of all such; for as the Psalmist saith, he abhorreth the deceitfull and bloodthirstie man. More especially we must in all our dealings obserue truth in all our words, and not onely speake it from our lips, but also from our hearts, hating & auoyding all subtil equiuocations, and mentall referuations, as tending to circumuent and deceiue those with whom we deale. Secondly, fidelity in all our promises, performing them, although it be to our owne hindrance, vnlesse he to whom they are made doth release vs of them. Thirdly, iustice in all our actions, giuing euery man his due, and dealing with others, as we would haue them to deale with vs. Fourthly, charity and compassion in remitting our right in whole or in part, when as the bargain proueth hard, and to the great losse and hinderance of our poore neighbours, who are not able to beare it. And lastly, patience and contentednesse, when we sustaine any damage and detriment, or be otherwise crossed or ouer-reached in any of our contracts, either purposely by those with whom we deale, or by some casualty or accident which could not bee foreseene. Contrariwise in all our contracts we must auoyd lying, and that which is equall vnto it, equiuocation; For the getting of treasures by a lying tongue, is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seeke death. And againe, Wealth gotten by vanity, shall be diminished: but he that gathereth by labour, shall increase; yea though a man could by lying, get the whole world, what would this profit him, seeing thereby hee shall lose his owne soule? For liars shall not onely be excluded out of the Kingdome of heauen, but also haue their portion in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. With like care wee must auoid in our dealings all perfidiousnesse

PRO. 10. 2.

ness and breach of promise, although it tend to our great advantage, seeing God will not bless goods gotten by breach of covenants, and though we should thrive by such courses, our worldly gain will in no sort recompence our spirituall losse. We must shun also all kinde of vniustice in our contracts, seeing though it bring in present gain, yet no profit in the end; For the treasures of wickednesse profit nothing; but righteousness deliuereth from death. Likewise we must auoyd all vncharitableness, raising our gain out of our neighbours losse, but as fellow-members of the same body, we must aduance, as much as in vs lieth, our mutuall profit, and in some equality thrive together. Finally, we must not, through impatiency, murmure and repine, fret and fume, when wee meete with any crosses or losses in our contracts, but be content sometime to lose as well as gain; and to this end we must not haue our eyes too much fastened vpon secondary causes and inferiour meanes, which perhaps are exceeding crosse and faulty, but lift them aboue the earth, and fixe them vpon the most wise prouidence of our good and gracious God, who gouerneth all things which seeme most contingent and casuall, and so disposeth of them, as is most for his owne glory, and the spirituall good and euerlasting saluation of all those that loue and depend vpon him.

§. Sect. 4.
That we must sell only things
saleable.

Amos 2. 6.
Esa. 5. 23.
Esa. 1. 23.

More especially, there are diuers duties required of vs in our buying and selling. As first, that the seller be the true and lawfull owner of that hee selleth, or his deputy appointed by him; and that the buyer doe not for priuate gain buy any thing from any man, whom he thinketh not to haue any right to sell it. In which respect, they grievously offend, who buy or sell stolne goods if they know of it, and they who sacrilegiously sell and buy the liuings of the Church, and such things as are freely consecrated to the seruice of God. Secondly, the seller ought to sell, and the buyer to buy such things onely as are vendible, and may iustly bee bought and sold. In which regard, they offend, who sell or buy the gifts of the Spirit, as Simon Magus, or holy things which belong to God; and those who sell and buy Iustice or iniustice by bribery giuen or taken, either to fill their owne purposes, or to peruert right. They also who sell and buy truth and lyes, as false witnesses, and they that hire them to giue false testimony. But they most of all, who for corruptible things sell their soules vnto sinne, as Achab did, which Christ redeemed with his most precious blood. Thirdly, wee ought to sell onely such things as are fit for sale, or knowing them to bee otherwise, to acquaint the buyer with it, and so to pitch a lower price, according to their lesser value. Otherwise wee are not to sell things falsified in respect of their substance, and such as are mixt and corrupt, for such as are pure and good, which is a common fault among Merchants and Tradesmen in these dayes, who for their greater gain adulterate their wares, and iumble and intermingle things of a different degree in goodness, selling them all at the best rates. Fourthly, we are bound to sell those things only which are some way profitable for the Church and Commonwealth, either for necessary vse, or for ornament and delight. Neither ought wee to benefit our selues by such things as are vnprofitable vnto others, and much lesse by such as are in their owne nature hurtfull and pernicious, vncharitably raising our owne gain out of our neighbours losse.

losse. As those that sell popish pardons, and bookes, to ignorant people, who are likely to be seduced by them, such also as further them in their superstition and idolatrie, obscene pictures and bookes full of ribaldry and all prophanenesse, fit for nothing but to poison and corrupt such as see and reade them.

Fifthly, we ought in selling and buying, to set our wares at an equall price; the best rule whereof for the most part is the ordinarie price of the market, which valueth things not simply in their owne worth, but with consideration of all circumstances, as scarcity, plenty, time and place; and not according to the price wee gaue lesse or more, nor onely respecting whether we gayne much or little, whether we get nothing or lose thereby. For as of necessity, through the change of prices, we must sometimes lose, so it is alike necessary, that we should gain at another time, to repaire these losses, and maintaine our state. And as wee must not, when wee haue an ill bargain, exceede the market, and so transerre our losse from our selues vpon our neighbour, but patiently beare our owne crosse as imposed of God, till hee afford vs lawfull meanes to free vs of it; so when wee haue made a good bargain in respect of the difference of places or times, wee may not, vnlesse wee would be vncharitable vnto our selues, put off our gain to others, but receiue it thankfully as the blessing of God vpon our labours. But here wee must take heede, first, that wee be not ouer strict in this kinde, seeking only our owne gain and aduantage, without respect to the Common wealth, nor vncharitable towards the poore, in ioyning with others to keepe vp things in times of scarcity at the highest prices. But when wee can afford it, wee ought to abate something, and by our example to bring downe others to reasonable rates, all circumstances being considered, that neither the Common wealth generally, nor the poore in particular receiue by our being iust ouer-much, any hurt or damage. Secondly, we must take heede that wee vse no vniust or vncharitable courses to rayse the markets, and the prices of commodities aboue their value; as to forestall the market, and to buy vp the things which are brought, at low rates, with a purpose to set them vp, and sell them dearer soone after in the same place. Or to ingrosse commodities which are offred to common sale, that hauing them all in our hands, wee may sell them at our owne rates. In which respect they chiefly offend, who, vpon no lawfull and necessary cause, doe abuse authority to countenance their Monopolies (I neede not to expound it, seeing custome hath made this Greeke word familiar English) and get the sale of seuerall commodities appropriated vnto themselves, so as none may sell them but by benefit of their priuiledge, that so they may value them aboue their worth, and enrich themselves with the losse and damage of the Common wealth. Neither must we (as it is the vsual fault of Companies and Corporations) combine our selues together to sell our wares at a certaine rate; nor keepe in our commodities in time of plenty, to this end that we may cause a dearth; seeing by defrauding the people of Gods blessings, we shall bee exposed to their curse, as the Wise man teacheth vs. And as the seller ought not to vent his wares aboue their worth; so neither should the buyer desire to haue them vnder, if at least he know that the seller cannot so afford them; especially when he hath to deal with the poore, whose necessities oftentimes constrain them to take, not what their wares are worth, but what they can get for them. In which respect, many shopkeepers in Cities and townes grievously offend, which take aduantage of their pouertie who worke for them, shamefully to oppresse them, forcing them to sell their teares, sighes and groanes with their wares, because wanting bread to put into their own and their childrens mouthes, they will not buy them off their hands, not because they are vnwilling to haue them, but because by these refusals they would beate them downe to vile prices, and such rates, that their curious skill and painefull labour in their art and trade, will scarce yeeld them so much as will, after the homelyest manner, feede & cloath them: whilst the other, who come further behinde them in art, skill and profitableness to the Common wealth then they, goe before them in stocke and riches, selling with their wares their winde and words, and doubling their price with their lies and oathes, abound in all superfluous excesse, and yet exceedingly grow in wealth.

§. Sect. 6.
That in buying and selling all fraud and deceit must be auoided.

Lastly, in respect of the manner of selling and buying, wee ought to vse honest simplicity, and carefully to auoid all fraud and deceit. In which respect, men grievously offend in these dayes, who haue & vse a thousand deuices to circumuent and defraud their neighbours. As first, by blinding their mindes with their partiall and false praises of their wares, and their eyes with false and deceitfull lights. By concealing the knowne faults of their wares, and yet coueting to get the highest prices, as if they were faultlesse. By asking for them a double price to their value, and taking it also, if the party be so simple to giue it. By abusing their acquaintance and customers vnder colour of loue and friendship, and selling their wares dearer vnto them, then a meere stranger could buy them. By telling vntruths, either about the worth of their commodities, or the price which they cost them, or the money that they haue beene offered, or that which they will take, and not vnder, and (that which is worse, though this bee too too bad among Christians) by countenancing and confirming their lyes with intermingled oathes. Vnto these, innumerable other faults might bee added, common in these dayes amongst Trademen, which I will onely name, because it is not my purpose to rake vp these filthy puddles to the bottome, but onely to point at the grossest of them with my finger as I passed by, that the conscionable Christian, who desireth to please God in all his courses, may shunne and auoyd them. As first, they offend in their manner of selling, who sell one thing for another, and when they meete with those, who being simple and ignorant, are apt to bee abused, doe thus deceiue them both in the colours and stufes. So they also, who sell that which is mixt, for that which is pure; that which is sophisticate and naught, for that which is perfect and good; that which is bad, for the middle sort; and that which is meane and indifferent, for the best. They in like manner who set false glosses on their wares, by gumming, starching, pressing, and burning, and so to cause them to seeme much better then they are, make them much worse for vse. Finally, they who vse false waights and measures, buying by a greater, and selling by a lesser; and such also as by their Art and skill increase the waight waight and measure of their wares in shew, about that which they are in truth; as by false fingring, stretching, ouer-measuring, deceitfull balancing; making by their nimble trickes, the equall Scales to forget and lose their indifferency, and inclining on their side, to become necessary to their fraud. The buyer also ought no lesse carefully and conscionably to obserue truth and iustice in cheapning and buying his commodities then the seller, both offering an equall price to the worth of the wares according to his iudgement, and truely paying it when they are agreed. In which respect they offend, who, to bring downe the price vnder the true value, dispraise and disgrace the wares, before they haue bought them, which after they are gone, they are ready to commend as a good penny-worth; The which Salomon obserued as a fault in his times: It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer, and when hee is gone away, then hee boasteth of his bargain. So those who offer much vnder that iust value of the wares, which their owne iudgement doth set vpon them, whereby the seller is driven to aske much aboue, that so hee falling as the other riseth, (like the Scales, which interchangeably tossing vp and downe, stand at last in their due equipoyse) hee may bring the price to some indifferencie; all which vaine-spent time and labour might well haue beene saued, many idle words spared, and diuers abuses shunned and auoyded, if on both sides they had vsed Christian simplicitie. Finally, the buyer much offendeth, vhen hauing agreed vpon the price, and comming to pay it, hee giueth not vnto the seller his full due, but either wittingly misreckoneth him in the summe, or tendreth vnto him, in stead of currant and lawfull money, slippes, and base coyne, vvaished, clipped, and light gold, or pieces of lesse value, oftentimes for those of greater, vvhich through ouer-sight, by reason of their likenesse, may very easily bee mistaken the one for the other.

Pro. 20. 14.

All which faults among buyers and sellers, which so intolerably raigne in these times, would easily bee auoyded; if, as wee professe, wee would preferre Iustice and charity before deceit and selfe-loue, and accordingly would labour to mortifie the one as hurtfull and pernicious, and magnifie the other as most excellent and profitable, both for the setting forth of Gods glory, and the furthering and assuring of our owne saluation. If wee would but consider that God is present, and beholdeth all our dealings, and will one day, as a righteous Iudge, call them to account, to reward them if they bee vpriht and iust, or to punish them, if they bee wicked and deceitfull. If finally, when wee come to summe vp our gettings in our Trades at the yeeres end, wee would put all our gaines in the one Scale, and our soules which wee haue hazzarded to euerlasting losse, by our vniust, vntrue, and deceitfull dealing, into the other, and consider how light they bee in comparison of it, which, as our Sauour hath taught vs, cannot bee counterpoysed by the waight and worth of the whole world. And so much concerning our dealings with one another in contracts and bargaynes; the which I thought necessary to bee in some brieft manner handled in this Treatise, because all Christians almost are often employed in them, and many, whose callings consist in trading, doe spend the most part of their liues in it: As also, because the corruptions of the times are so many and grievous, so backed with the multitude, and countenanced with custome, that they are scarce thought to bee any sinnes, inso much as many, which otherwise feare God, are often ouertaken with them, either through ignorance, walking according to the common course, for want of better direction; or being compelled (as they suppose) with vrgent necessity to doe as others doe; because there being so few which doe as they should, and such multitudes which vse fraud and deceit; if they should in their trading and dealings vse truth and iustice, simplicitie and honest plainenesse, they should (as the Prophet complaineth of his times) become a prey vnto others, and bee exposed to the common spoile. The which danger would in great part bee auoyded, if men could liue by faith, and cast themselues vpon Gods providence in the vse of lawfull meanes, seeing hee neuer faileth them that trust in him. And also, if there were a generall reformation of these abuses and corruptions, among them that sincerely professe Religion, and truely feare God; which might easily be done without any danger to their estates; seeing what is wanting in ill gotten gains, would bee abundantly supplied by the greatnesse of their custome; for who that is wise, would goe ordinarily to others, where hee is likely to be deceiued, when as hee may trade with them from whom he may assuredly expect honest and plaine dealing? And so much concerning those duties of Christian conuersation, which are to bee obserued in all companies and societies.

CAP. XXXI.

That Governours of families ought to traine vp those which are vnder their charge in the duties of godlinesse.

§. Sect. I.

That it is not enough for governours to be themselves religious, but they must also traine vp those which are vnder their government, in the knowledge and practice of Religion.

He next duties belonging vnto a godly life, are such as a Christian ought to performe in his family, all which may generally bee referred to this mayne duty, that hee not onely duly and diligently serue God himselfe, but also teach those who are vnder his charge to ioyne with him, and not onely by instruction shew them the right way, but also by wise and religious government, guiding and training them vp in the feare of the Lord, hee must cause them to accompany him, and to put in practice the holy duties of Gods seruice, in which he hath informed them. Neither is it sufficient that governours of families be good Christians in their owne particular and personall carriage, but according to that place wherein God hath set them, and that vocation whereunto they are called, they ought to be Christian governours, and not onely fight the Lords battels as common Souldiers, but as wise and valiant Captaines, they must leade on those which are vnder their charge, and see that they in their places performe good seruice to our grand Emperour and chiefe Commander the Lord of Hosts, as well as they. And as Stewards and Bayliffes vnder our great Lord and Master, they must appoint their children and seruants vnto their taske, task, and see also that they performe it. And thus Ioshuah, as a governour of the Common-wealth, instructed the whole congregation in the Law of God, with the women, little ones, and the strangers that were comersant amongst them: And as a master of a family, vndertaketh not onely for himselfe, but also for his whole household, that hee with them would serue the Lord. And as Dauids care extended to the wise and religious gouernement of the whole Common-wealth, as their King and Soueraigne, so he thought these high and waightry imployments no priuiledge to exempt him, from performing his speciall duty, as a Master in the well ordering of his family. And therefore he professeth that hee would walke within his house with a perfect heart; neither nourishing wickednesse in himselfe; nor induring it in any of his seruants. And that hee would driue out and expulse vngodly men out of his family, and setting his eyes vpon the faithfull of the land, and such as walked in a perfect way, as his speciall fauourites, he would make choice of them for his household seruants. Yea vertuous Hester, though a Queene, matched with an idolatrous King, and vnder an heathenish gouernement, not onely her selfe diligently serued God by fasting and prayer, but also had so trained vp her maides in the true feare of God, that they were fit to beare her company. By which examples wee leame, that there are no distractions so great, no imployments so waightry, which should hinder any governours of families from performance of the like duties.

To which end let vs consider, first, that euery family is a member and part of the whole body, which ought to resemble it in nature and gouernment, and as it were a particular Church, in which, the publike duties are priuately to bee performed, as the Apostle teacheth vs, whereas hee saluteth Nymphas and the Church which was in his house; and the Master of the family representeth the Minister, and the rest of the house the people in the Congregation, who are to bee gouerned and instructed by him; whereof it is that the Apostle would not haue wiues and women to speake in the Church, and publicly to propound their doubts in the assembly, but to craue resolution of their husbands at home. Secondly, let vs consider, that inferiours are set vnder our gouernement, not as brute creatures, but as reasonable men, and therefore, that not their bodies and bodily imployments alone are committed vnto our charge for gouernement and direction, but their soules likewise, that they may bee trayned vp by vs in all religious duties, and spirituall exercises, for which wee shall giue an account vnto God, how vvee haue indeuoured to make them to thriue vnder vs in the growth of Christianity, and fitted them for the seruice of God, as vvell as how vvee haue taught them their Trades, and in vwhat sort they should demean themselves towards vs in our seruice. So that if vvee take no further care of them then vvee doe of our beasts, that is, onely so to gouerne, feede, and order them, as that they may bee fitted for earthly imployments, and for the aduancing of our worldly profit; when that their soules perish through our negligence, their blood will bee vpon our heads, and wee shall haue a fearefull account to make at the day of Iudgement. Thirdly, let vs consider that the family is the Seminary of the Church and Common-wealth; and as a priuate schoole, wherein children and seruants are fitted for the publike assemblies, as it were the Vniuersities, to performe, when they meete together, all religious duties of Gods worship and seruice. And as it is a notable meanes to make Vniuersities to flourish, and the Students in them to succeed and prosper in their studies, when as the Masters of priuate schooles doe well fit and prepare them, teach and nurture them in learning and manners, before they send them thither: So if Masters of priuate families would carefully traine vp all their household in the feare of God, and in the exercises of Christian Religion all the weeke, they would with more cheerefulnesse on Gods Sabbaths come vnto the publike assemblies, and with much more reuerence and attention, care and conscience set themselves as in Gods presence to heare his Word, and call vpon his holy Name, much better vnderstand what they heare, and lay it vp in memorie, profit farre more by the vse of Gods holy Ordinances, for the conscionable practice of what they know, and thrive more in their spirituall growth in one Sabbath, then others can doe in many, who, for want of instruction in the maine principles and acquaintance with the Scriptures by priuate reading, vnderstand not what they heare in the publike Ministry; and not being seasoned all the weeke in any religious duties, can finde no taste or relish in them, when on the Sabbath they come to performe them with the rest of the congregation. Fourthly, let vs know that by this exercise, we shall not onely doe much good vnto those whom wee instruct, but also vnto our selues, seeing thereby wee doe stirre vp and increase Gods graces in our owne hearts as well as in theirs. For heereby we shall moue the Lord to impart vnto vs a larger measure of his gifts, when as wee doe so freely communicate them to the vse of our brethren; and to impart his will and counsels vnto vs, when as with Abraham wee will teach them vnto our children and household. Wee shall learne much in teaching others, because it will giue vs occasion to set our wits more seriously for the finding out of the truth, then in our priuate studies and Meditations, and much cleare our iudgements, when we labour to deliuer the things that we teach plainly and distinctly, which were before confusedly heaped vp together in our vnderstandings, as it were, in the whole lump. Wee shall thereby much strengthen our memories, whilest by teaching others the things wee know, wee shall worke them into them, and cause them to make a deeper impression. Finally, we shall inflame our hearts with the loue of good things, by those meanes which we vse to worke the like affection in the hearts of others; and prouoke our selues vnto a conscionable practice of what wee know, by the same arguments and reasons which wee vse to perswade them vnto it. And consequently, in seeking to saue them, we shall also thereby much further our owne saluation; according to that of the Apostle to Timothy, Meditate vpon these things, giue thy selfe wholly to them, that thy profiting may appeare to all; Take heede vnto thy selfe, and vnto the doctrine, continue therein; for in so doing, thou shalt both saue thy selfe and them that heare thee. Which priuiledges, howsoeuer they belong more principally to the publike Ministry, yet doe they in some good proportion appertaine also to those, who exercise

cise themselves in this priuate dutie of teaching their family. Fifthly, let vs consider that it is the best meanes to make our children and seruants faithfull and conscionable in performing their duties vnto vs, when they are first made carefull and conscionable in Gods seruice. For when their hearts are seasoned with the true feare of God, then doe they performe their dutie as vnto God in vs; not out of seruile feare, but for conscience sake; not for temporall rewards, but in hope and assurance of those that are heavenly and eternall; not with eye seruice as men pleasers, but with singlenesse of heart, as in the sight & presence of God, whom they labor to please in all things; seeing from him they expect the chiefeft and best part of their wages and reward. Which meanes if masters and parents neglect, let them neuer complaine of bad seruants and vntoward children: for it is iust with God, that these should neglect their duties toward them, when as they, by neglecting their duties in trayning them vp in his feare, doe cause them to neglect their duties towards him. Sixthly, let vs remember, that if we will thus set vp Gods Kingdome in our families, he will gouerne together with vs, and so by his wise and powerfull prouidence guide and prosper all our indeuours, as that they shall wholly tend to his glory and our good. For thus performing our dutie, he will double and redouble his fauours vpon vs, blessing our seruants and children for our sakes, and vs for their sakes, by causing all their labours to prosper in their hands, as wee see in the example of Abrahams seruant, Iacob, Ioseph, and the Souldiers and seruants of Cornelius, who being trayned vp in the feare of God, either by their masters or their own parents, prospered in their proceedings, and so brought a blessing vpon them & the whole families. Whereas contrariwise, the neglect of these religious duties bringeth Gods wrath vpon the governours, & those likewise that belong vnto him; according to that of the Prophet; Powre out thy fury vpon the heathen that know thee not, and vpon the families that call not on thy Name. Lastly, it would bee a notable incouragement to make vs diligent in performing these religious duties in our families, if wee would but consider that wee should heereby bee speciall meanes of gayning many vnto Christ, which shall heereafter bee the Crowne of our reioycing; that wee shall much more comfortably trauell in the way of holinesse and righteousnesse, and in our tedious pilgrimage towards our heavenly home, when wee goe not alone, but haue those that belong vnto vs to beare vs company, who will be ready at hand to assist vs in our iourney, to admonish vs when wee are going out of the way, to keepe vs from falling, and when we are falne, to put to their helping hand for the raising of vs vp againe, and to fight on our side against those spirituall theeuers, that come to rob vs of the rich treasures of Gods graces, and the malicious enemies of our saluation, when they incounter vs in the way, that they may soyle vs in the fight, or force vs with their fury to desist from our course, and to returne backe againe into the wayes of sinne and death. Finally, that we shall, with vn-speakable ioy and rauishing comfort, appeare before the Lord at the latter day, when being accompanied with those (whom hauing been by God committed vnto our charge, we haue carefully gouerned and guided in the wayes of saluation) we shall resigne and re-deliver them vnto God, to be crowned with the same happinesse which our selues shall inioy; saying with our Sauour, of our families, as he of his Church; Behold mee and the children which thou hast giuen me: which will infinitely more reioyce our hearts at that day, then if hauing beene Monarchs of the whole world, we should haue left it to our posterity, as an inheritance after vs.

Now that wee may thus nurture our familie in Gods feare, and trayne them vp to the performance of all religious and Christian duties, as prayer, singing of Psalmes, reading the Scriptures, holy conferences, and such like, of which wee haue already spoken, there is required first, that we instruct them in the knowledge of God and his will; and secondly, wise gouernement, whereby they may be moued and drawne to put in practice, and make an holy vse of all that is taught and learned for the right informing of their liues. Concerning the former, it is the duty of parents and gouernours of families, that they instruct and catechize their children and seruants in the true knowledge of God, and in the maine principles of Christian Religion; which though it be a most necessary and profitable dutie to bee performed of all, yet is it in these dayes exceedingly neglected of the most, as a thing needelesse and not belonging vnto them. Of which neglect, these seeme to bee the chiefe causes; first, the profanenesse of mens mindes, and contempt of religion, which maketh them thinke this one thing so necessary in Christs iudgement, to bee in theirs of all things most vnnecessary: and that whereas knowledge in all other professions is required in some perfection, some little smattering or a bare shew, is sufficient in the profession of Christianity; which notwithstanding as farre excelleth them, as the soule the body, or heauen earth. Secondly, An erroneous iudgement, whereby they perswade themselves, that though this knowledge bee necessary for all, yet that the dutie of instructing their familie in it, belongeth not at all vnto them, but vnto the Ministers onely. Thirdly, their ignorance which disableth them vnto it, being such as the Apostle complaineth of, who when for the time they ought to be teachers, yet had neede to bee catechized themselves in the first principles of Religion, and to be fed with milke rather then strong meate. Which is accompanied with a carnall shame of bewraying it to their inferiours. Fourthly, A much more impious shame to be noted of those, who are as bad or worse then themselves, for men too precise and forward in things not pertaining vnto them. The last and chiefeest cause is worldly-mindednesse, whereby men are wholly taken vp with earthly affaires, so as they haue neither leysure nor pleasure to follow spirituall exercises, which so farre preuaileth with many, that they not onely neglect this dutie themselves, but also will not suffer those, who are vnder their charge, to be taught by others. First, because they would not haue them more wise or religious then themselves. Secondly, because they imagine, that they would bee lesse pliable to vniust courses, for the getting of vnlawfull gaine; and that being more intent to Gods seruice, they would become lesse diligent in the seruice of the earthly Mammon. Lastly, because they cannot indure, that any time should be spent in religious duties, as thinking all lost, which is not spent in worldly employments, and consecrated to their earthly Idoll of gaine and profit. Yea this dutie of catechizing is not onely only neglected of household gouernours, but also of Ministers, not only such as are either idle or insufficient to teach the people, but likewise of many who are otherwise able and diligent. And that first, because they consider not the profit and necessity of this excellent exercise. Secondly, because they suppose that it is not pleasing and plausible to the people. And lastly, because they thinke it too meane a subiect for their great learning and eminent gifts. But let such in the feare of God consider, not what they are able to teach, but what the poore people, committed to their charge, are able to learne, and that they must like nurses, giue vnto their children, not the best and strongest meate, but that which they finde by experience the fittest to nourish them. Let them remember Christs charge to feede the tender Lambes, as well as the stronger sheepe; and the Apostle Pauls practice and example, who chose rather to speake five words with vnderstanding, than he might teach others, then ten thousand words in an vnknown tongue; and fitted his speech vnto those which were babes in Christ, and fed them with milke, and not with stronger meate, because they were not able to beare it; becomming vnto the weake as weake, that hee might gaine the weake, and all things to all men, that he might by all meanes saue some. Finally, that Salomon himselfe, who excelled in all learning and wisdom, stooped to the capacity of the meanest, and fitted his speech, that not onely the wise in heart might increase in learning, but also that the simple might attaine vnto wisdom.

And thus haue wee shewed the causes of the great neglect of this holy exercise. Let vs in the next place consider of some reasons which may reforme it, and perswade all sorts of men to put it in practice with more diligence. The which may be reduced vnto two heads, as respecting either gouernours of families, and Ministers who are to giue instruction, or inferiours in the family, as children and seruants, and people in the congregation, that they may giue themselves ouer to bee instructed by them. The former sort may be perswaded by these reasons. First, because it is Gods Commandement, that parents and gouernours of families should teach and catechize their children and seruants, not onely instructing them in the knowledge of Christian Religion, but also requiring an account of them by way of questions and answers, how they haue profited by their teaching, for the increasing of their knowledge. Thus the Lord requireth of the people of Israel, that they should not onely themselves remember and lay vp in their hearts his words and workes which they had heard and scene, but also that they should teach them their sons, and their sonnes sonnes. And in another place: These words which I command thee this day, shall bee in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently vnto thy children, and thou shalt talke of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou lyes downe, and when thou risest up. So the Psalmist saith, that God established a Testimonie in Iacob, and appointed a Law in Israel, which he commanded their fathers, that they should make them known vnto their children, &c. But if parents neglect this dutie, Ministers are tyed to performe it, both by Christs precept, who inioyned them to feede his Lambes as well as his Sheepe, and also by his example, seeing his care extended to little children, whom hee would haue to come vnto him;

him; and also in his childhood submitted himselfe to this ordinance of God, though he were replenished with all diuine wisdom, and more fit to teach, then to be taught of others, and sitting, as it is probable, among the catechumens, which came to be catechized, heard the Doctours, and asked them questions. Now Christs examples in holy duties are our instructions; according to that, I haue given you an ensample, that you should doe as I haue done to you. The second reason is drawne from the loue of parents towards their children, and of pastours towards their flocke, which ought to extend vnto the soule more then to the body, as being much the more excellent part. And therefore if they prouide for their bodies all things necessary, as food, clothing, houses, lands; how much more should they be carefull for the nourishment of their soules? which if they neglect, they shew plainly that their loue is carnall, and but to the halues, louing onely the worse part, or rather none at all: For, Godlinesse is the chiefest gaine, and is profitable both vnto body and soule, for all things, hauing the promises of this life, and of that which is to come.

The third reason is taken from the consideration of their naturall pronesse vnto euill, euen from the brest, as experience teacheth, which by wholesome and timely instruction is to bee preuented; that being first seasoned with this precious liquor of true Religion, and sauuing knowledge, they may retaine the taste and saour of it to the end of their dayes. According to Salomons counsell; Traine vp (or as the word signifieth) Catechize a child in the way that he should goe; and when he is old he will not depart from it. Vnto which, if we adde their readinesse to relapse into their naturall corruptions; if by wholesome instructions they bee not daily confirmed and strengthened in good courses; and how soone sinne will grow to a custome, and bring them to an habite of wickednesse, from which they can hardly afterwards be reclaimed; wee shall easily vnderstand the profit and necessity of this exercise. Fourthly, the desire that children and seruants should performe their duties to their parents and gouernours, should make them carefull in the first place to teach them Religion and the true feare of God. For if this be not the foundation, all other obedience is false and counterfeit, seeing they who yeeld it, are onely tyed vnto it in the carnall bonds of feare and rewards, and therefore it quite ceaseth when they cease. Neither will any with an honest heart and good conscience performe it, if it rise not out of loue and obedience towards God, but with respect of persons, selfe-loue, and such other sinister and by-respects. Fifthly, the care which euery Christian should haue to propagate the Church of God, should moue them to this duty, seeing God is thereby glorified, when as his Kingdome is enlarged and aduanced: for as the Wise man saith, In the multitude of a people is the honour of a King. Now this is most reasonable, that God, who created our children, should be honoured by our consecrating of them vnto his seruice, and that wee should re-deliver them vnto him, who first gaue them vnto vs, seeing they are his by a double right, both of creation and redemption, and also chalenged by him as his owne right and heritage. Sixthly, this may moue vs vnto this duty, if we consider that the time of youth is most seasonable for instruction; seeing then, like waxe, they are most apt to receiue all impressions of good oreuill, and also to retaine them when they are receiued. And therefore let it be the care of all gouernours, to stampe first Gods seale vpon their children, that thereby also they may bee marked for the children of God, before Satan hath preuented them, by sealing them for his slaues, and stamping vpon them the markes of perdition. Let them instruct them in the principles of true Religion, when as by their docible age they are most fit to learne, and most strong and able to retaine what they haue learned, in faithfull memories; lest neglecting this duty, Satan and the world teach them in their schoole of impiety, all prophanenesse and wickednesse; or if they incline at all to some Religion, doe by their instruments seduce them from the truth, sow in their minds the seeds of errors, schisme and heresies, and draw them away from God, by teaching them to offer vnto him for his pure seruice, their owne, or other mens inuentions and traditions, will-worship, superstition and idolatry.

Lastly, the examples of the faithfull in all ages, who haue been diligent in the performing of this duty, may perswade vs vnto it. Thus wee reade that Cain and Abel serued God by sacrifices, which they could not haue done, there being then no written Word for their direction, vnlesse they had bene instructed in Gods true Religion by their parents. So Abraham is commended for this duty, from whom God would not hide his secret counsels, because he knew that he would command his children and his household after him, that they might keepe the way of the Lord. Thus Salomon was instructed by Dauid his father, and by Bathsheba his mother, from his tender youth, to his riper age, as himselfe professeth; I was my fathers sonne, tender and onely beloued in the sight of my mother. He taught me also, and said vnto me, Let thine heart retaine my words: keepe my commandements and liue, &c. And we reade that Iehosaph the King was instructed from his tender youth in the knowledge of God, by his good vnle Iehoiada the Priest. So also in the New Testament, this duty was practised; for there were two sorts of Catechumēnoi, or such as were catechized; first, such as were adulti, and of ripe age, who were catechized in the principles of Christian Religion before they were baptized; as Theophilus, the Eunuch, Cornelius, and his household, Apollos, and many others, whereof these principles were called the doctrine of Baptismes. And the second sort borne in the Church, who being in the Couenant, were baptized in their infancie, and after that catechized, and then confirmed by the imposition of hands, whereof the principles were called the doctrine of the imposition of hands, in the same place; because at their confirmation they first rendred an account of their faith. And thus Paul remembring Timothies vnfaigned faith, saith, that it dwelt first in his grandmother Lois, and his mother Eunice, of whom hee maketh honourable mention, because they had instructed him from his youth in the doctrine of it. And therefore, if wee would bee numbred in the Calender of the faithfull, or be made happy in their rewards; let vs follow their example, and as we haue opportunity and conuenient time, let vs catechize and instruct in the principles of Christian Religion, all those that being capeable of knowledge, are committed to our charge.

And these are the reasons which may perswade gouernours to performe this duty of Catechizing; vnto which, we will adde some others, which may

may mouue those who are vnder their gouernement, to submit themselves willingly vnto this Ordinance of God, to receiue instruction from them, and attentiuely to heare them, carefully to treasure vp in their hearts and memories what they haue learned, and chearefully to render an account of it, when they are called thereunto. The which I thought necessary, in respect of the backwardnesse which is to be obserued in most families and congregations amongst all sorts, not onely nor chiefly among children in yeeres, but especially such as being riper in age, are notwithstanding children in knowledge. The which is caused by their naturall auerfenesse to these religious duties, by the corruption of their iudgements, perswading them that they are vnneccessary, by the worldlinesse and prophanenesse of their hearts, which hindreth them from attending vnto instruction, and consequently maketh them vnwilling to bee called to account, because they finde themselves vnable to answere and giue any satisfaction to their teachers; by carnall pride, and proud bashfulnesse, which causeth them scornefully to cast off Christs yoke, and contemptuously to refuse subiection vnto his Ordinance, because they feare to be disgraced before others, for their ignorance and small profiting in the knowledge of Christian Religion; and finally, by the subtile malice of the deuill, which casteth before them all discouragements which hee can deuise or raise against this profitable exercise, because he well knoweth, that it is a most powerfull meanes to dispell the mists of ignorance, through which hee misleadeth men to prophanenesse, heresie, hell, and destruction, and to inlighten mens minds with sauing knowledge, to beate him from his throne, and to cast downe the strong holds of sinne, and to set vp and establish in their hearts the gracious Kingdome of Iesus Christ, by which they shall be brought to all glory and heauenly happinesse.

Now these reasons concerne not onely children in yeeres, but also children in knowledge, though they bee ancient in respect of age. The first whereof may be taken from the end of their creation and redemption, for they are created vnto good workes, which God hath ordained that they should walke in them; they are redeemed out of the hands of their spirituall enemies, that they should serue God in holinesse and righteousnesse before him all the dayes of their liues; they are not their owne, but bought with a price, that they might glorifie their Redeemer in their soules and bodies. But none can truly serue the Lord, vnlesse they know him, his will, and Word, from which they must not decline to the right hand nor to the left, and neither adde any thing to it, nor detract ought from it; for else through naturall ignorance, they will (as our Sauour chargeth the Samaritans) worship they know not what, and in stead of his true seruice, offer vnto him their owne will-worship and inuentions. Neither can wee come to this knowledge, but by the meanes which God hath ordained, one of the chiefe whereof is this religious exercise. Secondly, we haue vowed in our baptisme, that we will fight vnder Christs Banner against our spirituall enemies, which wee cannot doe without receiuing a shamefull ouerthrow, vnlesse our Christian Armour be put on and fastened vnto vs with the girdle of verity, and vnlesse wee be trained vp in this Christian warfare, and taught rightly to use the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God. Now if vowes must be paid without delay, then how how much more this which importeth vs as much as our saluation? A third reason may be taken from Gods loue and fatherly care and prouidence watching ouer vs, and preserving vs from all perils and dangers in the time of our infancie and childehood, vnto which as we were naturally most prone, so were wee vtterly vnable to auoid them by our owne prouidence, or to vse any meanes to helpe our selues. Which consideration should moue vs, as soone as we are come to knowledge and discretion, to testifie our thankfulnessse by learning his waies, that wee may walke in them, and thereby glorifie him who hath so graciously preserved vs. Fourthly, let vs consider, that the Law was giuen, not onely to the ancient and them of ripe age, but also to children and young men, that they might *cleans*e their wayes by taking heede thereunto according to Gods Word; which made Iosuah to reade it vnto them all alike. And both old and yong shall be called to giue an account of their workes and waies at the last day, according to that in the Reuelation, I saw the dead, great and small, stand before God, and the bookes were opened, &c. and the dead were iudged out of those things which were written in those bookes, according to their workes. And therefore the young as well as the old, must prepare themselves for their reckoning, and learne both what strength the Booke of the Law hath to indite and condemne him, and how by the Gospell they may traueirse this inditement, and be acquitted from that dreadfull sentence of condemnation, by pleading full satisfaction by Iesus Christ. And therefore when his soule wallowing it selfe in carnall delights, saith vnto him; Reioyce, O yong man, in thy youth, and let thine heart cheere thee in the dayes of thy youth; and walke in the waies of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; then let him remember, that for all these things God will bring him to iudgement. Fifthly, consider that this age aboue all others, is most fit to receiue and retaine instruction and information in the wayes of the Lord, as also reformation and amendment of our sinfull courses. Which if it bee deferred to riper age, they will be lesse able to learne the will and wayes of God, to hold them in memory, or to obey and walke in them. For the faculties of the soule will bee more enfeebled, and they distracted with earthly cares, and loue of the world, ambition, couetousnesse, voluptuousnesse; they will then be more apt to content themselves with their ignorance, wherein they haue bin so long nuzzled; their passions will grow strong and violent, and custome of sinning laying fast hold of them, will pull them backe from the schoole of piety, yea will make them openly to professe, that they are now too old to learne; by all which, who seeth not how desperately they hazzard their saluation, who put off instruction, and neglect the meanes of it, in the time of their youth? And therefore let vs hearken to the Wise mans counsell; and remember now our Creator in the daies of our youth, while the euill daies come not, nor the yeeres draw nigh when thou shalt say, I haue no pleasure in them. Sixthly, let vs remember, that God would haue first fruits offered vnto him, as a type to teach vs, that the prime of our age is an oblation wherein he chiefly delighteth; that our Sauour was much pleased, when little children entertained him with their applause, Crying Hosanna to the Sonne of Dauid; that God out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hath ordained strength, because of his enemies, that he might slay the enemy & the auenger. Finally, that in the time of the law, they were inioyned to offer vnto God the yong and lusty, & not the old and lame, to shew that the Lord would haue the prime of our age and strength consecrated to his seruice, although in the Gospell all are invited to the marriage Supper, the poore, maimed, halt and blinde, because (so we bring with vs the wedding garment) it is better in our age to come halting to the feast, and through the dimnesse of our sight, groping for the right way, then to frame worldly excuses, and absent our selues altogether.

1. Thes. 5. 21.

Lastly, let the profit & manifold benefits which accompany this dutie, be an effectuall meanes to perswade vs vnto it. For they only are saued who haue faith, and they faith alone, who haue knowledge, both which come by hearing, as the Apostle teacheth vs, How shall they call vpon him, in whom they haue not beleueed? and how shall they beleue in him of whom, they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a Preacher? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. And this the Apostate Julian well knew, and therefore to roote out the Church, he thought it the most effectuall way, to put downe Christian Schooles, and Religious exercises, that being deprived of all meanes of knowledge, hee might leade them in their ignorance which way hee listed. Secondly, it is a notable meanes to free them from errorrs and heresies, when they are grounded in the knowledge of the truth, and the analogie of faith, that will serue them as a touchstone and rule, according to which doctrines must bee examined; which whoso want, may easily be led euen into fundamentall errorrs. For as the Apostle saith, there must bee heresies in the world, vnto which men naturally are more inclined then vnto the truth; and therefore we must not hand ouer head hearken vnto euery spirit, nor when we heare, iudge of them according to our naturall reason, but wee must, as the Apostle Iohn exhorteth vs, try them whether they be of God or no, by bringing them to be examined by the touchstone of his Truth. The which wee shall be vtterly vnable to doe, if we be not acquainted with the Scriptures, and haue no knowledge of the maine principles, and the analogie of faith contayned in them. Where, by the way wee may note the cause why Popery so much increaseth amongst vs, namely, because for want of catechizing in many places, the people remaine ignorant of the principles of Christian Religion, and so vpon the alleading of any carnall reason, plausible to corrupted nature, they become an easie prey to the Priests and Iesuites. Thirdly, It helpeth notably to the hearing of Sermons with profit, both because being grounded in the principles and maine parts of diuinity, wee shall bee able to referre all things wee heare to their heads, and also to examine Doctrines according to the analogie of Faith. For seeing there will be many false christs and antichrists, false prophets, false teachers, and rauenous wolues that will come in sheepes clothing; wee must not receiue all that is preached in a pulpit, but try all things, and take that onely which is good. The which wee cannot doe, if wee be vnacquainted with the Scriptures, and destitute of the knowledge of the principles of Christian Religion. Where, by the way wee may note the reason why most men, euen in the chiefe Cities, and places where the Gospell hath bene long preached, yea euen such as make most sincere profession of Religion,

Religion, are so void of all sound iudgment in hearing Sermons, that they are more affected with the strength of the voice, the powerfulness of arguments, looke more after the manner, then after the matter, & to a ready and fluent speech, then soundnes of Doctrine and faithfull handling of the text. Why also they so little profit by their much hearing for their increase in knowledge, & strengthening of their faith, the sanctifying of their hearts, & walking in a settled course of a Christian life. Finally, why they with such earnestnes, flock after new commers, & so easily harken vnto euery new opinion, though the broacher of it haue onely a shew of sanctity, and be quite destitute of al good learning or sound knowledge of Diuinity; namely, because the people being vngrounded, & ignorant of the principles of Religion, are wholly vnstayed and vnsettled in their iudgments, & wanting the spirit of discerning, are not possibly able to make any good choyce. Fourthly, This exercise is most profitable for such as are weake in y spiritual growth, and but babes in Christ, because it is the fittest food for their Spirituall nourishment, seeing in respect of their weakenes which maketh them vnable to digest stronger meat, they would quickly be famished & fall into a deepe consumption of all grace, if there were not prepared for them meats of such easie and light digestion. For stones (as we know) will doe little children as much good as the whole loafe, they wanting strength to cut it, or teeth to chew it; and so also it is in the spirituall nourishment, the weaklings being as vncapable of high mysteries, deepe points of Diuinity, and difficult and perplexed controuersies, as of a speech vttered in a strange language. And therefore as it must be the teachers care and wisdom to prepare fit nourishment for those vnder their charge, and to feede babes in Christ with milke; or when they prouide stronger meate for their sake who are of riper age, yet as much as they can, they must like louing nurses haue also therein respect to their little ones, diuiding and (as it were) chewing this more solid meate, and making it soft and easie with familiar similitudes, and plaine examples, as our Sauour taught his Disciples, not according to the greatnesse of his diuine wisdom, but so as they were able to heare it: So on the other side, those which are children in knowledge, must chiefly affect that food which is fittest for their nourishment, and not out of foolish wantonnesse and vaine curiosity, affect the hearing of learned discourses, high points of diuinity and hidden mysteries, when as they are ignorant of the easie principles, as it is the custome of many simple people, who most applaud and magnifie their teachers, when their speeches most exceed the pitch and reach of their shallow vnderstanding. Fifthly, they shall by this exercise be inabled to giue an account of their faith, not in some few points onely, like smatterers, but in all which are substantiall and fundamentall. The which will be a notable encouragement to the profession of Christ and the true Religion, especially in the time of persecution, when wee distinctly know what wee hold and beleeue, and wherein wee differ from our aduersaries; the want whereof is a great hinderance to Christian apologie, and a speciall meanes to make vs to deny Christ before men; seeing the most are ashamed to make profession of that truth, whereof when they are examined, they can giue no account; to suffer for that Religion which they cannot defend, or at least distinctly conceine, or to take vpon them like Christs Champions to fight for the truth against the enemies of it, euen to the shedding of their blood, when as they haue no skill in handling the sword of the Spirit. Lastly, heereby they shall not onely bee informed in the wayes of godlinesse, but also incited and inabled to walke in them; as we see in the example of Isaac, who by his fathers instruction, became obedient to the death; prayeth and meditateth in fields, and in all things followed his fathers steps. And of his seruant likewise, who being trained vp by Abraham, and catechized in the knowledge of God and his truth, carryeth himselfe religiously towards God, and faithfully towards his Master. And also of Salomon, who being taught by his father, to esteeme and labour after, aboute all things, wisdome and vnderstanding, afterwards when God putteth him to his choyce, to aske and obtaine whatsoeuer he would, be desireth an vnderstanding heart, that hee might iudge the people, and discern betweene good and bad. Vnto which wee might adde innumerable more examples, both of former and latter times; all which may serue as strong inducements, to perswade all weake Christians both young and olde, to bee diligent in this exercise, if, at least, they haue any care to know Gods will, or make any conscience of yeelding obedience vnto it.

C A P. XXXII.

Of family duties, which respect wife and religious gouernement.

§. Sect. I.
What things
are required
vnto wife gouernement.

1. Pet. 3. 7.

Iob 29. 3, 9.

And these are the duties of gouernours in families, which respect instruction. The second mayne duty, is wise and religious gouernment, whereby they are to moue and draw their inferiours to put in practice, and to make an holy vse of all which they teach them, in their liues and conuersations; vnto which, some things are required in the persons of their gouernours, and some things in the administration of their gouernment. In their persons diuers things are required. As first, wisdome and Christian prudence in all their courses, that they may not onely guide themselves in their owne wayes, but be able also to giue direction vnto all that belong vnto them. For that which the Apostle Peter requireth specially of husbands, doth generally belong vnto all gouernours, that they dwell with their inferiours, according to knowledge, as being a principal meanes to gaine from them due honour and authority. Secondly, that they bee not light and vaine in their carriage and gouernement, but behaue themselves in all things grauely, and with a kinde of Christian Maiesty and authority; according to the example of Iob, who obserued such grauity in his carriage, that when the young men saw him, they hid themselves, and the aged arose and stood up; the Princes refrained talking, and laid their hand on their mouth. The which, as it gaineth authority to gouernours, so the contrary leuitie and lightnesse of behauiour, doth expose their persons to scorne, and their gouernement to neglect and contempt. Thirdly, there is required, that piety, iustice, and sobriety, doe shine in the whole course of their conuersation, that so they may become examples vnto their inferiours, of an holy, righteous, righteous and vnblameable life, then the which, nothing is more powerful and effectually, to draw inferiours to imitation of those vertues which they obserue in them. And therefore David intending a strict reformation of his house, beginneth first with himselfe, that hee might be an example vnto all the rest, and resolue that he will behaue himselfe wisely in a perfect way, and walke within his house with an vpright heart, and then that hee will banish out the wicked from his family, and entertaine and countenance the religious and faithfull of the land. Whereas contrariwise, if they take neuer so much paines in teaching them their duties, yet if they doe not make their owne liues examples of their rules, but run a contrary course in their practice, they shall not so much further them in the wayes of godlinesse by their instructions, as discourage and hinder them by their bad example. Fourthly, they must not insult ouer their inferiours with tyrannicall pride and cruelty, nor doe all they may, by reason of their power and authority, to keepe them vnder, as base vnderlings, out of a fond and false opinion, raising the pitch of their absolutenesse and greatnesse, out of their slavish deiection, who are vnder their government; but they must mixe with their power and authority, parent-like loue, brotherly humanity, and Christian mildnesse and modesty, that their inferiours may honour them as fathers, as well as feare them like Lords, and may yeeld vnto them, free, cheerefull, and voluntary obedience, subiecting to their government, not onely their bodies and outward actions, but also their hearts, wills, and inward affections. For if the hearts of Kings themselves must not be lifted up above their brethren, then much lesse should the hearts of inferiour gouernours in families bee thus exalted. Fifthly, they must gouerne in the Lord, as his Vice-gerents and Deputies, and chiefly ayme therein at Gods glory, remembring that from him they haue all their authority, and that they exercise not their owne, but the iudgements of the Lord, according to the saying of good Iehoshaphat to his Iudges; Take heede what yee doe, for ye iudge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in iudgement. And this must make them chiefly to ayme by their government, to containe their inferiours in the duties of piety and righteousness, that God may be glorified, both by themselves, and also by all those which are in the family. And finally, they must make it appeare in all their government, that they doe not wholly ayme at their owne particular and priuate profit, but also at their ioynt good; which is the chiefe cause why the Lord hath made them superiours vnto others, not that they may serue their turne of them, and looke no further; but that they may (like the head, the members of the body) gouerne them for their benefit. And this argument the Lord vseth to perswade inferiours to honour their superiours, that it might goe well with themselves, in the land which the Lord gaue them. And the Apostle mooueth them to doe that which is good, vpon the like reason, because their gouernours were the Ministers of God to them for good if they did well.

Of the iustice & loue which are required in gouernement.

The things required vnto the administration of their gouernement, are iustice, and loue, the which must be tempered the one with the other, that loue may moderate and sweeten iustice, and iustice may keepe loue vnpartiall and vpright, lest our actions fauouring of nothing but iustice, seeme rigorous, and expose vs to hatred; and loue not guided nor backed by iustice, degenerate into doting fondnesse, and so expose vs to contempt; whereas both rightly mixed the one with the other, will cause reuerence and obedience. The which mixture must bee vsed in all our actions towards all vnder our gouernement, although these vertues are to bee exercised diuersly, and the one to be more manifested then the other, according to occasion, time, persons, and deserts. For though we ought to loue all, yet those especially who excell in Gods graces, and profit most in all religious, Christian, and ciuill duties; and to such, our loue must bee most manifested, to incourage them to go on in their good courses, and to draw others to follow their example. The which was Dauids practice, as he professeth; who, though he were indifferently iust towards all his subiects, yet his loue exceeded towards the faithfull of the land, and those which walked in a perfect way. But especially our loue and iustice must appeare in our rewards and chastisements, which are the mayne bonds and very sinewes of gouernement. We must reward those who deserue well, partly by our words, commending their good actions, which is a great incouragement to well-doing, as the Apostle implyeth, when hee vseth it as a reason to perswade inferiours to their duty; Do that which is good (saith he) and thou shalt haue praise of the same; the which, our Sauour will vse to his seruants at the last day; Well done, good and faithfull seruant, thou hast bene faithfull ouer a few things, &c. And partly by deeds, the which must fauour both of iustice, in giuing them their due wages, and of loue and bounty, by giuing according to our ability, gifts, to incourage them in their well-deseruing. Chastisements also must be vsed towards them, who will not otherwise be reclaimed from their faults, nor kept in due order, either in words only, by gentle or more sharpe reproofes, according to the quality of the offence, or by stripes, when nothing else will serue. For otherwise we shall offend against God in neglecting (being his Deputies) to glorifie him in his Iustice; against our selues, by becomming accessary to their sins; against the parties offending, whom we reclaime not, but suffer them to go on in their wickednes to their destructions; against those of the same family, whom by this impunity we incourage to follow their ill example; and the whole society, which is hereby made obnoxious to Gods Iustice. But this correction is only good when it is necessary, being like a sharpe salve and bitter potion, which none that are wise will vse for wantonnesse. And therefore his counsell is good, which (as God himselfe implyeth in the fifth Commandement) perswadeth a godly Matrone, that she should so gouerne her family and cherish it, as that shee should rather seeme their mother then their mistresse; and draw from them reuerence rather by louing benignitie, then rigorous seuerity. For that obedience is alwaies more faithfull and acceptable, which floweth from loue, then that which is extorted by feare. Yet if there bee no other helpe, but that correction must bee vsed as necessary; let vs in it obserue first, iustice, both in making sure, that the fault is committed, and deserueth punishment, and that the punishment doe not exceed the qualitie of the fault, which is to rage and reuenge, rather then chastize for amendment. Secondly, It must be inflicted in loue, which must appeare by moderating the punishment, ment, that it doe not exceede necessity, respecting the parties reformation; and by the end which wee propound in our corrections, which is the good of the partie, in the amendment of his faults for the time to come, which wee must alwaies aduance by ioyning admonition and good counsaile with our chastizement, with promises of loue and kinde v- sage when as wee finde any reformation. Lastly, this loue must appeare in our patience and forbearance, not comming rashly and violently vpon the party, but after wee haue tryed in vaine all other meanes. Nor in rage and anger, as though wee came to take reuenge; but temperately and quietly, slowly and with god aduice, as propounding no other end but the parties amendment.

CAP. XXXIII.

How wee ought to behaue our selues in the estate of prosperity, that wee may thrive in all spirituall graces.

WEE are now come in the last place to consider how we ought to carry our selues euery day, in respect of those seuerall estates and conditions of prosperitie and aduersitie vnto which God calleth vs. The which hauing no certaine and set time allotted vnto them by God, (for we may diuers daies together flourish in prosperity, or bee as long cast downe and humbled by troubles and afflictions, yea sometime, and that most commonly, haue them intermingled the one with other, beginning the day with ioy in our prosperous affaires, and ending it with sorrow and griefe by reason of our crosses and calamities, or contrariwise haue cause of mourning in the morning, and of reioycing before the euening) therefore the duties which concerne these seuerall estates, cannot be limited to any set time, but must follow and accompany them, as it shall please God to giue vs occasion by the interchanging our diuers states and conditions the one with the other. Of which my purpose is to speake very briefly, though they bee matters which greatly import the Christian life, because I haue largely handled them already in my Christian Warfare. And first, for prosperity, which consisteth in the possession and fruition of all Gods temporall blessings or many of them, as health, wealth, peace, plenty, libertie, fame, friendship, honours, pleasures, with wife, children, houses, lands of the best sort; they are in themselves Gods good gifts, which he delighteth to bestow vpon those that serue him, as the present pay and reward of their loue and durie; and wherein he would haue vs to delight, praying for them when we want them, and praying him when wee haue them, as being in their owne nature, and if they bee rightly vsed, testimonies of Gods loue, and signes of his gracious presence. But in respect of our corruption, this state is liable to much abuse, as not being absolutely good, but of an indifferent nature, in respect of that vse which wee make of it, remaining good to those that vse it rightly, and degenerating into euill when it is abused. Vnto which abuse wee are naturally most prone, as euery man may finde, not onely by generall obseruation, but in his owne lamentable experience; we being herein like vnto small shipe, which carrying too great a sayle, are ouerturned in euery tempest; or like those, who hauing ill stomackes and weake braines, are ready to surfeit of the best meates, vpon the least fulnesse, and to bee distempered and ouertaken with drunkenesse in the vse of the best drinckes, if they please their appetite, and take any more of them then will satisfie nature.

That we must bee diligent, lest our prosperity become vnto vs an occasion of sin; and how this is to be done.

In which regard, prosperity, which is good in it selfe, becommeth exceeding dangerous vnto vs, as being an ordinary and common meanes, both to occasion our falls into many sinnes, and to hinder our rising againe by vnfaigned repentance. In which regard, it greatly behooueth vs, when we liue in this estate, to thinke that we walke in slippery places, and as it were vpon the narrow ridge of a steepe hill, the descent on both sides being headlong and dangerous, in which, if wee slide, wee are ready to tumble by degrees into a gulf of wickednesse. And consequently, as we desire to walke acceptably vnto God, and tender our owne saluation, we must with all care and circumspection looke vnto our footing, that wee may be preserued from these fearefull falls, and receiue no hurt in this dangerous passage. To which purpose, I will propound some rules concerning the right carriage of our selues in this estate, which if wee obserue, they will serue as some staves to keepe vs from slipping, and like rayles on either side of a narrow bridge ouer a deepe and dangerous riuer, preserue vs from falling and sinking into the depths of sinne and worldly wickednesse. And to this purpose wee are to looke on the left hand with all care and prouidence, that we stay our selues, by shunning the abuse of our prosperity, and on the right hand with no lesse heedfulnesse, that wee vse it rightly and in an holy manner. For the first, our care must bee, that wee so vse our worldly prosperity and temporall things, that they be not helps and inducements vnto any sinne. And to this end, let vs often consider, that they are the blessings of God, which he hath bestowed vpon vs, to incourage vs in his seruice; and therefore what a sinne and shame is it, to take occasion by his bounty the more to displease him? to vse them as the weapons of iniquity to fight on the deuils side, against our Lord and Soueraigne? and to abuse these benefits which are giuen vs of God for comforts in our pilgrimage, as impediments which hinder vs in our iourney, and as prickles in our sides, to hasten our speed towards hell and destruction.

§. Sect. 3.

That in our prosperity we must take heed lest we forget God, that his blessings doe not draw our hearts from him, and that we be not vnthankfull.

Luk. 15.

More especially let vs take heed, that by these temporall blessings we be not made more forgetfull of God, vnto which vice we are naturally prone in the time of our prosperity, because, when wee inioy all wee desire, and haue neede of nothing, wee are not sensible that wee want his helpe; nor so apt to remember him, that wee may giue him thanks for that wee haue, as to begge at his hands the things wee want; as wee see in the example of the Prodigall, who thought not on his father, when hee was in prosperity, but when he is pinched with pouerty, then hee thinketh of returning vnto him. Whereof it is, that the Lord so often warned the Israelites, that when they inioyed ease and plenty in the Land of Promise, they should beware that they did not forget him: the which notwithstanding they neglected; for as the Prophet complaineth,

As

 & 8. 10, 11.
 Hos. 13. 6.*

Psal. 127. 1, 2.

1. Iob. 3. 15.

As in their pastures, so were they filled; they were filled, and their hearts were exalted; therefore they haue forgotten mee. Which that wee may not also do, let vs often consider, that it is a foule shame for vs to take occasion by these tokens of Gods loue the sooner to forget him, which he hath purposely sent to put vs in minde of his loue and bounty towards vs. Let vs as often as wee looke vpon them, remember, that they are not chiefly purchased by our owne indeuours (for how many seeke, and cannot inioy them, who farre exceede vs in wit and industry?) but that wee haue them from God, and by his blessing vpon our labours. Finally, let vs often remember, that though wee abound in these earthly things, yet they will not doe vs any good, vnlesse God giue his blessing in their vse, and make them effectuell to those ends for which hee hath giuen them. Secondly, let vs bee carefull when wee abound with temporall blessings, that they doe not draw our hearts from God, as they surely will, if wee esteeme them as our chiefe treasures, and in our affections dote too much vpon them; according to that of the Apostle Iohn; If any man loue the world, the loue of the Father is not in him. To which end let vs consider, that it is extreme folly to loue the creature better then the Creator, seeing whatsoeuer beautie, goodnesse or excellency is in them, it is infinitely more in him, from whom they haue it as a small drop out of the maine Ocean. That it is horrible ingratitude and vnkindnesse to loue Gods gifts better then the giuer, and when as a gracious Bridegroom hee sendeth them as loue-tokens, or deputies to woo our hearts, wee neglect him and dote vpon his messengers. Thirdly, let vs take heede, that by how much the Lord is more liberall in bestowing his benefits, that wee bee not by so much the more vnthankfull; which might seeme a needelesse admonition, if wee did not see by daily experience, that wee are in our pouerty more thankfull for euery small trifle, which relieueth our present necessities, then in our riches and abundance, when wee haue our wants supplied before they pinch vs; that wee are more ready to praise God for a little ease in a great sickness, then when wee inioy perfect health; and for a little sleepe after much restless waking, then when wee haue long taken our naturall and quiet repose, without any let, or the least disturbance. For wee see the worth of Gods blessings more in their want, then in their fruition, and the better wee know them, the more thankfull wee are for them. Besides, wee are apt to bee made wanton by our prosperitie, and to vex our selues more in longing after superfluities, then others in the want of necessities. And if we be crossed in these desires, and haue not our appetite satisfied to the full, wee are ready vngratefully to forget all the good things which wee inioy, and to murmur and repine as if wee had nothing. Which odious vice that wee may auoid, let vs consider when wee finde our selues inclining vnto it, how many good things wee inioy that others want, who better deserue them; that God is as sufficient and ready to giue vs what wee want, as what wee haue, if in his wisdom and goodnesse he did see them fitting for vs. That we indanger our selues to be deprived of our present blessings, by doting so vpon the things wee haue not, that we bee vnthankfull for that we haue, for

God seeing that our discontents arise from wantonnesse rather then want, will wisely take away the greatest part of his benefits, that wee may bee more thankfull for those that remaine.

Fourthly, let vs in our prosperity watch ouer our selues, that we be not puffed vp with pride, vnto which this estate through our corruption maketh vs prone, as we may see, not onely in the examples of former times, as Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezzar, Babylon, and of those wicked men, of whom the Psalmist speaketh, who being inclosed in their owne fat, spake proudly with their mouth, and flourishing in all earthly aboundance, put on pride as a chaine about their neckes; yea holy David and good Ezechias were thus ouertaken, and though in the time of their trouble they were meeke and humble, yet were their hearts lifted vp in their prosperity. The which, the experience of these times doth make too manifest, wherein not onely meeke worldlings, but euen many of the faithfull are taynted with this odious vice, by reason of their earthly aboundance, and long prospering in their worldly desires. Which that we may preuent, let vs consider, that we haue nothing but what we haue receiued, not as absolute gifts, but as our Masters goods, lent onely vnto vs for our vse, for which wee stand indebted, and must giue an account at the day of Iudgement; and what reason haue wee to bee proud of our debts? that God so hateth this vice of pride, that hee will rather withdraw from vs his spirituall graces, and his gracious assistance in the time of tentation, that by falling into other sinnes we may be cured of this, and haue our soules adorned with true humility; and therefore how much rather will hee depriue vs of temporall benefits, and things of farre lesse value, then we should continue infected with this vice, which aboue all others he most abhorreth? And when the greatnesse of our gifts and possessions beginne to puffe vs vp, let vs thinke, how we haue imployed them, and whether we haue so increased and improoued them for the glory of our Master, and good of our fellow seruants, as that we may with cheerefulnesse present our selues before God, when he calleth vs to a reckoning. Finally, in our greatest plenty of earthly things, let vs call to minde our spirituall wants, and how defectiue wee are in sanctifying and sauing graces, especially in our thankfulness vnto God for these temporall benefits; and so our plentie in the one will not so much exalt vs, as our defects in the other, which are much more excellent and necessary, will humble and abase vs. Fifthly, when wee inioy prosperity, let vs beware of security and hardnesse of heart, which is an ordinary effect that doth accompany it. For men are apt to flatter themselves in the assurance of Gods loue, when he causeth them to prosper in their courses, and giueth vnto them these outward signes of his fauour; and so to liue in their sinnes with impenitencie and hardnesse of heart, promising vnto themselves impunity, and that all shall goe well with them for the time to come. Thus David saith; because the wicked mans wayes prospered, Therefore Gods iudgements were high aboue out of his sight, presuming that he should neuer be moued nor come into any danger. Yea he himselfe, as he confesseth, was thus ouertaken with security, presuming in his prosperity, that he should neuer be moued. Which that wee may auoyd, let vs consider, that temporall blessings are no infallible signes of Gods loue, seeing as the

Wise man speaketh, they happen to all alike, and are more often and liberally bestowed vpon Gods enemies, who haue their portion in this life, then vpon his owne children, for whom he reserueth the euermore lasting and heauenly inheritance; that there is a vicissitude and change of all these estates, and nothing remaineth certaine vnder the Sunne; that the longer God deferreth, the more seuerely he will punish when hee commeth, and the greater our blessings are, the greater shall be our plagues, if we abuse them to security and impenitencie. Sixthly, let vs take heede when we are in prosperity, that we doe not abuse it to licentiousnesse and carnall liberty, vnto which, men in this state are most prone, as the Histories of all times and daily experience teacheth. For who seeth not, that they who abound in wealth and worldly honours, doe for the most part giue themselves ouer to all voluptuous and sensuall delights; as though God had sent them into the world, and had put into their hands such large wages of earthly blessings, that they should spend them and their precious time, in Hunting and Hawking, carding and dicing, courting, dancing and reuelling, drinking, feasting, and such like carnall pleasures? yea, who doth not perceiue, that they often abuse them to iniury and oppression, reuenge, and all kinds of vniustice, when they haue to deale with their inferiours; abusing their power and authority vnto tyranny, which they thinke neuer sufficiently manifested and magnified, till they haue borne downe and troden vnder foote, all that standeth in their way, right and reason, law, conscience, and common honestie? which abuses that we may shunne, let vs remember often the maine ends why God hath giuen vs these worldly benefits aboue others, namely, that we might be better inabled, and become more forward to glorifie him, to doe more good vnto our brethren, and abound in the workes of mercy and Christian charity, and that wee might haue better meanes to serue him with cheerefulnesse, and thereby to further our owne saluation. Of which ends, if we faile, God will either take these gifts from vs, because wee mispend them in vaine, or else let vs still keepe them for a further and greater iudgement. Let vs thinke in our greatnesse, that there is a greater then wee, who will one day call vs to a reckoning, and fearefully reuenge vpon vs the iniuries of the oppressed, and the shamefull abuse of our power and authority to vniustice and cruelty. Seuenthly, let vs beware, that our prosperity be not an occasion vnto vs of the contempt and neglect of spirituall and heauenly things, which ordinarily happeneth vnto those, vvho in their iudgements too much esteeme, and in their hearts immoderately affect these temporall blessings, as vve see in the example of those vvho vv ere inuited to the Kings Supper, Demas, Judas, and many others. To vv hich purpose, let vs often meditate on the excellency, profit, and necessity of Gods sauing graces, and the ineffable felicity of our heauenly inheritance, and how much these exceed the other. Let vs also often consider of the dignity of our soules, and how much they exceede in excellency our corruptible bodies, that vvee may take more care to haue them thrive in spirituall grace, and to reioyce in their assurance of future glory, then to glut our bodies vv ith sensuall delights, or to vv axe rich, and growv great in our earthly possessions. Let vs remember that the time vv ill come, that our spirituall grace, vv hich worldlings so much contemne, will stand vs in more stead, and bring vnto our soules more sound comfort then all the wealth of the world, or Monarchy of the whole earth; and therefore that it is most extreme and fortiffolly, so farre to affect those flitting and fading vanities, as to neglect in the meane time these spirituall excellencies.

Eighthly, let it be our care in the time of our prosperity, that wee doe not grow more sluggish and slothfull in Gods seruice, in Prayer, hearing the Word, Reading, Meditation; for the more we are taken vp with our earthly imployments, the lesse we minde these holy duties and religious exercises, as we see in the experience of many, who haue beene forward in them in their sicknesse, pouerty, and meane estates, and wholly neglected them, or coldly, carelesly, and formally performe them, when they inioy health, wealth, and worldly preferments. Yea, Gods good Children oftentimes are heere with ouertaken, hauing a great dampe cast ouer their zeale and deuotion by these worldly mists; as we see in good Martha her selfe, who by her worldly businesse was made more cold and carelesse in attending vnto Christ. Which, that wee may auoyd, let vs consider, that when we abound with all worldly blessings, we stand more in need of spirituall helps, to keepe vs vpright in our wayes, and from falling into those sinnes, to which this prosperous state exposeth vs. And that these earthly benefits being Gods present wages, whereby he encourageth vs to doe him more diligent and faithfull seruice, it is a shamefull abuse of his bounty, to bee made thereby more slothfull and negligent. Ninthly, let vs take heed in our prosperity, that these worldly things, through our ouermuch affecting them, doe not become thornes to choake in vs the seed of Gods Word, and hinder in vs the growth of his spirituall graces, the which through our corruption they are apt to doe, as our Saviour teacheth vs in the Parable of the Sower; partly by catching hold of vs, and hindring vs from going into the holy assemblies, as wee see in the example of those, who being invited to the Kings Supper, pretended excuses and would not come; and of the Iewes, who when God spake vnto them in their prosperity, professed that they would not hearken vnto him, nor obey his voyce: and partly by distracting our mindes and hearts when we are there, so as wee cannot attend vnto the things deliuered; as we see in the example of the Iewes, who, when the Prophet preached vnto them, with their mouthes made iests, and suffered their hearts to runne after couetousnesse. Which that we may auoyd, let vs hold them in our hands, as ready to imploy them in Gods seruice, and for the good of our brethren, but not suffer them through carnall loue to take rooting in our hearts, which is Gods portion and fairest field, allotted to receiue the seede of his Word, for the growth of spirituall graces. Or if the enuious man hath sowed any of these rares and weedes in them, let vs roote them out with all care and diligence, before wee goe into the holy assemblies, that they may not choake in vs that spirituall seede, nor hinder the growth of sauing graces; and let vs, as the Apostle exhorteth vs, mortifie our earthly lusts, and flie carnall concupiscence, when we desire to bee furnished with Gods graces, by the Ministry of the Word, and to follow after righteousness, godlinesse, faith, loue, patience, and meekenesse.

Tenthly,

Tenthly, let it be our care when wee are in prosperity, to set a double watch ouer our selues, that we be not overcome with those manifold tentations, vnto which this estate doth chiefly expose vs, as loue of the world; earthly-mindednesse, ambition, couetousnesse, voluptuousnesse, and the rest. To which end let vs consider, that in these worldly thickers Satan cunningly layeth his most dangerous ambushments, to surprize vs with his tentations at vnawares; that they are his traps and snares, in which hee intangleth many, and keepeth them in his slavery; and his vsuall baits, whereby he allureth vs to come within the compasse of his nets of perdition, vnto which, who so stoope with a greedy appetite, fall into many foolish and noysome lusts, which drowne them in destruction. Finally, that they are his common wages, which he offereth as his hire, to draw men to serue him in the workes of darkenesse, wherewith hee hath preuailed with so many, that he thought it his strongest inducement to perswade our Saviour Christ himselfe to yeeld vnto him and doe him seruice. And therefore as we desire to stand in the day of tentation, to preuent our foyles, and would not hazzard the eternall saluation of our soules, let vs in our prosperity watch ouer our selues, and also earnestly desire the Watchman of Israel to watch ouer vs, that wee may be preserued from all these dangers. Finally, let vs, when we inioy prosperity and temporall blessings, aboue all things carefully take heed, that they do not hinder our heavenly happinesse, by being burthens on our shoulders, which will tire vs in our journey thitherwards, and as the Camels bunch vpon our backes, which will hinder vs from entring into the straight gate. The which our care must be redoubled by the greatnesse of the danger, seeing it is a most hard thing for the same man to inioy earth and heauen, to haue temporall felicitie in the full fruition of worldly things, and eternall happinesse in Gods Kingdome, to haue the honours, riches, and pleasures of this life, and eternall glory, lasting riches, and heavenly ioyes in the life to come. For the Apostle telleth vs, that not many wise men after the flesh, nor many mighty, nor many noble are called vnto them; and our Saviour hath taught vs, that it is easier for a Camell to passe thorow the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the Kingdome of God. For preuenting of which danger, and the auoyding of this incomparable losse; let vs use these earthly things, as though we used them not, or as not abusing them, making them to serue as helps in our pilgrimage to further vs in our way, by employing them to all good vses; and when they begin through our carnall loue to cling vnto vs, and to become heauy burthens to hinder vs in our race, let vs, as the Apostle exhorteth vs, cast them off, that we may run more cheerefully, and parting with our superfluities for the reliefe of others necessities, let vs retaine onely so much as may further vs in our journey.

But especially, let vs take heed, that wee doe not value them in our iudgements, affect them in our hearts, nor seeke after them in our actions and indeuours, more then spirituall graces and heavenly happinesse; that we doe not make Idols of them, by louing them more then God, taking more paines to get them, and more care to keepe them, and more griefe to lose them, then the assurance of his fauour, or to carry our selues acceptably in his sight; finally, though we doe not vtterly reiect them from ha-

And that wee may not thus excessiue esteeme and immoderately loue them, let vs consider, that in themselues they deserue it not, being in comparison of grace and glory, of no worth; and though they were to others of some value, yet not vnto vs who professe Christianity. In themselues they are in the former comparison to be lightly esteemed, and slightly affected, seeing they bring not vnto vs any absolute, true, and certaine good, because in their owne nature they haue not in them any such degree of goodnesse, being vaine and of no solidity, whereof it is that they doe not satisfie those that haue them, and not onely vnprofitable to their owners, for the chiefe and best vses and ends, but also mixt and distasted with many euils and miseries which doe attend vpon them. Or though they were good, yet wee haue no certaintie, either in getting or keeping them, because both they and wee are both momentany and mutable, and are euery day in danger to bee parted from one another. Yea so farre are they from any absolute goodnesse, that through our corruption, by which wee become apt to abuse them, they are causes, or at least occasions of much hurt; being pro-uocations vnto all sinne, both against God, our neighbours, and our selues, deriuing vnto vs innumerable euils, both temporall, and those ciuill and spirituall, and also eternall, as hindring the fruition of heauenly happinesse, and furthering and increasing euerlasting punishments; or though they were good in themselues, and were not through our abuse occasions of these euils; yet they are not to bee esteemed and affected in respect of vs, who are but Pilgrims on earth, hauing only the vse and benefit of them in our passage, and (as it were) in our Inne where wee are to make but short abode; and Citizens of heauen, and heires of those eternall ioyes and lasting happinesse, which infinitely exceed all worldly things, in which, being our Countrey, we doe expect durable riches and euerlasting habitations. All which reasons I doe heere but briefly touch, and content my selfe with, namely, these generall heads, because I haue largely handled, and effectually pressed them as I was able, in my second part of the Christian Warfare.

CAP. XXXIII.

How we may rightly vse the state of prosperity, so as it may be an helpe vnto godlinesse.

§. Sect. I.
That we must vse Gods temporal blessings as helpes vnto, sauing graces and spirituall duties.

Ut it is not sufficient, that we shunne the abuses of prosperity and temporall blessings, vnlesse we also know how wee may rightly vse them; the which vse is farre better then the things themselues, as furthering vs vnto the fruition of much more excellent benefits, both in this life and the life to come. The which,

Salomon

Salomon implyeth, in making this vse a second and more perfect gift of God, which he doth not, like the other, cast out in common to men of all sorts, but reserueth it as a speciall benefit for those that feare him; I know (saith he) that there is no good in them, but for a man to reioyce, and to doe good in his life, and also that a man should eate and drinke, and inioy the good of his labour; it is the gift of God. And therefore in the next place I will set downe also some rules and cautions, wherby we may be directed in the right vse of prosperity, and the temporall blessings which doe accompany it. And first, we must vse them as helpes and effectuell motiues to stirre vs vp to vnfained thankfulness vnto God that gaue them. To which end, let vs not sacrifice to our owne nets, nor ascribe the praise of them to our wisdom and industry; but let vs receiue them at Gods hands, as his gifts and blessings, that hee may haue the whole glory of them. Yea, let vs consider that they are his free gifts, which hee bestoweth of his mere grace and bountie, without any respect of our merits or worthines, yea notwithstanding that we are lesse then the least of his mercies, and worthy rather of his iudgements and punishments. That he hath giuen them abundantly vnto vs, and vnto many other his deare children, with a sparing hand, and in a scant measure, who are farre more worthy of them; that he requireth nothing in lieu of all his benefits, but that we returne vnto him the praise that is due vnto him. And finally, that if wee be truly thankfull vnto him for his gifts already receiued, hee is ready to bestow farre greater and better vpon vs, both in this world and the world to come. Secondly, we must vse them as reasons to inflame our hearts with true and seruent loue towards God, and as fuel to nourish and increase this diuine and holy flame, desiring to approoue it to be sincere and vnfained, by affecting the giuer, better then the gifts, and by louing that also which he loueth, as his Word and will, spirituall grace, and new obedience vnto his Commandements, our neighbours for his sake, who hath beene so gracious and bountifull vnto vs aboue many others, and himselfe for his owne sake, longing more after the full fruition of his glorious presence, then to inioy all the contentment that the world can yeeld vs. And to this end let vs esteeme all his temporall blessings which wee haue receiued at his hands, not simply in their owne worth, but as pledges of his fauour, and loue-tokens which he hath sent vs to testifie his affection, as earnest pennies of a farre greater bargain, and first fruits of our heauenly haruest. Thirdly, wee must so vse them, as that they may not bee impediments, but helpes and furtherances in the seruice of God, and in aduancing the meanes of his worship, becoming more zealous in all Religious duties out of our loue towards him that so loueth vs, more frequent and diligent in holy exercises, as hauing by reason of our plenty and prosperity, more leysure from worldly employments and better opportunites of performing them. More bountifull and liberall for the erecting of Gods publique worship, with all the meanes thereof, where they are wanting, and in furthering and aduancing them, by giuing all encouragement to Gods Ministers, and all others who ioyne with vs in them, where they are already established. All which we shall the better doe, if we doe not set our hearts and affections more on them, then vpon spirituall grace and eternall glory, or the meanes of deriuing both vnto vs. If wee would learne to esteeme them, not in their owne absolute worth, but as they are meanes and instruments, which most benefit vs, when as they aduance our chiefe and mayne ends, the glory of God, and our own saluation. If we would consider that they are Gods present wages, which he graciously giueth vnto vs as temporary rewards of our imperfect seruice, not that they should pull vs backe in holy duties, but for our better encouragement, that we might serue so bountifull a Master with more cheerefulnesse. Finally, if we would remember that we shal at the day of Iudgmēt giue account how we haue imployed our Lords talents, for the aduancement of his glory, and inabling of vs for his seruice.

Fourthly, if we would rightly vse our prosperity and Gods temporall blessings, we must therein, not onely respect our owne particular, but also the common good of the Church and Common wealth, and the priuate good of all our neighbours. The former, by paying cheerefully all teasesments and tributes, which are lawfully imposed, all rights and duties which belong to all superiours in either of them, and by offering also our free-will oblation, and voluntary contributions towards any publike seruice, out of our great plenty, either for the better effecting of it, or for the easing of those, who by reason of their weake estates are not so able as wee to beare the burthen. The latter, by exercising our bounty and Christian charity in almes-deeds, and in doing the works of mercy, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting and relieuing the poore that are sicke and imprisoned. To which end, let vs consider that God hath giuen vnto vs our plenty and greater store, not as vnto absolute Lords, to spend it how we list, but as vnto Stewards, for the good also of our fellow seruants, who shal be called vnto account, if we haue beene faithfull in thus imploying them, and haue giuen to euery one in the household their due portion, that where God hath giuen much, there hee will also require much, and that they who by his bounty haue much goods and exceede in riches, doe also much good (and as the Apostle speaketh) Be rich in good workes, ready to distribute, and willing to communicate, laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternall life. Finally, let vs consider that they are not so much to bee valued in their owne excellency, or the present profit which they bring vnto vs, seeing these commodities haue so many discommodities, that it is hard to say whether exceede; but as they are the great instruments of well-doing, and (as it were) spacious fields, in which our bounty and charity are not confined in narrow limits, but may take large liberty to walke abroad, and to exercise themselves vnto full contentment. Whereby as wee are inabled to doe good vnto many, so most of all to our selues; seeing for the present wee purchase of them their best iewels at low rates, euen their loue, hearts, and seruent prayers, for some poore pittance of earthly trifles; and for the time to come, the Lord will infinitely reward of his meere grace and large bounty, these gifts of ours which hee hath first giuen vs, as though wee were not Stewards but Owners, and in our owne right had bestowed them, not so much vpon the poore, as vpon Iesus Christ himselfe, as he will before the Saints and Angels professe at the day of Iudgement. The which excellent dutie is so necessary vnto the exercise of a godly godly life, and is so much neglected in this cold and vcharitable age, not onely amongst gripple and greedy worldlings, who are ready rather to strip the poore, then to clothe them; and to pull the meate out of their mouthes, by depriving them through oppression of their meanes, then to feed and nourish them; but euen among professors of Religion, who seeming to make conscience of religious duties, are notwithstanding exceeding cold in their deuotion and charity; that I would much more fully and effectually haue insisted vpon and pressed it, had I not already published a full Treatise of this argument.

Fifthly, vnto the right vse of prosperity and temporall benefits there is required, that wee vse them as pilgrims and strangers, and not as Citizens of the world; for so Gods Saints haue alwaies acknowledged themselves, and that they had heere no continuing city, but sought one to come. The consideration whereof must weane our hearts and affections from the immoderate loue of the world & earthly vanities, and cause vs to fix them on heauen and heavenly things, which is our country and place of residence, to fight against our carnall lusts which fight against our soules; and to contemne and cast away whatsoeuer becommeth an hindrance in our journey towards our heavenly home. And seeing wee are Citizens of heauen, wee must haue our conuersation there, seeking those things which are above, and not those which are beneath, and thinke that nothing more doth misbecome vs, then that being the children of God, & heires apparent to his heavenly Kingdome, wee should like bale slaues spend our time and strength in the diuels drudgerie, and in toying in the workes of darkness and seruitude of sin, for the contemptible wages of earthly vanities. Sixthly, we must vse them not as durable and permanent riches and inheritances, but as things momentany and mutable, which are ready daily and hourly to leaue vs, and wee them. And therefore our best course will bee to vse so these fitting vanities, as that they may further our assurance of our heavenly patrimonie, which is permanent and euerlasting; and as our Saviour counsaileth vs, to make vs friends of the Mammon of iniquitie, by vsing them as helpes and instruments to further vs in the workes of mercy, that when they are taken from vs, and wee from them, wee may bee receiued into heavenly habitations. Finally, if wee would rightly vse our prosperity and temporall blessings, wee must not suffer our mindes and hearts to rest vpon them, but vse them onely as steps whereby wee may mount vp aloft in heavenly meditations and desires. As when wee see any beaurie or excellencie in the creatures, to thinke how infinitely they exceede in the Creator from whom they haue them; when wee are ready with the Queene of Sheba to thinke our selues happie in hearing the wisdom of an earthly Salomon, to raise our mindes higher, and to thinke on their happinesse, who attaine vnto the vision and fruition of God, and heare with rauishing admiration his all-knowing and infinite wisdom. When we are delighted with the society of Gods Saints in earth, who like our selues are full of imperfections, to take occasion hereby of meditating of that felicity wee shall haue in our heavenly fellowship, when both they and wee shall bee perfected in loue and louelynesse. When wee take pleasure in our earthly prosperity, honours, and riches, mixed with many miseries, and are but Gods common gifts, which be giueth in as great plenty to his slaues as to his sonnes, to his enemies as well as vnto his friends; nor to rest in these worldly delights, and to say with Peter in another case, It is good being here, but raise our mindes and hearts by these occasions, to an higher pitch; thinking how incomparably greater our ioy shall be, when we shall attaine vnto the full fruition of our heavenly happinesse, which shall not be embittered with any miserie, and to the inheritance which God hath prepared in peculiar for his Sonnes and Saints in whom hee is chiefly delighted. And so shall we not dote in our worldly and carnall loue, nor haue our mindes and hearts caught and intrangled in this birdlime of worldly vanities; but vse them onely for present necessity and refreshing, that so wee may againe like Eagles leave the earth, and mount aloft in heavenly meditations and desires.

Of the right
vse of apparell.

Christ. Warf.
second part.

And these things are generally required to the right vse of our prosperitie, and the temporall blessings which do accompanie it. We might adde some special directions concerning the right vse of the chief of them. Amongst which the most ordinary and necessarie, are food and apparell, of the former whereof I haue spoken before, and therefore will onely in some brieft manner say something of the latter, of which I haue intreated more largely in another place. And first let vs know, that wee must vse our apparell to those right ends for which they were ordained, that is, for necessity of nature to couer our nakednesse, and to keepe vs from the iniuries of the weather, and for comelinesse, ornament, and sober delight. In which respect those who profess Christianity, must carefully auoid in the vse of their apparell, pride and vaine glory, of which there is little cause, if wee consider their originall; which was to hide our shame, the fruit of our sinne; that the richest robes are no speciall priuiledges belonging to the faithfull, seeing Pagans and Heathens, worldly and wicked men and women doe most excede in them; and finally, that when wee haue made our selues as braue as Salomon in all his royalty, yet the Lillies and flowres of the field will farre excell vs in their natiue beautie and brauery. And seeing they were giuen to couer our shame, hide our nakednesse, and to preserue vs from the iniuries of the weather, therefore doe those sayle of their end, who out of pride, vanitie and wantonnesse, doe vse such as doe discouer them, namely, such women who lay open their naked brests to publike view, as ensignes of their owne vanity, and alluring baites to draw others vnto folly. Finally, seeing it was giuen for ornament, comelinesse and honest delight, they offend on the contrary side, who being aduanced to high places, fit not their apparell in some moderate sort to their ranke and calling, but goe in sordid and base clothes, out of a penurious minde, in a rich estate, to spare their purses and saue charges. But of this I shall neede to say little, being a rare fault in these dayes, wherein almost all offend, not onely carnall worldlings, but also professors of Religion as much as they, in excessiue brauery about their callings. But seeing there are extremes on both sides, what rules can bee giuen for the obseruing of the meane? Surely no particular rules of direction are expressed in the Scriptures, onely wee are to frame our directions from some generals, as that wee must in all these things vse

Christian

Christian frugality and sobriety, modestie and prudence. As first, in respect of the materials of our apparell, we must not be excessive in cost, nor goe more richly then becommeth our place and calling, but bee herein frugal in our expences, that wee may haue to bestow vpon better vses. Neyther doe I know how they will answeare it before God, who being as Stewards entrusted with Gods talents, doe spend them for the most part in superfluous cost about their owne apparell, and let many of their fellow seruants perish for want of clothing to couer their nakednesse. In respect of the forme, wee ought to vse Christian sobriety and modesty, abstaining from such habits and fashions as are vaine and phantasticall, light and garish, the which is forbidden by the Apostle Peter to Christian Matrons. Secondly, from such as belong not to our sex, as for the man to be womanish, or the woman mannish in their apparell; which tendeth to make the one effeminate, the other impudent, and both of them wanton, lasciuious and luxurious; and is therefore expressly forbidden in the Word of God, as an horrible abomination in his sight. Thirdly, wee must abstaine from strange attire, whether it be such as is strange, in respect of diuers Countries, in which regard we ought not (as it is the comon custome of our people) to imitate the fashions of other nations, which sinne being also brought into fashion, is scarce obserued, but yet so great in Gods sight, that he threatneth to punish it, euen in Princes, themselves and Kings children, and all others that clothe themselves in strange apparell; or whether it bee strange in respect of our profession; as when those that professe Religion, and that they are Citizens of the new Ierusalem, conforme themselves to the vaine, phantasticall, and garish fashions of the most prophane worldlings, who are meere strangers from the Common-wealth of Israel, which is so ordinary in these dayes, that men cannot, and (I feare) God will not, when he cometh to visite, put any difference betweene the one and the other. Finally, wee must obserue Christian prudence in the fashions of our apparell, the property whereof is to be choyce in choosing them, and then constant in keeping them. In which respect, wee are, as much as we can, to auoyd the common abuse of changing fashions, almost as oft as the Moone, which is a notable signe, not onely of pride and vaine-glory; but also of vanity and extreme folly, which is the mother of lightnesse and vnconstancy; seeing men often change, because they haue not wit to choose the best, or hauing chosen it, doe want wit to keepe their choice. The which is the more to be abhorred, and (as much as may be) to bee reformed amongst Christians, in respect of the needlesse cost and great damage which this often change of fashions bringeth, not only on particular persons, but euen vpon our whole Countrey and Common-wealth: I say as much as may bee; seeing they can bee but amongst the last that come into these fashions, the streame of this corruption being so violent, that it carryeth all with it, making them to be pointed at with the finger, and derided as odde and phantasticall, who keepe a fashion that all haue left. In which regard it were much to be wished, that this great abuse of apparell, both for matter and forme, which cannot be amended by any private persons, might be reformed by publike authority and generall consent of the whole Estates.

Iob 3. 7.

BVt aduersity and afflictions take vp no lesse a part of the Christian mans life, seeing there is no day passeth, which bringeth not with it some crosses and miseries; Man being borne vnto trouble, as the sparkes flie upward. In which respect, it is necessary that wee adde some directions for the well-carrying of our selues in this estate. By afflictions, I vnderstand all miseries incident vnto this life, which are the fruits of sinne, and sent of God, either as punishments vpon the wicked, to satisfie the iustice of a seuerer Iudge, or as chastisements inflicted vpon the faithfull, by the hand of a gracious Father, for their correction and amendment. All things also which crosse our desires, and doe molest and grieue vs, either in their owne nature, or in our opinion and conceit, which are as innumerable in their multitude, and intolerable in their supposed waight, as those which are so in deed and truth. Afflictions that haue some true existence, are of diuers kinds; first, publike, as warres, plague, famine, ill gouernement in Magistrates, rebellion and disobedience in subiects, open persecution for the profession of the Truth, suppressing of the Ministry, and the light of the Gospel and such like. Secondly, such as fall out in societies betweene vs and others; as vnfaithfull dealing and fraudulent courses, vsed by those who commerce with vs, wrongs and oppressions, hard censures and ill reports, discourtesie and vnkindnesse from neighbours and friends, with many others of like nature. Thirdly, such as are domesticall and in our owne families; as disobedience and vnruinesse, vnthriftinesse and vntowardnesse; want of loue and dutie in our children; crosnesse and frowardnesse, riot and wastefulnesse, negligence and vnfaithfulnesse in seruants, ill successe in our worldly businesse, dammage and hurt in household commodities and the rest. Finally, such as are personall, as sores and sicknesses, pouertie and want of necessaries, exile, imprisonment, shame, contempt, losse of goods or friends, with innumerable others which are daily incident to the life of man.

§. Sect. 2.
How we ought to prepare our selues before afflictions come, that we may be able to beare them with patience when they come.

In which estate of aduersity and afflictions, accompanied with such innumerable euils and miseries of all kinds; if wee would rightly and as we ought, carry and demeane our selues so as wee should receiue no dammage to our spirituall estate, nor hindrance to our saluation; yea for the present, make our troubles and griefes more easie and tolerable; there are some things to be done before they happen, and some things when they haue already light vpon vs. Before we are to labour in mortifying and subduing of our inordinate affections and vnruely passions, that they may become in all things subiect to the will of God, and in the denying of our selues and our owne wills, that wee may in all estates submit our persons, goods, and liues to his good pleasure, and so take vp our crosse and follow Christ. More especially, we must seeke to moderate our feare, which aggravates our griefes, and is oftentimes more troublesome then the euill feared;

feared; confine our vnlimited hopes, which when they are crossed, as much afflict vs, as the losse of those comforts which we truly ioy; stint our desires according to the necessitie of nature, and not leaue them to the libertie of inordinate concupiscence; bridle and subdue our rash anger, which oppresseth vs with waights of our owne making, and maketh a mountaine of every Mole-hill; mortifie our melancholike discontent by a true faith, which will perswade vs that that estate is best for vs, in which God hath placed vs; pull downe our pride and haughtinesse of spirit, which is one chiefe cause of impatiency, murmuring and repining vnder the crosse; as though we were worse dealt with then we deserue; & cast away al emulation in prosperity, which in our afflictions will vex vs as much in the sight of others rising, as in the sense of our owne fall. Finally, we must not in our prosperity be excessiue in our ioy, for then in our aduersity we will bee as immoderate in our grieffe, lighting by so much the more heauily in our downe-fall of sorrow, by how much wee fell higher from the top of ioy. Secondly, wee must not sayne afflictions vnto our selues, nor make those things become crosses by a false conceit, which others would esteeme comforts and benefits. We must not become miserable by thinking our selues so, nor make vnto our selues burthens by a false apprehension, when as God doth not impose any vpon vs. Thirdly, we must not by feare anticipate our grieffe, nor make our selues miserable before our time, by pulling crosses presently vpon vs, through a fearefull and cowardly expectation, which either would neuer happen, or not of a long season. Fourthly, though we must not anticipate them by feare, nor make our selues presently miserable, because wee suppose we shall be so in the time to come, yet wee must by wise and Christian prouidence foresee them before they happen, not onely that wee may vse all good meanes to preuent them, but if they must needs befall vs, that wee may be prepared and so armed with patience, that they may not hurt vs. For that which is (it may bee) fabulously reported of the Cockatrice, is heere rightly moralized; If wee see them first by a wise and working prouidence, they will lose all their vigour and venome, dye and doe vs no harme; but if they first reflect vpon vs their malignant eyes, before we discern their approaching, they will hurt and kill our soules with their poysonous influences. Fifthly, wee must not in our prosperity set our hearts and affections vpon any worldly things or temporall benefits; for they who immoderately loue them when they haue them, will grieue as immoderately when they lose them; and if we looke vpon them as fee-simples & perpetuities, we shalbe more impatient in our sorrow when we are turned out of them as tenants at wil. Sixthly, we must not either cōtemne afflictions before they assault vs, nor yet conceiue that they are so strong and vresistable, that it is in vaine to oppose their fury. For a contemned enemy, though weake, getteth an easie conquest, because we being vnprepared, he findeth no resistance. And hee that is possessed with too much feare, out of an opinion of his enemies strength and his owne weakenesse, is ready to flie or yeeld before the skirmish. And therefore as we must not securely presume of victory, in confidence of our owne strength and our enemies weakenesse, so must we be bold and courageous in the assurance of Gods assistance, and as the Apostle speaketh,

Heb. 5. 13.

Heb. 12. 6.

neither despise the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when we are rebuked of him. Lastly, we must take heed, that we doe not wilfully runne into afflictions, but vse all lawfull meanes to preuent them before they come, or to bee freed from them when they are inflicted. For he that loueth danger, shall perish in it, and hee that voluntarily when he needeth not, layeth a crosse vpon his owne shoulders, hath no promise that God will take it off. Wee must drinke of this bitter cup, but it is onely when our heauenly Father doth put it into our hands, otherwise we cannot say that we are chastized by him, but that wee scourge our selues with whips of our owne making, like the Lyon which is said to prouoke himselfe to anger, when there is none to hurt him, by beating himselfe with his owne taile. And as we must not voluntarily take crosses vpon vs when we may lawfully auoyd them, so may we not lye vnder them still, when God giueth vs lawfull meanes to be freed from them; but as we are to pray that we may not be led into temptation, so also that we may be deliuered from euill.

That we must
beare our afflictions with patience, and what things
are required

Psal. 39. 9.

Iob 39. 37.

Heb. 12. 6.

Ier. 9. 3.

Esa. 53. 7.

And these are the rules which are to bee obserued before afflictions befall vs. In our afflictions, the mayne duty to be performed, is, that we beare them with patience, which is that passiue obedience whereby wee submit our selues vnto Gods will, with all meekenesse, humility, and contentation in all estates, bearing his fatherly chastisements quietly, constantly, and willingly, till hee deliuer vs; and giue vnto vs lawfull meanes to bee freed from our afflictions. So that if wee would rightly demean our selues in the time of our troubles, wee must beare them with patience, vnto which is required, first, obedience, humility, and contentation, whereby wee meekely submit our selues vnto Gods good pleasure to bee chastized of him, and to beare that crosse which he imposeth, saying with Eli, It is the Lord, let him doe what seemeth good vnto him; and with Dauid, Heere I am, let him doe vnto me, as it seemeth good in his eyes; and with our Saviour Christ; Not as I will, but as thou wilt. Secondly, that we beare our crosse quietly, with Dauid, not opening our mouthes to murmure and mutter, because it is the Lord that hath imposed it, and professing with Iob, that we will lay our hands vpon our mouthes, keepe silence, and speake no more. And howsoeuer we may and ought to grieue moderately in our afflictions, as being the chastizements of our heauenly Father, for our sinnes, which the Apostle telleth vs we must not despise, yet we must labour as much as may be, to be free from tumultuous passion, from repining against Gods providence, or raging against the inferiour meanes of our afflictions, which are but as rods in his hands; imitating as neere as wee can the example of our Saviour Christ, who was brought out as a sheepe to the slaughter, and as a sheepe before the shearer is dumbe, so opened he not his mouth. Thirdly, there is required constancy, whereby wee resolute to beare our burthen so long, till God who laid it vpon vs, doe put to his helping hand and take it off; that is, we must not vse vnlawfull meanes to shift it from vs, nor murmure against Gods providence whilest it lyeth heavy vpon vs, but hold out to beare it with all patience, till God giue vs lawfull meanes to be eased of it. Which that we may doe, we must, after one assault is past, prepare our selues for another, and like good Pilots in a storme, after wee haue broken many billowes, we are not to be secure, but still be in readinesse expecting others, others, neuer ceasing our care and diligence till, we be safely arrived in the Hauens of rest. And this our Sauour hath warned vs of, when hee saith, that he who will bee his Disciple, must take up his crosse daily and follow him; And the Apostle James would not haue our patience, onely to begin well, but to haue her perfect worke and lacke nothing. Lastly, there is required to this patience, that we beare our afflictions willingly and cheerefully; not because we can doe no otherwise, but with all alacrity and readinesse, as being sent of God, who by his wisdom and power can; and in respect of his goodnesse and truth, will dispose of them for our good. And this our cheerefulnesse must shew it selfe in our readinesse to praise and magnifie Gods Name: not so much in regard of the afflictions themselves (though in respect of that greater measure, which our sinnes haue deserued, wee haue in our greatest afflictions iust cause to blesse God with Iob, and with the Church to acknowledge the mercies of the Lord, in that we are not vtterly consumed) as in regard of his wisdom, goodnesse, and truth, whereby he causeth them to worke together for the best, and to serue as meanes to further our saluation. And this the Apostle Peter requireth, that if any man suffer as a Christian, he should not be ashamed, but glorifie God on this behalfe. The which was practised by Paul and Silas, who when they were cast into the dungeon, and after they were cruelly whipped, put into the stocks, bore all with patience, and exprest their thankfulness by singing of Psalmes. Secondly, our cheerefulnesse must shew it selfe, by our spirituall reioicing and ioy in the holy Ghost; not in respect of our afflictions themselves, which in their owne nature, or as they are fruits of sinne, doe iustly bring with them griefe and mourning, but in respect of the fruits and benefits, which through Gods infinite wisdom and goodnesse, they bring vnto vs in this life and the life to come. And in this regard our Sauour willeth his Disciples to reioyce in their persecutions, because their reward was great in heauen. The which they accordingly performed, reioicing when they were beat at the commandement of the Councell, because they were thought worthy to suffer rebuke for Christs Name. Vnto which high degrees of patience, though wee cannot attaine in any perfection, yet must we labour and strue after them, and though wee cannot hit the marke of perfection, yet we must shoote as neere it as we can, being in the meane time sorry for our wants and infirmities; and vsing all good meanes whereby they may be supplied.

Now the chiefe meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto patience in our tribulations, are principally two; the first, is seruent and effectuell prayer; according to that of the Apostle James; If any of you lacke wisdom, (that is, to beare the crosse of which he there speaketh) let him aske it of God, which giueth to men liberally, reproaching none, and it shall be giuen him. For it is God alone who doth comfort vs in all our tribulations. He is the God of patience and consolation, the Father of mercies, and God of all comforts, by whose wisdom directing vs, and power assisting vs, we are able to doe all things, and preserved from sinking vnder the heauiest afflictions. The second helpe and meanes of working patience in afflictions, is meditation vpon such reasons as may cause and begin it where it is not, and increase it where it is already begun. And these concerne either the induring induring of the crosse, or the end and issue. The former are simple, or comparative. The simple reasons arise either from the causes, which are efficient or finall, or from the subiect and adiuncts of our afflictions. And first, in our meditations we are to consider, that God himselfe is chiefe cause and principall Author of all our afflictions, whatsoeuer bee the meanes and instruments. The which may confirme our patience, and comfort vs in our afflictions, seeing they must needs be good and iust, as comming from him who is the chiefe Goodnesse in himselfe, and the Authour and fountaine of all goodnesse which is in the creatures. Secondly, that hee hath not onely in some generall manner in his eternall counsell preordained our afflictions, and left all the rest to bee disposed by chance and fortune, but that hee specially ordereth and ruleth them with his most wise, iust, and gracious providence, both in respect of their manner, measure, and continuance, making the ends of all inferiour causes to serue for his supreme ends, which are his glory and our saluation. Thirdly, that the meritorious causes of all our afflictions are our sinnes, which are so many and grievous, that our greatest afflictions are farre lesse and lighter, then by our sinnes we haue iustly deserued. Fourthly, that our afflictions are not signes of Gods hatred, nor the punishments of a iust Iudge, but the chastisements and corrections of a gracious Father; and that they proceed from his meere loue; the which appeareth, first, in the measure of our afflictions, both in respect of their quantity and time of continuance. For he hath appointed a measure which cannot be exceeded, and this quantity is small and light; and how long also they shall last and continue, the which time is short and momentany, in comparison of that super-excellent and eternall waight of glory which they shall cause vnto vs. Yea he so measureth our afflictions vnto vs, as that they do not exceed our ability to indure them; seeing he is alwayes ready to lessen our burthen, or to increase our strength that we may be able to beare it. Neither doth the Lord take delight in our smart, to inflict vpon vs more then is needfull, but measureth our afflictions, not according to desert, but so much onely as is necessary for his owne glory and our saluation.

1. Cor. 10. 13.

That our afflictions tend to the setting forth of Gods glory.

Fifthly, let vs also consider the ends of our afflictions, which God propoundeth vnto them, wherein his great loue shineth and appeareth. The first and chiefe whereof, is his owne glory, seeing he manifesteth his power and goodnesse, by assisting vs in our afflictions, and by taking occasion thereby to shew and try his spirituall graces which he hath bestowed vpon vs; the which should comfort vs in all our troubles, seeing God heereby vouchsafeth vs this high priuiledge to be instruments of his glory. The second end, is the good both of our neighbours and our selues. They receiue much good by our afflictions; seeing they learne by our example to feare God in his iudgements, and are restrained from the same sinnes which they see corrected in vs. Secondly, as wee are ensamples of Gods graces shining in this fiery triall, and also through our infirmities of humane frailty, that seeing Gods perfection in our imperfections, and his power and wisdom in our folly and weaknesse, they may take occasion to glorifie him. Thirdly, because by our afflictions wee are made more compassionate and more able and ready to comfort others, with those consolations consolations wherewith our selues haue beene comforted. The which also should make vs patient in our troubles, yea euen to be thankfull, and greatly to reioyce, in that God vseth vs as meanes and instruments of our neighbours good, whom wee ought to loue as our selues, and as much as in vs lieth, to helpe them in all things which may further their saluation.

Secondly let vs consider, that the Lord vseth our afflictions as notable meanes of our owne good, and of deriuing vnto vs many singular benefits, both in respect of this life and the life to come. For first hee vseth them for trials, for the discouery of those spirituall graces which he hath giuen vs; not vnto himselte, who knowing all things, needeth no such helpes, but vnto vs and others, that hee may bee glorified in them, and take occasion thereby to glorifie vs, by crowning his gifts, when by this triall they are approoued, and may also edifie those who obserue them in vs, and mooue them to follow our good example. And likewise for the making knowne of our infirmities and corruptions, that wee may be truly humbled in the sight and sense of them. In which regard, our greatest trials not exceeding our strength, as God hath promised, should bring vnto vs an answerable measure of sound comfort, seeing they are assured signes vnto vs of the greatest measure of sauing graces in vs. Secondly, hee vseth them as effectuell meanes to further our conuersion, fitting and preparing vs thereby for the more diligent hearing of the Word, and so working in vs by both ioyned together, true contrition and humiliation. Thirdly, hee vseth them as speeciall meanes to preuent sinne, and to preserue vs from falling into it; and also to mortifie and subdue those corruptions, by all good meanes, which adhere and cleaue vnto vs; as pride, carnall concupiscence, selfe-loue, and loue of the world. The which should greatly increase our patience, and comfort vs in afflictions: for if we are willing to indure so much, to be eased of bodily and temporall euill, how much more should we chearefully indure any afflictions, to be freed from those which are spirituall and euerlasting, as the Apostle reasoneth? Fourthly, he vseth them as notable helpes to increase in vs all his spirituall graces; as sauing knowledge and remembrance of God, a lively faith, vnfaigned repentance, firme assurance, hope, loue, feare, patience, and humility, both by making vs more carefull in the vse of the meanes whereby they are begun and increased in vs, and by exercising them with these trials. And also to bring forth the fruits of these graces by new obedience, prayer, and more zealous performance of all other duties of his seruice. Finally, by our afflictions, the Lord also maketh vs more forward to imbrace all vertues, and to performe all Christian duties, which concerne both our neighbours and our selues. For whereas prosperity vsually encourageth men to wrong and oppression, affliction being sanctified vnto vs, is a notable motive to perswade vs to carry our selues iustly in all our actions; to be mercifull and compassionate towards others in their miseries; and to be meeke, humble and courteous towards all men. So also they increase the knowledge of our selues, our courage, Christian fortitude and strength to beare our crosses and miseries, as being the spiritual exercise of these graces, and finally our temperance, sobriety, modesty, chastity, as it were easie to shew, if we could heere insist in these particulars. In respect also of the life to come, the Lord by our affliction deriueth much good vnto vs, vsing them as effectuell meanes, to preserue vs from condemnation, and to further our eternall glory and happinesse, both by assuring vs of these ioyes (they seruing as signes of our adoption and saluation) and by fitting and preparing vs by them for his heauenly Kingdome, by making them to serue as a way to bring vs thither, & to keepe vs from wandring in the broad way that leadeth to destruction. Yea, he maketh them to serue as meanes to increase our glory and heauenly ioyes, seeing, according to the measure of our afflictions, he giueth vnto vs an answerable measure of his graces, that we may be able to beare them, & according to the measure of our graces, he proportioneth our glory and future happinesse.

That this world is a place destinated to afflictions and trials.

From the subiect place of our afflictions also, we may confirme our patience, and increase our comfort. For God hath appointed vs in this world to suffer afflictions, and to inherite happinesse in the life to come; he hath made it for a place of triall and tentation, preparation and spirituall exercise; not for a Paradise of delight, but for a pilgrimage, and therefore we must looke for pilgrims entertainment; for a place, not of triumph, but of warfare, and therefore wee must expect conflicts, and the hard vsage of poore Souldiers. Againe, wee may comfort our selues by considering the adiuncts of our afflictions, as their necessity, for wee are preordained vnto them, as being necessary for the effecting the great worke of our saluation, and therefore it is in vaine to struggle with them, seeing thereby we may gaule our neckes, but not shake off our yoke, their manifold profit, of which I haue spoken, their shortnesse of continuance, and lightnesse in respect of that waight of glory, which they shall cause vnto vs. Finally, we may be comforted by considering the fellowship & assistance which we haue in all our afflictions, for we haue more with vs then are against vs; as innumerable numbers of holy Angels which pitch their tents about vs, & watch ouer vs to keep vs safe in all our wayes; Iesus Christ also, who as our yokefellow beareth greatest waight, & as our Head comunicateth with vs in all our griefes, and assisteth vs in our crosses and calamities; and God himselfe who is all-sufficient, and no lesse ready & able to vphold vs with the one hand, then to wastle with vs, and loade vs with the other.

§. Sect. 7.

That all the faithfull haue been partakers of the like, or greater afflictions with vs.

And these are the comforts which arise out of a simple consideration of our afflictions; besides which, there are others which may be raised by comparing our lesser afflictions, with those greater which others haue & shall suffer. For as the Scriptures foretell these afflictions of the faithfull, so they shew that it hath alwayes bene their portion to beare them; yea, looke for the most part how much they haue excelled in Gods graces, and so much they haue exceeded in the measure of their afflictions, as we may obserue in the examples of Adam, Abel, Abraham, Isaac, Iacob, Moses, Iob, Dauid, Paul, and many others. But especially we may comfort our selues in our greatest afflictions, by considering how light and small they are, in comparison of those grieuous punishments, which Christ the Son of Gods loue did suffer for vs both in his life and death. All which he suffered being iust & innocent, for our sins, leauing vs an example who are his members, to follow his steps in the same way that leadeth to happinesse; seeing God hath preordained those to be like Christ in his sufferings, who shall be like vnto him in glory.

Finally,

Finally, we may comfort our selues, by comparing our afflictions with the punishments of the wicked, from which Christ hath freed vs; seeing theirs are intolerable, but ours light & easie; theirs euermlasting, but ours short and momentany; notwithstanding that our own consciences wil tell vs, that our sins, both in their quantity and quality, number and waight, haue much exceeded many of theirs. And lastly, by cōparing them with our future ioyes and heavenly happinesse, in which respect the Apostle telleth, that the afflictions of this present world, are not worthy the glory that shall be reuealed: for they are (as he saith in another place) light and momentany, but they shall cause vnto vs, a farre most excellent, and an eternall waight of glory.

Rom. 8. 18.

2. Cor. 4. 17.

§. Sect. 3.
Comforts arising from the good issue of all our afflictions.

Esa. 30. 18.

And thus we may comfort our selues with present consolations whilst we endure the crosse. Besides which, there are others which arise from their issue and end, and from our assurance which we haue of our deliuerance out of our afflictions, in that time which is most fit & seasonable for Gods glory and our saluation; seeing we haue his promise for it, who is faithfull and true, good and gracious vnto all that trust in him. And in the meane time he is present with vs to heare, helpe, and relieue vs, who is most wise and all-sufficient, taking notice of all our troubles, and knowing how to deliuer vs in due time. Now if the Lord for causes best knowne to himselfe, deferreth to heare, helpe, and deliuer vs, we must waite his leasure, and vse all good meanes to strengthen our faith, hope, and patience, by meditating on his gracious promises, and on their truth and infallibility, on his infinite wise dome, which knoweth better then we when our deliuerance is most seasonable, and his omnipotent power and all-sufficiency, whereby he is able to effect it when he pleaseth. By considering also that God vsually deferreth to helpe those, whom he hath most strengthened in grace, and who are most deare vnto him, but neuer wholly failed to performe his promises at last to those who haue waited vpon him. Finally, that he deferreth to deliuer vs for the furthering of our eternall good and saluation; and that he waiteth vpon vs to saue and deliuer vs in the fittest time; and therefore there is great reason that we should wait vpon him. And these are the meanes for the strengthening of our faith, hope, and patience, when God deferreth to deliuer vs, which respect himselfe and his dealing with vs; besides which there are others that respect our selues, which is, first that wee often renew our repentance, without which, we can haue no hope of helpe and deliuerance. Secondly, that we renew our faith in Gods promises, the which is the condition of the Couenant of grace between God & vs, whereby he hath assured vs of them. Thirdly, that we humbly submit our selues to Gods good pleasure, which is one maine end why God correcteth vs, vnto which when he hath attained, he will cease his chastisements, & deliuer vs from our afflictions. Fourthly, that we trust in God at all times, both in the presence, & absence of inferiour meanes. Fifthly, we must be frequent & feruent in Prayer; and lastly, when we are freed frō any afflictions, we must be thankfull, and render vnto God praise and thankgiuing. And thus with as much breuity as I could, I haue set down how we are to carry our selues in the time of our afflictions; if any need or desire to haue these heads & maine points more fully and largely handled; I referre them to the third part of my Christian Warfare, where I purposely haue entreated of this subiect.

CAP. XXXVI.

Of those Christian duties which are to be performed in the Euening and Night.

§. Sect. 1.

That the Euening must not bee spent in sloth and idlenesse.

HAuing intreated of those Christian duties belonging to the day; it now followeth that wee set downe some directions how wee are to behaue our selues when the day is ended. And these are such as concerne our carriage in the Euening, before wee goe to rest; or afterwards, when wee are laid in our beds. In the Euening, if we be not taken vp with the duties of our callings; wherein in the day wee were imployed (as it is the case of many, whose states, trades, and necessary occasions require the continuance of their labours) we must not vpon the cessation of our paines, thinke our selues at full liberty to thinke, speake, and doe what we list (as it is the practice of many, who when they cannot worke any longer in their callings, spend their long Euenings in the winter season, either in sloth and idlenesse, or in vnlawfull gaming, or in vaine, fruitlesse, and oftentimes hurtfull and vsauoury communication, by traducing their absent neighbours, and blemishing their credits with slanders or vncharitable truths, or corrupting those that are present, by light and wanton discourses) but we must be carefull of spending our precious time in some meditations, speeches, and actions which are profitable for our selues, and for the edification of those that are in our company and society. For though it may bee very lawfull, and sometime necessary, after our wearisome businesse are dispatched, to take some liberty, and to spend some conuenient time in resting of our bodies, or refreshing our minds with some honest recreations; yet me thinkes it is too much, that so great a part of our time should be so imployed; seeing our liues are so short and vncertaine, and our affaires of much greater waight and importance, which tend mainely to the aduancement of Gods glory and our owne saluation, being so many, might with much more profit and true comfort challenge vnto them a great part of this time. In which regard, though I would not prescribe lawes to bind the consciences of my brethren, but leave vnto them their liberty to bee guided with Christian prudence, yet I would, as in other things, so herein also giue my aduice; namely, that they would improoue this time to the best, as becommeth wise redeemers of it, so as they may giue some good account of it vnto God when he calleth them vnto it; and not thinke that he hath giuen vnto them the comfortable warmth of the fire, to make them freeze harder in the dregs of sinne, nor the light of their candles, that they should act by them the workes of darkenesse, but that he bestoweth vpon these corporall comforts, that they might be furtherances vnto their soules in the spirituall growth, vsing such good exercises as may tend to the enlightening of their mindes in the knowledge of God and his will, and may warme their hearts with true and seruent zeale in the louing and imbracing of them.

And first, it were fit that some little part of this time, after the surceasing

of our labours were spent in some short meditation, wherein wee are to recount and recall to our remembrance the special fauours and mercies of God, which in the day past hee hath vouchsafed vnto vs, either in deliuering vs from dangers corporall or spirituall, of sinne or of punishment, or in bestowing vpon vs reall and positive benefits, as his blessing vpon our labours, whereby they haue prospered vnder our hands, the comfort of his creatures, the loue and assistance of our friends, and such like: lifting vp our hearts vnto God in the acknowledgement of these benefits, and rendring vnto him such thanks and praise as is due vnto him. Secondly, as wee haue best opportunity, both in respect of our leasure and our company, it were good to spend some part of this time in reading of the Scriptures, or other holy and religious writings, the Histories of the Church, or some such Ciuill and Morall Bookes and Stories, as may make vs grow in grace and spirituall wisdom, or at least, in honest prudence, whereby we may be directed for the better carriage of our selues in the affaires of this life, by adding vnto our owne knowledge the wisdom of others, and the experience of former times. Thirdly, as occasion serueth, it is good to spend some part of this time in Christian conferences, either with our friends and familiars that accompany vs, or with those of our owne family, husbands, wiues, children, seruants, labouring in our speeches to build vp one another in all sauing grace, and to bee mutually bettered in the more cleare vnderstanding of the truth, more hearty embracing it in our hearts and affections, and the more zealous and fruitfull practice of it in our liues. But though I chiefly commend these Christian and religious conferences, yet would I not be so taken, as though I meant hereby to exclude all others, for it is lawfull also to spend some of our time in ciuill discourses, and about the affaires of this life, the duties of our callings, our worldly estates, the disposing and ordering of our businesse, or any other subiect not idle, vnprofitable, or sinfull, which present occasion shall offer vnto vs as most seasonable. Onely I would aduise, that wee doe not (as it is the common custome amongst the most) spend our time so wholly about these, as that wee doe thereby exclude the other, which in their nature are much more excellent, and for our vse farre more profitable and necessary. Lastly, wee must spend some part of this time in praying God by singing of Psalmes, as our company and occasions will giue vs opportunity; but aboue all other exercises, wee must constantly, either before or after Supper (as in our discretion wee see best and fittest for the assembling of our company) pray with our families, as before wee gaue direction for the like exercise in the Morning; Of both which, my purpose is (God assisting) to set downe some formes in the end of this Worke, for the direction and benefit of weaker Christians.

And these are the duties which are to be performed in the euening. In the night we are also to watch ouer our thoughts and actions, that they may in some sort bee sutable to those in the day, and that in all of them wee may carry our selues so as becommeth Christians. And in this regard there are some duties to be performed at our going to bed, and some in the rest of the night. At our going to bed we are generally to consider, that going to bed.

wee are still in the sight and presence of God, who seeth our downe-lying and our vprising, and searcheth our most secret actions, yea euen our hearts and reines. And that there is also a guard of holy Angels, who are appointed by our great Lord, to pitch their tents about vs, and to watch ouer vs, that they may preserue vs from all perils and dangers, vnto which wee are, waking and sleeping, continually subiect. In regard of which glorious and holy presence, we are as carefully and conscionably to behaue our selues in all Christian duties, as if all the world should looke vpon vs. The first whereof is, that at our lying down, when all things being quiet about vs, and wee freed from all worldly distractions, wee spend some little time in holy meditations, calling to our remembrance, and examining our conuersation, how wee haue behaued our selues in the performance of all Christian duties required of vs in the day past, of which we haue before spoken. As first, how wee haue performed those generall duties which belong to euery day and all parts of it. Whether and in what manner wee haue renewed our couenant with God, by renewing of our faith and repentance. How wee haue sought the Lord our God, by consecrating our selues wholly both in our soules and bodies vnto his worship and seruice; and haue laboured to make him our owne in and through Christ, and to recouer our right in him, which we had lost in Adam. How wee haue profited in the sauing knowledge of him, and in our adhering vnto him with our hearts and affections, how our sweet communion with him hath bin increased, and the comfortable fellowship of his holy Spirit dwelling in our hearts sealed and assured in vs; and how we haue indeuoured to haue and hold his face and fauour in Iesus Christ. Whether wee haue kept the whole Armour of God fast buckled vnto vs, and if wee haue failed herein, then in what graces wee haue found greatest defect. How wee haue indeuoured to arme our selues against all sinne, and what new strength wee haue gathered to withstand and mortifie our corruptions, especially those vnto which wee are naturally most inclined; and with what desire and resolution wee haue imbraced all vertue, and laboured to performe all Christian duties vnto God, our neighbours and our selues. Whether wee haue rightly disposed our hearts, tongues and actions, so as they might in all things bee conformable to the Law of God. How we haue submitted our selues in all things to Gods will and pleasure, and resigned our soules, bodies, and states to be governed and guided by his wise providence, without murmuring and repining. Finally, whether wee haue beene frequent and seruent in pouring forth our soules in prayer vpon all good occasions, desiring the things wee neede, and praying him for those benefits which we haue received.

§. Sect. 4.
That we must examine our selues, how we haue spent the day past.

So likewise we may examine our selues, how we haue performed those duties which belong to the particular parts of the day; As whether wee did awake with God, and offred vnto him our morning sacrifice of prayer and meditation; with what faithfulness we haue walked in the duties of our callings, and how therein we haue ioynly aymed at Gods glory, and the good of our neighbours, together with our owne profit; whether we haue done the duties of them in the obedience and loue of God, and haue

haue performed our earthly duties, with heauenly minds and affections. Whether we haue rightly vsed our recreations, refreshing our bodies and mindes with lawfull sports, in a good manner, to right ends, with obseruation of the rules and cautions required in them, especially in respect of their time, that we haue not beene ouer-lauish to the thrusting out, but rather fitting our selues for better exercises. How wee haue carried our selues in receiuing of our food, blessing it by prayer and thanksgiuing, and vsing it with temperance and sobriety, so as wee haue thereby beene better fitted for Gods seruice. Whether wee haue rightly vsed our solitarinesse, spending our time neither idly nor vnprofitably: and how we haue behaued our selues in our society, both in our choise of good company, and in performing with them all Christian duties of piety, Iustice, and ciuill honesty, for the mutuall good of one another. How we haue performed duties belonging to the family, and what care wee haue had, that not onely our selues, but also those who are vnder our charge should serue the Lord. How we haue carried our selues in our prosperity, by praising God for it, and by so vsing it, as that wee might be the better inabled to glorify him, and to performe all good duties to our neighbours, and how also we haue profited by our afflictions and chastizements, for the drawing of vs neerer vnto God in all holy and righteous duties, and the weaning of our hearts and affections from the loue of the world. The which examination wee should not thinke too tedious and laborious, if at least wee be in our health and strength, and not disabled thereunto by our weakenesse, infirmities, and vnaptnesse to take our rest, if at the first it be but a little disturbed; in which case if our employments will afford vnto vs any fit leysure and opportunity, it were good to allot some short time vnto this exercise before our going to bed, seeing if wee bee once accustomed vnto it, wee shall performe it, at least in those points which are most necessary for our owne particular, with great facility and in a little time. Yea in truth if wee would but consider how farre some of the Heathens themselues haue proceeded in this dutie, and what singular fruits and benefits arise from it, we might well be ashamed who professe Christianity, of our great neglect, and bee moued to spare some little time from our sleepe, when as wee may improue it to so much spirituall profit and aduantage. I vse (saith Seneca) this authority, and daily pleade my cause with my selfe. When the light is taken away, and my wife being acquainted with my custome, holdeth her peace, I examine vvith my selfe the vvhole day past, and reuiue all that I haue said or done. I hide nothing from mine ovne scrutiny, I passe by nothing; for vvhy should I feare any thing, by reason of my errours, vvhen as I can say, See that thou doest it no more, and for this time I vvill pardon thee. And the same counsaile hee giueth to his friend Lucilius. Conuince thy selfe (saith hee) as much as thou canst, search into thy selfe. First, execute the office of an accuser, then, of a Iudge, and lastly, of a mediator to craue pardon; and sometime find out thy selfe. For hee willingly erreth, who knoweth not his errour, and too much loueth himselfe, who will haue others erre, that his errour may lye hid. By which exercise wee should receiue singular profit: For hereby wee should preserue our soules

Vt in hac potestate, & quotidie apud me causam dico, &c. Senec. de ira, lib. 3. cap. 36

and hearts in a thriving estate, when wee doe like wise Merchants and shopkeepers, examine them and search ouer our consciences (as it were) our bookes of accounts, to see whether wee haue gayned or lost in our spirituall trading, by examining what wee haue receiued, and what wee haue layd out: which if we would doe, we should not easily be cast behind hand, when as we preuent our errors, and vse meanes to repaire our losses in their first beginnings, nor (as many are) be bankrupted in our estates at vnawares for want of care to examine them. Wee should sleepe much more sweetely and securely, when as we haue so composed and set straight our reckonings, as that wee neede not to feare though the great Iudge should before morning call vs to an account. In which regard, the same Author commendeth this exercize. The minde (saith he) is daily to be called to an account. Sextius vsed at the end of the day, and when he retired himselfe to rest; to examine his minde. What euill of thine hast thou cured? What vice hast thou withstood? in what art thou better, that anger will cease or be more moderate; which knoweth that it shall not escape the censure of an vnpartiall Iudge? What therefore is more excellent then this custome of examining euery day? How sweete is that sleepe which followeth the reuiue of our selues? How quiet, sound and free, when the minde is commended or admonished, and as a watchman and secret censurer of it selfe, doth iudge of it owne manners? We should also preferue our hearts in their purity and soundnesse, if not from all infirmities and corruptions, yet at least from deepe putrification and the festering fores of sinne, when as we cure the wounds being yet greene, and cast out sinne by repentance, as soone as it is first entred, not suffering it to lodge and sleep with vs, no not one night. We should hereby keepe our spirituall state well settled, so as it would not easily be shaken, or at least ouerthrowne with the assaults of the enemies of our saluation, when as we constantly looke to our Christian Armour, and watching ouer our hearts, as our chiefe forts, repaire the breaches as soone as they are made. Finally, wee shall preuent carnall security and hardnesse of heart, when wee examine our selues daily; and bee better fitted and prepared for the day of death and Iudgement, when as wee keepe our accounts euen, and haue our bookes of reckonings betweene God and our consciences made vp and in continuall readinesse. For he may soone cleare his accounts with his Master at the yeeres end, who like a faithfull and diligent Factor, doth make all reckonings straight at the end of euery day.

§. Sect. 5.
Meditations at our first lying downe.

Besides this examination, there are also other Meditations very profitable; as to call to our remembrance Gods manifold blessings and benefits bestowed vpon vs the day past, respecting our soules, bodies, and states; in that he hath preserued vs from innumerable euils, with which many others haue bene overtaken; for continuing vnto vs still the acceptable time and day of saluation, and suffering vs with so much patience to continue in this life, that we may make our calling and election sure, notwithstanding our manifold and grievous sinnes; for giuing vnto vs some poore desires and indeuours to doe him seruice, and to accept of it in Christ, though in it selfe full of wants and imperfections. Especially, if we haue in any measure performed the former duties of the daily exercise, we must not forget to render vnto God the praise and glory due vnto him for it, by the gracious assistance of whole holy Spirit, we, who of our selues, are not able so much as to thinke a good thought, haue beene inabled vnto them. So likewise it is requisite, that at our lying downe we call our sinnes to our remembrance, the duties which wee haue omitted, or corruptly performed, and the vices which we haue committed, and though through Gods mercy wee haue beene preserued from grosser sinnes, yet wee must not thinke our selues so excused, but call to minde our frailties and infirmities, for which, God in his righteous iudgement might condemne vs. Our sloth and backwardnesse to good duties, our coldnesse, wearinesse, and many distractions in Gods seruice, our excesse in mirth or sorrow, the neglect of our Christian watch ouer our thoughts, senses, words and workes; our idlenesse or vnprofitablenesse, pride, selfe-loue, vniust anger, sinister conceits, and vniust censures of our neighbours, and such like. In the sight and sense whereof, we must truely humble our soules before God by vnfeigned repentance, and earnestly begge in Christs Name mercy and forgiuenesse. Finally, it is profitable then to remember our mortality and mutability, death and Iudgement; that we who now goe well to bed, may shortly bee cast vpon the bed of sicknesse, and we that now liue, may within a while be imprisoned vnder the arrest of death; yea, let vs not looke vpon it as a thing farre off, but approching at the threshold, and ready to knocke at the doore, and thinke that this very night, as well as another, may bee the time when God by sicknesse and death will summon vs to appeare before his Tribunall. And if in respect of thy health and strength this seemeth vnlkely, consider that it hath beene the case of many before thee; and that which befallerth any, may happen to all. In which regard, let vs not dare to sleepe, till through Christ we are at peace with God, haue made our accounts euen by pleading Christs satisfaction and full payment, and haue our pardon in our hands to shew, sealed to all the faithfull with his blood, and to vs in particular, by his holy Spirit and a liuely faith, applying the fruit and benefit of his death vnto vs. And then resigning our soules and bodies into the hands of him who is a faithfull Sauour, and able to keepe safe whatsoeuer is intrusted vnto him, we may with Dauid, lying downe in peace, take our rest; because it is he onely that maketh vs dwell in safety.

In the night also there are other duties to bee performed; for euen then we must seeke the Lord, according to the example of the Church, which professeth, that with her soule shee desired the Lord in the night, and that with her Spirit within her shee would seeke him early. So the Spouse in the Canticles; By night on my bed I sought him whom my soule loneth. And the Prophet Dauid was careful euen in the night to approoue himselfe vnto God, by performing these religious exercises; I haue (saith he) remembered thy Name, O Lord, in the night, and haue kept thy Law. And this the Lord requireth of vs, as being Lord both of night and day, according to that of the Psalmist; The day is thine, and the night also is thine. And will be serued as with our whole hearts, so with our whole time, seeing he is the God of our saluation, who day and night preserueth vs, and multiplyeth his blessings vpon vs, whereby he encourageth vs to doe him seruice. Yea, euen in the night the Lord goeth in his visitation to see how wee carry our selues, and will

will call vs to account, either to reward vs if we doe well, or to punish vs if wee neglect our dutie; as Dauid sheweth by his owne experience; Thou hast prooued my heart (saith he) thou hast visited mee in the night; thou hast tryed me, and shalt finde nothing. And therefore wee must in the night approue our hearts and actions vnto him; and not thinke that the darkenesse giueth vs any priuiledge to doe the workes of darkenesse; seeing as the Psalmist speaketh; The darkenesse hideth not from him, but the night shineth as the day; the darkenesse and the light are both alike to him. Now the duties of the night doe consist chiefly in Prayer and Meditation. For when wee awake out of sleepe, we must not suffer our mindes to roue after worldly vanities, nor our hearts to be fixed vpon them, but as wee are to esteeme the Lord, and spirituall and heauenly things our chiefe treasure, so our hearts and minds at our first awaking must be exercised about them, as their chiefe ioy and comfort. And first, we must lift them vp vnto God in prayer, according to the example of holy Dauid, who professeth, that in the night his song should be with him, and his prayer vnto the God of his life. And againe; O Lord God of my saluation, I haue cried day and night before thee. The which is chiefly to be done, when the hand of God is heavy vpon vs by some grieuous affliction, because then being freed from all worldly distractions, we may with greatest zeale and feruency of Spirit, powre foorth our soules before God for helpe and deliuerance. And thus Dauid in his great extremity calleth vpon God day and night; O my God (saith he) I cry in the day time, but thou hearest not, and in the night season I am not silent. So the afflicted Church and people of God, in their heart cryed vnto the Lord; O wall of the daughter of Sion, let teares runne downe like a river day and night; giue thy selfe no rest, let not the apple of thine eyes cease. Arise, cry out in the night, in the beginning of the watches, powre out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord; lift up thine hands towards him, for the life of the yong children that faint for hunger in the top of euery street. And our Sauour Christ himselfe in his bitter agonie, made choyce of the night, as the fittest time for those powerfull and effectuell prayers which hee made for himselfe and his Church vnto God his Father. Whereby wee learne, that when we haue suites of great importance, which wee would sollicite with all earnestnesse and importunity, the night is a fit time to commend them vnto God in our feruent prayers. Yea euen at ordinary times, if there be any speciall suite which we would make vnto God, either for the assistance of his holy Spirit, for the mortifying of some strong corruption which cleaueth vnto vs, or the pardon of any sinne, which hath lately wounded our consciences, or for the obtaining of some speciall grace, wherein we finde our selues most defectiue, or for deliuerance from some imminent danger; it is most profitable that at our first waking we presently pitch vpon them, and in some short Prayer and earnest desire of the heart, offer vp our suites vnto God in the mediation of Iesus Christ. And as we are thus in the night to pray for the things we want, so also ought we to praise and giue thanks vnto God for his gifts and blessings already receiued; according to the example of Dauid, who did not content himselfe to shew foorth Gods louing kindnesse in the morning, but also his faithfulness in the night. The which duty, vpon extraordinary occasions, must be extraordinarily performed, and in some set and solemne manner; as when our hearts are raiſhed with the apprehenſion of Gods mercy and bounty, after the receiuing of ſome ſpeciall and ſingular benefit; as we ſee alſo in Dauids practice, who at midnight did riſe to giue thanks vnto the Lord, as he profeſſeth. The which his night-ſongs as they were his ſolace in the time of his flouriſhing proſperity, ſo the remembrance of them were his chiefe comfort in his deepeſt diſtreſſe, as being infallible ſignes of Gods loue, and his owne integrity. For when his afflictions both of body and mind were ſo great, that he had no manner of conſolation in his preſent ſenſe and feeling, he calleth to remembrance his ſongs in the night, and the ſweet viſitations of Gods holy Spirit in theſe ſpirituall exerciſes. Which example let vs learne to imitate; and if no other occaſion come preſently to our minds, yet at leaſt let vs when we awake, liſt vp our ſoules vnto God, praizing him for his gracious preſeruatiō hitherto, and our quiet reſt, and commending our ſoules and bodies into his gracious protection for the reſt of the night, deſiring the continuance of his fauour for our preſeruatiō, and of our quiet ſleepe, for the reſreſhing and ſtrengthening of our fraile and weake bodies.

Pſal. 119. 61.

The other duty is meditation, in which we are to exerciſe our mindes after an holy and religious manner, when wee cannot, or liſt not to ſleepe, and not ſuffer them to range and roue after idle, or hurtfull vanities, which will not bring vnto vs any profit. The ſubiect matter of which our meditation may be diuers, according to our ſeueral occaſions and eſtates. As firſt and principally we muſt call God to our remembrance, and meditate on his ſauing attributes, his infinite loue, mercy, goodneſſe and bounty towards vs, wherein holy Dauid tooke ſingular comfort and delight: My ſoule (ſaith he) ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſſe; and my mouth ſhall praize thee with ioyfull lips: when I remember thee vpon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches. Secondly, we may make ſome part of the Word of God, the ſubiect of our meditation, as Dauid alſo did, whoſe eyes prevented the night-watches, that hee might meditate in Gods Word. The which he maketh a ſpeciall note of a bleſſed man, that hee taketh ſuch delight in the Law of God, that he meditateth therein day and night. And thus we may take occaſion to thinke of the purity and perfection of the Law, what exact righteouſneſſe it requireth, and how farre wee come ſhort of this perfection, that ſo we may be humbled in the ſight of our owne corruptions and imperfections; or of the excellency of the Goſpell, and of the gracious promiſes therein contained, applying them by a liuely faith vnto our ſelues, that our hearts thereby may be replenished, and euen raiſhed with the ſweet comforts of Gods holy Spirit, or of Gods manifold bleſſings beſtowed vpon vs, eſpecially the day paſt, and the ſingular priuiledges which we haue through Ieſus Chriſt; of which we ſhall haue occaſion to ſpeake more hereafter. Or finally, we may thinke of ſome texts of Scripture, which haue ſome ſimilitude with our preſent eſtate. As that it is now high time to awake out of ſleepe, for now is our ſaluation neerer then when we beleeued. The night is farre ſpent, the day is at hand; let vs therefore caſt off the workes of darkneſſe, and let vs put on the armour of light: let vs walke honeſtly as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenneſſe, nor in chambering and wantonneſſe, tonnesse, not in strife and enuying, &c. And againe, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand vp from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light. But ye breithren are not in darknesse, that the day of the Lord should ouertake you as a thiefe. Yee are all children of light, and the children of the day: wee are not of the night, nor of darknesse; therefore let vs not sleepe as doe others, but let vs watch and bee sober, &c. Finally, we may from present occasions haue good matter ministred vnto vs for our meditations; as from the terrour of darknesse, wee may thinke how much more fearefull is the spirituall darknesse of sinne, from which the Lord hath graciously deliuered vs, leauing innumerable others to liue and dye in it; and that horrible estate of the wicked, who are cast into vtter darknesse, vnto whom the light shall neuer appeare, nor the Sun of righteousnesse euer shine, to bring vnto them any ioy and comfort; and so take occasion of praising the Lord for freeing vs from these feares; and notwithstanding our vnworthinesse, for causing the light of truth and saluation to shine vnto vs rather then to them. So from our awaking out of sleepe, we may take occasion to thinke of our awaking out of the sleepe of death at the day of Iudgement; and from the crowing of the Cocke, of the lowd and shrill sound of the last Trumpet, whereby being raised from the dead, we shall be summoned to appeare before Gods Tribunall, to giue an account of all that we haue done in the flesh, either good or euill; that so night and day we may prepare our selues for Christs comming, and be still in readinesse to giue vp our reckonings. Finally, as we are not much to regard our dreames, in respect of any ghesse to be made thereby of any future things; so are we not vterly to neglect them in regard of other vses. For we may not onely by them ghesse at the temperature of our bodies, and our naturall disposition in respect thereof, and vnto what sins we are most inclined; but also we may take occasion from them of good meditations; as to thinke of our owne frailty and corruption, when wee finde and feele that carnall concupiscence, euen in our sleepe, hath wrought in vs, and caused either such dreames as are wanton and lasciuious, or cholericke, prouoking vs to reuenge: and on the other side, to meditate on Gods mercy and goodnesse, if wee haue had any dreames that sauer of vertue and Religion, who by his Spirit hath sanctified our minds and hearts, which of themselves are not able naturally to thinke a good thought, or to conceiue a good desire.

6. Sect. 8.

That the profit of these duties will farre exceede the paines.

Mal. 1. 13.

Now if any obiect, that though these duties are good and commendable, yet they are hard and difficult, and that it bringeth great wearinesse thus to serue God both day and night in these spirituall and religious exercises: vnto such I dare promise, that their profit will farre exceede their paines; and their spirituall ioy and comfort, will abundantly recompence that carnall distaste which our corrupt flesh causeth in them. For if our minds and hearts be thus continually night and day taken vp for Gods vse in these religious exercises, it will bee a notable meanes to keepe out Satan and his suggestions from entring and taking possession; as they easily will, if they be swept cleane and empty of good meditations and desires. For they who are idle and doe nothing, are at the next step to doing ill; and if we be not employed in the seruice of God, the diuell will take vs vp like masterlesse men, and hire vs with the wages of sinfull pleasures, to spend our time and strength in the workes of darkenesse. Secondly, if they bee thus replenished with good meditations at our lying downe, it will bee a notable meanes to preserve vs from vaine, idle and sinfull dreames, and contrariwise dispose vs euen in our sleepe to good thoughts and cogitations. Thirdly, if we thus keepe them well ordered at our going to bed, and throughout the whole night, wee shall with much more ease and pleasure keepe them in this state the day following, and haue them apt and ready vnto the well-performance of all good duties. For as those Oues are easily heat in the morning, in which we baked in the night; and the fire soone kindled when wee rise, which wee well raked vp and couered when wee went to bed; so if wee bee thus exercised ouer night, we shall finde the spirituall warmth thereof, making vs able and actiue for all good duties in the morning, and by adding some new fuell vnto this holy fire, we shall with much facility and comfort cause it to burne and blaze out in all Christian and religious duties. Finally, if with the five wise virgins we thus keepe our lamps trimmed night & day, being alwaies in readines, we shall not need to feare the suddaine approaching of the Bridegroom; but at the least noyse of his comming wee shall rise to meet him, and so entring with him into the marriage Chamber of heavenly happinesse, we shal there eternally solace our selues in the fruition of his loue, and those rauishing ioyes which he hath prepared for vs.

CAP. XXXVII.

That we must moderate our sleepe, and not spend too much time in sloth and sluggishnesse.

AND these are the duties of the night, which are to be performed whilest we are waking. In respect of sleepe, our dutie is that wee vse it with moderation, not satisfying thereby our carnall and sluggish concupiscence, but taking only so much as is fit and necessary to satisfie nature, that we may be more strong and vigorous, actiue and able to performe all Christian and ciuill duties. Of which there can be giuen no certaine rule, on more then of the measure of meates and drinks; for as one mans stomacke requireth more, and anothers lesse: so one mans body, for the preserving of health and strength, needeth sleepe in a greater, and anothers in a lesser and shorter proportion; as youth more then age, those of a melancholike complexion lesse then those of a sanguine or flegmatike, and the weake and sickly more then the strong and healthy. Yet generally wee may say thus much, that as in other things, so in this, nature is content with a little, in comparison of that which satisfieth the carnall appetite. That our sleepe ought to bee moderate and conuenient, and (as Clemens speaketh) masculine and manly, and not effeminate and luxurious, not a solution and weakning, but only a remission of the body, and therefore not to bee taken for sloth and idlenesse, but for the better inabling vs for action and imployment. For as the same Author saith, A sleeping man is of no worth, no more then he that liueth not. Neither must we measure our sleepe according to our businesse, taking too much because wee haue nothing to doe; for a true Christian will neuer want employment, either for the good of his neighbour or himselfe, of his soule or body; and therefore howsoeuer vpon some waighty occasion a man may abridge himselfe of his ordinary measure, yet ought he not to exceede and spend his time, which is so precious, in sloth and lazinesse, vpon pretence that he wanteth employment; nor sleepe any longer then is sufficient for the refreshing of his body, that it may serue his soule as a fit instrument for vertuous and ciuill actions. For sleepe was ordained not to serue our lust, but for the repairing and chearing of the spirits, and refreshing of the body: and therefore we must not out of a slothfull humour, take so much as may dull the spirits, and make the body more lumpish and heauie. For as there is a finfull excessse in eating and drinking, so also in sleeping, when as wee exceede that which nature requireth; and therefore as it were an ill excuse for gluttonie and drunkenesse, to say that we sit eating and drinking more then inough, because we haue no other businesse; so is it alike absurd, to spend our precious time in slothfull and excesssiue sleeping, because wee want other imploiment; seeing as one saith, There is no part of our liues more desperately perisheth, then that which is deputed to excesssiue sleepe. Which that wee may auoid, let vs consider, how the holy Ghost disgraceth the sluggard in the Scriptures. For first he maketh him more foolish and brutish then the silly Ant, and therefore ('as it were') putterh him to schoole to learne of her, that he might become wiser; Go to the Ant, thou sluggard, consider her waies & be wise. Secondly, rowzing him vp from his sleepe; How long wilt thou sleepe, O sluggard? when wilt thou arise out of thy sleepe? hee bringeth him, like one halfe drunke, answering in imperfect and broken sentences, and begging for a little more sleepe, as the drunkard for more drinke, when as already hee hath had too much. Yet a little sleepe, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleepe. Thirdly, he sheweth that he is vnprofitable and good for nothing, and ready to pretend friuolous and foolish excuses, when as he is perswaded to any good action, saying, There is a Lyon in the way, and that which is more ridiculous, a Lyon in the streetes, as though the City were a Wildernesse, and the houses dennes for wilde beasts. That like the doore vpon the hindges, he turneth and tumbleth vpon his bed, and cannot be drawne from it by any perswasion, no more then the doore from the hookes by much pulling and tugging; yea that hee is so besotted on his sloth, that he had rather forgoe his meate, then take any paines to eat it: for hee hideth his hand in his bosome, and it grieneth him to bring it againe to his mouth. The which his follie is so much the more desperate, because in all this hee applaudeth his owne wisdom; for the sluggard is wiser in his owne conceite, then seuen men that can render a reason. Secondly, let vs consider, that the holy Ghost forbiddeth this sluggish sloth; Therefore let vs not sleepe as doe others, but let vs watch and be sober, for they that sleepe, sleepe in the night, &c. Which howsoeuer it is to be vnderstood principally of the spirituall sleep of security, that by this Allegorie and similitude the Apostle implyeth, that Christians ought not now so much to addiect themselues to sloth and sleepe, as before their conversion; because they haue farre better employments for the spending of their time;

time; besides that, corporall sluggishnesse is a meanes, and also an effect of carnall security, euen as the bodily watchfulnesse and sobriety is a meanes of the spirituall. And thus our Sauour Christ by like implication condemneth it in the Parable of the foolish Virgins, who spent that time in sleeping, which should haue bin bestowed in furnishing & preparing themselves to meete the Bridegroom; and directly reprocueth it in his Apostles, when euen in the night, the ordinary time of rest, they were ouertaken of sleep, when as the waighty occasions which presently pressed them, and the speciall commandement of our Sauour required, that they should giue themselves to watching and prayer.

Thirdly, consider the manifold euils which it bringeth vpo vs; for first, like a lie and cunning thiefe it robbeth vs of our time, which is our most precious iewell, and when it is lost, cannot be recouered; yea euen of that part of time which is chiefe and principall, the prime of the morning, which is fittest for spirituall exercises, as prayer, reading and meditation, and also for the ciuill duties of our callings. It maketh likewise that which remaineth, lesse seruiceable and profitable for any good vse; for when our strength is repaired by moderate rest, excessiue sleepe weakneth vs againe, making our bodies heauie and lumpish, and lesse able and actiue for any good employment; and as wee consumed the fore-part of the morning in drowzy sleeping, so the latter part in lazy stretching and slothfull yawning, making vs sluggish with too much sleeping, as the drunkard becommeth more dry with too much drinking. And when the spirits are refreshed and quickned with moderate sleepe, by that which is excessiue they become dull againe, and being drowned and stupified with slothfull vapours, they are made vnfit instruments to the soule for any good actions and employments. Whereby we are notably hindred both in the duties of Gods seruice, and in the duties of our callings, not onely because it consumeth much of our time, which should bee spent in them, but also greatly disableth vs in that which remaineth, when we set our selues to pray, heare the Word, reade, meditate, or any ciuill duties which belong vnto vs. Finally, this excessiue sleeping is exceeding hurtfull both for our soules, bodies and states; for it hurteth the braine, dulseth the wit, and much impaireth the memory, making all these faculties vnfit for their functions and operations. It breedeth obstructions and superfluous humours, and so filleth the body with innumerable diseases. It impouerisheth the estate, and bringeth them who immoderately vse it (if they bee of meane condition) to beggerie and penurie; and much disableth those who are wealthy, to the workes of mercy and Christian charity. And on this mischief accompanying sloth and sluggishnesse, the Wise Salomon much insisteth: For hee telleth the sluggard, that by his sleeping, and slumbering, and his folding of his hands together, pouerty should come vpon him as one that trauaileth, who still approacheth though hee commeth but slowly, and his want like an armed man, which cannot possibly be resisted by one that lyeth naked in his bed. So else-where hee saith; that the soule of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing, but the soule of the diligent shall bee made fat; that because he will not plow by reason of the cold, therefore he shall beg in harvest; and haue nothing, and so in the chiefe time of others plenty, hee through his sloth shall pine in penurie. Finally, that as hee shall haue an emptie famished belly, so also a cold and rottred backe, for drowzinesse shall cloath a man with ragges, whereas they which haue a vigilant eye and diligent hand, cloath both themselues and those that belong vnto them with purple and scarlet, as hee sheweth in the example of the vertuous hufwife. Neither is this sluggish sleepinesse lesse pernicious to our spirituall estate, seeing it bringeth the soule also to beggery and to penurious want of all sauing graces, by taking vp the time wherein we should trade and traffike for them in spirituall exercises, of which it causeth an vtter neglect, or a short and slubbering performance, because it scarce leaueth sufficient time for the necessary dispatch of such important businesse as doth belong to our place and calling. For no sooner is the sluggard out of his bed, but euen halfe vnready hee choppeth vpon his worldly employments, and vtterly neglecting prayer, meditation and all spirituall exercises, hee thinketh himselfe sufficiently excused, because hee is scantred of time, and called away by some that attend his rising, or by the importunitie of his owne affaires; though hee haue voluntarily by his sloth brought himselfe into these straights, and might easily haue escaped them, and had time inough both for religious exercises and his worldly businesse, yea euen for the benefiting of his neighbours that neede his helpe, if he would not haue consumed so much in superfluous sleepe.

That the expence of our time in sloth, is displeasing vnto God; and how this is to be auoided.

But let vs know that this wastfull expence of our precious time in sloth and sluggishnesse, is very displeasing to God, who hath lent it vnto vs that wee should spend it in his seruice; and that this account will not well passe at the day of Iudgement, when God shall finde it written in the booke of our consciences, so much time consumed in superfluous sleepe, and so little imploied in the necessary duties of Gods seruice, prayer, reading, hearing, meditation; in the religious duties which wee owe to our charge and family, or in the workes of charity and mercy, helpe and comfort which wee are bound to performe vnto one another, as being children of the same Father, & fellow members of the same body. At which day fearefull will the estate be of those nice wantons and idle sluggards, who diuide the morning betweene sloth and pride, hauing scarce time, after they are risen out of their beds, to paint and dresse themselves before they come to dinner, vtterly neglecting all duties of Gods seruice, and the honest labours of a lawfull calling. But it was not my purpose to haue touched their abuses, who haue learned to out-face all that admonish them, & to put off all that can be said, with some merrie iest or scornfull smile, like the foole, laughing with great iollitie when they are going to the stocks, and are ready to be called to the barre, and carried out to execution; but onely to admonish those who desire to leade a Christian life, that they auoid such wastfull expences of precious time, consuming those good houres in superfluous sleepe, which being well employed, would make them rich in grace, and thrice happy in this life and the World to come. Which whosoeuer would doe, they must carefully obserue these two rules; first, they must be temperate in their meates and

and drinke, as being a notable meanes to preserve vs from excessive sleepe and sloth, and to make vs watchfull vnto all Christian duties, which is the reason why in the Scriptures they are conioyned; Bee sober and watch, because as sobriety is a cause of vigilancie, so excesse in meates and drinke is the common cause of excesse in sleepe. And this helpe Clemens propoundeth: Let not (saith he) our meates oppresse, but rather lighten vs, that as much as may be, our sleepe may not hurt vs, as those that swim are oppressed, when heavy burthens are fastened vpon them. The second rule is, that we doe not suffer an ill custome of lying long in bed, to bring an habit of sloth vpon vs, which is almost as hard to breake, as to alter nature. Or if wee haue already yeelded vnto it, our best course is, to dis-vse our selues from it by little and little, and so attaine by degrees to a contrary habit. For as the stomacke which is inured to hote waters, is still crauing them, and becommeth such a slugge, that it will digest nothing without these helps, whereas those that vse them not, neuer neede them; so if wee accustome our selues to immoderate sleepe, wee shall turne superfluity into a kinde of necessity, and with Salomons sluggard, bee still crauing for more, when as already wee haue taken too much; whereas if as soone as wee feele our spirits refreshed, and our strength repaired with moderate rest, wee would shake off sloth, and rising betimes, set our selues about some good imployment, nature would bee easily satisfied, and would neuer pull vs backe when wee are willing to rise.

CAP. XXXVIII.

Of those Christian and religious duties which we ought to performe on the Lords Day, for the sanctifying of it.

BEsideth the duties of a godly life which are euery day to be performed, of which wee haue already spoken, there are others which more specially belong to the Lords Day, of which wee are now to intreate. For howsoeuer we ought to deuote our selues in the whole course of our liues to Gods seruice, yet this Day is to be set apart, and consecrated wholly after a peculiar manner to Gods immediate worship, so as wee may not in any part thereof doe the duties of our callings, or any of our owne workes, which tend to the aduancing of our worldly ends. Whereof I will speake the more briefly, because I haue in part touched already the mayne points and summe of the fourth Com mandement, and because also diuers of my learned and godly Brethren haue excellently laboured in this Argument; leaving nothing for me after their plentifull haruest, but some few gleanings, vnlesse I would picke out of their sheaues, and say the same things againe which they haue better said already. And yet because my desire is, that this Treatise should be perfect in all its parts, I will briefly speake of these duties, and giue some directions for the spending of this Day in such a manner, as may be acceptable vnto God, and profitable for the enriching of our soules with all spirituall graces, and the assuring and furthering of our saluation. And first, if we would rightly sanctifie the Lords Day when it commeth, there is required before-hand a due preparation; neither can any action of waight and worth be well performed, which is suddenly and rashly vndertaken; and scarce euer thought on before it bee attempted, especially if there be much and mighty opposition, which will be neuer wanting in these religious duties, that so neerely concerne our saluation, till we come to keepe a perpetuall Sabbath in Gods Kingdome, seeing our spirituall and malicious enemies, the deuill, world, and our owne flesh, leaue no meanes vnassayed, which may make all Gods holy ordinances vnprofitable vnto vs.

Of our general preparation in the whole
weeke.

Now this preparation is either generall or more speciall. The generall, is in the whole weeke before, by performing those Christian and religious duties, of which I haue formerly intreated. For if the heart be kept continually in good plight and order, seasoned with the loue of piety, and settled in a good course, then the duties of the Lords day will be easie and familiar, sweete and delightfull. And as he that keepeth himselfe in breath by running euery day, holdeth out well when he is put to his best speed, and runneth that race for the getting of the Garland; whereas he who taketh his ease, is pursie and shortwinded, and running with much paine and difficultie, tyreth before he come to the goale; so if we would euery day inure our selues to run our spirituall race, in the performance of all holy duties, wee should finde our selues long-winded, actiue, and able to hold out, when as on the Lords Day wee are put (as it were) to our best speede, for the obtaining of the Garland of grace, and Crowne of glory: whereas if wee spend the weeke in slothfull ease, and pamper our selues to the full with sensuall delights; If we giue our hearts liberty to range after worldly vanities, and fix them wholly vpon earthly pleasures and profits; if we let our tongues loose to discourse onely of sensuall and terrene affaires, and neuer acquaint them with the language of Canaan; and if all our actions being suteable to them both, are wholly imployed about temporary obiects; then shall wee finde it impossible on the Lords day to withdraw them from their common haunt; seeing for want of vse, religious exercises will be tedious and vnpleasant vnto vs, and though we with some force bring them to holy duties, yet finding no tastenor delight in them, they will euer and anon steale away, or violently breake from vs, and roue and range after worldly vanities.

§. Sect. 3.
Of speciall preparation to be vsed in the Euening before the Lords
Day.

The more speciall preparation is to be vsed on the euening before the Lords day, wherein two things are to bee performed. First, wee must remoue all impediments which might hinder vs in our rest and the sanctifying of it: and secondly, we must vse the helpes which may further vs in these holy duties. The maine hindrances which must be remoued, are two, worldlinesse, and wickednesse. By the former I vnderstand our earthly and ordinary businesse, worldly cares and cogitations, which if they keepe possession in our hearts, they will choke the seed of Gods Word, distract vs in our prayers and meditations, and make all holy exercises cold, formall, and vnprofitable vnto vs. For the preuenting whereof it is much to be desired, that we would (as much as in vs lieth, and so farre forth as will stand with the necessary duties of our callings) so order and dispose of all our worldly busineses, as that they might bee wholly dispatched and settled betimes on the Saturday, whereby we should not onely be preserved from inroching vpon the Lords Day (as it is the practice of many) for the effecting of our worldly affaires, which through our negligence and forgetfulnesse being left vndone, doe then presse vpon vs as workes of necessity, but also we should haue hereby conuenient leisure, and fit time for our better preparation vnto all those holy and religious duties, which the next day are to be performed. And this is, to keepe our foot from the Sabbath, namely, from treading vpon Gods holy ground, and entring rashly vpon his right, when as wee appoynt and set apart an interim of time betweene our worldly affaires, and those holy duties of the Lords Day, as it were certaine bounds betweene vs and the Mount, to keepe vs from violating Gods Commandement, wherein wee are to weane and sequester our hearts from all worldly things, that they may bee wholly intent vnto holy exercises. In which regard the ancient practice of the Church was very commendable, (and consequently the neglect thereof to be lamented) which ordained that all labouring men, both in husbandry and trades, should giue ouer their worke betimes vpon Saturday in the afternoone, and resort to the Church, that their bodies being refreshed by rest, and their minds prepared by prayer and meditation, they might be the better inabled to performe the publike and solemne duties of Gods seruice the Day following. The which being now neglected, and both Masters and seruants taken vp with their laborious businesse, later for the most part, that night then any other in the weeke, with watching and wearinesse they are made altogether vnfit to performe Gods worship, their hearts being full fraught with their worldly affaires, nor hauing had so much leisure as to take a farewell of them; and their heads so drowzy and heauie, that they cannot hold them vp from nodding and sleeping, euen in that time which is allotted to diuine exercises.

And as we must thus in our preparation purge our hearts from worldlinesse, so must we with no lesse care cleanse them from all sinfull wickednesse. To which purpose we must search and examine them, if no sinnes lye lurking in them vnrepented of, especially such as most hinder our profiting by the publike Ministry, as wrath and maliciousnesse, (and chiefly against our teachers) filthinesse, dissimulation, hypocrisie, preiudice and forestalled opinions, voluptuousnesse, couetousnesse, worldlinesse, and such like. And yet more particularly wee must call to our remembrance what sinnes wee haue committed the weeke past, and seriously repent of them; lest continuing in our wicked courses, and cherishing our sinnes, (as it were) in our bolomes, when we present our selues before God, they moue him to abhorre vs, and our sacrifices of prayer and thankesgiuing, and to giue vs ouer to be further hardened by the deceitfulnesse of sinne: whereof it will follow, that our hearts becomming fat, our eares heauie and our eyes shut, we shall heare, and not vnderstand, and see, but not receiue, that we might be healed and conuerted. And this the Lord required of the Israelites, that they should first wash them, and make them cleane, (namely, in turning from their sinnes by vntained repentance) and then approch and come vnto him. The which was typically signified by that commandement of washing their clothes, before the giuing of the Law; answerable vnto which, is the sanctifying and purging of our hearts by faith and repentance from all pollution of sinne, before wee approach into Gods presence to receiue his Word. For he will not turne vnto vs, nor by his gracious promises assure vs of his fauour, till we turne from our sinnes; nor suffer the precious liquor of his Word to be corrupted and spoyled, by powring it into our hearts, whilest they continue in their pollution and vncleannes. Neither are we fit to receiue the ambassage of our reconciliation, till we haue made our peace with him. For if hauing offended our brother, we may not approach vnto the Altar to offer our gift, till wee haue first sought to be reconciled vnto him; then much lesse may we presume to offer vnto God any religious seruice, vntill first by our vnfeigned repentance, we haue made our peace with him. And if our fallow grounds must be prepared and plowed vp before they be sowed, then must wee in like manner plow vp the fallow grounds of our hearts, as the Prophet exhorteth, before they can be fit to receiue the seed of Gods Word.

Secondly, we must in this preparation vse all helps, which may further vs in the sanctification of the Lords Day; as, namely, those common meanes of prayer, reading the Word, and other holy writings, meditation, &c: and more especially we must worke as much as may be, longing desires in our hearts after the Lords Day, that therein wee may come into Gods holy assemblies, and be made partakers of his holy ordinances; and that we may truly say with Dauid; My soule breaketh for the longing that it hath vnto thy iudgements at all times. And againe, As the Hart panteth after the water-brookes, so panteth my soule after thee, O God: my soule thirsteth for God, for the liuing God. O when shall I come and appeare before God? For if wee expect it not with desire, we shall not greatly reioyce in the fruition; if it be not our longing before it approach, it will not when wee inioy it, be our delight. Now to stirre vp these longing desires after it, wee must meditate on the excellency of this Day aboue all others, seeing God hath consecrated it vnto his worship and seruice as his owne peculiar, drawing neerer vnto vs in all visible signes of his presence, and admitting vs to come neerer vnto him then at other times. Let vs thinke on the spirituall beauty and brauery of Gods House, and of his holy Assemblies graced and adorned with his speciall fauours, and with the light of his countenance, which infinitely excelleth the Sunne in brightnesse and comfort, whereby the Church becommeth faire as the Moone, cleere as the Sunne, and terrible as an army with banners: with which spirituall beauty being rapt vp and rauished, let vs cry out with Dauid; O how amiable are thy Tabernacles, O Lord of Hosts! My soule longeth, yea euen fainteth for the Courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh cryeth out for the liuing God, &c. A day in thy Courts is better then a thousand; I had rather bee a dore-keeper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tents of wickednesse. Let vs meditate on the singular priuiledges which the Lord on this Day imparteth vnto vs with a liberall hand, admitting vs into his Chamber of presence, and communicating himselfe vnto vs, by giuing vs free liberty to speake vnto him about all our wants and griuances, and to offer vnto him our suits and petitions, with a gracious promise that hee will heare and grant them; yea

yea into his Councell chamber, where he imparteth vnto vs all his secrets, and the chiefe counsels of his Kingdome; and not only causeth the great Charter of our peace, and manifold priuiledges, to be read and expounded vnto vs, but also sealeth it by his Sacraments for our owne peculiar vse. Finally, let vs consider of the manifold benefits which the Lord on that Day communicateth vnto vs. For it is Gods Festiuall, wherein hee nourisheth our soules vnto life eternall, if wee bring a good appetite to this spirituall banquet. It is his great Seale Day, wherein hee signeth and sealeth vnto vs a generall pardon for all our sins, and all our spirituall euidences of our heauenly inheritance, both by the priuie Signet of his Spirit, and the great Seale of his Sacraments. It is the Day of Gods largesse, wherein he bountifully bestoweth vpon vs the inestimable riches of his spirituall graces; and the day of mustring and training his souldiers in the spirituall warfare, wherein he armeth them at all poynts with the spirituall armour, and infuseth into them such strength and courage, that they become inuincible, and obtaine victory ouer their spirituall enemies. Finally, it is Gods market Day, wherein he freely offereth all such wares as are needfull for vs, without money; and to store vs with all prouision which shall be necessary for the preserving of our spirituall life, the whole weeke following. And who would not long after such a market, wherein is assured gaine without losse? Who would not before-hand thinke of all his wants, which he may haue supplied so easily and good cheape? And rather then by forgetting them, to liue in penury and misery, who would not, before he commeth to this market, seriously consider of his wants? take sure notice of them, and rather then faile by forgetfulnesse, put them into his Writing-Tables, for the better strengthening of his memory, that so when he commeth to this spirituall market, he may make prouision of what he chiefly needeth, and not be to seeke when hee is to make his bargain?

Esa. 55. 1.

CHAP. XXXIX.

That the whole Lords Day must be consecrated vnto him, first, by resting on it from all labour and from sinne.

And these are the duties which are to bee performed in our preparation. In the Day it selfe the maine duty is, that wee consecrate it as an holy Rest vnto Gods worship and seruice; and not in a part onely, as it is the practice of many, who thinke that they haue done all required of them, if they haue spent some few houres in the publike seruice of God, consuming all the rest of the Day about their owne affaires which respect their pleasure or profit; but we must spend the whole Day in holy and religious exercises. For the Lord requireth at our hands, that we remember to keepe holy, not some few houres only, but the whole seuenth Day; and as he alloweth vnto vs for our owne affaires; not some houres onely of euery day in the weeke, but the whole sixe dayes: so hee reserueth vnto himselfe for his seruice such a Day as he granteth vnto vs. In which regard we shall

§. Sect. 1.
That we must

whole Day in religious exercises.

shall deale deceitfully and vngratefully with God, if we vse a double measure in sharing out the time, a shorter in allotting a Day to his seruice, and a longer for our owne worldly employments. But as he alloweth vnto vs six dayes, consisting of 24. houres; so wee are not to curtall his Day, and to shorten him of his due, but to allow vnto his seruice a Day of like length and continuance, seeing God hath made a plaine bargain with vs, that he will haue a whole Day for his seruice, as well as wee fix for our owne employments. And therefore as we would thinke that our hired labourer should deale deceitfully with vs, if being hired for a weeke to doe our worke, he should labour in our businesse some few houres every day, and spend all the rest of his time in his owne affaires: so will God thinke of vs, if we deale with him after the same manner; neither is it a lesse odious crime in his eyes to clip his precious time, when we come to pay vnto him his due tribute, which he hath giuen vnto vs in full waight and measure; then it is vnto our Prince, if wee offer vnto him for payment clipped coyne, when we haue receiued it good and currant out of his Mint. And if such a subiect deserueth to be hanged and quartered though hee payeth his tribute, because hee hath payed it in clipped coyne; how shall they escape vnpunished, who deale no lesse deceitfully with God himselfe? Besides, as God requireth, so we professe, that wee sanctifie a day vnto him; and therefore if hauing consecrated the whole, wee doe with Ananias keepe backe a part for our owne vse, and iustifie our action, that wee haue done all we promised, we shall both rob God of his right, and by lying vnto the holy Ghost, make our selues liable to the like punishment. Again, such a Day as God obserued for his Rest, we must according to his example keepe for ours; but he rested from all his labours a whole seventh Day, after he had finished his workes, and created nothing anew; and therefore we must rest from our workes a whole day, and not a part onely. Moreouer, as God rested the seventh Day, so he is said to haue sanctified it, that is, to haue dedicated and consecrated it as holy vnto his seruice. Now as things consecrated to holy vses may not be recalled and reuerfed in whole or in part, without sacrilegious profanation, because they are no longer in our power, but Gods right; so cannot wee without theft and sacriledge, take from God, voluntarily and wilfully, any part of that time which is consecrated to his seruice. Finally, the duties of the Sabbath are so manifold and important, as the hearing and reading of the Word, prayer both publike and priuate, meditation on that which we haue heard, and vpon the workes of creation, holy conference, and such like; that the whole day were too short, though it were altogether spent in these religious exercises; and if they bee rightly performed as they should be, they will leaue vs little time for any other employments. Yea, so farre ought we to be from imagining that any part of the Day may lawfully be spent about our owne businesse, that wee must not thinke the night it selfe exempted from diuine seruice and religious duties; for as the six dayes which God hath allowed vs for our owne workes are naturall, consisting of a night as well as of a day, and containe in them full 24. houres, according to that in Genesis, The euening and the morning were the first day; so the Lords Day containeth in it the like proportion of time,

time, and therefore ought to be wholly spent in the duties of Gods seruice, as farre forth as will stand with charity and necessity of nature. As we see in the example of Dauid, who in the Psalme appointed for the Sabbath, professeth, that it is a good thing to shew forth Gods louing kindnesse in the morning, and his faithfulnessse in the night; and in Paul, who continued the exercises of Religion, as the preaching and hearing of the Word, and administration of the Sacrament when he was at Troas, euen vntill the breake of day, which though it were extraordinarie in respect of those times of persecution, yet it teacheth vs, that the night following the Lords Day is a part of it, and as it may in like cases be allotted to the publike duties of Gods seruice, so ordinarily wee should performe in some part of it pious duties of like nature, and in the rest, compose our selues to sleepe in such a Christian and holy manner by prayer and meditation, that euen as much as may be, our imaginations and dreames may retain some relish and sauour of our former religious exercises. Where, by the way wee may note, that as the Christian Sabbath is to begin at the dawning of the day, because it was instituted in remembrance of Christs Resurrection, who was that Sunne of righteousness, who brought light and life vnto vs, by performing and finishing that great worke of our Redempcion, and not ouer-night like the Iewes Sabbath, which was ordained to put them in mind of the worke of Creation; and the rather, because it was fit that there should, vpon these diuers reasons, be a difference betweene their Sabbath and ours; so also it is to continue to the dawning of the next day, as wee haue formerly shewed by Pauls example.

And thus we see the time of the Lords Day how long it is to continue: now we are to speake of the duties which ought to be performed in it. And these are all comprized in these two things; first, in obseruing a Rest, and secondly, in keeping it holy, or in sanctifying this Rest vnto Gods seruice. The Rest consisteth in the forbearing, or not doing of our owne workes, but onely in cases of necessity, and when the sanctification of the Lords Day requireth them, as duties tending to the aduancing of Gods seruice, or such workes of mercy and Christian charity, as belong to this Day; as the study and paines of the Minister, the trauell of the people to places of diuine worship, visiting and helping of the sicke and distressed, confounding of contentions, and making peace betweene neighbours, feeding and tending of cattell, and such like. Where, by our owne workes I vnderstand all our thoughts, words and actions, which simply or chiefly tend to our owne profit or pleasure. As first, the workes of our callings, of all kinds whatsoeuer, as all workes of husbandry, euen in the time of haruest, buying and selling, carrying of burthens, traouelling, and such like. Secondly, all kinds of recreations which are not necessary for the preserving of health and life, and tend not to the better fitting and inabling of vs for religious duties, but to sensuall and carnall delight. Of which sort are walking abroad that we may take the ayre, or that wee may conferre one with another, or meditate on the creatures, some bodily exercise in course of physicke to refresh the body, and in some cases musicke, not onely vocall by singing of Psalmes, which

which is a duty of the Sabbath, but also on instruments, when as it is vsed, not for carnall and sensuall delight, but to refresh our spirits, and quicken our dull and drowzie hearts and minds, that they may with more cheerefulness returne vnto the performance of religious and holy duties; in which cases there may at some times be the same vse of these recreations, (so they be in moderation, in an holy manner, and to these ends) which is of physicke, meates and drinkes. But from all other recreations which tend onely to carnall and sensuall delight, we must wholly abstaine; first, because the Lord expressely forbiddeth vs to doe our owne pleasure on his holy Day, and contrariwise commandeth vs to call his Sabbath our delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable, and that we should honour him, nor doing our owne wayes, nor finding our owne pleasures, nor speaking our owne words. Secondly, because they are our owne workes, from all kindes whereof Gods Commandement restraineth vs, that wee may bee wholly deuoted to the seruice of God, and the meanes which inable vs thereunto: yea, they may in some sort be called more our owne workes, then the workes of our callings, because these are more expressely commanded, and are ordinarily more necessary, and more directly tend to Gods seruice then the other; for it is possible to liue and serue God without these recreations, but not vnlesse we walke in the duties of our callings. And therefore if these bee forbidden on the Lords Day, then much more the other which are of lesse vse and necessity. Finally, because these worldly recreations doe more dangerously and cunningly winde into our hearts, steale them away from holy duties, and distract vs in Gods seruice, then the duties of our callings, the workes and labours whereof we doe not loue for themselves, but onely as they are meanes of deriuing pleasure or profit vnto vs, whereas we loue these sensuall pleasures for themselves, and oftentimes so dote vpon them, that we neglect our worldly profit; yea the seruice of God it selfe, and the eternall saluation of our soules, that we may inioy them.

§. Sect. 3.
That on the Lords Day we must abstaine
from carnall recreations.

Phil. 4. 4.

Psal. 37. 4.

Esa. 58. 13, 14.

Now if any obiection, that to deprive vs of these recreations, is to take away all the ioy and comfort of our liues; to this I answer, that it is an obiection which altogether misbecometh a Christian. For howsoeuer Infidels and carnall worldlings may reioyce chiefly in them, as hauing no greater cause of ioy and comfort; yet it ought not to bee so with the faithfull, who should chiefly reioyce in the Lord, and in the pledges and testimonies of his loue and fauour, in their Communion with him, who is their summum bonum, and chiefe happinesse, and the visible signes of his gracious presence; vnto which spirituall ioy David exhorteth; Delight thy selfe in the Lord, and he shall giue the desires of thine heart. Of which, he in many places propoundeth himselfe as an example for our imitation. Secondly, if we be spiritually, and not carnally and worldly-minded, we may make the Lords Day it selfe our delight, as he requireth, which if we doe, then we shall indeed finde sweete delight in the Lord. For what greater delight can there bee to a Christian, then to praise God by singing of Psalmes, who hath beene so good and gracious vnto vs? then to heare the Word, whereby God assureth vs of his fauour, and of the pardon of our finnes, and receiue the Sacrament, whereby it is sealed and assured vnto vs? then to feast our soules at this spirituall banquet, and afterwards meditate on, and peruse our spirituall euidences, whereby the assurance of heavenly happinesse is conuayed vnto vs? then to be assured that wee are redeemed out of the hands of all our spirituall enemies, and restored to the glorious liberty of the Sonnes of God? then to solace our selues in the sweete society of Christ our Bridegroom in his Banketing-house, and to be stayed and comforted with his flagons of wine, apples, and kinde imbracements? which spirituall ioyes if we relish not, what doth it but argue a carnall taste and appetite, which we ought to bewaile and mortifie, and not feede and cherish it with vaine sports and worldly recreations, which is to strengthen the flesh against the Spirit, and to put weapons into it hands, whereby it will mortally stab and wound vs? But what then, shall our seruants haue no time of recreation, who haue wrought hard all the weeke? I answer, To them that are wearied with labour, the rest of the Lords Day is the best and fittest recreation for the refreshing of their bodies; and if they be spirituall-minded, the exercises of the Sabbath before spoken of, are the best recreations for the cheering of the heart and minde. For who can reasonably thinke when a man is tyred with the weekes labour, that violent exercises which are required to many recreations, and bodily labour to the most, should recreate a man more, then an holy and religious rest, hearing the Word, singing of Psalmes, holy conferences, and such like, if carnall loue did not take away all appetite from these, and supply spirits and strength for the atchieuing of the other? yea, but we must take our seruants as they are, and haue some respect to humane frailty and infirmity; and though we may perswade them to delight in spirituall exercises, yet in the meane time, till they be alike spirituall-minded with vs, we must giue them liberty to vse those recreations wherein they take pleasure. Well, let it be so, yet is it necessary that the Lords Day must be the time allotted to these sports? will we lay sacrilegious hands vpon this Day which he hath appropriated vnto his seruice, and conuert it to our owne vse and pleasure? and whereas being chiefe Lord of persons and times, he might haue reserued fixe dayes for himselfe, and allowed but one vnto vs, now that he hath dealt thus graciously and bountifully with vs, as to appropriate but one for his owne worship, and leaue fixe for our businesse, shall we thinke that one too much, and vngratefully incroach vpon it? and holding all in Kings seruice sauing a seuenth part which is reserued as an acknowledgement of our Soueraignes bounty, who gaue vs freely all the rest, shall we grudge and repine to pay this due tribute, and greedily seaze all into our hands by a false tenure? Finally, shall we thinke fixe dayes too little for those businesse which tend to the good of our bodies, and our momentany estates, and shall wee thinke one too much to be imployed for the good of our owne, and our seruants soules, and for the furthering and assuring of our owne and their euerlasting saluation? Rather therefore if recreations bee necessary for our seruants, let vs allot some of our owne time in the fixe dayes for this vse, then rob the Lord of any part of his Day, vnto which we haue no right; and not conclude with this childish, yet deuilish sophistry, That seeing of necessitie they must haue some time for their sports, therefore it must be on the Lords Day, rather then any of our owne. As if we would say, They must needs haue some mony to spend on their pleasures, and therefore to get it, they must rob by the high-way, or picke other mens purses, but not haue a penny of our allowance. Now if those recreations, which at other times are lawfull, or of indifferent nature, be on the Lords Day forbidden as vnlawfull; then what shall we say of such as are at no time lawfull, but simply euill and wicked? In which notwithstanding many that professe Christianity, spend a great part of the Lords Day, as if they would consecrate a feast to Bacchus or Venus, yea the Deuill himselfe, whose workes they are, rather then vnto God, who being pure and holy, condemneth and abhorreth these fruits of the flesh, and workes of darkenesse as odious and abominable.

§. Self. 4.

That we must rest from sinne
of all kinds on the Lords Day.

Thirdly, our care must principally bee on the Lords Day to abstaine from all sinne, which aboue all others is to be esteemed the most seruile worke, seeing the committing thereof is the base seruice of the deuill, and our owne carnall lusts. In which regard, as wee must at all times auoyd it, so especially on the Lords Day, which is an holy rest, consecrated to his worship and seruice, seeing we cannot offer vnto him a greater indignity, then to serue the deuill in the workes of darkenesse, when we should serue him in the exercises of piety and Religion. And as wee are carefully and conscionably to auoyd all kinds of sinne, so those principally wherewith the Lords Day is most ordinarily profaned, which being the finnes of the times and Countrey, will by the contagion of euill example, most easily poyson and infect vs, if we doe not warily auoyd them. Among these, we may number proud and laborious curiosiry in decking and adorning of the body, which doth so wholly take vp the time of some, especially of the weaker sexe, that they haue scarce any leasure for any spirituall exercises, whereby they should priuately serue God, and prepare themselves for his publike worship in the Congregation. Secondly, excessiue and vnnecessary feasting, especially of our equals, by which, seruants ordinarily are more toyled, then on any other day in the weeke, and so wholly taken vp with these busineses, that they can seldome come to the House of God to doe him seruice. So that as Dauid sometime seemed to enuie the happinesse of the Sparrowes and Swallowes, which had that liberty of coming into the Tabernacle which he wanted: so haue these poore Cookes and seruants cause, not only to enuy them, but euen their Masters Hawkes and Dogs, which accompany them to the House of God, when as they, whose soules are no lesse precious then their Gouvernours, and purchased at as high a rate, euen the inestimable price of Christs Blood, are constrained to stay at home with hungry and starued soules, for want of spirituall food, that they may prouide superfluity and abundance of corporall meat for the pampring of the flesh. And with this excessiue cheare we may also reckon immoderate eating and drinking of ordinary meates and drinks; for as sursetting and drunkennesse are neuer seasonable, but are alwayes vnlawfull, and to be shunned as workes of the flesh; so aboue all other times vpon the Lords Day, as being not onely in themselves sinfull, and workes of darkenesse, but also notable impediments, which disable vs vnto all holy duties, whilst oppressing the heart, surcharging the stomake, and filling the head with drowzie fumes, they make vs more fit to sleepe, then either to pray, or heare, or meditate, or to performe any other duty of Gods seruice.

And

Psal. 84. 3.

And vnto these we may adde dispatching of slight busineses, which are thought scarce worth the while vpon the weeke dayes, as vnneccessary iourneys, and idle visitations, casting vp our accounts, and setting our reckonings straight, carrying home of worke done the weeke before, giuing directions and instructions to our seruants for the dispatching of their businesse the weeke following, and such like.

Fourthly, we must refraine (as much as in vs lieth) from thinking our owne thoughts on the Lords Day, that is, not onely such as are sinfull and wicked, vaine and good for nothing at any time, but those also which are worldly and about our earthly affaires, which may bee lawfull on other dayes. For the Lord requireth not the outward man, and externall actions alone to be consecrated to his seruice, but chiefly and principally the mind and the heart, in which, aboue all other parts he delighteth. And he forbiddeth vs to walke in our owne wayes and pleasures on his Holy-day, which is to be referred to our thoughts as well as to our outward actions, seeing we delight in the one as well as the other. In which regard we must vse our best indenuour, to sequester our mindes and hearts from all worldly and earthly things, that they may be wholly exercised in spirituall and heauenly Meditations. And as it is vnlawfull to thinke and meditate on earthly things on the Lords Day, so also to spend any part of this time allotted vnto holy and religious duties, in the reading and studying of prophane Bookes, and such writings as are meereley ciuill and humane, as the Story of the times, and Histories of the Common-wealth, liberall Arts and Sciences, and such like, which may make vs more wise to the world, but not to God; fit vs for earthly employments, but neither furnish vs with spirituall grace, nor yet further our heauenly happinesse. Finally, as wee must abstaine from thinking our owne thoughts, and doing our owne workes on the Lords Day, so also from speaking of our own words, as the Lord requireth. By which wee are to vnderstand all discourses which are meereley worldly and about earthly things, more then charity and necessity requireth; all idle and friuolous talke, of which, if we must giue account, though it haue been vttered at ordinary times, how much more vpon the Lords Day, when as our tongues, (which as David calleth them, should be our glory, to glorifie God by vttering his praises) are employed in sounding out our owne froth and fooleries? All speeches about our worldly pleasures and profits, or about things impertinent, as other mens affaires, newes and nouelties which doe not concerne vs, especially in respect of our spirituall estate and condition, which we ought chiefly and soly to respect on this Day.

And these are the workes which wee must leaue vndone on the Lords Day; from which as we must abstaine, as the matter of our employments, so also from doing the Lords workes after our owne manner. Neither is it enough that we refraine from all sinfull and worldly actions, and doe the duties which God requireth of vs, seeing if wee doe them not in that sort and manner as he requireth; that is, spirituallly, holily, zealously, and religiously, with vpriight hearts and good consciences, we make them no better then prophane and seruile workes, which God will reiect as odious and abominable. For if we worship the Lord only with the outward man, and not with our hearts and soules, with the lips alone, and not in Spirit and

Truth, in shew and hypocrisie after a formall, cold, and carelesse manner, and not with vpriight hearts, substantially and zealously, he will demand of vs as of the Iewes, Who hath required these things at your hands? Hee will complaine of vs as of them; This people draw neere vnto me with their lips, but their hearts are farre from me. He will censure our seruice, as he did their sacrifices; Hee that killeth an Oxe, is as if he slew a man: hee that sacrificeth a Lambe, as if he cut off a Dogs necke: he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered Swines blood: and he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an Idoll. And though we pray, and preach, and heare, yea euen worke miracles in Christs Name, yet if we doe them not in a right manner, he will reiect vs at the day of Iudgement, and exclude vs from his heauenly ioyes, as being no better then workers of iniquity.

CAP. XL.

That we must sanctifie our rest, by consecrating it to the duties of Gods seruice.

§. Sect. I.

That we must rise betimes on the Lords Day.

And thus much concerning the rest, and things from which wee must abstaine on the Lords Day; The second thing to be considered, is the sanctifying of this rest, by consecrating it vnto those duties of Gods seruice, which vpon this day he requireth of vs. For it is not sufficient, that we refraine from working, and doe nothing, seeing our beasts doe this as well as wee, but we must make it an holy rest, abstaining from our owne workes, that wee may doe the workes of God. In which regard it is called, not onely a Sabbath, and day of rest, but Gods Sabbath and Holy-day, wherein he iniointh vs to doe him seruice. And if he abhorreth idlenesse at all times, and condemneth the neglect of our owne workes in all the rest of the weeke, then much more if we be idle vpon his Day, and spend that time which he hath allotted to his owne seruice, in sloth and idlenesse. Neither doth the Lord simply require a rest for it owne sake (seeing in it selfe it is lesse profitable and acceptable then action and labour) but as being a sanctified rest, it is a meanes to fit vs for his seruice, which is the end of it, vnto which if we attaine not, it is vaine and vnprofitable, yea wicked and sinfull. Now the duties of Gods seruice, whereby this rest is sanctified, are either priuate or publike; the which, because they are interchangeably mixed with one another, therefore I will obserue a mixt method in handling of them. The first priuate duty, is, that we awake and rise as timely this day to doe God seruice (and if we be Gouvernours of families, that wee cause those who are vnder our charge to doe the like) as we doe (or ought to doe) on any of the weeke dayes to doe our owne workes. Yea, seeing Gods workes are of much greater waight and worth, then our owne, and our spirituall gaine of grace, and meanes of furthering the saluation of our soules, and our euerlasting happinesse in the life to come, are incomparably more excellent then earthly riches and delights, therefore as wee are watchfull on the weeke dayes to pursue these, and are willing to abridge our selues of our ordinary sleepe, when we haue any good opportunity offered for the compassing of them;

them; so should we herein exceede on the Lords Day, wherein wee haue such good meanes offered of enriching our soules with the spirituall treasures of Gods sauing graces, and of attaining vnto the assistance of our heavenly ioyes, and those pleasures which are at Gods right hand for euermore; so farre forth as the frailty and infirmity of nature will suffer, and not disable vs through drowzinesse, caused by want of sufficient sleepe, vnto the publike duties of Gods seruice. And therefore farre bee it from vs that professe Christianity, to imitate the practice of carnall worldlings, who rise betimes vpon the weeke dayes to goe about their owne businesse; but when the Lords Day commeth, lie long in bed, and (as they say) take vp their penny-worths of sleepe, in which they were scanted by their earthly employments, because they thinke it an idle time, wherein they haue nothing to doe, sauing to make themselves ready and goe to Church; but rather, according to our profession, let vs imitate the example of our Saviour Christ, who did awake betimes to doe the workes of God, rising before day to pray, and afterwards preaching in the Synagogue.

Secondly, being awakened out of sleepe, we must in the first place settle our selues to performe those religious and holy duties belonging to euery morning, of which we haue formerly spoken, but with these differences; first, that wee respect in them the Lords Day, and make speciall application of them vnto that present occasion. And secondly, that we doe in an extraordinary manner stirre vp our selues to performe them with more ardent zeale, and greater deuotion then at any other time. For example, we must awake with God, and in our first thoughts set him before vs, and our selues in his presence, that we may in a speciall manner performe the peculiar duties of his seruice, which that Day aboue others he requireth of vs. And first, we must deuoutly lift vp our hearts and soules to praise his holy Name, for preserving vs the whole weeke and night past from all perils and dangers, continuing still vnto vs, life, liberty, and all good meanes and opportunities, whereby wee are inabled yet once againe to sanctifie his Sabbath, by performing vnto him the duties of his seruice; earnestly desiring the continuance of his fauour, and the gracious assistance of his holy Spirit, to guide and leade vs thorowout the day following, that wee may therein carry our selues in such an holy and religious manner, as that all the seruice which we performe vnto him, may be pleasing and acceptable in his sight, and may wholly tend to the aduancement of his glory, the edification of our brethren, the enriching of our soules with all spirituall graces, and the furthering and assuring of our saluation. After which short Prayer, we are to spend some time in holy meditation, the subiect and matter whereof may bee the infinite and inestimable loue and mercies of God, innumerable wayes shewed vnto vs, but especially in giuing vnto vs his onely begotten and dearly beloved Sonne, to dye for our finnes, and as this Day to arise againe for our iustification. In which, we may enlarge our selues as time and leasure will serue, by calling to our remembrance the particular parts of Christs Passion, as his miseries and afflictions in the whole course of his life, his betraying and apprehension, his haling to the Iudgement seate of mortall men, who was the Soueraigne Iudge of heauen and earth, his accusing and condemning, who was innocent, that hee might acquit vs who are malefactours. Also how he was railed and spit vpon, scourged and tormented, clothed with purple and crowned with thornes, scorned and derided, numbred among the wicked, and crucified betweene two thieues, died the death, the bitter, ignominious, and cursed death of the Crosse; and in his soule bore and endured for our sakes the anger of God, much more heauy and intolerable then all his other sufferings, which made him in that his bitter agony to sweate water and blood, and to cry out vpon the Crosse; My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Vnto which, we may adde in our meditations the manifold and exceeding fruits and benefits of his death and resurrection redounding vnto vs, that so we may not onely bee stirred vp to vnsained thankfulness vnto God the Father, who hath of his meere loue given his Sonne, euen when wee were strangers and enemies, to doe all this for vs; and to God the Sonne, who hath, being equall with his Father, thus humbled himselfe to worke the great worke of our Redemption; and to God the holy Spirit, for applying the fruits and benefits of Christs passion and resurrection vnto vs, making them effectuell for our iustification and saluation: but also hauing our hearts inflamed with the apprehension of this their loue, we may be moued heereby to loue them againe, and bee made zealous in their seruice, thinking nothing enough which wee can doe, to glorifie them who haue beene so good and gracious vnto vs. We are to meditate also on our sinnes which we haue saine into, especially since the last Lords Day, either in the omission or imperfect performance of good duties, or in the commission of euill, that we may seriously bewaile and repent of them, before we present our selues in the holy assemblies, to performe the publike duties of Gods seruice. Seeing hee will be honoured in all that draw neere vnto him, either in his mercy, by forgiving the sinnes of the repentant, or in his iustice, by punishing those that continue in their impenitency. So also wee are to examine and search out those sinnes and corruptions, vnto which our fraile nature is most inclined, and wherewith wee haue beene most often ouertaken, that so going into Gods spirituall armorie, wee may fit our selues with such weapons as may defend and strengthen vs against them; and get such wholesome preseruatiues, as may keepe vs from being tainted and infected, after our recovery, with the like contagious poyson. Wee are likewise to examine our wants, and in what graces of Gods holy Spirit we are most defective, and in what holy duties wee are most backward and sluggish, that so wee may supply our defects when wee come into this spirituall market, by applying such doctrines and instructions, admonitions and exhortations, as shall be most fitting for this purpose.

After some time spent in these and such like meditations, we are in the next place to performe the duty of priuate prayer, which is to be fitted to the Lords Day. For prostrating our selues before the Throne of grace, in the mediation of Iesus Christ, we are to confesse and acknowledge, as our other sinnes, so those especially whereby wee haue offended God in respect of his Sabbaths, and the duties of his seruice; as our originall corruption, whereby we haue vnterly disabled our selues, in all the power and parts of our soules and bodies, to all holy duties and religious worship, and become apt and prone to the contrary finnes; and our actual transgressions, whereby we haue broken all Gods Commandements, especially those which respect his Sabbaths and seruice; as the profaning of his holy Day by vtter neglect of all holy duties, or by imperfect performance of them, want of preparation, of reuerence and attention, faith and seruency of spirit in hearing the Word, and calling vpon Gods name, want of care in laying it vp in our hearts and memories, and practising it in our liues, &c. And thus as in our Complaints wee are to bewaile other wants, so those especially which make vs vnfit to performe any acceptable seruice vnto God; and in our petitions, as wee are to beg other gifts and graces whereof we stand in need, so those aboue others, which inable vs to the better sanctification of the Lords Day, in performing vnto him his spirituall worship; as hungry and thirsting after the meanes of Gods glory, and our saluation, prepared hearts, and good consciences, faith, and seruency of spirit, reuerence and attention in hearing the Word; and Gods blessing and assistance of his holy Spirit vnto his Minister and Ambassadour, that he may speake the Word powerfully and profitably, as to all the Congregation whereof we are members, so vnto vs especially for our edification and building vp in all spirituall grace; the mortification of our speciall vices and corruptions, the increasing of our vertues, and confirming of our strength, vnto the performance of all Christian and holy duties, wherein as yet we are most defectiue. And finally, in our praises and thankesgiuing we are to magnifie Gods holy Name, as for all his blessings and benefits, so for those especially which respect this Day; As the giuing of Iesus Christ to be our Sauioyr and Redeemer, and causing this Sunne of righteousness to arise and shine vnto vs; the continuance of his Sabbaths, and the light of his Gospell, wherein hee reuealeth vnto vs his holy will concerning our saluation, and the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto it: the peace, liberty and safety which we inioy, together with his spirituall fauours, for granting vnto vs his Word and Sacraments, and making them in some measure effectuell by the inward operation of his holy Spirit; for the begetting and increasing of our faith, and the worke of Sanctification in vs, and the like. With prayer we must also, as leisure and opportunity serueth, ioyne the reading of some fit portion of holy Scriptures, for the better seasoning of our hearts, and settling of our affections vpon holy things, for the inflaming of them with the loue of Gods Law, and with longing desires after the publike meanes of our saluation. With which private exercises when wee haue prepared our selues, we must, if we be gouernours of families, vse all good meanes for the fitting and preparing of our children and seruants for the publike seruice of God; not thinking it enough for those that haue the charge of others, to performe priuate duties by themselves, vnlesse they cause their inferiours also to ioyne with them. But especially, before wee goe to the Church, we must call them all together vnto prayer, wherein, after the confession of our finnes, and earnest petition for all necessary graces, wee are to desire the assistance of Gods holy Spirit, for the sanctifying and preparing of the whole family, that they may in some acceptable manner performe all good duties which belong to the Sanctification of the Lords

Day. Neither must we (as many doe) thinke it sufficient, that wee bring our families to Gods seruice, nor neglect the duty of priuate prayer, because it is to be performed publicly in the Congregation, and so cause one duty to shoulder and thrust out another, but wee must ioyne them together, seeing the priuate seruice of God is not onely on his holy Day acceptable in it selfe, but a notable and necessary meanes to fit and prepare vs for the right performance of his publike worship. In which respect, as we must be carefull that the publike seruice doe not exclude the priuate, either morning or euening; so much more, that the priuate doe not hinder the publike; but we must so order and dispose of these family exercises, as that they may be finished in seasonable time, and not hinder vs from comming to the beginning of publike prayer with the residue of Gods people.

Duties to be performed when we are going to the Church.

After all which duties performed in the family, we are, when we are ready to goe vnto the Church, or when wee are in the way, to spend that time in holy Meditations, thinking with our selues that we are going, not vpon some slight or ordinary businesse, but to present our selues in the glorious presence of the great King of heauen and earth, who being infinite in all holinesse and perfection, and a God of such pure and piercing eyes, that he seeth not onely our outward actions, but searcheth the heart, and reines, hateth and abhorreth all impurity and corruption, dissimulation and hypocrisie, all cold, formall and negligent seruice, and will be worshipped of vs in spirit and truth. Let vs call to minde that we are going, not to conferre with our companions, or with mortal men, nor much superiour vnto vs, but to speake and make our suits to Gods supreme and most glorious Maiesty; & to heare him speaking vnto vs by his Ambassadors, in whose presence the heauens are vncleane, and the blessed Angels hide their faces. And that not about ordinary and slight matters, but such waighy and important businesse, as no lesse concerneth vs, then the eternall saluation or damnation of our bodies and soules. Finally, that we are going about such affaires as will (according as we dispatch them) make vs much better or worse. For, the Word shall prosper, to the atchieuing of that end, for which God sends it, and shall neuer returne in vaine; either it will soften vs like wax, or harden vs like clay; either it will be Gods strong power to our saluation, and the saueur of life vnto life, or the saueur of death vnto death, for our deeper condemnation, and by performing this duty in hearing of it, we shall be neerer heauen or hell. And hauing with these and such like meditations brought our selues to the place of diuine worship, let vs enter into it with all feare and reuerence, as into Gods owne House and place of his glorious presence; saying with Isaiah, Surely the Lord is in this place; how dreadfull is this place & this is none other but the House of God, and this is the gate of heauen.

C A P. XLI.

Of the publike duties of Gods seruice on the Lords Day.

And thus hauing placed our selues in Gods holy Assembly, we are to ioyne with them in all duties of Gods seruice, with vnanimity of heart, and vniformity in action and gesture, as becommeth those that professe themselves to be of the same communion of Saints; carefully auoyding the proud, superstitious and ignorant practice of those, who in Gods publike seruice make a rent in the Congregation, reading of a booke when others are praying, and praying priuately to themselves, when they should ioyne with the rest of the people in the hearing of Gods Word. First then, when the Minister prayeth, we are to ioyne with him as being our spokes-man, who in our name, as well as his owne, maketh knowne our suits vnto God, and returneth vnto him praise and thankesgiuing for all his benefits. In which regard, we are to accompany him in this holy exercise, with such reuerence and attention, zeale and deuotion, faith and seruency of spirit, as if his tongue were the interpreter of our hearts. But of the duties of prayer I haue spoken before, and therefore here passe them ouer. Secondly, wee must apply our selues to heare the Word diligently and attentiuely, when it is read vnto vs by Gods Minister, not slighting it ouer as a duty of small moment, which we may as well performe at home; seeing this ministeriall reading in the Congregation, is more effectuell for our spiritual good, then our priuate reading; euen as a Sermon preached, is more powerfull and effectuell then a Sermon read, because these publike meanes are Gods holy ordinances, the which hee accompanieth with his grace and holy Spirit, infusing by them more vertue and vigour into those who rightly vse them, then by priuate exercises.

The third duty is, that we carefully and diligently heare the Word of God preached vnto vs, with all reuerence and attention, alacrity and cheerefulnesse, faith, humility, and a good conscience. First, we must heare the Word with all reuerence and feare; and to this purpose wee must remember that we are in Gods sight and presence, who taketh notice of all our carriage and behauiour. Secondly, considering that the Minister speaketh not in his owne name, but as Gods Ambassadour, we must heare that which he speaketh, not as the word of a mortall man, but as it is indeed the Word of the euertlasting God, whereby one day wee shall bee iustified or condemned. Moreouer, we must heare it with all attention; and not suffer our eyes to rooue, and our minds and hearts to bee carryed away with wandring thoughts, but our eyes must be fastened vpon the Preacher, as the eyes of our Sauour Christs hearers were vpon him; and like them, we must hang vpon his lips, as the child vpon his mothers breasts, to sucke from them the sincere milke of the Word, that we may grow vp thereby. Neither must we wantonly affect the froth of humane wit and eloquence, but the pure and powerful Word of God which is able to saue our soules; not such flashes and idle conceits as tickle the eare, but neuer pierce the heart; and worke a present delight, but neither informe the iudgement, nor reforme the affections, but sound doctrine, and wholesome nourishment. For no more is the Minister bound to preach the Word in the demonstration of the Spirit and power, plainly and profitably, then the people to hunger after the sincere milke of the Word, and the wholesome food of their soules, which is fit to nourish them vnto euerlasting life. Thirdly, we must heare the Word with alacrity and cheerfulness, seeing as the Lord loueth a cheerfull giuer, so a cheerfull receiuer and hearer, and in all duties especially requireth the seruice of the heart. The which we shall the better doe, if we consider that the Word is the spirituall seed whereby we are regenerate and begotten vnto God, the food of our soules which preserueth spirituall strength, and nourisheth them to life eternall, the light that guideth vs in the way of saluation, the physicke that cureth vs of our corruptions, the meanes of working in vs all spirituall graces, and of assuring vnto vs euerlasting happinesse. Fourthly, wee must bring faith to the hearing of Gods Word, without which it will profit vs nothing, as the Apostle speaketh. By which faith we doe not onely stedfastly belecue those things which are soundly deliuered out of Gods Word, but also effectually apply them vnto our selues for our owne particular vse, as if they were spoken to none but vs. And thus wee must apply the threatenings of the Law for our humiliation, that wee may escape Gods Iudgements, instructions for our information, admonitions and reprehensions for our repentance and amendment; counsels for our direction, and consolations for our comfort. By which application we make the food of our soules our peculiar nourishment, for the begetting and increasing of all Gods graces in vs. Fifthly, we must heare the Word with humility, submitting our selues vnto it as Gods ordinance and Scepter of his Kingdome, to be ruled and gouerned, directed and instructed, admonished and reprobued by it, that so it may bee mighty in vs to cast downe the strong holds of sinne, and to make way for Gods graces against all oppositions of carnall reason, and proud will. Finally, wee must heare with a good conscience, propounding vnto our selues in this religious duty, the glory of God as our maine end, that knowing his will, we may serue him, in yeelding vnto it intire and sincere obedience; and next vnto it, our owne saluation, by being edified thereby in our most holy faith, and more and more enriched with all sanctifying and sauing graces. And to the end that we may daily profit in attaining vnto these ends, we must labour not onely to conceiue and vnderstand what we heare, but also to apply it vnto our owne vse for the sanctifying of our hearts and affections, and not to heare it as an vnprofitable discourse, suffering it to goe out at the one care, as it commeth in at the other, but to lay it vp in faithfull memories, that we may bring forth the fruits of it in our liues and conuersations. To which end we must carefully obserue the Preachers method and order; as the coherence of his Text with that which went before, and followeth after, the maine drift and scope of the holy Ghost in that Scripture, the explication and meaning of the words; the diuision of the Text into its seuerall parts and branches; the maine poynts of doctrine which are gathered out of them seuerally and in order, how they are proued by Scriptures, or reasons grounded on them, illustrated by similitudes, and in-

forced by exhortations. And finally, the vses which are raised out of them, for confutation of errors, admonition, reprehension or consolation: or if this method be not obserued (which ordinarily is most profitable in a mixt and vulgar auditory) but the maine poynt in the Text is handled by way of common place; then are we to obserue his definitions of the vertue, vice, or other thing handled, the causes, effects and common affections, the subiect place, the time, and other adiuncts, the dissentanies and contraries, the distribution of the whole into the parts, or of the generall into the specials, and how euery branch is followed, prooued, illustrated and applyed. Or if the Sermon want method, or wee skill to conceiue it, or memory to retaine it, (for it sometime happeneth, that method which is the chiefe help of memory, through too much curiosity and multiplicity of diuisions is a meanes to confound it) yet let vs at least obserue those things that are deliuered, which we knew not before, for the increasing of our knowledge, and bettering of our iudgement, what vices are reprobued, or vertues commended, with the reasons and illustrations of them both, what hath most conuincd our consciences, what hath been well pressed and wrought effectually vpon our hearts and affections, for the withdrawing of them from any sinne, their inflaming with the loue of any thing that is good, and the stirring of them vp to the imbracing and practising of any Christian and holy duty.

The last duty in hearing is, that we continue from the beginning of the Sermon to the end, and as we are to come with the first, so wee must not (as the manner of many is) depart, till all the exercises of Religion being fully concluded, the whole Assembly bee dismissed. For as it is great vn-mannerlinesse at a solemne feast, to rise before the table is taken away, vnlesse it be in case of sicknesse, weaknesse, or some important businesse; so they which depart from this spirituall Feast before it be ended, are either very vn-mannerly and voyd of due reuerence and respect of Gods presence, and his holy ghefts, and if they be not troubled with bodily infirmities, doe shew the sicknesse of their soules, when their spirituall appetite is so queazie, that they loath their nourishment, or that they thinke the imployment which they goe about, of greater waight, or at least much more necessary, then the feeding of their soules with this spirituall Manna, and vsing the meanes of their saluation. Neither must we haste away after the Sermon is ended, as though wee would rush out of prison as soone as the doore is opened; but we must stay still, that we may ioyne with the Minister and the Congregation in prayer and thanksgiuing, if any bee (as there ought to be) after the concluding of the Sermon; seeing as in receiuing our corporall food, so also in the spirituall, we haue as iust cause and occasion of praising God for benefits receiued; as of praying for his blessing vpon them before we receiued them. But if it bee omitted, wee must supply this defect in respect of our owne particular, by lifting vp our hearts vnto God, praising him for causing the light of his Gospell to shine still vnto vs, and for all the wholesome instructions, admonitions, reproofes, and consolations which he hath graciously at that time imparted vnto vs. And if there be a Psalm sung, we must ioyne with the Congregation, praising the Lord with minde and voyce, and making melody vnto vnto him with our hearts : which being ended, we must expect the blessing of God pronounced by the mouth of his Minister, with all reuerence and deuotion, esteeming it of great efficacie, as if God himselfe did blesse vs by them. Forso we reade, that God appoynting Aaron to pronounce such a blessing vpon the people, saith, that he should hereby put his name vpon them, and he himselfe also would blesse them. And therefore being of such importance, we must not, through ouer-much haste, leaue it behinde vs as a needlesse complement.

And if the Sacrament of the Lords Supper bee administred, hauing duly prepared our selues, we are to communicate with the rest of the Congregation ; and not vnmanerly depart from this holy Feast, being invited, when we see it set vpon the Lords Table. For it is a part of Gods publike seruice, which is not left as arbitrary at our choyce, to doe, or leaue vndone, but expressly inioyned by our Sauour, Doe this in remembrance of me. It is a notable meanes of confirming and increasing our faith, being the Lords Seale, wherewith he hath ratified his Couenant of grace and saluation with vs ; the which being often shaken with tentations, and wounded and weakened with our sinnes, needeth often to be strengthened and renewed. It is the badge and liuery whereby we are knowne to bee Gods seruants ; and therefore comming to doe him seruice, we ought not to cast it off, when the rest of the family put it on. It is a testification of our thankfulness to God and his Christ, for all their benefits, especially that great worke of our Redemption ; and a profession of our faith, that we rest vpon the mercies of God, and the death and merits of Christ for our iustification and saluation, which wee are not to neglect when others performe it, but to take all good occasions of testifying our faith, loue, and thankfulness vnto them. It is a notable meanes to put vs in mind of Christs death, and to apply all the fruits and benefits thereof vnto our selues, when as wee see him crucified, his body broken, and his blood powred out before our eyes. It is the Sacrament of our vnion with Christ, and communion one with another, wherein wee are knit together in the bond of loue, and make profession that wee are fellow-members of the same body whereof Christ Iesus is the Head ; whereof if wee refuse to communicate, hauing no good and necessary ground for it, wee shall make a rent in the body, and deny the communion and profession of our loue one with another.

So likewise if the Sacrament of Baptisme be administred, wee are not to depart, before this holy action bee finished, but to continue in the Congregation, not as idle spectators, but as being tyed heereby to performe diuers Christian duties both vnto God, our selues, and the party baptized. In respect of God, we are to stay the administration of this Sacrament, that wee may shew our reuerence to his holy ordinances, and glorifie his blessed Name, for granting vnto his Church and vs, the vse of them. Secondly, in respect of our selues, that wee may renew our Couenant with God, by calling it afresh to our remembrance, together with his sweet mercies, and gracious promises in Iesus Christ ; and also our owne vow and couenant which we haue made with him in our Baptisme, that we may renew our resolutions and indeuours to performe it daily in more perfection, and in the meane time take occasion vpon our slips and failings to bewaile our wants and imperfections. That we may also call to mind what fruits we haue found of our Baptisme, and whether wee haue felt the vertue of Christ Iesus his death effectually for the mortification of our sinfull corruptions, and of his Resurrection for our spirituall quickening vnto newnesse of life. Lastly, in respect of the party baptized wee ought to stay, that we may performe vnto him such Christian duties as God requireth. First, to commend him vnto God by our prayers, that hee may be truly regenerate, ingrafted into the body of Christ as a liuely member, and so made partaker of his death, merits, and all his benefits. Secondly, that we may, as free men of this Christian Corporation by our presence, giue our assent to his outward admission into the Congregation. And finally, that we may, with the rest of the people, ioyne in praising and giuing thanks vnto God in his behalfe, for admitting him as a new member into the communion of Saints, and entertaining him for a seruant of his owne family. All which duties we neglect, if wee depart before the celebration of the Sacrament, and as much as in vs lyeth, make them vtterly voyd by our ill example; for if all should doe as wee doe (as every one may thinke such liberty belongeth vnto him, which he seeth taken by another) there should not any at all be left to performe them. The last action which is to be performed at our departing out of the Congregation (or before, if the custome be so) is, that if there be any collections for the poore, we contribute towards them, according to our ability, and their necessity, and that with a willing and cheerfull mind, knowing that with these sacrifices God is well pleased; that what is thus giuen, is lent vnto the Lord, who will bountifullly repay it in this world, and the world to come; and giuen to Christ himselfe in his poore members, who of his free and meere grace, will reward these workes of mercy, with an heauenly and euerlasting inheritance in his Kingdome. And these are the publike duties of Gods worship and seruice, which wee ought to performe in the Congregation on his Day: And that not onely in the morning (with which some content themselues) but we must renew them, or the most of them in the afternoone; as Prayer, hearing the Word, and singing of Psalmes, &c. seeing God euen in the time of the Law would haue an euening, as well as morning sacrifice offered vnto him, and therefore will not haue his seruice more negligently performed in this greater light of the Gospel, wherein he affordeth vs more plentifull meanes of our saluation. For the performance of which duties I shall not need to giue any other directions, then those which I haue before set downe for the morning exercise.

CAP. XLII.

Of such duties as are to be performed on the Lords Day, after our comming from the Church.

§. Sect. 1.

That we must meditate vpon
that which we haue heard.

And these are the publike duties of Gods seruice, which wee are to performe on his Holy-day. The priuate duties are diuers. The first is, that at our comming home we meditate vpon those things which we haue heard, and not onely carefully recall them to our remembrance, that they may be imprinted in our memories, but also apply them vnto our owne vse, for the sanctifying of our hearts and affections, and the reforming of our liues and conuerfations, purposing with a full resolution, that wee will put in practice whatsoeuer we haue learned, both in the forsaking of those vices and sinnes which we haue heard condemned, and the imbracing and performing of those vertues and Christian duties which haue beene commended vnto vs. For if we doe not thus make it our owne, and (as it were) couer this holy seede of Gods Word in the furrowes of our hearts, the deuill will steale it away, as the birds doe the seede that falleth by the high way, and make it altogether vnfruitfull, so that after much hearing we shall still remaine children in knowledge, and in the spirituall growth of grace and godlinesse, and like riuen and leaking vessels, retaine little or nothing of this precious liquor, because it runneth out as fast as it cometh in. Secondly, with this Meditation we are to ioyne seruent and effectuall prayer, desiring Gods blessing vpon that which we haue heard, whereby it may be made effectuall for his glory and our owne saluation; and the gracious assistance of his holy Spirit, to bring home not onely to our memories, but also to our hearts & consciences, those things which we haue heard and learned, that we may, as occasion serueth, fruitfully practise them in the whole course of our liues; concluding these our prayers with praise and thanksgiuing vnto God for this gracious liberty, in inioying his Sabbaths, and in them the exercises of Religion & meanes of our saluation.

§. Sect. 2.

Of family exercises after we are come from the Church.

At our meales we are to spend the time in such holy and religious conferences, as may be no lesse profitable for the cheering and refreshing of our soules, then our corporall food for the nourishment of our bodies; and in the performance of such other Christian duties tending to piety and Gods seruice, as before wee prescribed for other dayes, which vpon the Lords Day, aboue all the rest, ought to be done with greatest zeale and deuotion; which being finished, it is good to sing a Psalm to Gods praise, and to reade one or more Chapters of the holy Scriptures. After which Christian exercises, wee may, if time will permit, conferre together of those things which we haue heard and learned at the forenoones Sermon, and by causing euery one (as it were) to offer his shor, to make vp the whole reckoning, one remembring what another hath forgotten, and he againe supplying that wherein the other is defectiue, whereby it will come to passe, that whatsoeuer any one hath gathered of these spiritual treasures, shall not onely be more firmly locked vp and deeply imprinted in his owne memory, but shall also serue as a common stocke for the enriching of the

the whole company. And this being done, we are then againe by Prayer and Meditation, to prepare our selues for the well performing of Gods publike seruice in the euening exercise, as we did in the forenoone, which being finished in that holy and religious manner before prescribed, and afterwards by some meditation recalled to our remembrance for our own priuate vse, it will be profitable for gouernours of families to call together their children and seruants, and either by strength of their memories, or helpe of their Notes taken of the Sermon, to repeate as neere as they can what hath beene deliuered, that so the things not marked may be better obserued, and that which was forgotten may be recalled, and by this repetition may more surely bee ingrauen in the memory. Sometimes also it will be fit and necessary to preuent negligence in the yonger sort, that the gouernours of the family doe examine them, and require of them an account of that which they haue heard, that they may see how they haue profited by the publike Ministry. For if they thinke it necessary that they should giue them an account of their worldly businesse, or how they haue layd out their moneys when they haue sent them to the Market; then much more should they examine them what spirituall Markets they haue made for the good of their soules, and how much they haue gained by the vse of Gods holy Ordinances, for the enriching of them with the treasures of knowledge. In all which, the Master of the family must shew much loue and patience, commending those who answer well, and bearing with the infirmities of such as are of meaner capacities and weaker memories, when they see that they doe their best, and doe not faile through grosse negligence, that they may not, by being shamed and disgraced, be altogether discouraged in these religious exercises. To which purpose, they must make the best they can of their imperfect answers, by enlarging and perfecting them, and supplying that in which they are defectiue. And on the other side, the inferiours must shew themselues tractable and teachable, and with willingnesse and cheerefulnesse submit themselues vnto Gods holy Ordinances, that they may profit by these exercises, and increase more and more in the knowledge of God and his will.

After the finishing of which family exercises, wee are to spend the rest of the time before Supper in other Christian duties, as in visiting and comforting those that bee sicke or in any other great affliction, and ministering vnto their necessities if they stand in need of our helpe. In making peace and friendship betweene those who are at variance, by compounding the differences which are betweene them. In meditating vpon the great Booke of the creatures, and obseruing in them the infinite and admirable wisdome and goodnesse, power and prouidence of our gracious God, that wee may take occasion to render vnto him the glory and praise of his owne workes, when wee see their wonderfull variety and comely order, their qualities and formes, their beauty and excellencie, their vse and profit for the seruice of man. Obseruing likewise in them, such good properties as are worthy our imitation, and bee ashamed that they should exceed vs in them, who haue the vse of reason, and so many religious helpes and meanes; and their ill properties, that wee may auoyd them; taking occasion thereby to be humbled in the remembrance of our fall from our created purity and integrity, as being the principall cause of all their defects and imperfections. So also wee may in this respect make good vse of the Creatures; when by them wee take occasion of some spirituall Meditation: As when wee see their beautie, to thinke how infinitely beautifull hee is that created them; when we consider how delightfull and profitable they are vnto man, to conceiue thereby what surpassing excellencies God hath prepared for his owne Children in his Kingdome of Glory; when wee obserue how seruiceable they are to man, to thinke how much more diligent wee should be in seruing our great Lord and Master, who hath giuen both to them and vs our birth and being. More particularly, when we behold the earth whereof we were made, let vs take occasion to thinke of our owne basenesse, and that we shall be resolu'd into earth againe; when we see the flowers of the field, let vs thinke of the momentany mutability of worldly prosperity, and of our owne mortality, who are like vnto them; when we looke vpon the Suns glorious brightnesse, let vs take occasion thereby to thinke of Gods glorious Maiesty, and of the glory and brightnesse of the Saints in heaven, who shall farre exceed it. Of which, we haue our Sauour Christ an example for our imitation, who tooke occasion from corporall bread and water, to discoure of the spirituall Mahna and Waters of life; from a worldly feast, to speake of a spirituall banquet, and of the living waters of his grace and holy Spirit, giuen to all that belecue in him. And this is a fit and profitable exercise on the Lords Day commended vnto vs by the Scriptures, and practice of the Church, as hēereby it appeareth, in that the Psalmie, which was specially appointed for the Sabbath, containeth in it for the most part a Meditation vpon the workes of God.

§. Sect. 4.
That the evening must be spent in religious exercises.

In the euening of the Lords Day we are not to surcease our Christian and religious exercises, but after wee haue at supper refreshed our bodies with the vse of Gods creatures, and our soules with holy conferences, wee are to spend some time in singing of Psalmes, and in reading the Scriptures, or other religious and profitable writings. After which duties performed, all in the family ought to ioyne together in hearty and effectuall prayer (not thinking themselues excused from priuate duties, because they haue beene at the publike exercises of Religion) wherein as wee are to acknowledge other finnes and imperfections, so those especially wee haue shewed the day past in our cold, formall, weake, and negligent performance of the duties of Gods seruice. And as we are to craue other blessings, so especially that the Lord by his grace and holy Spirit will blesse vnto vs the meanes of our saluation, and Ministry of his Word, whereof we haue been partakers on that Day, writing the things we haue learned in our memories and hearts, and inabling vs to put them in practice, and to make vse of them in the whole course of our liues. And finally, as we are to praise God for all his other mercies, so particularly for giuing vs time to sanctifie his Sabbaths, and suffering vs to inioy the blessed light of his Word and Gospell, for granting vs liberty with such peace and safety, to tread in his Courts, and to make our suits and supplications knowne vnto Him, with assurance to haue them heard and granted. And thus hauing finished shed this holy exercise, and the time of sleepe approaching, we must prepare our selues thereunto with such religious Meditations, as on other dayes were prescribed, the which at this time are to be done with extraordinary zeale and deuotion; and so commending our soules and bodies into the hands of God, we are to desire him that he will watch ouer and sanctifie vs so with his grace and holy Spirit, that we may spend the night also in an holy Rest, being freed from worldly, carnall, and sinfull dreames, and hauing our phantasies and thoughts, our hearts and affections, both sleeping and waking, taken vp and exercised in good and godly Meditations: And that he wil so season our hearts with the sauour of the Dayes religious exercises, that euen in sleepe our dreames may relish of their sweetnesse, and when we awake, our thoughts and Meditations may bee wholly taken vp and exercised about such holy things, as tend chiefly to the glory of God, and the euerlasting saluation of our soules.

And these are the duties which ought to bee done on the Lords Day; which if we would performe after a right manner, so as they may bee acceptable vnto God; then our care must be, that howsoeuer we haue many wants and imperfections in our best and most religious seruice, yet that we doe performe it with integrity and sinceriry of heart, labouring and struing to the vttermost of our power, to doe all that which God hath commanded, and as neere as we can in that manner, and according to all other circumstances as he requireth, being heartily grieued in our soules when we faile, that we can doe them no better. For example, though we find in vs naturall auerfenesse to the strict keeping of Gods Day holy, and much dulnesse and spirituall deadnesse in the duties of Gods seruice; yet if our hearts be vpriight with God, we will labour to make his Day our delight, and to consecrate it wholly as an holy Rest vnto his worship, with all alacrity and cheerefulness as he requireth; and we will strue to finde such spirituall sweetnesse in holy and religious duties, as may make vs to delight much more in them, then in our ordinary food, when wee come vnto it with hungry appetites. And finding our corruptions so hanging vpon vs, that we faile much in satisfying our holy desires, we will heartily bewaile our auerfenesse and vntowardnesse, our drowzinesse and wearinesse in holy duties, and seeing our frailties and infirmities, will resolute to labour after more perfection. Againe, howsoeuer through forgetfulnessse, negligence, or other distractions, we may omit some of those duties before prescribed, for the spending of the Lords Day, yet if our hearts bee vpriight before God, we will not blesse and please our selues in this negligence; but indeuour in some sort to performe them all as we are able, without omitting any of them; As both the priuate and publike meanes of Gods worship, Prayer, Meditation, hearing, reading, singing Psalmes, holy conferences and the rest, so farre soorth as God granteth vnto vs time and opportunity. And if we haue through forgetfulnessse or negligence omitted any, we will be vnfaignedly sorry for it, and purpose amendment for the time to come. Furthermore if we sanctifie this Day with integrity of heart, then will we consecrate the whole Day to this holy Rest as God hath appointed, and not abridge him of any part of his due, or voluntarily spend any houre of the Day in prophane and worldly exercises. And howsoeuer wee may through our frailty and corruption be often ouertaken, thinking our owne thoughts, speaking our owne words, and doing sometime our owne workes on the Lords Day, yet if our hearts be vpright before God, we will not please our selues in this prophanation, but our hearts smiting vs for it, we will repent, make humble confession of it among our other sinnes, and earnestly desire to be freed, not onely from guilt and punishment of it by Gods gracious pardon, but also from the corruption it selfe for the time to come by his grace & holy Spirit. Finally, hauing laboured to performe these duties of the Lords Day in the greatest perfection wee are able, and hauing in some poore measure satisfied our selues in them; yet if our hearts be vpright with God, we will not be proud of any thing which wee haue done, nor exalt our selues aboue others which we thinke come short of vs, but we will humbly praise God for that which we haue receiued, and ascribe all that is good in vs to his free grace and holy Spirit; yea, wee will easily discern and acknowledge our best actions stained with so many corruptions, and mingled with so many imperfections, that when vve haue done all we can, we are but vnprofitable seruants, who are sufficiently rewarded if we be not punished.

THE FOVRTH BOOKE, CONTAINING IN IT THE PROPERTIES OF A GODLY LIFE, and of all the duties which are required vnto it.

C A P. I.

That all duties vniuersally of a godly life, must be performed in sincerity and integrity of heart.

Having shewed what the godly life is, and the duties which are required vnto it generally in the whole course of our conuersation, and more specially those which belong vnto euery day, it now followeth, according to that order which we haue propounded, that we intreate of the properties of this Christian life, and the duties belonging to it, which may serue as markes and signes, whereby wee may know them, and also distinguish them from all other which are false and counterfeit. All which may be referred to two heads, the first sort, respecting the duties themselves, the other our manner of doing them, and that both in respect of the action, and also the time of their continuance. The first property respecting the duties themselves, or the matter and forme of them, is Vniuersality; for God being the vniuersall Creator, preseruer, and Soueraigne Lord of all things, will haue vs wholly taken vp in performing of all duties of his seruice, and requireth of vs vniuersall and totall obedience, both in respect of the subiect and object of it. In respect of the subiect or person that performeth it, the Lord requireth the obedience, not of some few or many parts alone, but of the whole man, internally in the soule, and all the faculties of it, especially the heart and will; and externally, in all the powers and parts of the body, and chiefly our tongues and speeches, and our workes and actions. Internally, God inioyneth vs to serue him in the duties of a godly life, with all our hearts and soules, which is that wherein he chiefly delighteth, and without which, all outward actions, be they neuer so formall and glorious, are vaine and worthlesse, yea lothsome and odious in his sight. And heereunto there are two things required, which are so like and neere in nature, that they are commonly taken the one for the other, but yet (as I take it) they may be distinguished, though neuer seuered.

Psa. 51. 6, 16, 17

1. Chron. 29. 17.

1. Sam. 16. 7.

Deut. 26. 16.

The first is integrity, whereby we serue the Lord in all Christian duties with our whole hearts, according to Gods Commandement; Thou shalt feare the Lord thy God, to walke in all his wayes, and to loue him, and to serue the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy soule. The which Dauid performed, as he professeth: With my whole heart haue I sought thee; O let me not wander from thy Commandements. Vnto which is opposed, seruing God by the halues, lamely and haltingly, diuiding our hearts betwene him and his enemies, the diuell, Idols, and the earthly Mammon; like the Israelites which halted betwene God and Baal, the true Iehouah, and Idols of the Heathens, and the Samaritans, who feared the Lord, and serued their owne gods. And of such the Prophet Hofea complaineth; Their heart (saith he) is diuided; namely, betwene the true Iehouah, and their Idols. And the Apostle James calleth them double-minded, who are vnstable in all their wayes, one while offering vnto God some formall seruice, and another while seruing the world, and their owne lusts. And as they haue double hearts, so also double tongues, speaking vanity to their neighbours with flattering lips, and with an heart and an heart, or a double heart. The second is sincerity and vprightnesse of heart, without any mixture of guile and falshood, when as wee worship God in simplicity, truth, and singlenesse of heart, and in performing the duties of his seruice, doe lay aside all carnall, worldly and by-respects, and doe them onely in conscience of his Commandement, and out of a desire to glorifie him by our obedience to his holy will, seeking him therein with our whole hearts, and not our selues and our owne worldly ends, like seruile mercenaries, who serue their masters, not out of any loue they beare him, but onely for their owne gaine and aduantage. Vnto which is opposed dissimulation and hypocrisie; which maketh men to content themselves with outward shewes, which haue no substance; with outward profession, without all sound praetice; with a dead carcase of Religion, without the soule of sincerity, or any vertue and vigour appearing in their actions; and with a formall, false and counterfeite seruice in the outward man, without any substance or truth in the inward parts.

Now because these two are neuer seuered, neither in the subiect, nor in our praetice, I will not disioyne them in my discourse; but will shew, first, the reasons which may moue vs to performe all our seruice vnto God, and the duties of a godly life with integrity and sincerity; and then the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto it. For the former, wee are to imbrace this integrity and sincerity, truth and vprightnesse of heart in all duties of a godly life, because the Lord chiefly loueth and delighteth in them, preferring them much before all outward duties, seeing they neuer so glorious. For he loueth truth in the inward parts, and esteemeth it farre aboue all legall sacrifices, and therefore after all they are abrogated and abolished, retaineth it still in all duties of his seruice. And as Dauid also speaketh in another place; He tryeth the heart, and hath pleasure in vprightnesse. Neither doth he see as man seeth; for man looketh to the outward appearance; but the Lord looketh vpon the heart. Whereof it is, that hee chiefly requireth this integrity and sincerity in all his seruice; Thou shalt keepe his Statutes and Iudgements with all thine heart, and with all thy soule. So Ioshuah:

Feare

Fear the Lord, and serue him in sincerity and truth. And Samuel; Fear the Lord, and serue him in truth, and with all your heart. And this God requireth of Abraham, Walke before me, and be vpright. And Dauid of his sonne Salomon; Know thou the God of thy father, and serue him with a perfect heart, and with a willing minde. And finally, our Sauiour saith, that hee requireth it of all who offer to doe him any seruice, that as he is a Spirit, so also they should worship in spirit and in truth. And as we must generally obserue it in all Gods worship, so in all the parts and duties of it: For we must call vpon God in sincerity and truth, if wee desire that hee should heare vs; wee must with Dauid, Praise God with vprightness of heart; and, in singing Psalmes, and hymnes, and spirituall songs, we must not chiefly respect the vncall tune, but make melody vnto the Lord with our hearts, as the Apostle speaketh. We must keepe vnto God the spirituall Passeouer, not with the old leauen of malice and wickednes, but with the unleauened bread of sincerity and truth. We must doe the workes of mercy, and giue our almes with our hearts, as well as with our hands, for the Lord loueth a cheerefull giuer: And in a word, whatsoeuer duty we performe vnto others, we must doe it heartily, as vnto the Lord, and not vnto men. On the other side, he condemneth dissimulation and hypocrisie, as vices which are most lothsome and odious vnto him: yea so much doth the Lord abhorre it, that in the Law hee forbiddeth the very signes and shewes of it. He would haue no leauen in his Passeouer, nor their garments made of linsiey-woolsey, nor their fields plowed with an Oxe and an Asse, nor sowne with seeds of diuers kinds; nor that God cared for these things, but to shew, vnder these types and shadowes, how much he detesteth all hypocrisie and double-dealing.

Secondly, this may moue vs to imbrace integrity and sincerity, because the Lord so highly esteemeth it, that he accepteth of our obedience as perfect which springeth from it, though it bee stained with much corruption, and ioyned with many imperfections. Whereof it is, that in the Scriptures integrity and perfection are promiscuously put the one for the other; and those are said to haue been perfect before God, who in simplicity and vprightness of heart laboured after perfection, and serued God in sincerity and truth; as Noah, Abraham, Iob, Dauid, Asa, Zachary and Elizabeth, though they had many corruptions and imperfections, which in the Scriptures are recorded of them. And contrariwise the best graces, or rather the most glorious shewes of them, and the most resplendent and formall actions which are not ioyned with it, are no better at the best then glorious sinnes in Gods sight: whereof it is that the Lord specially requireth in all our graces and vertuous actions, that they bee in sincerity and truth, without dissimulation and hypocrisie. So that wisdom which is from aboue, is without hypocrisie and dissimulation, though carnall men thinke them most wise who most excell in it. Our faith must bee vnfained, and so must our repentance also, and with our whole heart; and not like Abahs, in outward shew onely, dissembled and disguised. Our loue must not be in speech and tongue onely, but in deed and truth: we must call vpon God in truth and sincerity, or else our prayers will be but meere lip-labour, which God will not heare or regard. And therefore Dauid vseth his sincerity in praying, as an argument to perswade the Lord to giue him audience;

audience; Giue care (saith he) vnto my prayers, which goe not out of fained lips. And Ezechias his integrity of life, as a reason to moue him for therepealing of the sentence of death, and prolonging of his dayes. Remember now, O Lord, (saith he) I beseech thee, how I haue walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, &c. Finally, our preaching must not bee deceitfull, like those which make Marchandize of the Word; but as of sincerity, of God, and in the sight of God. And our hearing likewise of the Word, must be in sincerity, as in Gods presence, and as those that heare the Word, not of man, but of God. For otherwise our seeming graces and vertuous actions, like beautifull pictures which want life, spirit and motion, are not substantiall in Gods sight, but shewes and shadowes onely, if integrity and sincerity be wanting, not looking vnto Gods glory, or shewing any loue and obedience vnto him, but onely vnto our worldly and carnall ends and by-respects of our owne pleasure, profit or preferment.

Thirdly, we must performe all holy duties of a godly life in sincerity and integrity, because otherwise wee cannot approue our selues for sound Christians accepted of God, what outward shew fouer wee make; nor our badges and signes of Christianity such, as will giue vnto vs any assurance that we are in the Couenant of grace: for as the Apostle saith, Hee is not a Iew which is one outwardly, neither is that Circumcision which is outward in the flesh; But he is a Iew which is one inwardly, and Circumcision is that of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men but of God. And though such duties as are done in hypocrisie, may get the applause of men, and gaine their praises, causing them who doe them to be magnified and extolled; yet God no further regardeth them, then to vi-lifie, condemne and punish them; For hee seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh but to the outward appearance; but God looketh vnto the heart: In which regard, that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God, as our Sauour speaketh.

Fourthly, because the Lord doth richly reward this integrity and sincerity, with the blessings of this life, and that which is to come: For the Lord is a Sunne and a Shield, he will giue grace and glory; and no good thing will he withhold from them that walke vprightly. In this life hee multiplyeth all his fauours vpon them who serue him in sincerity and truth. For, he is good vnto them which are cleane in heart. And to such he limiteth all his gracious promises, which he performeth vnto them vpon this condition only.
So he promiseth vnto the Kings of Israel and Iudah, that hee will con-firme their Kingdome vnto them, and their posterity after them, if they would walke before him in truth, with all their heart, and with all their soule. Whereof it is that Salomon affirmeth, that the Lord kept Couenant, and shewed mercy vnto his seruants that walked before him with all their hearts.
And therefore Ezechias intreateth God to performe this promise vnto him and his posterity, grounding his faith on his obseruing this condition, seeing hee had walked before God in truth, and with a perfect heart.
So God is neere vnto them that call vpon him, to all that call vpon him in truth, and will saue and deliuer them from all perils and dangers, and out of the hands of all their enemies: For he saue the vpright in heart, as David af- firmeth. And so Salomon saith, that the righteousness of the vpright shall de- liuer

liuer them; which maketh them bold and confident as Lions in perillous times, as elsewhere he speaketh. In the life to come, God also crowneth the sincere and vpright seruice of the faithfull with ioy and happinesse: for he giueth not onely grace in this life, but glory also in the life to come, to those that walke vprightly. And such shall here dwell in his Tabernacle, and hereafter in the Mountaine of his holinesse. So Salomon saith, that he who walketh vprightly, shall be saved: and Dauid affirmeth, that the vpright shall dwell in Gods presence: and our Sauour Christ saith, that they shall bee blessed in the vision and fruition of God, which is the height and perfection of our heavenly happinesse. And therefore seeing this integrity and sincerity is such a precious treasure, as maketh vs both happy and blessed here, and in the world to come; it is no maruell if the faithfull haue alwayes esteemed it as their chiefest and choycest Iewell, preferring it before all earthly things, yea euen life it selfe; as we see in the example of Iob, who pariently suffered himselfe to be stripped of all his worldly substance, but clasped so fast to his integrity, when his wife and friends would haue pulled it from him, that he would not leaue his hold to the very death; God forbid (saith he) that I should iustifie you, (to wit, whilst you goe about to censure and condemne me of dissimulation and hypocrisie) till I dye, I will not remoue mine integrity from me. My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it goe, my heart shall not reprob me, so long as I liue. If then we delight in that wherein God chiefly delighteth, and will doe that which he requireth, and flee from that which he abhorreth; if wee would haue our selues and our seruice accepted of him as perfect, which notwithstanding are full of imperfections and corruptions: If we would haue any true sauing grace, or performe any Christian duty pleasing vnto God; if we would be numbred amongst sound Christians, or would inioy any of Gods blessings in this world, or in the world to come, then let vs labour daily in the vse of all good meanes whereby we may attaine vnto this sincerity and integrity of heart, and performe all the duties of Gods seruice and of a godly life in vprightnesse and truth.

CAP. II.

Of the meanes whereby we may attaine vnto integrity and sincerity.

Now the meanes hereof are diuers. First, wee must set God before our eyes, and our selues in his presence, performing all the duties of his seruice, not as those who haue men onely to looke vpon and censure vs, who alone behold the outward actions, but as in the sight of God, who searcheth and tryeth the very secrets of the heart and reines, and knoweth whether our hearts be vpright, and our actions performed in sincerity and truth, or deceitfull and done in hypocrisie, not aiming at his glory in obeying his Commandement, but at by-respects and worldly ends: Herein following the example of Dauid, who desiring to walke in the way of Gods Commandements with an vpright heart, vsed to set God alwayes before his eyes. For carrying our selues in all our conuersation as in Gods presence, is the meanes to make vs vpright in all our wayes, whereof it is that this pbrale of walking with God, is vsed, to signifie the integrity of Gods seruants in all their conuersation; and God himselfe perswading Abraham to vpright-nesse, exhorteth him to walke before him, as a meanes thereof; Walke before me (saith he) and be vpright. So Dauid vseth it as an argument to per-swade Salomon to serue the Lord with a perfect heart, and a willing mind, because the Lord searcheth all hearts, and vnderstandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts. And Paul in his preaching shunneth all deceit in handling Gods Word, and vseth all sincerity, because he spake as in Gods sight and presence.

The second meanes is, to meditate on the excellency, profit, and necessity of this sincerity and vprightnesse of heart. The excellency heerein ap-peareth, in that the Lord so highly esteemeth it, that he approueth them as perfect, who serue him with this integrity, though they bee neuer so full of wants and weaknesse, and neglecteth, yea seuerely punisheth the most glorious workes of Hypocrites which are done without it. It is most profitable, seeing God withholdeth nothing from them that walke vp-rightly; for he is vnto them a Sunne and a Shield; a Sunne for consolation, a Shield for protection; a Sunne to giue them life, a Shield to defend life giuen; a Sunne to make them fruitfull in all good, and a Shield to preferue them from all euill; and hee will giue vnto them grace in this life, and glory and happinesse in the life to come. Finally, the necessity of this integrity and sincerity hereby is manifest, seeing the best graces which are without it, are false and counterfeit, our wisdom diuellish, our faith dead, our repentance fained, our loue worldly and carnall, our zeale dissembled, our Religion hypocrisie, and all the seeming good duties which we performe, of no esteeme in Gods sight. For if sincerity be wanting, our prayers are but lip-labour, our preaching a kind of merchan-dizing for the hire of worldly gaine, as the Apostle implyeth; our receiuing the Sacraments no more accepted in vs, then in Iudas, and Simon Magus; our giuing of almes, not being done with vpright hearts to please God, but to be praised of men, shall haue the hypocrites reward; that is, glory before men, and eternall shame before God, his Saints and holy Angels.

The third meanes is, to consider that nothing shall be wanting vnto vs, for protection from dangers, or supply of necessities, if we will serue God in sincerity. For he is all-sufficient without the helpe of inferiour meanes, and a most powerfull and bountifull Master, who is both able and willing to reward and protect all such as doe him faithfull seruice; so as there is no cause why we should halt betweene him and the world, or giue any place to dissimulation and hypocrisie, for feare or fauour, as though wee could no otherwise escape danger, or obtaine things necessary for the supplying of our wants, vnlesse we be more carefull to please men then God; seeing he is all-sufficient in himselfe to protect and prouide for vs, and hath both the hands and hearts of all men at his disposing, so as they can neither helpe nor hurt vs, but so farre forth as he is pleased to vse them as instruments to serue his prouidence. And this argument the Lord vseth to perswade Abraham vnto this sincerity; I am God all-sufficient; walke before

fore me and be upright. As though he should say, Though thy idolatrous friends forsake thee, and thy heathenish enemies oppose thee, because thou hast renounced their Idols, and wholly deuoted thy selfe to worship me in truth; yet let not this discourage thee in thy sincerity, seeing I am all-sufficient to reward and defend thee. So the Prophet telleth Asa, that there was no cause why he had relyed vpon the King of Syria, and not vpon the Lord his God, seeing he is mighty and all-sufficient to preserve all those whose heart is perfect towards him.

2. Chron. 16. 9.

The fourth meanes is, that we keepe a narrow watch ouer our hearts, labouring daily to approue their sincerity vnto God. For naturally they are deceitfull, and much hypocrisie and dissimulation lyeth lurking in them. In which respect it is necessary, that we often examine them, with what purpose we performe good actions, what causes moue vs, and at what ends we aime. And if we finde them worldly and carnall, let vs labour to purge them from these corruptions, according to that of the Apostle Iames; Cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purifie your hearts, ye double-minded. And when we finde them ready to halt betweene God and the world, either for feare, or for the getting of some earthly benefite, and to start aside from their sincerity, we are to call them backe, and finding other bonds too weake to binde these fugitiues vnto sincerity in Gods seruice, we are to tye them hereunto by solemne couenant, according to the example of Asa and Iosiah, who thus bound themselues and their subiects, that with all their hearts and soules they would seeke and serue the Lord.

and 34. 31.

§. Sect. 5.
The fifth meanes, to meditate on the Day of Iudgement.
Eccles. 12. 14.

Finally, let vs often meditate on the Day of Iudgement, when as the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed, and all hidden things brought to light, and laid open to the view of men and Angels; according to that of Ecclesiastes; God will bring euery worke into Iudgement, with euery secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be euill. And of the Apostle Paul: Wee must all appeare before the Iudgement seat of Christ, that euery man may receiue the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad. And then naked sincerity will shine most gloriously, when the gilded vaile of hypocrisie being pulled off, the filthy corruption which was hid vnder it, will appeare vgly and abominable in the sight of the holy Saints and blessed Angels. Then shall the vpright in heart hold vp their heads in the confidence of a good conscience, when the hypocrites and dissemblers shall be confounded with shame, their deceit and secret wickednesse being discovered in the sight of all men. Then shall they who haue serued God in sincerity and truth, receiue their heavenly Inheritance with triumphant ioy, when guilefull and double-hearted men shall bee banished out of Gods presence, and cast into outer darknesse, where shall bee weeping and gnashing of teeth.

BVt howsoever the Lord doth chiefly require and delight in the inward seruice of the soule, and the integrity and sincerity of the heart; yet doth he not rest in it alone, but requirereth also the seruice of the body and outward man, and that we should at all times, and vpon all occasions, expresse and approoue our inward piety in our external practice, and the vprightnesse of our hearts, which is onely knowne to him, by our holinesse and righteousness shining in the whole course of our liues and conuersation, which is subiect to mans view, that thereby we may be iustified, that is, declared righteous before them, as by the other we are knowne vnto our selues to be iustified by faith before God, of which, that inward holinesse and obedience is a principall fruit. And because euery one would be ready to boast of the sincerity of the heart which cannot be discerned, God would haue vs to approoue and make it knowne, by bringing forth the fruits of it in our outward and bodily seruice. So the Apostle exhorteth vs, not to let sin raigne in our bodies, that we should obey it in the lusts thereof; neither yeeld our members as instruments of vnrighteousnesse vnto sinne, but yeeld our selues vnto God, as those that are alieue from the dead, and our members as instruments of righteousness vnto God. And as we haue yeelded our members seruants to vncleannesse and to iniquity, so we should now yeeld our members seruants to righteousness vnto holinesse. That we should present, not onely our soules, but our bodies likewise, a liuing sacrifice, holy, acceptable vnto God, which is our reasonable seruice, that we should possesse our vessels in purity and honour, and preserue our bodies from all defilement, as it becommeth the Temples of the holy Ghost. For God, who hath created, redeemed, and doth continually preserue both soule and body, will bee serued and glorified by them both, and as he is in these respects, Lord and owner of the whole man; so hee will haue the whole to serue him, according to that of the Apostle: Ye are bought with a price, therefore glorifie God in your body and in your spirits which are Gods. The inward seruice of the heart therefore is not sufficient, vnlesse it be expressed in the outward seruice of the body, but wee must be sanctified thorowout, and our whole Spirit, and soule and body, must be preserued blamelesse vnto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. And we must cleanse our selues from all filthinesse, as well of the flesh as of the Spirit, and perfect our holinesse in the feare of God. We must with the Apostle, exercise our selues to haue our consciences voyde of offence, both towards God and towards men; and labour not onely to haue in all things a good conscience before him, but also to liue honestly in the view of the world; and provide things honest in the sight of all men, as well as those which are holy and religious in the sight of God. For as one saith, Not onely faith ought to distinguish betweene a Christian and an heathen, but the life also; and our diuers religions ought to bee demonstrated and shewed by our diuers workes. Yea in truth, these will alwayes necessarily and inseparably goe together;

together; neither is it possibly for a man to haue a sincere and vpright heart, but it will shew it selfe in the outward conuersation, words, and actions, seeing it is the fountaine and roote from which they flow and spring; and such as it is, either good or euill, cleane or polluted, such will they be also. For if the heart be the Inditer of a good matter, the tongue will be the pen of a ready Writer; If the heart be prepared, so will the tongue also, and both ioyning together, will sing and giue praise; whereof it is that the Apostle James concludeth, that if any man seeme religious, and bridleth not his tongue, this mans religion is vaine. And also, that pure Religion and vndefiled before God, will shew it selfe in the workes of mercy and Christian charity before men: for as in the bodily, so in the spirituall estate, the health and welfare of the heart is best discerned by the pulse in the hand, neither can there be an vpright heart, where the actions are vniust. And therefore the Psalmist describing a true Citizen of Heauen, doth ioine heart, hand, and tongue all together; He that hath cleane hands and a pure heart, speaketh the truth from it, and hath not lift vp his soule vnto vanity, nor sworne deceitfully.

Now the reasons which may mooue vs to ioine outward practice with inward integrity, respect God, our neighbours, or our selues. In respect of God, first, because he commandeth that we haue not only in our selues the oyle of Grace, but that we also cause the light of it to shine outwardly before men. He would haue vs inwardly to repent with vnfeigned contrition in our hearts, but withall, that we bring forth fruits meete for repentance in our liues. He desireth aboue all that we should loue him with all our hearts and soules, but he would haue vs also to approoue the sincerity of our affection, by keeping his Commandements; especially, by louing one another as Christ hath loued vs. Secondly, we must bring forth the fruits of our inward sincerity in our outward practice, that men seeing the light of our godly liues, may take occasion thereby to glorifie our heauenly Father, for herein he is glorified, if wee bring forth much fruit; the which, being the maine and supreme end of all things, we are, in whatsoeuer wee doe, chiefly to aime at it, as the Apostle exhorteth. Thirdly, wee must ioine outward conformity vnto our inward sincerity, to testifie our thankfulness vnto God for his innumerable benefits both spirituall and corporall, without which we shall fall into the vice of vngratitude, which is so odious both to God and men. In respect of our neighbours also, wee must approoue our inward piety by our outward practice, that wee may edifie them by our good example; for if our lights shine before them, they will glorifie our Father which is in heauen; if we haue our conuersation honest among vnbeleeuers, they will giue glory to God in the day of their visitation. Secondly, to auoyd offence which they are ready to take, when they see our conuersation contrary to our profession. Now we must giue no offence in any thing, because there is a fearefull woe denounced against those by whom offences come, and that iustly, because, as much as in them lyeth, they destroy those for whom Christ hath died. Thirdly, that we may hereby gaine them to Christ, when they see our holy conuersation coupled with feare. Wherein we are to follow the Apostles example, who pleased all men in all things, not seeking his owne profit, but of many that they might be saued. In respect of our selues, we are to approue our sincerity by our outward practice in an holy conuersation, that heereby we may be assured that our hearts are vpriight before God, seeing the goodnesse of the tree can no otherwise be knowne, then by the good fruits which it beareth, nor the life of Grace discerned, but by the breath of holy and righteous words and actions. Secondly, because we can no otherwise haue the peace of a good conscience, in the assurance of our election and saluation, vnlesse we bring forth in our liues the fruits of sanctification. Thirdly, because by our outward obedience our inward graces are exercised, and by exercise increased, which otherwise will faint and languish. Neither will God giue vs the Talents of his graces, vnlesse we will put them out to vse, that he may be glorified, and our brethren aduantaged by their increase. Whereas if like good Vines we be fruitfull in the duties of piety and righteousness, he will purge and prune vs, that we may bring forth more fruit. Fourthly, that we may adorne our profession, when as we walke worthy that high calling whereunto we are called, and approue our selues to be the children of God, and heires of heauen, by resembling our heavenly Father in holinesse and righteousness; according to that of the Apostle; As he that hath called you, is holy, so bee ye holy in all manner of conuersation; Because it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy. And if ye call him Father, who without respect of persons iudgeth according to every mans worke, passe the time of your sojourning heere in feare.

Now as wee are to exercise the wholly body in the outward practice of obedience, and the duties of a godly life, as our eyes in seeing, our eares in hearing, &c. so especially must we approue our practice of piety, both by our words and workes. By our words, both by Christian profession and holy communication. For if our hearts bee vpriight before God, and serue him in sincerity and truth, then will wee make an outward profession of what wee inwardly belecue, namely, that God is our God, and we his Children and seruants, and that wee imbrace his truth of Religion, and will in all things conforme our selues vnto his reuealed will. So the Apostle saith, that, as with the heart man beleueth vnto righteousness, so with the mouth hee confesseth to saluation. And the Psalmist; I beleued, and therefore I spake; the which, as it was his owne practice, as appeareth in those words, I will declare thy Name vnto my brethren, in the midst of the Congregation will I praise thee: so in the next words hee telleth vs, that it is generally the practice of all that feare God; Ye that feare the Lord, praise him, all ye the seede of Iacob, glorifie him. The which profession of our faith ought not to bee forced and constrained, but free and liberall, as oft as wee haue any hope thereby to glorifie God, or edifie those that heare vs; according to that of the Apostle Peter; Sanctifie the Lord God in your hearts, and bee ready alwayes to give an answer to euery man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekenesse and feare. For otherwise, if our profession is likely to tend to Gods dishonour, by exposing his Truth to skorne and blasphemy, and our persons to the rage and violence of prophane miscreants, our Saviours rule must take place, Cast not that which is holy vnto Dogs, nor pearles before Swine, &c. And as wee are to bee free and cheerefull in our profession; so also to bee bold and couragious, not fearing the face of

of man, nor denying or suppressing the truth, for feare or fauour, either to please men, or to auoyd our owne trouble, according to the example of Dauid; who professeth that hee would speake of Gods Testimonies before Kings, and would not bee ashamed; and the Apostle Paul, who professed before the Gouernour, that after that way which was called heresie, by the enemies of Gods Truth, hee worshipped the God of his Fathers, beleeuing all that was written in the Law and the Prophets. To which purpose, wee are alwayes to remember that saying of our Sauour Christ; Whosoever shall confesse mee before men, him will I confesse also before my Father which is in heauen. But whosoever shall deny mee before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heauen. Secondly, vvee must testifie our integrity of heart by our holy communication, the principall scope whereof must bee, the glory of God, according to the example of Dauid, who professeth that hee had not hid Gods righteousness within his heart, but had declared his faithfulness and saluation, and had not concealed his louing kindnesse from the great Congregation. And next vnto it, our speech must tend to the furthering of our owne saluation, and edification of our brethren. For if our hearts bee sincere and holy, such also will our conferences bee, as before wee haue shewed more at large.

Secondly, with our words and outward profession, wee must ioine also our workes and actions, in doing seruice vnto God, without which wee cannot approoue our hearts to bee vpriight before him. Neither is it sufficient to make vs accepted of God, that wee speake religiously, and make a glorious profession of the Truth, vnlesse our practice be sutable in the works of holinesse and righteousness. It is not enough (as our Sauour hath taught vs) to cry, Lord, Lord, for entring into Gods Kingdom, vnlesse we do the wil of his Father which is in heauen; no nor yet that we haue prophesied and preached in his Name, seeing we shal be excluded & depart from him, if we be workers of iniquity. For not the hearers and talkers of the Law, but the doers thereof shall be iustified. Neither will God render vnto vs according to our outward profession, but according to our deeds, & we shal receiue at Christs appearing to Iudgement, not according to our words and shewes, but according to that we haue done, whether it be good or bad. Yea in truth, bare profession without practice, doth make vs the more odious in Gods sight. And if we deny God in our works, who we professe to know with our words, we become abominable hypocrites, who dishonour him more by their sins then any other. In which regard, the Lord would haue none to make profession of Religion, who do not indeuour to practise what they know in their liues. What hast thou to doe to declare my Statutes, or that thou shouldest take my Covenant into thy mouth; seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee? And such our Sauour reprooueth; Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and doe not the things which I say? Before therefore we compass Gods Altar, to offer vnto him with our tongues the sacrifice of praise, wee must first with Dauid, wash our hands in innocencie. If we would approoue the sincerity of our faith, & outward confession of the Truth, we must with those beleeuers in the Acts of the Apostles, shew it by our deeds. If we would make it manifest that our harts are inwardly inflamed with the loue of God, we must shew it by our actions rather then by our words; according to that of our Satiour; If ye loue me, keepe my Commandements: And againe, He that hath my Commandements and keepeth them, is he that loueth me. Tee are my friends, if ye doe whatsoever I command you.

By all which it appeareth, that vnto the duties of a godly life, there is required reall practice in our workes, as well as verball profession with our moutnes, neither doth an holy profession alone make any man holy, but only bindeth him to the duties of holinesse. The which, though it bee acknowledged of all men, yet because it fareth with the most, as with men grievously sicke, who hauing lost their appetite, approoue good meate in their iudgment and discourse, but when they are moued to eate of it, put it by, because it is lothsome to their corrupted stomacks; therefore it will not be amisse that we inforce this point a little further, that I may set an edge on their appetite, and as the Apostle requireth, may prouoke them vnto loue and good workes. First therefore let vs consider, that as the Lord requireth an vpriight heart and holy profession, so also the fruits of them both in good workes. For he would haue vs; not onely hearers of his Word, but also doers of it; and chargeth vs to doe good vnto all, to be rich in good workes, and neuer weary of well-doing. Secondly, that he hath created vs vnto good workes, that we should walke in them, and redeemed vs, that wee should not onely doe good workes, but also bee zealous in doing of them. Thirdly, that they are the chiefe ornaments of Christians, which much more decke and beautifie them in the sight of God and all good men, then all Jewels, gold, and gorgeous apparell. Fourthly, let vs consider the exceeding profit of them, seeing God doth richly reward them, both in this life and the life to come. Fifthly, that they are notable and singular meanes to assure vs of all Gods graces in this life, and eternal happinesse in the life to come, whereby we attaine vnto spirituall comfort, peace of conscience, and ioy in the holy Ghost. For they are the assured signes of our election and effectuall calling, seeing if we doe these things, we shall neuer fall. They are the fruits of our regeneration and new birth, whereby wee are assured of our spirituall life, euen as the naturall life is knowne by action and motion; and that we are trees of righteousness, which Gods owne hand hath planted; for the tree is knowne by the fruits, seeing a good tree cannot bring forth those which are euill; nor an euill those which are good. They assure vs of our iustification: for he that doth righteousness, is righteous, as the Apostle Iohn telleth vs. They are signes of our adoption and spirituall kindred with Christ: for they that heare the Word and doe it, are his brethren and sisters. By them we may be assured that our wisdom is spirituall and heavenly; according to that of the Apostle Iames; Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge amongst you? Let him shew out of a good conuersation his workes with meeknesse of wisdom. That our faith also is lively and iustifying. For they, and they onely doe truly beleene in God, who are carefull to maintaine good workes; seeing as it inwardly purifieth the heart, so also it worketh outwardly by loue. And therefore the Apostle Iames concludeth, that such a faith as bringeth not forth these fruits, doth nothing profit vs for our iustification and saluation; because it is dead, and nor a liuing body, but a dead carcasse which breatheth not. So that though workes doe not iustifie vs, but faith onely onely (for wee are first made righteous, before wee can bring forth the fruits of righteousness) yet that faith which is alone, doth not iustifie vs, because it is a dead faith, and therefore cannot apply vnto vs Christ our Righteousnesse. Though they doe not iustifie vs before God, yet they iustifie vs before men, that is, declare that we are iustified. Though they be not causes, yet they are necessary and inseparable effects of our iustification. Though they are not required vnto the act of iustification, but faith onely vniting vs vnto Christ our Righteousnesse, yet vnto the party iustified: for as hee that doth righteousness, is righteous, so hee that is righteous, doth righteousness, the cause and effect alwayes concurring and going together. Finally, though they bee not meritorious causes of saluation, which is Gods free gift; an inheritance, and not a purchase made by our selues, yet they are the meanes which assure vs of it; and though they be not the cause of our reigning, yet they are the way to the Kingdome. Finally, they are the vndoubted signes, and (as the Apostle calleth them) the proofe of our loue, whereby we may try whether it be vnfained or hypocriticall; for if we loue God, we will keepe his Commandements: and also of the truth and sincerity of our Religion, which is not so well knowne from that which is false by an outward profession, as by the holy practice of it in the workes of piety, iustice, mercy and Christian charity.

Lastly, let vs consider, that the Lord will richly of his free grace reward these workes with glory and happinesse in his Kingdome. For though the strength of our title stand vpon Gods free gift, yet wee are entred into the possession of it by the workes of mercy, as being infallible signes that wee are the true and lawfull heires vnto whom this heavenly patrimony doth belong, by right of Couenant: according to that of our Sauour, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdome prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was hungry, and ye gaue me meate; I was thirsty, and ye gaue me drinke, &c. So the Apostle saith, that at the day of Iudgement, Christ will render to euery man according to his deeds: To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seeke for glory, honour, and immortality, eternall life, but to them that are contentious and doe not obey the truth, but obey vnrightheousnesse, indignation and wrath, &c. Whereby it appeareth, that if euer we meane to attaine vnto euerlasting happinesse, we must not content our selues with an opinion of our inward piety and sincerity, nor with an outward profession of Religion, but we must bring forth the fruits of them, both in the workes of holinesse and righteousness; For not euery one that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into Gods Kingdome, but they that doe his will. And they onely are pronounced happy, who heare the Word of God and keep it. As for those who please themselves with the profession of piety, & neglect the practice in the fruits of obedience, and duties of a godly life, they are presently in danger to be cut off like hypocrits & dead branches with Gods iudgements, according to that of Iohn the Baptiste, Now is the axe laid to the root of the trees; Therefore euery tree which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewne downe & cast into the fire: And in the World to come shall be excluded from Gods presence, and haue their portion in euerlasting fire, prepared for the deuill and his angels, not only as workers of iniquity, but also as neglecters of the workes of mercy and Christian charity, to the poore members of Iesus Christ.

That we must performe vniuersall obedience to the whole will of God.

Job 20. 12.

AND thus haue we shewed, that our obedience ought to bee vniuersall, in respect of the subiect or the person that performeth it. In the next place we are to shew, that there is also an vniuersality required in respect of the obiect, whereby we vnderstand the whole will of God reuealed in the Scriptures. Neither is it sufficient that we performe some, or many duties, and neglect the rest; but wee must in all things bee conformable to all Gods Commandements: which is not so to be vnderstood, as though we could actually doe all that God requireth, for in many things wee sinne all, but of an habituall obedience and disposition of our hearts, whereby wee desire, resolute, and indeuour in all things to doe Gods will, in as great perfection as we can, bewailing our wants and imperfections, when we faile and come short of our desires. Of which we haue an example in Dauid, who had respect vnto all Gods Commandements, and in the remnant of the Captiuitie, who bound themselves by couenant and oath to walke in Gods Law, and to obserue and doe all the Commandements of the Lord their God: and in Zachary and Elizabeth, who were righteous before God, walking in all the Commandements and Ordinances of the Lord blamelesse. The contrary whereof we see in the example of Iehu, who obeyed God in destroying the house of Ahab, and Baal with his Priests, for the establishing of his owne Kingdome, but not in taking away the golden Calues. In Herod, who heard Iohn the Baptist willingly, and obeyed his doctrine in many things, but would not leaue his Incest. In Iudas, and Demas, who performed many good duties, but would not forsake their couetousnesse and loue of the world. And finally, in Ananias and Saphyra, who were content to share with God, but kept part of the possession which they had wholly consecrated vnto him, for their owne vse. But our obedience must be vniuersall, keeping no sinne as sweet vnder our tongue; but we must in the disposition, desire and purpose of our hearts, renounce all sinnes whatsoeuer without exception, be they neuer so pleasing or profitable; yea, wee must with greatest hatred pursue those, vnto which our corrupt natures are most inclined, making warre, as against all these wicked enemies of God, so most earnestly against this Canaanitish brood which dwell in our Land. And contrariwise, we must loue and imbrace all vertues, and practise all Christian duties which God hath commanded, though they be neuer so hard and difficult to our corrupt disposition; yea the more auerse our sinfull natures are vnto them, so much the more earnestly we must labour to imbrace and practise them. For if we make any composition with Satan and our owne flesh, to giue willing entertainment vnto any sinne, or to neglect any vertue or Christian duty, our obedience is but hypocritically and fained; and the sinne reserued, like a little leauen, will sowre the whole lump, or a little Coloquintida, will imbitter and poyson all our seeming vertues and obedience. They will on all occasions open the doore of our hearts, and let in all manner of wickednesse, as pledges and hostages given to Satan, to warrant his re-entry when he pleaseth.

Which dangers if we would auoyd, wee must resolute to yeeld obedience to all and euery part of Gods will reuealed, either in the Law, or the Gospell. In respect of the Law, we must obserue both Tables, and performe all duties of piety, righteousness and sobriety which God hath commanded in them. And if wee would approue our selues to bee in the number of those who are the Lords redeemed, wee must resolute to worship him both in holinesse and righteousness. If wee would be reckoned among those good scholers vnto whom the grace of God hath appeared, that bringeth saluation, we must approue our selues to bee so, by learning that whole lesson which he teacheth, which is, to deny vngodlines and worldly lusts, and to liue soberly, righteously and godly in this present world: And if we would be accepted of God, we must not onely religiously feare him, but also worke righteousness, as the Apostle Peter speaketh. For if wee seeme to make conscience of the first Table, and neglect the second, our obedience will make vs no better then glorious Hypocrites: or if wee will obserue the duties of the second, and not regard the first, wee shall bee no better then ciuill worldlings, and honest Infidels. Againe, wee must obserue this vniuersall obedience, as in respect of the parts of the Law, and duties of both Tables, so also of the degrees, desiring to keepe, with all care and good conscience, the small Commandements as well as the greater, not thinking any duty so small, that we may wittingly and willingly neglect it, nor any sinne so slight and veniall, that wee may commit it. For small neglects will make way for greater; and lesser sins being wilfully entertained, will open the doore of our hearts to let in greater. It is true that there ought to be a proportion obserued, and as duties are of greatest excellency and necessity, so they must haue priority and precedency; and as sinnes are more hainous and grievous, so they must be resisted and forsaken with greatest zeale and indeuour. But yet true and sincere obedience dispenceth with no degree of sinne, or the neglect of the least duties in their due place and time: and though it respecteth chiefly the waighy things of the Law, yet it doth not voluntarily omit the least duties. Though it chiefly abhorreth whoredome, sacriledge and periury, yet it yeeldeth not to wanton dalliance, petty thefts, and idle oathes. And thus also if our obedience be sound and sincere, then haue we also respect to the Commandements of the Gospell, as well as the Law; and in them make like conscience of the one, as well as of the other; desiring and indeuoring with no lesse care to repent vnfeinedly of our sinnes, then to beleue in Christ, and apply the promises of grace and saluation; and no lesse struing to be freed from sinne in respect of the corruption, by vertue of Christs death, and to rise againe vnto newnesse of life, by the power of his Resurrection, then to be deliuered from the guilt and punishment of it, and to rise at the latter Day vnto glory and happinesse. For if wee diuide these, we shall doe neither aright. If wee beleue onely, and doe not repent, we are but carnall Gospellers, and presumptuous worldlings: and if our sorrow for sinne be neuer so great, yet if we haue not faith in Christ, this griefe is to be grieved for, seeing it is the fore-runner of despaire, and a worldly sorrow which bringeth death. So that though wee should be-

Deut. 28. 1.

The reasons which may moue vs to yeeld this vniuersall obedience to the whole reuealed will of God, are diuers; first, because God commandeth it. Neither doth he require that wee should keepe his Law in some things, and breake it in others, or in most things, and neglect it in some few, seeing no Prince will accept from his subiect such obedience; but all and euery of his Commandements without exception. Hee bindeth vs strictly to obserue all his Statutes and Iudgements which hee setteth before vs; that whatsoeuer he commandeth vs, we obserue to doe it; neither adding thereto, nor diminishing from it; that we set our hearts to obey all the Words of his Law, turning not therefrom to the right hand, nor to the left. So our Sauour Christ inioyneth his Disciples to preach vnto all nations, teaching them to obserue all things whatsoeuer he commanded. The which the Apostle obserued in his owne practice; keeping in all things a good conscience before God, and lining honestly before men. And vnto this totall obedience to all Gods Law, doth he restraîne all his promises; If (saith he) thou wilt hearken diligently vnto the voyce of the Lord thy God, to obserue and to doe all his Commandements; then I will aduance thee, and all my blessings shall come vpon thee, &c. Whereas that which is but in part, can expect no reward, but rather deserved punishment. For as it is in this case betweene the Prince and his subiect, so also betweene God and vs. Though a man obserue the whole Law of his Soueraigne, and committeth onely one hainous and capitall crime, his obedience is not rewarded, seeing therein hee doth but his duty, but for his offence he is iustly punished.

§. Sect. 4.
That our obedience cannot be sincere, vntlesse it bee vniuersall.

Iam. 2. 10, 11.

Secondly, if our obedience be not vniuersall to the whole will of God, it cannot be sincere and vpright; for if in the integrity of our hearts wee yeelded obedience to any of Gods Commandements, out of our loue towards him, and because he requireth our obedience vnto them, then would we vpon the same ground and reason obey all the rest, seeing hee is the Authour of all alike, and by the same diuine authority bindeth vs to one as well as to another. And vpon this reason the Apostle James doubteth not to affirme, that he who breaketh any one Commandement, is guilty of all, though he keepeth all the rest; for he that said, Doe not commit adultery, said also, Doe not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the Law. For there is a chaine of vertues and vices, whereby they are so fast and inseparably linked together, that he who imbraceth and practiseth any one vertue and Christian duty out of his loue and obedience to God, imbraceth and performeth all the rest; hee that willingly liueth in the neglect of any one duty, or maketh no conscience of committing any knowne sinne, neglecteth all, and is prepared to commit any wickednesse. In which regard it may truly bee said, that the vnregenerate man breaketh all Gods Commandements, euen those which hee seemeth to keepe, and that the sound Christian obserueth all, euen those which he seemeth to breake. For howsoeuer the one doth not actually transgresse transgresse every Commandement, yet there is in him an habit of sinne, and a naturall disposition and readinesse to breake all when opportunity serueth, and when hee is tempted thereunto with the alluring baits of worldly vanities. And though the other doe not actually keepe the whole Law, but faileth in many particulars, yet there is in him an habit of holinesse and righteousnesse, and a disposition and desire, resolution and indouour to obserue all; for with the Apostle they consent vnto the whole Law, that it is holy and good, and being in their hearts delighted in it; they strue to keepe one Commandement as well as another, and when they faile of their purpose, doe heartily bewaile their imperfections. It is true, that a wicked man may not onely forsake many sinnes, but may also in some sort loath and detest them; but this is not out of his loue towards God, or because he hateth or forbiddeth them, but caused by some common restraining grace, or done out of some corrupt passion and disposition, not because he hateth sinne, but because some contrary vice being predominant in him, doth draw him vnto another extreme. And thus the couetous man hateth prodigality, and the prodigall, couetousnesse: the presumptuous man melancholike despaire, and the despairing sinner, bold presumption; the coward, bloody quarrell, and the desperate hackster, cowardize. Yea, thus may a man outwardly shun all sinnes which make him liable to legall penalties out of selfe-loue, that hee may gaine rewards, or escape punishments; not out of loue to vertue and innocency, but feare of running into danger.

Finally, vnlesse we performe totall obedience in the desire, purpose and indouour of our heart vnto the whole Law of God, wee can neither attaine vnto heauenly happinesse, nor escape hellish death and condemnation, though we imbrace and practise many vertues and duties, and flee from many vices and sinnes. For as a Mill-stone will keepe vs from mounting aloft, as well as a Mountaine, and the one as well as the other would cause vs to sinke into the bottome of the Sea, if it were fastened vnto vs; so if any one sinne haue taken such fast hold of our hearts, that we will by no meanes be moued to leaue it, the waight thereof will bee sufficient to keepe vs from ascending vnto heauenly happinesse, and to drench and drowne vs in the sea of perdition. So the Apostle saith, that he that liueth (not in all or many sinnes, but) in any one, shall neuer enter into the Kingdome of heauen; Neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, &c. shall inherit the Kingdome of God. And the Apostle Iohn saith, that euery sort of sinners, as sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and lyers, shall be excluded from this place of blessednesse. So that as for the losse of corporall life, it is not necessary that the body should be wounded in euery place, but a mortall wound in any of the vitall parts, is sufficient to let in death, and giue it seisure of the whole man: so is it in this case. And as particular sinnes depriue vs of happinesse, so they plunge vs into death and destruction, as appeareth by that distinct enumeration which the Prophet maketh of particulars; If (saith hee) bee beget a sonne that is a robber, a shedder of blood, and doth the like to any of these things, and that neglecteth any of the duties there mentioned, hee shall not liue, but surely dye. And the Apostle Iohn saith, that sinners of euery kind, shall

Now if any will say, that if for any one duty wilfully neglected, or sinne committed, they shall lose the ioyes of heauen, and be cast into hell torments, then it were as good to bee outrageously wicked, and to liue in all manner of sinne; let one of the Ancients make answer to such an obiection. This (saith he) is the speech of an vngratefull and reprobate seruant: yet let not such an one let the reines loose to all impiety for his owne profit. For though all impenitent sinners are excluded out of heauen, and throwne into hell, yet all in hell doe not suffer equall torments, but some greater, and some lesse, according to the quality and number of their sinnes.

CAP. V.

Of the properties of Christian and holy duties, which respect their causes efficient and finall.

§. Sect. 1.
That all duties should spring from the loue of God.

Heb. 11. 25.

AND these are the properties which respect the duties themselves. The properties which concerne the manner of doing them, are diuers, and respect either the causes that moue vs to performe them, or our disposition in doing them. The causes are either efficient, or finall. The efficient cause mouing vs to performe all the duties of a godly life, ought to be the loue of God, which is the fountaine of true obedience, and should bee so powerfull in vs, that we should thereby be moued to serue, like children, our heauenly Father, though there were no reward promised to our seruice, which is the motiue that induceth mercenaries and seruants, rather then children, to doe their duty. For howsoeuer we may in our obedience haue an eye with Moses, to the recompence of reward; yet the chiefe argument that preuaileth with vs, ought to be, not the loue of our selues, and out of it, the desire of our owne saluation; but the loue of God, who is the chiefe Goodnesse, whose glory is much to bee preferred before our owne good. Neither is it enough that the loue of God accompany our actions, and that they be done in and with it, as running together (as it were) in the same streame, but also that it be the fountaine from which all our obedience doth spring and flow. Consider we therefore when wee vnder take the performance of any Christian duty, what is the cause that moueth vs vnto it; and if we finde, that it is loue of the world, or loue of our selues, either to obtaine a reward, or to auoyd punishment, temporall or eternall, let vs put it backe as comming out of due place, and labour that the loue of God, which is much more worthy, may haue the precedency, as the first and chiefe motiue that perswadeth vs to well-doing.

§. Sect. 2.
That we must
propound Gods will, and our obedience thereunto in all duties.

Secondly, we must propound vnto our selues, in all the duties of a godly life, the will of God, and his glory, in yeelding obedience vnto it, as the maine scope and end of all our actions; desiring chiefly and in the first place (as our Sauour hath taught vs to pray) that wee may hallow and glorifie Gods Name, by doing his will. And if wee will performe vnto God acceptable seruice, wee must therein deny our selues and our owne wills, wills, and yeeld our selues in absolute obedience to the will of God; praying, because he will haue vs pray, hearing and reading his Word, because it is his will that we should do so, giuing almes, and doing works of mercy, that we may please him by doing his will; yea seeking the saluation of our owne soules, not chiefly because we desire it for our owne good; but because his will is to glorifie himselfe in our saluation and happinesse. For Gods will is the cause of causes; and as all things came from it, so must all things tend vnto it as their maine scope and end. It is that which gaue first being to our wills, and preserueth them in it; and therefore they must not be absolute in themselves, but in all things yeeld to the will of their Creator, willing whatsoever they will, because God first willeth it. It is the rule of righteousness and all perfection, and all things are iust and vniust, perfect or imperfect, straight or crooked, as they agree or differ from it; and therefore there is no goodnesse in our wills, no not in the chusing and imbracing of the best actions and duties that can be named, but onely so farre forth as we conforme them to the will of God, and doe all we doe in obedience vnto it. And if first and chiefly we performe vnto God any seruice, because our will and desire leadeth vs vnto it, and not principally in this respect, because God willeth it, and would haue vs also to will and doe it, it doth hereby lose all grace and beauty, and so also all reward at Gods hand, seeing we serue not him, but our selues, when wee aime not chiefly at the doing of his will, that wee may please and glorifie him, but of our owne. Neither are our actions chiefly to bee esteemed good or euill according to the matter, but according to the maine scope and end of them which giueth them their denomination; nor is any act, seeme it neuer so glorious, to be esteemed Gods seruice, which is not done in obedience vnto him, nor any obedience which hath not conformity with his will. In which regard it may be truly said, that the basest workes of the most seruile calling, done by a faithfull Christian, in simple obedience to the will of God to glorifie him, are more pleasing vnto him, and esteemed for better seruice then the praier and fasting, hearing the Word, and giuing almes of Pharisaical hypocrites, which are done either for the praise of men, or as workes satisfactory to Gods iustice, and to merit by them their owne saluation. Finally, if wee performe all good duties not as our owne will, but as the will of God, and labour in all things that his will may chiefly sway and rule in ours, wee shall heereby adde much excellency vnto all our good actions. For seeing the action receiueth worth and dignity from the agent, in which regard the same thing done by a mighty Prince, is esteemed highly, which in an ordinary and meane person is little regarded; therefore must needs all good duties bee much more excellent, when the will of God is the chiefe motiue that setteth vs on worke, and not our owne will, seeing they proceed from a much more excellent cause.

Wee must therefore, in all Christian duties, propound this vnto our selues, as our principall and maine scope, that the will of God, and not our owne, may bee done in them; according to the example of our Saviour Christ, who did not his owne will, but the will of him that sent him. We must labour after Regeneration, not as the act of our owne will, but of Gods. For we are borne againe, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. We must labour to be sanctified, because this is the will of God, euen our sanctification; that we may live no longer the rest of our time in the flesh, to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. Wee must pray, and in all things giue thanks, because this is the will of God in Iesus Christ. Yea, whatsoeuer we doe, we must doe it, not as our owne will, but as the will of God. The which is not onely to be obserued in the high and excellent duties of Gods immediate seruice, but euen in the basest and most seruile actions, euen in the duties of the poorest and meanest seruants, who must, in performing seruice to their Masters, propound vnto themselues as their mayne scope, not their owne profit, nor the doing of their owne or their Masters will, but the will of God which requireth it at their hands. For so the Apostle exhorteth seruants to be obedient vnto their Masters, and to serue them with feare and singlenesse of heart, as vnto Christ; not with eye-seruice, as men-pleasers, but as the seruants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. And as in our doings, so likewise in our sufferings, we must with the Apostle, and our Sauour Christ himselfe, chiefly aime at this, that the will of the Lord may be done in them. For those only that suffer according to Gods will, receiue the promise; and such alone can with confidence commit the keeping of their soules to him in well-doing, as vnto a faithfull Creatour, as the Apostle Peter speaketh. Now that we may be mooued thus to seeke, that Gods will may be done in all our actions, let vs consider, that there is no true obedience which hath not this as the maine scope of it; that if we thus doe, we shall be accepted of God, and with David bee approoued, as men according to Gods owne heart. That we shall heereby be aduanced to great honour, and be made of Gods owne Priuy Councell, by the illumination of his Spirit; yea, next a kinne to our Sauour Christ. That God will heare all our prayers; for the blinde man could see this, that if any man be a worshipper of God, and doe his will, him he heareth. And if in our Petitions we desire that Gods will may be done in ours, we are sure to haue them granted, as the Apostle Iohn telleth vs. Finally, that those onely shall attaine vnto euerlasting life, who indeuour in all things to doe Gods will, for he that doth the will of God, abideth for euer, as the Apostle speaketh, and not hee that saith, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdome of Heauen, but he that doth the will of our Father which is in heauen, as our Sauour teacheth vs.

CAP. VI.

Of those properties which respect our hearts and affections.

6. Sect. I.

That we must performe all duties of a godly life with cheerefulness.

And these are the properties which respect the causes of all Christian duties. Those which concerne our disposition in doing them, doe either more principally respect the heart and affection, or the carriage generally of the whole man. In respect of the heart, this is the property of all the duties of a godly life, that they be done heartily; according to that of the Apostle, file, Whatsoever ye doe, doe it heartily, as vnto the Lord, and not vnto men. But of this in the generall I haue before spoken; and therefore will heere insist vpon two speciall branches of it; the first is alacrity and cheerefulness, the second is seruent zeale in all good duties. Concerning the former, we ought to performe all the duties of a godly life with alacrity and cheerefulness, as being an inseparable property of them, if they be sincere and vpright. And this the Lord requireth generally in all Christian duties, that we be ready vnto euery good worke; and more specially in the duties of his seruice and all the parts thereof. For wee must not onely seeke and serue the Lord, but also make him our chiefe delight. We must serue the Lord with gladnesse, and come before him with thanksgiuing. Wee must come before his presence with thanksgiuing, and make a ioyfull noyse vnto him with Psalmes, as the Psalmist exhorteth. And wee must serue God with a perfect and a willing minde, as hee perswadeth Salomon his sonne. Neither must we goe to the place of Gods seruice lumpishly and heauily, but bee glad and reioyce, when we mutually exhort one another to goe vp to the House of the Lord. For as in the time of the Law, God could not indure a dead oblation, but would haue a liuing sacrifice, or the life of it, and especially the inwards and heart offred vnto him; so can he not abide, that we should tender vnto him a dull, dead, and heartlesse seruice, without any spirit, life, and cheerefulness, which is no more pleasing then a dead carrion in his sight. More especially, we must not onely serue God on his Sabbaths, but we must account them our delight. In our prayers, we must with the Apostle make our requests with ioy. We must in our thanksgiuing reioyce before God, according to that of the Psalmist; O come, let vs sing vnto the Lord, let vs make a ioyfull noyse to the Rocke of our saluation. And againe; Reioyce in the Lord, O ye righteous, praise him with harpe, &c. Our preaching must be, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready minde. Our oblations towards the building of the Tabernacle, and furthering the meanes of Gods seruice, must, like the Israelites, be offered with a willing heart. And this alacrity and cheerefulness must bee vsed in all other Christian duties, if we would haue them acceptable vnto God. Our Almes must be giuen with cheerefulness, and not as wrested from vs by importunity, because the Lord loueth a cheerefull giuer. Our benefits must be bestowed not grudgingly and slowly, but readily and with alacrity; for it is a double benefit when the heart goeth with the gift; and (as the Heathen man sayd) Hee giueth twice, that giueth speedily and readily. Finally, seeing, if wee be seruants, and doe our duty aright, wee serue God and doe his will, therefore also we must doe it cheerefully and from our hearts.

Now that we may thus serue God with alacrity and cheerefulness, let these reasons perswade vs. First, because it is most acceptable vnto God, and in much more high price with him, then the worke and duty it selfe, be it neuer so excellent in outward appearance. For if euen mortall men, who neede the duties and seruice of others, are much more delighted with the kindnesse and loue of the giuer, then with the gift it selfe: And if Parents and Masters are better pleased with the willing cheerefulness of their children and seruants, then with their duties which they performe, being done with grudging and repining: then much more is the Lord delighted with our alacrity and readinesse in the duties of his seruice, rather then with the outward workes and actions, seeing we can in nothing bee profitable vnto him; yea, as we haue shewed before, hee esteemeth no bodily seruice which is not en-liued with this soule of cheerefulness; whereas contrariwise though our duties of his seruice be full of manifold imperfections and corruptions, yet if they be performed with ready and cheerefull hearts, he doth accept of them for perfect obedience. For hee accepteth in the seruice of his children the will for the deed, and if there be a willing minde, a man is accepted, according to that he hath, and that power of performance which God hath giuen, and not according to that he hath not, as the Apostle speaketh. Secondly, this cheerefulness and alacrity maketh our otherwise vnperfect seruice, like vnto that which is performed by the blessed Angels, who are alwayes ready, as soone as they heare Gods voyce, to doe his pleasure, as the Psalmist speaketh; they stand about his Throne continually, and no sooner receiue his Commandements, but hasten to execute them with winged speed. Thirdly, because cheerefulness and delight in Gods seruice, as it is most highly esteemed, so is it aboue all other most richly rewarded, for if wee delight in the Lord, hee will giue vs the desires of our hearts; if wee delight in him, and call his Sabbaths, which are consecrated vnto his seruice, our delight also, hee will greatly honour and aduance vs, and inrich vs greatly with all his blessings, as hee hath promised. So the Apostle saith, that in respect of the bare act of his preaching the Gospel, he had nothing to glory of, because a necessity of performing this duty was laid vpon him, and a woe denounced if he performed it not; but if he did not by constraint, but willingly; then hee should haue at Gods hands a reward. Finally, let vs serue God with this cheerefulness, because thereby we shall get vnto our selues an infallible marke and signe that we are in the estate of blessednesse. For the Psalmist describing a blessed man, bringeth in this as one of his speciall properties, that his delight is in the Law of the Lord; so that hee meditateth in it day and night. And therefore let vs not content our selues with cold, carelesse, and formall seruice, but performe it vnto God with cheerefulness and delight, without which, it is neither pleasing vnto him, nor profitable vnto vs. And seeing this is not a flower which groweth in natures soyle, but a gift of God, who worketh in vs, both to will and to doe of his good pleasure; whereof it is that Dauid acknowledgeth the free-will offerings of himselfe and his people, towards the building of the Temple, to haue wholly proceeded from God, who had giuen them both these gifts, and also willing hearts to returne them; therefore let vs begge it daily at Gods hands, that taking away our dulnesse and drowzinesse, our auersenesse and backwardnesse vnto holy duties, he will giue vs grace to serue him in all things with alacrity and cheerefulness, ioy and delight.

The second property respecting the heart, is true zeale, which as wee heere consider it, is a deuout consecrating of our selues wholly both in soule and body to the seruice of God, and an ardent desire, study, and in-deuour to glorifie him, by walking before him in the duties of a godly life. So that it is nothing but the intension of our loue and cheerefulness vnto vnto these holy exercises, and of our anger, and dislike against all the impediments whereby wee are opposed and hindred in them. And this is commended vnto vs in the Scriptures as an excellent grace, the beauty and brightnesse whereof, no where shineth more cleerely, then in this subiect. For if it be good (as the Apostle saith) to bee zealous in a good matter, where can this zeale more exceed in goodnesse, then when it is employed and spent in the duties of Gods seruice and of a Christian life, then the which, nothing can be better? It is the vitall heate, and, as it were, the very spirits, which intendeth all other graces, and with the warmth of it, increaseth their vertue and vigour, giuing vnto them motion, and making them actiue and operatiue in their seuerall functions. And it is giuen vs of God, as a singular Antidote against that cold and killing poyson of camall formality, and that stupid blockishnesse, and senselesse dulnesse and deadnesse, which naturally hath ouerspred all the powers of our body and minde in performing the duties of Gods seruice. And if it bee wanting, we will soone grow cold and carelesse, either neglecting them altogether, or performing them with a luke-warme indifferenc for forme and fashion sake, not greatly regarding whether we doe or leaue them vndone, which will make them lothsome in Gods sight. But if our hearts bee inflamed with this zeale, then will we feruently affect all holy duties of Gods seruice, as being notable meanes of aduancing his glory; and not suffer our selues to be withdrawne from them by worldly vanities, which wee neglect and contemne, in comparison of the other. And then will we also with an holy anger oppose and overcome all impediments and hindrances which stop vs in our Christian course, and especially make warre against our owne corruptions, which dull our deuotion, and make vs slacke and backward to holy duties; which that we may doe, let vs consider that this zeale is the end of our Redemption, and an vndoubted signe, that Christ hath purchased vs vnto himselfe with the price of his owne blood. For therefore gaue he himselfe for vs, that he might redeeme vs from all iniquity, and purifie vnto himselfe a peculiar people, zealous of good workes. So that if we doe not shew our zeale in all vertuous actions and Christian duties, we doe not attaine to this end, and consequently, plainly declare that we are not redeemed by Christ, who being God equall with his Father, and infinite in wisdom and power, cannot faile of those ends which hee propoundeth vnto himselfe. Let vs consider also, that this zeale is an inseparable fruit of true repentance, as the Apostle plainly sheweth. Whereof it is that Christ in his Epistle to the luke-warme Laodiseans ioyneth them together, Be zealous and repent, because they could no otherwise approoue themselues true conuerts, till leauing that state of tepidity and luke-warmenesse, they were inflamed with feruent zeale of Gods glory. For when we soundly & seriously repent vs of our sins, and especially our sloth & sluggishnesse, coldnesse and carelesnes in holy duties, then bewailing & hating our former courses, we set our selues with all earnestnesse to reforme these corruptions, & become zealously deuout in all holy duties, that we may redeeme our former lost time, which we haue fruitlessly mispent in their neglect, wherby it appeareth that our repentance cannot be vnfaigned, vnlesse this zeale be ioyned with it, nor any duty of a godly life sincere, which is not approvd by this property.

of the properties which respect the whole man. And first, diligence in all duties of Gods service.

§. Sect. 1.

That this diligence must be vsed in all good duties, and about the meanes of them.

He properties which respect the whole man, are two; diligence and constancie. By diligence, I vnderstand that sedulity and assiduitie, industry and labour, which wee are content to vse and take for the compassing and obtaining, effecting and atchieuing of those things whereupon wee haue set our hearts and affections. The which property doth alwayes accompany the duties of a godly life, if we rightly performe them as God requireth of vs; and is an inseparable fruit of those which went before. For when wee performe them with alacrity and cheerefulnesse, and doe esteeme them our chiefe delight, then are wee not onely in our hearts zealously affected towards them, but so industrious and diligent in pursuing of them, that we thinke no paines or labour too much, that we may bring them to good effect. And then shaking off all naturall sloth and sluggishnesse, all idlenesse and vnprofitablenesse, wee will set our selues close to our Christian taske, and performe those religious duties, and that holy and spiritnall seruice which our heauenly Lord and Master requireth of vs. The which diligence we will shew, not in doing some or many duties, neglecting the rest, vsing our industry and labour about one, as a vaile to couer our sloth in omitting another, but in the generall performance of all and euery of those Christian duties which God in his Word imposeth vpon vs; and like the good Widdow described by the Apostle, wee will diligently follow euery good worke; yea, wee must approoue our diligence, not onely in performing those good duties which offer themselves vnto vs, but in seeking all good occasions and opportunities of this Christian employment, that we may not stand idle, and be vnprofitable for want of worke, which indeed is neuer wanting, if we want not eyes to see it, and hearts to vndertake it in due time. Neither must our diligence and laborious inducours bee onely spent in the duties themselves, but also about the meanes whereby wee may bee inabled to performe them. For in vaine hee pretendeth diligence in attaining to the end, who neglecteth the meanes which conduce vnto it, seeing the meanes and end doe inseparably goe together. And therefore as no man can bee truly said to bee diligent in his iourney to a Cittie, who goeth not in the way that leadeth vnto it, or in attaining to riches, who neglecteth the meanes whereby they are gotten, or in preserving of his life, who doeth not vse the helps of Physicke or diet, whereby it may be preserved: so neither can any be diligent in the maine duties of a godly life, who sheweth not the like industry and labour in the vse of all good helps and meanes, which by Gods Ordinance and appointment inable vs vnto them. Neither must wee content our selues with the vse of some meanes, and neglect others, but we must shew and approoue our diligence, in vsing of all good helps, which God hath giuen vs, to further vs in our Christian course. And as for the preserving of our naturall life and strength, we doe not eate alone, alone, or sleepe alone, or onely keepe our selues warme, or vse good exercise, & take profitable Physicke, but vse all these meanes ioyntly in their fit seasons, so seeing the Lord hath appointed vnto vs variety of good meanes, for the preserving of our spirituall life and growth in grace, as praying, hearing, receiuing the Sacrament, reading, conferring; wee must not thinke it enough, to pray, or heare, or reade, or to single out vnto our selues any other meanes vnto which we haue best appetite, but wee must approoue our diligence in the ioynt vsing of them all in their due time. For as in nature God hath not ordained one thing as sufficient for all purposes, but meate to feed vs, and not to keepe vs warme; clothes to couer vs and hide our nakednesse, and not to nourish vs; sleepe and exercise to refresh vs, and the like: so also for the preserving of our spirituall life, it is not enough, that we vse one of those meanes whereof God hath giuen vs great variety, seeing he hath not made any one of them sufficient for all vses, but will haue them seuerally vsed for their seuerall ends, and all ioyntly together, that we may be made perfect to euery good worke. Yea, this diligence must shew it selfe, not onely in the vse of all the best and chiefe meanes, but also in wise obseruing of all circumstances, as time, place, person, and such like, which may further vs in the well performing all Christian duties. Neither must we employ our diligence and labour in such meanes as are of our owne chusing, and best fit our appetite, but in those which God hath appointed and sanctified for the better inabling vs vnto his seruice. For as it is not enough to be painefull in traouelling, vnlesse we chuse the right way which will bring vs to our iourneys end, nor for the nourishing of our bodies, and preserving of our naturall strength, that we may bee fit for all ciuill employments, to eate any thing that cometh to hand, but only such meates as God hath created for this vse, and hath made them effectuell vnto it, by his holy Ordinance and blessing vpon it: so we must not chuse wayes of our owne, if we will trauell to our heavenly home, but the right and straight way, which God in his Word hath prescribed vnto vs; we must not, for the nourishment of our soules, that they may be vigorous & strong vnto the duties of a godly life, choose food that fitteth our carnall appetite, as Images, Crucifixes, Pilgrimages, superstitious Penance, which torment the body, but doe not at all humble the proud flesh: for these being not ordained of God, nor sanctified to this vse, but inuented and appointed by the skill and will of man, haue no more power or vertue to nourish the soule, or to strengthen it to vertuous actions, then earth or chips haue to nourish the body. Neither must we spend our diligence in good meanes vnseasonably, out of their due time and place, as those which are inferiour & lesse powerful, when we may employ our selues in those which are superior, and through Gods Ordinance more effectual. As in priuate exercises at home, when we should ioyne with the Congregation in Gods publike seruice; reading a Sermon in our owne houses, when wee should heare the Word preached in the House of God; for though it be a good exercise at another time, and though the Sermon which wee reade, may be as good or better then that which wee should heare, yet cannot it bee so effectuell vnto vs, for the begetting and increasing of our faith, and other sauing graces (no more then Abana and Pharpar

1. Tim. 5. 10.

Rom. 10. 17.

Pharpar for the cleansing of Naamans Leprosie, though as good waters as Iordan) because God hath not ordained and sanctified reading to bee so ordinary and effectually a meanes for the begetting of his graces in vs, as the Word preached, and the meanes themselves haue no other vertue and vigour in them, but as they are his ordinances which are made effectually by his blessing. Finally, as wee must vse all diligence in all good meanes which may strengthen vs to Gods seruice, so also in shunning or removing all lets and impediments, whereby wee may be hindred in holy duties, and the meanes become vneffectually or lesse powerfull to those good ends for which we vse them. For as he who would be rich, is not only diligent in all good meanes which may improve his state, but also in shunning the contrary; as prodigality, excess in diet and apparell, and the company of wastfull and riotous persons; and as hee who desireth to preserve his health, is not carefull alone to eate wholesome meate, but shunneth also the meanes with like care, which would hinder good concoction: so must we take the like course, if wee would thrive in our spirituall estate, and haue our soules healthy and strong in sauing grace, that they may bee fit and able for the well-performance of all Christian duties.

§. Sect. 2.

Diuers reasons which may moue vs to diligence. First, because God requireth it.

Phil. 3. 13, 14.

And thus we see what diligence and labour wee are to vse in leading a godly life. Let vs now consider of the reasons and motives which may perswade vs hereunto. And first, this diligence must bee vsed in the duties of Gods seruice, because God requireth it at our hands. Thou shalt diligently keepe the Commandements of the Lord your God, and his testimonies and Statutes which he hath commanded thee. Of which Commandement Dauid taketh notice; Thou hast (saith he) commanded vs to keepe thy precepts diligently. And Ezra, like a good Gouvernour, backeth it with all his authority: Whatsoever is commanded by the God of heauen, let it be diligently done, &c. Vnto this diligence the Apostle exhorteth, in whatsoever office or duty we undertake, and contrariwise dissuadeth from being slothfull in any busines, especially in the seruice of God, vnto which hee requireth seruency of spirit. More especially, this diligence is required in all good meanes, whereby we may be enriched with all vertue and sauing grace. So the Apostle Peter; Giuing all diligence, adde to your faith, vertue, and to vertue, knowledge, &c. and in getting thereby assurance of our saluation: Giue diligence to make your calling and Election sure. And aboue all, in the religious duties of Gods seruice, according to that of our Sauour; Take you heed, watch and pray. And of his holy Apostle: Pray continually; in euery thing giue thanks: and againe, Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving. Of which laborious diligence and vnwearied industry, we haue them for examples of their owne precepts: For not onely in the painfull labours of his Apostolike ministry, this holy Apostle exceeded all the rest, but also in attaining vnto spirituall graces, and in the exercise of a godly life: For forgetting those which were behind, hee reached forth vnto those things which were before, and pressed towards the marke, for the price of the high calling of God in Iesus Christ. But aboue all examples of this diligence is that of our Sauour Christ, whose time was wholly employed in the duties of Gods seruice, spending the day in preaching and working miracles, miracles, and the night in praying: yea with such vnwearied diligence he performed these functions of his office, that the wearinesse of his trauell could make him weary of these workes. Yea, hee preferred the doing of these duties before the satisfying of his hunger, and esteemed it as his meate and drinke, to doe the workes of him that sent him. Now as God requireth this diligence and paines in all duties of his seruice, so doth hee much approue it wheresoeuer he finds it. As in the Angell of the Church of Ephesus, I know thy workes, and thy labour, and thy patience: And in the seruant who had well imployed his Masters Talents; Well done, good and faithfull seruant, &c. So doth he much abhorre sloth and negligence in his seruice, as appeareth in his sharpe reproofe of the vnprofitable seruant, who had hid his Lords Talent in a napkin; Thou wicked and slothfull seruant, &c. branding him with the name of wickednesse, because of his slothfulnesse, and not because he had riotously mispent his Talent, or spoyled his fellowes of those Talents which were committed vnto them, but because through his idlenesse and negligence he had been vnprofitable to his Master.

Secondly, the manifold and great benefits, wherewith the Lord, rich in mercy towards all who diligently serue him, will liberally reward their labours, may serue as an effectuell reason to incite vs to this duty. For wee cannot serue a more bountifull Master, nor imploy our labours to better advantage, then in performing vnto him our duty with all diligence, seeing he will suffer none of our paines to be spent in vaine, but will proportion our wages according to the greatnesse of our worke. In this life hee bestoweth vpon those who are diligent in the duties of his seruice, not onely a large measure of his temporall benefits, and his blessing vpon them, whereby they become truly profitable for their vse, according to those many and gracious promises which in his Law he hath made vnto them, but also enricheth their soules with the treasures of his spirituall graces. For we can be no more ready to vse the meanes, then the Lord is to giue his blessing vpon them, whereby they become effectuell vnto those ends for which we vse them. Neither is hee euer in this kind wanting to any, who are not through their negligence wanting vnto themselues. In which regard that may be truly said of our spirituall estate, which is spoken of our temporall: He becommeth poore that dealeth with a slacke hand; but the hand of the diligent maketh rich. Hereby also we attaine vnto the assurance of our Election and effectuell calling, which is no otherwise to be had, then by this diligence in labouring after it, as the Apostle implyeth in those words; Brethren, giue diligence to make your calling and election sure; and that we shall perseuere in the state of grace vnto saluation; for if we giue all diligence in adding one grace and vertue vnto another, the same Apostle assureth vs, that we shall neuer fall. And the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, remembring the workes of piety and mercy which had been performed by some of the faithfull, desireth others to shew the same diligence, to their full assurance of hope vnto the end, and that they would not be slothfull, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherited the promises.

Thirdly, the necessity of this diligence in holy duties may moue vs to embrace imbrace and vse it. For if in ciuill and worldly things no great matter is atchieued without paines and diligence, how much lesse in spirituall and heavenly, which are so high aboue our reach, so excellent aboue all other things, and so contrary to our corrupt nature and disposition. And if no man can reasonably hope to attaine vnto riches of his owne purchase, who gathereth with one hand, and scattereth with the other, or playeth the good husband at some times, and at another neglecteth his businesse, and wastfully mispendeth his time and substance; nor vnto any great learning, if he be slothfull and negligent in his studies; or to get the glory of famous victories and glorious triumphs, if hee lye idly in the Garison, and neuer exercise himselfe in feats of armes, nor make any attempt against his enemies; but all these things must be purchased and atchieued by labour and diligence: then how shall wee thinke euer to enrich our soules with the vnvaluable treasures of Gods graces, to attaine vnto that high and supernaturall learning, which teacheth vnto vs the knowledge of God, and of our selues, our Sauour Christ and his will and truth, or to get the victory ouer the spirituall enemies of our saluation, which shall be rewarded with a Crowne of glory and triumph, seeing they are so many, mighty, and malicious; if we doe not shake off all sloth, and with all study and diligence vse all good meanes whereby wee may overcome all difficulties, and compassse these things so much to be desired, and so hardly obtained? Neither must we thinke it an easie matter to serue the Lord in the duties of a godly life, and so slight it ouer as requiring no paines; seeing they are things of such high excellency, that they are farre aboue our naturall reach; and seeing also wee cannot proceed in them, but against the violent streames of mighty opposition. For the spirituall enemies of our saluation are alwayes ready to stop and hinder vs in our course of Christianity, and we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, and spirituall wickedneses in high places; who vsing all diligence to worke our destruction, by spoyling vs of all Gods graces, and hindring vs from doing any Christian duty, it behoueth vs with no lesse diligence to preuent their malice. Our arch-enemy, Satan, neuer resteth, but like a roaring Lion, rangeth still about, seeking to deuoure vs: and how then doth it besee me vs to stand continually vpon our gard, and as the Apostle Peter exhorteth vs, to watch, and to be sober? The world is euer forward to allure vs vnto wickednes, by euill perswasions, and bad examples, or to thrust vs into it by threats and violent courses; and what diligence then becommeth vs to vse in escaping these snares, and preserving our selues from falling in these tentations? But especially our selues are greatest and most dangerous enemies vnto our selues, nourishing in our owne bosome such natural corruptiō, as maketh vs most auerse vnto all good duties, and headlongly prone vnto all sins; what diligence therefore should we vse in subduing the strength, & defeating the wiles of this secret traytor, that lyeth still lurking in vs, seeking all aduantages to hinder vs in all Christian exercises, and to betray our soules as capriues vnto Satan, by drawing them into sinne? Through this corruption of nature wee are backward vnto all good duties, and in our course of Christianity, doe (as it were) row against the streame. No longer can wee goe forward, then we

Ephes. 6. 9.

1. Pet. 5. 8.

we ply the oare with all diligence & indeuor, & no sooner giue our selues to ease, and remit our labor, but we are carryed back againe with the wind and tide of our carnall corruptions. We wrestle with a cruell monster, our own sinful flesh, against which we preuaile no longer then we squeeze and crush it with our spiritual gripes; for no sooner do we surcease this holy violence against this corruptio of our nature, but it recouereth (as it were) a new life, & with increased strength, againe setteth vpon vs, putting vs to a second labour & danger for the obtaining of the victory; as we see in the example of Dauid, who euen after that hee had well profited in the practice of mortification, and gotten the victory over his sinfull corruptions, by his earnest indeuours in this spirituall exercise; intermitting for a while his wonted diligence, and giuing himselfe to sloth and ease, was shamefully foyled by his traitorous flesh, and lamentably plunged into diuers fearfull sinnes. Finally, by reason of our fall, that heauie curse which was denounced against the earth, seazeth also vpon our soules, which are barren in bearing any good fruits of holinesse and righteousnes, and naturally bring forth nothing but the thornes and thistles of sinne and wickednesse, vnlesse we spiritually manure them with all painfull diligence, and make them more fertile and fruitfull with the sweat of our labours. Neither can we expect any haruest of holy duties to spring out of such barren soyles, vnlesse we doe well husband them, and vse all diligence in tilling and breaking vp these fallow grounds, in sowing them with the good seed of heauenly doctrine, and in weeding out of them daily some vices and corruptions. Againe, this diligence is necessary; for as if it bee remitted, the strength of sinne continually increaseth; so the graces of Gods Spirit, in respect of the vigour of their operations, do daily decrease and languish in vs. For as to the welfare of our bodies it is necessarily required, that they be nourished and sustained by the same elements whereof they were first composed, which being but a while neglected, the spirits languish, the strength is abated, and the whole body is infeeble and fainteth; so also is it no lesse necessary that we vse all diligence in nourishing Gods spirituall graces in vs by the same meanes, whereby they were begun in vs; as the Word, Sacraments, Prayer, and the rest; for if wee doe not giue them continually this spirituall refection and refreshing, they will soone abate of their strength, wax faint and languish. Neither are these graces connaturall with vs, or like plants thriuing and well-liking (euen when they are neglected) in their owne soyle, but like trees transplanted out of hot countries into ours, (as suppose the Orange, Lemon tree, or such like) which need much tending; watering in the Summer, couering, and keeping warme in the Winter, that what is wanting in nature, may be supplied with art and diligence. They are like fire burning, not in its owne element, or in combustible matter, where it needs not labour to continue it; but in greene wood, which is ready euery hand while to goe out till it be thorowly kindled, vnlesse we diligently blow it, and take great paines to make it burne. Whereof it is, that the Apostle vsing this metaphor, exhorteth Timothy, to stirre vp and relieue Gods gifts and graces in him, (as it were) by blowing the fire, which otherwise would decay and languish in him. Finally, the necessity of this diligence heereby appeareth appeareth, in that without it we can neither escape Gods curse, nor attaine vnto blessednesse. For he is accursed of God, not onely who is diligent in the seruice of the diuell, but also who is negligent in the duties of his seruice, seeming like Meroz, in a cold neutrality, to take neither part; and nor he alone who contemneth or omitteth the workes of God, but hee also who doth them negligently. In which number are our ciuill worldlings, who contenting themselues with their morall honesty, iust dealing and keeping their word, doe either wholly neglect the religious duties of Gods seruice, further then the Law compelleth them, or else performe them after a formall, cold, and carelesse manner: nor can we, without this earnest indeuour and studious diligence, attaine vnto eternall and heauenly blessednesse. For this rich reward is not given to idle loyterers, but to painfull labourers in Gods Vineyard, nor to those slothful seruants who hide their Masters Talent in a napkin, doing with it neither good nor euill; but vnto those who by their spirituall trading haue increased it to his aduantage. The Kingdome of God falleth not (as it were) by lot to the lazies, but suffreth violence, and is taken by an holy force: and so strait is the gate that leadeth into it, and the way so narrow, afflicted and troublesome, that we cannot possesse it by sitting at our ease, but must strue to enter with all diligence and indeuour, as our Sauour exhorteth.

§. Sect. 5.

The last reason taken from the vnwearied diligence of worldlings, in pursuing of earthly things.

Deut. 32. 6.

Lastly, the vnwearied diligence of carnall worldlings, in seruing of the world and their owne lusts, for the contemptible hire of earthly vanities, may effectually moue vs to vse the like, or greater, in the seruice of our Master. For howsoeuer they, after their worke is done, are not sure of their wages, or though it bee put into their hands, are not sure to hold it; or though they doe, finde it vaine and of no worth, alwayes vnprofitable, and oftentimes hurtfull and pernicious; yet with what diligence doe they yeeld their seruice? with what affection doe they dote on this golden strumpet? and with what zeale and deuotion doe they commit idolatry with this painted Idoll? For they are content to rise early, and goe late to bed, to consume their spirits with carking care, and their bodies with restless labours, both by land and sea, to spend their strength, and to hazard vnto innumerable dangers their heath and life, yea the euerlasting saluation of their soules, that they may obtaine riches, pleasures and preferments, and fill their hearts with these windy vanities, which may puffe them vp, but neuer satisfie them: and therefore how much more doth this diligence become vs in the seruice of God, by performing vnto him all Christian duties, seeing our wages as much exceedeth theirs, as heauen earth, euerlasting excellencies, momentany vanities; the which also are certaine both in payment and possession? So also the double diligence of Idolaters in seruing their Idols; and the care and cost which is spent in their seruice, may make vs ashamed to bee lesse industrious and painfull in the seruice of the true God. For they are ready to breake their sleepe, and rise early, with the Israelites, to doe them seruice, and to offer their oblations; to part with their chiefest ornaments, as their iewels and eare-rings, their siluer and their gold, for the making and decking of their Images; to launce and cut themselues, with Baals priests before their Idols; to doe voluntary penance, and to goe on pilgrimage to stocks and stones;

to consume their strength with watching, that they may performe their superstitious orizons, and to torment and whip their bodies before their Crosse and Crucifix, to strip themselves of all their meanes, to vow voluntary pouerty, and with Iezabel, to spare for no cost in maintaining their idolatrous priests, who draw them on, and helpe them forward in their idolatry: And shall we be lesse diligent in the seruice of our good God, from whose blessing and free gift wee haue all things which wee presently inioy, or yet doe hope for in the life to come? Or shall wee thinke any paines, or care, or cost too great, in performing those duties which assure vs of saluation, when as they thinke nothing too much which they doe, or can doe, to nourish their doubtfull and wauering, their false and deceiuing hopes of their future happinesse? Yea, the diligence of desperate sinners in the seruice of the diuell, by committing of all manner of wickednesse, may make vs blush for shame, to neglect Gods seruice in the duties of holinesse: For they breake their braines in plotting of mischiefes, and spend their strength, and hazard their health and life in effecting them. For (as the Wife man speaketh) They sleepe not except they haue done mischief; and their sleepe is taken away, vnlesse they cause some to fall; and wickednesse and violence more cheereth their hearts, then their bread and wine. They serue the diuell oftentimes for nothing, and not seldome, euen to worldly losse, wasting their strength in wanton pleasures, impairing their health with costly gluttony, and loathed carowies, only in a brauery, and hazarding their life by needlesse quarrels, and bloody murthers; besides, the inward torments of minde, heart and conscience, which their vnruely passions, vaine hopes, and false feares, friuolous anger, and lustfull loue, fretting enuy, and reuengefull malice doe bring vpon them. By all which courses, though they haue no wages for their worke; yet (as the Prophet speaketh) they are willing euen to weary themselves to commit iniquity. And shall they be thus diligent in seruing the diuell that mortally hateth them, and shall wee bee negligent in Gods seruice, who hath so dearly loued vs? Shall they thinke the greatest paines too little in taking these wicked courses, which doe but scale vp vnto them their certaine destruction; and shall wee thinke any paines too great in performing such holy duties as will assure vs of eternall saluation? Finally, let the diuels diligence in dishonouring God, and seeking to depriue vs of grace and glory, that he may plunge vs into euerlasting perdition, make vs studious and industrious in seeking to glorifie God in our saluation. For as himselfe witnesseth, He compasseth the earth continually to and fro, to spy out all advantages against vs, first, drawing vs to sinne, and then accusing vs for it: and as the Apostle Peter testifieth, He walketh about as a roring Lion, seeking whom he may deuoure. And shal not we vse like, or greater diligence in preserving our selues out of his danger; in keeping our soules and bodies holy and vndefiled, that being vnblameable, they may not bee daminified by his accusations; and in imploying our time in such holy and Christian duties, as will enrich our hearts with all sauing graces, strengthen vs to withstand all Satans tentations, confirme our assurance, and further vs in the fruition of heavenly happinesse?

CAP. VIII

Of constancie in the duties of godlinesse, without remission or intermission.

§. Sect. 1.
That all those which are sincere, are also constant in the duties of a godly life.
Psal. 119. 113.

He last propertie of those Christian duties which appertain to a godly life, is constancy in performing them, of which there are two branches, continuance without remission or intermission, and perseuerance without Apostasie or defection; both which Dauid conioyneth in his practice of obedience; I haue (saith he) inclined mine heart to performe thy Statutes alway, euen vnto the end. Concerning the former, it is not sufficient to intitle vs vnto true godlinesse, that we be religious by fits, hauing our good and bad dayes, or that wee spend some time in religious exercises, and then thinke that we are set at liberty to liue as wee list, and to follow the lusts of our owne flesh; that wee sometime performe Christian duties, when our worldly profits or pleasures will giue vs any leasure, and neglect, or slightly performe them when wee haue other imployments; or (as it were) in some religious humour, and pang of deuotion, caused by feare of some approaching iudgement, or by smart of some present affliction. For inconstancie, which is a fruit of folly, will not stand with true godlinesse, which is the head and prime part of spirituell wisdom, the which, as it inableth vs to choose that which is best, so also to be constant in our choyce: Whereas folly and impiety are full of vanity and lightnesse; causing men, according to that sway which they beare in them, to be vnsettled and inconstant in all their wayes (if at least, they haue any inclination vnto religious duties, and be not wholly settled vpon their dregs) and like Meteors hanging in the ayre, sometimes moouing towards heauen, and soone after falling backe againe towards the earth. But no further progresse hath any made in piety, then hee hath profited in the constant practice of religious duties; and they who are sometimes hot, and sometimes cold, and sometimes betweene both, luke-warme; who one while performe seruice vnto God, and another while neglect it, now deuout and seemingly zealous in good things, and soone after cold and negligent, carnall and prophane, haue iust cause to suspect themselves, that as yet they haue made no sound entrance into the practice of godlinesse.

§. Sect. 2.
The former point illustrated by some comparisons.

For the course of Christianity in the Scriptures, is compared to the Kings high-way, and they who goe on in it, to traouellers going on in their journey towards their owne Country; and therefore to be sometime scene in this way, is no signe that in good earnest wee trauell in it, if wee sometimes goe forward, and sometime backward, but rather that wee are walking for recreation, and will giue ouer when we feeble any wearynesse. Euen theeues and robbers doe sometimes crosse the high-way, though their ordinary haunt be in the woods and mountaines, yea will trauell in it for a while, that they may be thought true men, and so get the better advantage, by being vn suspected of executing their designes; but it is onely the honest traoueller that goeth constantly in his journey, and trauelleth in it from morning to night. It is compared likewise to the running of a Race, wherein none get the Garland, but they who runne as they ought, and as runners doe not sometime run, and sometimes stand still, one while hold the right course, and another while leauing it, spend their time and trauell in by-ways, or in going by fits forward and backward, for so they should be Non-proficients, ridding no ground, and after much labour lost, be as farre from the Goale and Garland, as they were at the beginning, when they first set foorth: so none get the Garland of glory, who doe not runne constantly in the Race of godlinesse; and they who runne by fits and starts, sometimes going forward, and sometime standing still, or going backward, or out of the way, become heereby Non-proficients in Christianity, and after that by much vnsettled rambling vp and downe, they haue tyred themselues in this course, they are (like the blind Horse in the Mill) in the same place and case they were in the beginning; no more mortified to sinne, nor richer in sauing graces, no more expert and actiue in Christian duties, no neerer the Goale, nor surer of the Garland at the end of their liues, then when they first entred into the profession of Religion. Yea oftentimes hauing wearied themselues in this fruitlesse labour, and seeing the small benefit that they haue reaped of it, for want of hope, and assurance of euer getting either the Garland of grace or the Crowne of glory, they quite giue out, and ceasing any longer to run in the Christian Race, doe retume backe againe (like the Dog to his vomit) and run as fast as euer they did in their old wicked courses, that so they may not lose all, but may gaine, at least, the prizes of worldly vanities, which Satan offereth vnto those who run swiftest in the wayes of wickednesse. Finally, the Christian life is our spirituall Husbandry, in which, there cannot be, without losse, any intermission of our labour, but one businesse being finished, another presently is to bee vndertaken. After breaking vp of our fallow grounds, and plowing, there must bee sowing, and harrowing, after seed time weeding, and then reaping and carrying into the barne. Neither must the spare time between these maine employments, bee spent in idlenesse, but in tending of our cattell, which are the helpes of husbandry, in making and mending of our fences, in lopping and topping, plashing and pruning, threshing out of the Corne, that it may be fit for our owne vse, or carryed out to the Market, with many other employments of like nature: So is there no intermission of our paines in the spirituall Husbandry, but after one duty performed, we must set our selues about another, and spend our whole time either in preparing our hearts that they may be fit grounds to receiue the seede of Gods Word, or about the art of sowing, or couering the seede, that it may not be stolne away, or in weeding it from vices and corruptions, when it beginneth to grow; or in preserving and strengthening all the good helpes and meanes, which will inable and further vs in all our Christian labours; or in making or repairing our spirituall fences, which may keepe out the beasts of the field, and enemies of our Christian thrift; or in reaping the present crop of Gods sauing graces, which will comfortably sustaine vs in the full assurance and expectation of the euerlasting Haruest of heauenly happiness.

6. Sect. 3.

A complaint of mens vn-constancie in performing the duties of a godly life.

1. Tim. 3. 7.

And yet alas how many of vs, who seeme most forward in the profession of Christianity, that haue not in the greatest part of their life, come to any settled constancie in performing the duties of godlinesse? How many professe themselves trauellers towards our heavenly Countrey, and yet are vnconstant in all their wayes, and vnsettled in all their courses, sometime performing the duties of a godly life, and sometime neglecting them altogether, seruing God one day, or in some small part of it, & spending the rest of their time in seruing Satan, the world, and their own lusts? How many that make a faire shew, as though they would run the Christian Race, who one while go forward, and another while, as out of breath, and weary of holy exercises, do stand still, or turne backe againe into their old sinfull courses, and in stead of seeking the Kingdome of God and his righteousness, doe spend the chiefe of their strength in pursuing of worldly vanities? How many of those who would bee thought good husbands for their soules, that are wholly negligent in the spirituall husbandry, euery hand while intermitting their paines and diligence, sometimes vsing the meanes of growing and thriving in grace, and sometimes neglecting them, praying onely when they are pinched with afflictions, hearing the Word at their best leasure and most ease; in the Countrey, when the weather is warme and the wayes faire; in the Citie, when they cannot walke abroad about their pleasures or profits, as in time of winter, when the foulness of the way, and weather and darkeness of the night leaue them vnto them no other employment; and at no time taking any care after the seede is sowne, to couer it in their hearts by Meditation or conference, that it may not be stolne away, but take roote, and bring forth fruit in due season? So also receiuing the Sacrament only at Easter, or some of the chiefe festiuals, and neglecting to come to the Lords Table, though often inuited all the rest of the yeere besides; and finally, reading the holy Scriptures, and other profitable writings vnconstantly, and by vncertaine fits, when they haue nothing else to doe, or cannot well tell how to put away otherwise the tediousnesse of idleness. Through which vnconstancy, after long vsing the meanes, they little profit by them, but like those of whom the Apostle speaks, they are euer learning, and neuer able to come vnto the knowledge of the truth; they are old truant, and though in profession ancient, yet children in growth. They are like those of whom Seneca speaketh, who are alwayes but beginners euen to their ending, and but about to settle themselves in the course of a godly life, when death approaching will force them to finish it. Finally, they either like Non-proficients stand at a stay, without any increasing in knowledge, faith, and other sauuing graces; or the fruits of them in a godly life; or else de-ficients, falling backe from their profession, and betaking themselves to the seruice of Satan, the world, and their owne sinfull lusts. Now what doe all these but spend their precious time and vnsettled indeuours not onely in vaine, but euen oftentimes vnto losse? What doe they but make the practice of their Religion a Penelopes web, one day vndoing that which they haue done in another? or like vnto Syphilus his fained labour, rowling vp the stone till it be almost at the hill top, and then suffer it to tumble backe againe, and so giue them occasion to renew their labour? All which vnconstancy, and euill fruits which spring from

from it, doe proceed from the corruption of our natures, and the imperfection of our sanctification, the reliques of sinne still remaining in vs; which makes vs apt and prone to returne to our old courtes, like a Horse to his trot, that is not thorowly paced, or an Hawke to turne Haggard that is not well manned.

But let vs not please our selues with this state of imperfection, but labour and strue daily after more perfection; and seeing how vnsettled wee are euen in the state of regeneration, in all Christian courses, let vs bewayling our vnstayednesse, indeuour to attaine vnto more constancie in the imbracing and practising of all good duties. For God requireth at our hands, that we should serue him, not by fits and flashes, but constantly in all our courses, and not onely that we doe well, but that wee continue in well-doing. Thus Samuel chargeth the people, that they should take heede (not of forsaking the Lord, and renouncing his seruice, but) that they should not turne aside after vaine things which would not profit, nor deliuer them from danger. So the Wiseman requireth, that we should continue in the feare of the Lord all the day long; and the Apostle, that we should neuer be weary of well-doing; seeing in due season we shall reape, if we faint not: and exhorteth vs to be steadfast, vnmoueable, alwayes abounding in the worke of the Lord, because we are sure that we shall not labour in vaine. And this constancie we must shew both in chusing and holding vs to the right way, and also in walking in it; In professing constantly the truth of Religion, and liuing accordingly in our holy practice. For the first, we must be constant in imbracing and professing of Gods Truth, and not by fits onely, when it will best stand with our worldly aduantage. So the Apostle exhorteth; Watch yee, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. And againe, Stand fast, and hold the traditions which yee haue beene taught, whether by word or our Epistle. Vnto which constancie in the truth, hee limiteth and appropriateth the benefit of our Redemption by Christ. For he saith, that we are reconciled by his sufferings, if we continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and bee not moued awry from the hope of the Gospel. So elsewhere hee chargeth vs, that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carryed about with euery winde of doctrine. The which hee condemneth in the Galatians as extreme folly: And reioyceth in the contrary constancie of the Colossians; joying and beholding their order, and the stedfastnesse of their faith in Christ. And the like constancie we must also shew in the practice of all Christian and religious duties, according to our profession, for as we must not bee weary of bearing vpon vs the liuery of our Christian profession, and be ready to cast it off when the sunne of persecution shineth, so neither in doing the duties of our Lord and Masters seruice, but we must labour to bee stablished in euery good word and worke, as the Apostle prayeth for the Thessalonians: And desire with Danid, to keepe the Law of God continually for euer and euer. Our practice of godlinesse, must not with Ephraims goodnesse be like a morning cloud which vanisheth ere noone, nor like the dew, which falleth ouer-night, and goeth away the next morning. But neglecting all things in comparison of this one thing necessary, we must make them giue place to the constant performance of religious duties, when as they cannot stand together, whereof wee haue an example in

Daniel, who setting all things apart, would not neglect his constant course of calling vpon God three times a day, though thereby he hazzarded the fauour of the King, yea euen his owne life. Whose example if we would imitate, we must carefully auoyd two vices, as notable hindrances of this constancie; the first is carelesse sloth in spirituall duties, arising from our ouer-much minding and affecting of worldly things, which maketh vs either to neglect them altogether, or to performe them vnconstantly, and onely by fits, which kinde of intermission is a temporary defection, and if it be not reformed, will bring vs at last to a full and finall neglect of them. The other is fickle vnconstancie in our courses, proceeding from carnall lothing of spirituall exercises; which causeth vs to bee soone weary of performing any good duty, and therefore to shift and change (as the sicke man turneth from one side to another) vnto a new exercise, before we haue finished that in hand, and brought it to any good effect; like the vnruely Patient, who hindreth the cure by often changing of medicines, before any of them haue had time to worke; or the foolish Gardener, who euery handwhile transplanterh his trees from one soyle to another, and letteth them not haue any conuenient time to be settled and rooted.

CAP. IX.

Reasons which may mooue vs to be constant in all Christian duties of a godly life, and the meanes of it.

§. Sect. I.
That constancie is an inseparable companion of integrity.

And thus we see what that constancie which is required in the duties of a godly life, and the vices which wee are to shunne as opposite vnto it. The arguments which may mooue vs to this constancie, are many, some whereof I will briefly touch. The first reason is, because it is an inseparable companion of integrity and vprightnesse of heart; For if in sincerity and truth wee performe seruice vnto God, out of our loue and obedience to his will, then these motives alwayes remayning, will make vs constant in doing of it. Whereas if in hypocrisie we formally performe any duties, being moued thereunto by worldly respects, then doth our obedience last no longer then they last, and as they are variable and subiect to many changes, so shall wee likewise change with them; according to that of the Apostle Iames; A double minded man is vnstable in all his wayes. Secondly, if we be not constant in the duties of a godly life, all the paines which wee take by fits will be spent in vaine; seeing we shall vndoe that one day which wee did the day before, and like foolish builders, one while setting vp, and another while pulling downe, we shall not be edified in our faith and sanctification, and after much time spent, bee neuer the neerer the finishing of our worke. For though at some times we row neuer so strongly against the tyde and streame of our corruption, yet when wee intermit our labour, and giue our selues to sloth and negligence, they will carry vs downe againe as farre from the Hauen of our hopes, as we were at the beginning. Of which, we haue lamentable experience in many ancient professors, who through this inconstancie in religious duties, stand at a stay (like dwarfes, whole whose age brings no growth) neither increasing in knowledge, faith, and other saving graces, nor in bringing forth of the fruits of them in their liues and conuersation. If therefore wee would spend our paines to any purpose, let vs not onely begin well, but continue the worke of our sanctification, till we haue perfected our holinesse in the feare of God, as the Apostle exhorteth. If we would be true Nazarites consecrated to Gods seruice, we must not be holy by fits, but fulfill the dayes of our sanctification, and separating our selues from all sinfull pollution, we must be holy to the Lord. For as in legall purifications, though a man obserued neuer so strictly some dayes allotted to his clensing, yet if hee failed in any one, though it were the very last, and defiled himselfe with any legall pollution, all his former labour was spent in vaine, and the worke was new to begin againe: so is it also in our spirituall purifying, and in our sanctifying and consecrating our selues to Gods worship and seruice. Thirdly, the benefits which arise from this constancie, may perswade vs to imbrace it; for by continuance in the Word of Christ, we approoue our selues to be his Disciples indeed. Wee shall with much ease performe all Christian duties, when by our constancie we haue brought our selues to an habit. And as all things which are put into a state of motion, doe continue moouing with great facility and little helpe; and if it be intermitted, requireth much more strength and paines to begin it againe, then it would haue required to haue continued it in that state; so if we be continually inured to the duties of a godly life, they will be easie and familiar vnto vs whilest this spirituall motion continueth, but if it be broken off and intermitted, it is a new worke to begin againe, and will not be renewed to the former state, without much indeuour and great difficulty. It is easie to keepe that armour bright which is daily vsed, but vse it onely by some fits, and hang it by the walls till it be rusty, and it cannot, without much labour in skowring it, be restored againe to its former brightnesse. If the Instrument be daily played vpon, it is easily kept in tune by the skilfull Musician, but let it but a while be neglected & cast in a corner, the strings and frets breake, and the bridge flyeth off, and no small labour is required to bring it into order. And thus also it is in spirituall things, which are kept in an easie and orderly course, with one halfe of the paines, if wee continue them with a settled constancie. Finally, this constancy in holy duties giueth vs assurance of all Gods promises, according to that of the Apostle; We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast vnto the end; and that couenant made with Dauid in the behalfe of his sonne Salomon: I will establish his Kingdome for euer, if he be constant to doe my Commandements and my iudgements as at this day; and by Gods gracious and free promise giueth vs iust title to spirituall and heauenly rewards: For he will render to euery man according to his deeds. To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seeke for glory, and honour, and immortality; eternall life, as the Apostle speaketh.

Iam. i. 8.

Lastly, the manifold euils which are caused by vnconstancy, may effectually moue vs to be constant in all good duties. For this various and often changing of our spirituall estate vpon euery slight occasion, maketh our seruice odious vnto God, and all our actions vncleane in his sight. The which is implied in the ceremoniall Law, wherein the Chamelion was forbidden, among the beasts which were vncleane, whose property is to hold constantly no colour, but changeth as the things are changed which lye next vnto it. Secondly, it hindreth our growth in grace, and maketh all the good meanes which we vse to this purpose, vnprofitable vnto vs. It disableth vs in our spirituall race, from comming to the goale, and getting the garland, and causeth vs to be preuented with their speed, who let out long after vs. It maketh vs vnfit for all good duties, and not only more backward vnto them by our intermission, but also more vnable to performe when we doe vndertake them. For when we haue for a time neglected prayer, meditation, hearing the Word, and such like spirituall exercises; our deceitfull hearts, after they are broken loose out of the bonds of Gods feare, and haue tasted the carnall sweetnesse of this slothfull liberty, are hardly recalled & recouered; and not without much paines reduced into order, nor well settled and composed to religious duties. It hindreth vs in our spirituall iourney towards our heavenly home; and whereas those who are constant in their trauell, and ridde continually some part of the way, come seasonably and surely to their iourneys end, though they seeme to goe a slow pace; these who goe on by fits and spurts, tire themselves in the mid way, and though sometimes they seeme to goe a gallop, yet their many intermissions, and often stayes make them to bee benighted, and to giue over their trauell before they come to their iournies end. Finally, it greatly indangereth vs vnto finall apostasie, for leauing those good duties vndone, which our consciences approving, call vpon vs to performe, and by this negligence running into temptation, it is iust with God to leaue vs in it, and to withdraw his grace, which onely giueth vnto vs both will and ability for the well performing of any good dury. Whereof it commeth to passe, that many who intend at the first but to play the truants, and to intermit their studies for a time, that they may take their liberty and pleasure, and then to come vnto Christs schoole againe, are afterward partly so possessed with feare and shame of their Masters presence, and partly so bewitched with their carnall delights, that they runne quite away, and neuer returne. And when they haue thus farre given place to the diuels tentations, and the sluggish sloth of their sinfull flesh, that they intermit all spiritual exercises, as prayer, hearing the Word, reading, meditation, that they may the more thorowly intend their worldly profits or delights, yet with a purpose to returne vnto them againe when these things are dispatched; they are more and more insnared in Sarans nets of perdition, into which they haue cast themselves, and the longer they forbear, the lesse appetite they haue to religious duties. Lastly, this vnconstancy maketh vs farre worse in the seruice of God, then the sonnes of Belial are in the seruice of the diuell, and of the world. For they, for the vncertaine and base wages of earthly trifles, are constant in those workes of darkenesse wherein they imploy them, toyling themselves, and spending their strength in their seruile drudgery night and day, though it bee to the euerlasting damnation both of their bodies and soules: whereas these who professe themselves the seruants of God, serue him negligently by fits and starts, one while taking a little paines in spirituall exercises, and another while intermitting their labours, and spending their time in

loth and idlenesse, although he encourageth them to doe him faithfull and constant seruice, with the present pay of all temporall blessings, and with the assured hope of future happinesse.

And these are the reasons which may moue vs to constancy in the duties of Gods seruice. In the next place let vs consider of some meanes which may inable vs vnto it. The first meanes is, often and seriously to consider of Gods manifold mercies and rich rewards, both in this life and the life to come, which he hath faithfully promised vnto all those who doe him diligent and constant seruice. For in this world nothing shall be wanting to those that serue and feare him; for if he provideth so liberally euen for strangers and enemies; then will he much more for those of his owne family, and not suffer them to want any thing which is good. He will shine vpon them with the bright beames of his face and fauour, and glad their hearts with the ioy of his countenance. Hee will preserue them from all dangers, and mightily defend them from the malice and power of all their enemies. He will watch ouer them with his providence to doe them good, and will haue them alwayes at his finding, who hath all things in heauen and erth to bestow vpon the. He will enrich them with the chiefe treasures of his spirituall graces; and hereafter giue them the possession and fruition of heavenly happinesse. So that though wee should not intermit our paines in the duties of his seruice for the space of an houre in the whole course of our liues; yet may we say of our doings, as the Apostle of our sufferings, The seruice of this present life is not worthy the glory which shall be reuealed; for that is short and momentany, weake and imperfect, but shall be rewarded with a farre more excellent and eternall waight of glory. The second meanes of constancy is, to take notice, and to haue a true sense of our frailty and infirmity, our naturall mutability and vnconstancy, our dulnesse and wearinesse in all good duties, that so wee may keepe a narrow watch ouer our selues, and not giue way to our spirituall sloth when it creepeth vpon vs, and moueth vs to intermit the duties of a godly life. We must not be proud and presumptuous of our strength, as though it were in our power to leaue and resume our worke when wee please; but be humbled in the sight and sence of our backwardnesse and wearinesse in holy duties; and as the Apostle exhorteth, wee must not bee high minded, but feare: whilest we seeme to stand, we must take heed of falling, and worke out our saluation with feare and trembling. For, blessed is hee which thus feareth alwayes; seeing it will make him carefull to keepe his spirituall watch, that he doe not neglect or intermit any good duty which may strengthen his faith in the assurance of his saluation. The third meanes is, that we indeuour to worke our hearts to the loue, not only of God, which will make all our labours light which wee take in seruing him whom our soules loue, but also of the spirituall duties themselves, by meditating often vpon their excellency, profit and necessity about all worldly employments. For what the soule loueth, in that it resteth with vnwearied delight, and so pleaseth it selfe in the fruition of it, that it admitteth no thought of change. The fourth meanes is, to keepe our selues in acquaintance with all good duties, that they grow not strange vnto vs, and that wee giue no place to sloth, but keep our selues in continuall exercise, which will inable vs to hold out with constancy. For the more we doe them, the more easie shall we finde them, and our selues more strong and able to continue in them. And as runners in a race doe daily vse exercise to keepe themselves in breath, and that they may be more able and actiue to performe it, and hold out when they runne for the Garland: whereas if they should intermit their diligence, and giue themselves to ease and sloth, it would make them short-winded, and vnable to continue when they striue for the mastery: so in this spirituall race, the more we exercise our selues in Christian duties, the better able we are to continue in them without fainting or wearinesse; and the lesse paines we take, the sooner we are out of breath, and lesse able to continue in our course. The fifth meanes is, that seeing we are naturally glutted with satiety in the continuall vse of the same thing, and delighted with some variety and change, wee doe not wholly tire our selues in any one good exercise; but seeing God hath giuen vnto vs variety and choyce of many Christian and religious duties, and will not be serued by one of them alone, but hath allotted vnto euery one of them their due time and season: Therefore auoyding that vnconstant leuety before spoken of, shifting and changing, before wee haue brought the duty in hand to some good effect, that we may receiue some fruit and benefit by it, it is profitable for the inabling vs to this constancy in Gods seruice, when we feele our selues weary of one good duty, to betake our selues to another; as from praying, to reading; from hearing, to meditating or conferring; from religious exercises, to the ciuill duties of our callings; and when we feele our spirits spent, our minds dulled, and bodies wearied with them both, or either of them, to refresh our selues with honest and moderate recreations: whereby wee shall not onely preserve our strength, that after one duty done, wee may be more fit to performe another, but also returne vnto the same duty againe in seasonable time with a better stomake, when as we left it with some appetite, and were not glutted with any lothing satiety. The last meanes of constancy is, that we doe all good duties in due time and order: For these are inseparable companions, and mutuall helpes one to another: so the Apostle saith, that he reioyced in the Colossians, beholding their order, and the stedfastnesse of their faith; and exhorteth the Corinthians to the same practice, that all things should be done decently and in order in the seruice of God, because hee was not a God of confusion, but of order and peace. And this will much further vs in constancy, seeing those things continue longest, which haue an orderly proceeding: as we see in the celestiall bodies, which as they much excell all earthly things in their admirable order, so also in the constancy of their motion. That therefore wee may be alike constant in all our courses of Christianity, let vs be like them also in their orderly proceeding, and beginning the day with spiritual exercises, as before hath bin shewed, and so proceeding to ciuill duties, let vs hold on in the same tenour, neither confusedly intermixing them one with another, nor vpon euery slight occasion changing our course. And if we constantly obserue this order, this order will be a notable meanes to preserve our constancy.

CAP. X.

Of our perseuerance in all Christian duties of a godly life.

BVt as we must be euery day constant in the duties of a godly life without intermission, so must we perseuere in them vnto the end without apostasie or defection. For as it is the property of a faithfull and blessed man to bring forth his fruit in due time and season, so also not to fade or wither, but to flourish alwayes like the Palme tree, and to bring forth most fruit in old age. His righteousness indureth for euer, and his wayes are like a shining light, which shineth more and more vnto the perfect day. An example whereof we haue in the Church of Thyatira, whose last workes were more then their first. Now this perseuerance must be shewed both in imbracing and professing the truth of Christian doctrine, and also in practising the holy duties which it teacheth in the whole course of our liues and conuersations. Vnto the former the Apostle exhorteth, Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made vs free. The Apostle Iohn likewise: Let that therefore abide in you, which you haue heard from the beginning. And our Sauour Christ in his Epistle to the Churches: That which you haue already, hold fast till I come. The other, the Lord himselfe commandeth: I thou shalt loue the Lord thy God, and keepe his charge and his Statutes, and his Iudgements, and his Commandements alway: or as he expoundeth it in another place; In all the dayes that thou liuest vpon the earth, or for euermore. And contrariwise apostasie and defection is forbidden; Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an euill heart of unbelief, in departing from the liuing God.

Now the meanes whereby wee may attaine vnto this perseuerance in the duties of a godly life, are diuers. The first is, to consider often with our selues, that all Gods gracious promises are limited and restrained vnto those (not that begin well, or hold out to the mid way, but) who perseuere vnto the end. So our Sauour Christ, Hee that indureth to the end, shall be saued. Be faithfull vnto the death, and I will giue thee a Crowne of life. And not he that fighteth, but in fighting ouercommeth, hath the promises of freedome from all misery, and fruition of heauenly happinesse made vnto him. And elsewhere he indefinitely promiseth, that if wee abide in him, and let his Word abide in vs, then aske what we will, and it shall bee done vnto vs. To the same purpose the Apostle James telleth vs, that who so looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetfull bearer, but a doer of the worke, that man shall bee blessed in his deed. And the Apostle to the Hebrewes saith, that we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold out the beginning of our confidence stedfast to the end. And therefore if we meane to haue any part in Gods promises, we must constantly perseuere in the profession and practice of true godlinesse, and the Christian duties of an holy life. The second meanes of perseuerance, is carefully to auoyd the causes and meanes of apostasie and defection. And these are diuers: first, voluntary liuing in any knowne sinne, which will harden the heart, and dead the conscience, and so make way for many others, till wee be wholly carried away from God in a streame of wickednesse. Secondly, we

we must carefully take heed of the least declinations in Christian graces and holy duties; for if we be once going downe the hill, wee shall hardly keepe our selues from running headlong to the bottome, vntlesse wee stop speedily in the very beginning. And as for the preserving of our bodies in a sound estate, we labour with seasonable physicke to preuent diseases, and when we finde our health to decline a little, doe vse all good meanes at the first, because if the sicknesse seaze thorowly vpon the vitall parts, it will hardly be remoued, and indanger our liues: so must we take the same course for the good of our soules, carefully obseruing the first declinations of our spirituall health, that we may stop them at the beginning, before they breake out into any extremities. And considering that those diseases both of body and soule, are most dangerous and desperate (not which come suddenly with some sensible violence, but) which steale vpon vs by degrees vpon no apparant causes, and impair the health by little and little, because they are hardly discerned, and when they are knowne, not easily cured, as in the outward man, the consumption, hectique feuer, and the like; and in the inward and spirituall part, carnall security, hardnesse of heart, and others of like nature; let vs not therefore neglect the least declinations in sauing grace, and holy duties, but keepe a carefull watch ouer our selues, that none of these diseases of our soules steale vpon vs, and become desperate before we discern them. Let vs bee as good husbands for our soules, as wee are for our clothes, houses and grounds, mending little holes, before they teare out into great rents, repairing the first decayes, ere they become rotten and ruinous, and making vp the breach as soone as wee discern it, before it come to an inundation, and carry vs away in a floud of wickednesse. And this counsell the Apostle giueth vs. Lift up (saith he) the hands which hang downe, and the feeble knees; and make straight paths to your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed, &c. Looking diligently lest any man faile of the grace of God, lest any root of bitternesse springing up, trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. A third cause of apostasie, is a great opinion of our owne strength, which causeth God to leaue vs that we may see our weaknesse, as we see in the fearfull defection of the Apostle Peter: And also a fond conceit that we are so rich in grace, that we may spend vpon the stocke, and labour for no more; and that we haue already so well profited in religious duties, that we need not take any care or paines to make any further progresse: For there is no standing still in the wayes of Christianity; but when we cease to goe forward, wee begin to goe backward; when in our owne opinion we are at the full, we will begin to wane and decline towards a change; and when our godlinesse is come to a standing water, it presently declineth and neuer ceaseth, vntill it be come to a low ebbe. For the preuenting whereof, let vs not measure our vertues and good proceedings by the false mete-yard of pride and selfe-loue, which will make vs ouerweene our owne gifts and good parts; nor compare our selues with our selues, or others that come behind vs, and haue not attained vnto our measure, but with the perfect Law of God, which like a looking-glasse will discover our blemishes and imperfections, and with our Saviour Christ, the perfect paterne of holinesse and righteousnesse, according to

to whole Image we ought to be conformed. A fourth cause of defection from God and godlinesse which we must shunne, is the immoderate loue of the world and worldly vanities, which cooleth and quencheeth in vs the loue of God, and of spirituall and heavenly things; and so choketh in vs all good desires and indeuours of seeking after them that wee may obtaine them. For as our Sauour telleth vs, we cannot serue God, and Mammon: And the Apostle saith, that the amity of the world is enmity with God; and therefore whosoever will be a friend of the world, he is Gods enemy. Which argument the Apostle Iohn vseth to dissuade vs from this carnall loue: Loue not the world (saith he) nor the things that are in the world. If any man loue the world, the loue of the Father is not in him. A fifth cause, is slacknesse and negligence in the vse of those meanes which both beget and begin Gods graces in vs, and also nourish and preserue them when they are begun; as the hearing of the Word, reading, prayer, meditation, the Sacraments, and such like. For as the strength of the body languisheth and consumeth, if we refuse our bodily food, whereby it is preserued, so must also our soules needs fall into a consumption of all grace and goodnesse, if we neglect that spirituall nourishment by which onely they are sustained in vs. A sixth cause is, the grieuing of Gods Spirit dwelling in vs, by quenching the good motions of it, and defiling our soules with sinnes that waste the conscience, being committed wilfully against the knowledge; which loathsome filthinesse polluteth our soules and bodies, and maketh this holy Ghest weary of his lodging, & going away, to withdraw also with him his gifts and graces, by which alone wee are inabled vnto all good duties. And therefore if wee would not fall away from all grace and goodnes, let vs louingly entertain the Author of them, and not grieve Gods holy Spirit, by resisting those good motions which he putteth into vs, and by making our hearts and bodies, which should be his holy temples and place of residence, a loathsome stie of sinfull vncleanesse. A last cause of apostacy, is neere and inward familiarity with prophane and wicked persons, who will corrupt vs with their euill examples, and poyson vs with the contagion of their sinnes, alluring and drawing vs by degrees to accompany them in their euill courses, vntill at last wee runne on with them into the same excesse of outragious wickednesse, and so giue a finall farewell to all grace and goodnesse.

The third meanes of perseuerance is to consider, that there is no other way to be approued of God, either in our persons or actions. For though our workes make neuer so glorious a shew in the sight of men, and our first beginnings and proceedings seeme most excellent, and giue great contentment both vnto our selues and all others, yet if we continue not vnto the end, the Lord will take no delight either in vs or them, according to that of the Apostle: If any man draw backe, my soule shall haue no pleasure in him. Fourthly, let vs remember, that our begun and continued righteousness will not at all profit vs, if wee desist in our course, and returne againe to our former wicked wayes. For so the Lord hath plainly said, That the righteousness of the righteous shall not deliuer him in the day of his transgression, and for the wickednesse of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby, in the day that he turneth from his wickednesse; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness, in the day that he sinneth, &c. And therefore as the sinner hath no cause to goe on in his sinne, despairing of pardon, so the righteous hath no reason to desist in his righteousness, presuming of reward, for that which he hath done already. The fift meanes is, to consider, that if wee perseuere not in the profession and practice of true godliness, all our former labour will not onely be spent in vaine, but also to our great losse, seeing we shall be in farre worse case after our apostasie, then we were before we made any profession of Religion. For Satan hauing bin once beaten out of possession, vpon his returne taketh surer hold; & as our Sauour speakes, One euil spirit taketh with him seuen other worse then himselfe, and reenter and dwell there: & the last state of that man is worse then the first. So the Apostle Peter telleth vs, that it had bin better for apostates not to haue knowne the way of righteousness, then after they haue knowne it, to turne from it, like the Dog to his vomit, and the Sow being washed, to her wallowing in the mire. The sixth meanes is, to haue alwayes in our remembrance the fearefull punishments which are inflicted vpon Apostates, both in this life and the life to come. For the backslider in heart shall bee filled with his owne wayes; and a good man, who perseuereth in his integrity, shall be satisfied from himselfe. More especially, he that forsaketh God and the wayes of his Commandments, the Lord will forsake him, & giue him ouer vnto himselfe, to go on in his owne sinfull courses to his euerlasting perdition and destruction according to that of Dauid to his sonne Salomon; If thou forsake him, he will cast thee off for euer. And that of Azariah to Asa; The Lord is with you, while you be with him, and if yee seeke him, he will be found of you; but if you forsake him, hee will forsake you. So the Lord threatneth to stretch out his hand, and to cut off them that were turned backe from him, and those who had not sought him, nor inquired after him. In the life to come Apostates shall be deprived of heauenly happinesse, for he only that indureth to the end, shall be saued. And he that putteth his hand to the plough, and looketh backe, shall not be thought fit for the Kingdome of God. Yea, they shall not only lose these heauenly ioyes, but also haue their portion in hellish torments; For they that sinne willingly, after they haue receiued the knowledge of the truth, and perseuere in their sinnes without repentance, there remaineth vnto them no more sacrifice for sinnes; but a fearefull looking for of iudgement, and fiery indignation which shall deuoure the aduersaries, as the Apostle speaketh.

Lastly, if we would perseuere in the duties of a godly life vnto saluation, we must remember, that it is not a thing in our owne power, but the free gift of God, and therefore if we would haue it, we must continually beg it at his hands by seruent and effectually prayer. For as it is he alone that giueth vnto vs the spirituall life of Grace, who were naturally dead in trespasses and sinnes; so it is he onely that can preserue vs in it. And if he openeth his gracious hand, we shall be nourished and filled with all good; but if hee hideth his face from vs, wee shall presently be troubled, and perish in our former state of sinne and infidelity. It is he that worketh in vs both to will and to doe, of his good pleasure; and wee who are able to doe nothing of our selues, are enabled to doe all things through Christ which strengtheneth vs. It is hee that beginneth the good worke of grace in vs, and hee onely can performe and finish it untill the day of Iesus Christ. It is he alone, that that is able to keepe vs from falling, as the Apostle Iude speaketh, and to perseuer vs faultlesse, before the presence of his glory with exceeding ioy. We can no more walke in our owne strength in the wayes of godlinesse, then Peter could vpon the waters: but it is the power of Christs Word, that supporteth vs, and keepeth vs from sinking, and his gracious promises of his helpe and assistance, by which we are stayed. It is not our apprehending him, but his apprehending vs and holding vs in his hand that preserveth vs from falling; for our weake and childish hold would soone faile, though we cling vnto him by a lively faith, if he tooke not surer hold of vs, and (as it were) carried vs like a louing Father in the armes of his prouidence. Neither doe we chiefly perseuere, because wee are faithfull vnto God, but because he is faithfull vnto vs, and will stablish and keepe vs from all euill. Our owne strength would not stay vs from being forcibly carried away with the violent tentations of our spirituall enemies; but it is our Sauour Christ that keepeth vs, who hauing receiued from his Father all power in heauen and earth, is stronger then all, and none shall bee able to plucke vs out of his and his Fathers hands. It is he that confirmeth vs vnto the end, that we may bee blamelesse vnto the Day of our Lord Iesus Christ. The promises of God which in Christ are yea and Amen, vnto the glory of God by vs, are they which stablish vs in him; and it is hee that hath sealed vs, and giuen vs the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts. And therefore if wee would perseuere in grace and in the wayes of godlinesse, we must beg it at Gods hands, and pray for our selues, as the Apostle for the Colossians, that he will replenish vs with knowledge of his will in all wisdom, that wee may walke worthy the Lord vnto all pleasing, being fruitfull in euery good worke, and increasing in the knowledge of God, strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, vnto all patience and long-suffering with ioyfulness. And as he prayeth for the Thessalonians, that the Lord will make vs to increase and abound in loue, to the end that he may stablish our hearts vnblameable in holinesse before God, vnto the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ, with all his Saints.

CAP. I.

Of the rules of a godly life, whereby we may be directed in the right performing of all Christian duties. And first, of such rules as respect the causes of it, both principall and subordinate.

§. Sect. I.
Of the helpes inabling vs to leade a godly
life.

HAuing shewed what the godly life is, and the duties wherein it consisteth, with the properties belonging to them, which serue as way-markes and signes, whereby wee may know that wee are in a right course; it now remaineth, that wee intreat both of the helpes whereby we may be furthered in the wayes of godlinesse, and also of the impediments, which hindring vs in our Christian course, are to bee carefully remooued out of the way, if we would trauell in it with any ease and comfort, and come happily to the end of our iourneys. For as they who are to run a race for a corruptible crowne, thinke it not sufficient to know perfectly the way, with the nature and properties of it, as whether it be long or short; vp, or downe the hill; rough or plaine: but also carefully vse all helpes which may further them in the race, and remooue all impediments which may hinder their speed, and frustrate their hopes of comming seasonably to the goale, and winning the Garland: so must we all take the same course in running of the spirituall Race of a godly life, that we may obtaine that Crowne which is heauenly and immortal. The helpes whereby wee may bee furthered and inabled to leade a godly life, are either the meanes which tend to the aduancing of it; or the arguments and reasons which may induce and perswade vs to vse them, and to praetise all Christian and holy duties in the whole course of our liues & cōuersation. The meanes respect either direction or praetice: The former consisting in certaine rules which are to be obserued, that we may profitably proceed in the wayes of godlines: The other in wel vsing of certaine special meanes which God hath ordained & sanctified to this end, that they may enrich vs with his spirituall & sauing graces, & strengthen vs to the performing of those Christian duties which belong to a godly life. The rules to bee obserued, haue either reference to such things as belong to all Christian duties, or to the duties themselves.

Of the former sort, are such as concerne either their causes or their circumstances. The causes are chiefe and principall, or else subordinate and instrumentall. The chiefe and principall cause of working all holy duties, in, and by vs, is God himselfe, the Father, Sonne, and holy Spirit. Concerning whom, this first rule is to bee obserued, that seeing God is the chiefe Author of all good duties which can be performed by vs, that therefore we also make him the supreme end of them, propounding vnto our selues his glory in the vndertaking of any action, as the mayne motiue that induceth vs vnto it. And seeing he is first and last in all holy duties which are performed of vs, and both beginneth, continueth, and finisheth his workes of grace in and by vs; yea, seeing wee our selues are wholly his, both by right of creation, preservation, and redemption; therefore being his and not our owne, we must deuote and consecrate our selues wholly, and all our actions and intentions to his seruice, performing all Christian duties, not as acts of our owne wills, to please or profit our selues, but as workes which he willeth and commandeth, and are therefore pleasing and acceptable in his sight. So that this must be our first step & entrance to the Christian duties of a godly life, vterly to deny our selues and our owne wills, and acknowledging God to be all in all, wee are to resigne both our persons & actions to be directed and guided as he pleaseth, and to make his will in all things the rule of ours; not performing the duties of a godly life, because they are pleasing vnto vs, or plausible vnto others, but because God requireth them, and it is his will, that being sanctified, we should glorifie him, in bringing forth much fruit. We must, if we wil be Christs Disciples, in the very first place deny our selues, and take vp our crosse and follow him. We must not, like vntamed Heifers, run & range which way we list, but we must take vpon vs his easie yoke and light burthen, and casting off our pride and selfe-will, we must learne of him to be humble and meek in spirit. We must be content to be, not what we would, but what God wil haue vs, both doing and suffering whatsoeuer he comendeth or imposeth. We must go the way that nature shunneth, if God chuse it for vs; and walk with Peter, not whither we would, but whither we would not. An example of which obedience we haue in the Saints of Macedonia, who resigned themselves vnto the Lord in doing his wil, & in him to the direction of his holy Apostle. And in Paul also, who before his conuersion applied himselfe to do his own wil, and to please the chiefe Priests, but no sooner was he cast down & humbled, but presently he offereth himselfe to Gods seruice, and desireth to be guided by the will of Christ. Yea our Sauour himselfe, who is the most perfit patterne for our imitation, though his humane will were most iust and holy, yet professeth that he sought not his owne will, but the will of his Father who sent him. Neither must we only deny our own wils in al our doings, that we may submit them vnto Gods, but also in our sufferings, that so we may say with Dauid; Here am I, let him doe to me, as seemeth good vnto him; and with our Sauour Christ himselfe; If this Cup may not passe by me, not my will, but thine bee done. The fruits and benefits of which resigning vp our selues wholly to the direction and disposing of Gods will, are great and manifold. For thus all our actions must needs be pleasing vnto God, seeing they are conformable to his owne will. We shall liue the life of Christ, when being wholly moued and ruled by his Spirit, we shall doe, not our owne wills, but his; and the will of his & our heauenly Father. We shall be partakers of the diuine nature, as the Apostle Peter speaketh, when as keeping his residence in vs by his Spirit, his holy will doth raigne and rule in vs. Wee shall greatly profite in humility, which is that Christian ornament that chiefly maketh vs glorious in the sight of God. Wee shall be contented in all estates, and reioyce euen in tribulation and affliction, because the will of God is fulfilled in vs, vpon which our will dependeth. Finally, the will of God shall be vnto vs as a most skilful and faithfull Pilor, which standing at the sterne, will direct vs in all our courses, in this our dangerous passage thorow the sea of this world, and preserue vs safe in all tempestuous troubles, from falling vpon the rocks and shelves, vpon which we would often run and make shipwracke of our soules, if we followed not this guide, but were led by the direction of our owne corrupt and vnskilfull wills, or by the traditions of others who are as ignorant as our selues.

The second rule of direction for the leading of a godly life, respecteth our Sauour Christ, namely, that we propound him as the maine scope and marke at which we ayme in all our actions, not resting in the best duties which we performe, as hauing in them any sufficiency to make vs happie and blessed, but vsing them as helpees to gaine Christ, and to confirme and assure our vnion and communion with him, by whom alone wee attaine vnto happinesse. The end of our legall knowledge, is not chiefly that wee may obey it, and so liue in our owne righteousnesse, but to discover our misery both in respect of sinne and punishment, that thereby we may be driuen out of our selues vnto Christ, and seeke in him righteousnes and saluation. The end of the knowledge of the Gospell and of all other knowledge, learning and wisdom, is to bring vs to the knowledge of Christ and him crucified; for the sauing knowledge of this onely, would make vs happie, though we were meere Ideots in all other things; whereas if we had all other knowledge of the secrets of nature, the profundity of all Arts and sciences, yea euen of the highest and darcest mysteries of Religion, yet wanting this alone, wee should bee miserable. And therefore the Apostle neglecting the excellency of all other wisdom, determined not to know any thing, saue Iesus Christ, and him crucified. In respect of this, hee esteemed all other gaine but losse and dung, and propounded this vnto himselfe, as his chiefe marke vnto which he pressed with all his power, that he might know Christ, and the power of his Resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable vnto his death. In which, when he had attained vnto it in some measure, hee chiefly gloried. The end of our faith must not bee to rest in it, as an infused grace, for which in its owne vertue we are accepted, but that it may serue as an instrument to apply and appropriate vnto vs Christ and his righteousnes, in and by whom alone we are iustified in the sight of God. The end of our hearing and reading the Word, is not chiefly to commend vs vnto God by the performance of a religious act of his seruice, but that wee may thereby come to the knowledge of Christ, & apply him vnto vs by a liuely faith. The end of our receiuing the Sacraments, is to confirme and assure our vnion and communion with Christ. The end of our prayers, is not that for themselves and their owne seruency and holinesse, they should bee heard and granted of God, but onely in the mediation and intercession of Iesus Christ. Finally, the end of all the duties of a godly life and fruits of new obedience, is not to satisfy Gods Iustice and merit heauen, but to assure vs that wee are ingrafted as liuely branches in the true Vine Iesus Christ, and that wee haue from him this sap of grace which maketh vs fruitful, seeing without him we could doe nothing, and that we are partakers of the vertue and power of his death and Resurrection vnto Iustification, and the remission of the guilt and punishment of all our sinnes, seeing wee feelee them powerfull in vs for our sanctification, and for the abating of the corruption, and subduing in vs the power of sinne, so that it no longer reigneth in our mortall bodies. Now the reason why we must not rest in our Christian graces and holy duties themselves, but onely vse them to another end, propounding vnto them as their maynescope the gayning of Christ, and that wee may hereby be more neerely and firmly vnited vnto him, is, because nothing in vs, nor any thing done by vs is pleasing vnto God in it owne worth and excellency, but only as it is accepted in Christ the Sonne of his loue, in whom onely hee is well pleased; for, euen our prayers themselves are but a lothsome sacrifice, vnlesse our high Priest taking them at our hands, doe put them into his golden Censer, and sweeten them with the odoriferous Incense, and fragrant breath of his mediation and intercession. Our best righteousnesse, being imperfect and stayned with our corruptions like a polluted cloth, will not indure the pure and parching eye of Gods strict Iustice; vnlesse our imperfections be covered with the perfect righteousnesse of Iesus Christ, and the pollution washed away in his most precious blood. And therefore let not this bee the end of all our Christian duties in a godly life; that they may bring vs directly vnto God, in their owne credit, or procure his fauour in their owne worth and excellency, for then hee will iustly reiect both vs and them; but let vs propound the getting of Christ as the maine scope of them all, that so being vnited vnto him, we and our duties may in him be accepted before God, and receiue a rich reward by vertue of his merits and perfect obedience.

The third rule respecteth the holy Spirit of God dwelling in vs, namely, that seeing we cannot of our selues pray, or heare, or reade, or meditate, or else performe any other Christian and holy duties; but as this Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and giueth vs power to bring them to some good effect; therefore stopping our eares to carnall disputes, and shaking off the yoke of naturall & corrupted reason, we must, in the performing of all the duties of a godly life, giue our selues ouer to be gouerned and guided by it, both in respect of the matter, manner, and time of doing them. And when wee heare the voyce of the Spirit secretly whispering in our hearts (like the voyce of one standing behind vs) saying, This is the way, walke thou in it, when thou turnest to the right hand or to the left, we are to be directed by it. And when it putteth into our mindes any good motions, or inciteth vs vnto any holy duties, as praying, hearing, reading, meditating, renewing of our repentance, or doing the workes of mercy, and such like, wee must not quench the Spirit, by checking these motions, nor by delaying and putting them off to another time, but vndertake them presently, and labour to bring them to good effect, whilest it offereth vnto vs its helpe and assistance, without which, of our selues wee are able to doe nothing that is good. Let vs not grieve the good Spirit of God dwelling in vs, whereby we are sealed to saluation, by refusing his gouernment, (as the Israelites dealt with Samuel) notwithstanding it is so profitable vnto vs, pulling (as it were) his Scepter out of his hand, and saying vnto him, as those Rebels to Christ, This man shall not raigne ouer vs: but like obedient subiects, let vs submit our selues in all things to be ruled by it; and when wee discern that the motions which are put into our minds, are his, (as wee may easily know them from all others, both by their holinesse resembling their Author, and their agreement with the voyce of the Spirit in the holy Scriptures) let vs not onely yeeld vnto them, but also giue them the best entertainment; nourishing and cherishing them when they seeme weake, and inciting and re-inliuing them when as they begin to languish and dye in vs, by meditation, prayer, reading, and other such like religious exercises. Let vs open the doore of our hearts when he knocketh, and giue kind entertainment to this holy Ghest, who bringeth his cheere with him, and will feast vs with a delicate banquet of spirituall graces. But especially when he visiteth vs after an especiall & extraordinary manner, and giueth more euident signes of his presence then at other times, by working more powerfully good motions in vs, kindling our zeale, and inlarging our hearts with the loue of God, and the duties of his seruice, then are we not by sloth to let slip so good an opportunity of inriching our soules with sauing graces, but we must (as we vse to say) strike whilest the iron is hot, and reape our haruest, whilest this Sun-shine continueth: we must set vp all our sailes, whilest this faire gale of wind lasteth; and so wee shall in a shorter time make a farre greater progresse in our course of godlinesse, then in many moneths, when being left by the Spirit, in respect of this extraordinary efficacie and operation, we shall be becalmed, and haue neither will nor power to goe forward. When hee offereth himselfe in an vnusuall manner vnto vs, in our travelling of the spirituall iourney, (as the Angell to Iacob) wee must take fast hold of him, not suffering him to deparr, before he hath giuen vs an extraordinary blessing. And when hee mooueth our hearts, as the Angell the Poole of Bethesda, and by his speciall presence infuseth into them more then wonted vertue; let vs not suffer so good an opportunity to passe, without making of it some spirituall advantage, for the curing of our sores and sicknesses of sinnes, and the confirming and increasing of our health and strength in our inner man.

That we often renew the Covenānt of grace between God and vs.

The rules which respect the subordinate causes and helpes, whereby we are enabled to performe the duties of a godly life, are diuers. The first, that we often renew the covenānt of grace betweene God and vs, by renewing the condition of it on our part, faith and repentance. In which exercise, as we are to renew our sorrow for all our sinnes, and those about the rest, which we haue most often committed, and thereby most offended and dishonoured dishonoured God; so especially for those finnes and corruptions which haue most disabled vs vnto the duties of a godly life, and haue plunged vs into the contrary wickednesse, whereby we haue serued sinne and Satan. As our negligence and want of zeale, and holy care to glorifie God by the light of our Christian conuersation, and bringing forth the fruits of new obedience, and adorning our profession by our holy conuersation, whereby contrariwise we haue caused Gods holy Name to be blasphemed, and our Christian profession to be slandered and euill spoken of, as though it were the cause of all our inormities. Our security and hardnesse of heart, whereby we haue made no good vse either of Gods Word or workes, his mercies or iudgements, to be drawne by them to repentance, and made more diligent in the duties of his seruice; but putting the euill day farre from vs, haue taken occasion thereby, with the euill seruant, to be slothfull and negligent in all good duties, and to take liberty in running licentious courtes, loathing the meanes whereby we should haue bin wakened and rowzed vp out of this spirituall lethargie. Our cowardize and slothfulness in making warre against our flesh and fleshly lusts, whereby they haue often gotten to such an head, strength, and height of rebellion, that they haue preuailed, and haue shamefully foyled the spirituall part, and led vs captiue vnto sinne. Our negligence in preuenting the occasions, and withstanding the first motions and beginnings of sinne, and our want of care, in banishing out of our minds and hearts the desires and concupiscence of the flesh, when they were first suggested vnto vs; whereof it hath come to passe, that suffering them to rest in vs, wee haue been allured and tickled with carnall delight in thinking of them, which hath drawne vs from our former sincerity, and moued vs to like and approue them, to consent vnto, and produce them into act, when wee haue had fit occasion. Our worldlineffe and earthly-mindednesse, which haue made vs, by affecting transitory trifles, to neglect spirituall and heavenly excellencies, and neglecting Gods seruice, to serue Satan, in hope of receiuing this base wages and rewards of iniquity. Our little profiting by the long inioying and vsing of the light of the Gospell, and plentiful meanes of our saluation, for the enriching of our selues with Gods spirituall and sauing graces, knowledge, faith, affiance, loue, zeale, patience, or the fruitfull exercising of them in the duties of a godly life: which hath come to passe by our irreuerent, slothfull and sluggish vsing of the meanes, nor bringing vnto them any faith, zeale, seruency of spirit, or a good conscience. Our want of Christian valour and resolution in the Christian warfare, and our often yeelding vnto the tentations of Satan, the world, and our own flesh. Finally, our abuse of prosperity and temporary blessings, which being giuen vs of God as present wages in our hands, to make vs more cheerefull in his seruice, we haue abused as meanes and occasions to make vs more sinfull, more forgetfull of God, and negligent and cold in his seruice: more proud, worldly, and vnconscionable in all our courtes. And when we haue called to our remembrance these, and such other finnes, whereby we haue been hindred in the wayes of godlineffe, and haue vnflamedly lamented and bewailed them with bitter griefe, and resolved amendment for the time to come; then are we also to renew and strengthen our faith, by applying afresh vnto vs the gracious promises of the Gospell which are made in Christ vnto all repentant sinners. The which often renewing of our couenant with God, will be a notable meanes of strengthening vs vnto all the duties of a godly life; seeing this couenant of grace is the ground and foundation of them, God hauing promised therein, that hee will take away from vs our stony hearts, and giue vs hearts of flesh; and that hee will put a new spirit within vs, that we may walke in his statutes; and keepe his ordinances and doe them. That he will giue vs one heart, and one way, that we may feare him for euer; and put his Law in our inward parts; and write it in our hearts, that we shall not depart from him. And as thus on Gods part wee are strengthened vnto all good duties by his Spirit, which hee promisseth and giueth vnto vs; so also on our part, this renewing of our faith inabling vs hereunto; for the more we are assured of the remission of our sinnes, and of all Gods benefits, both spirituall in this life, and heavenly in the life to come, the more we loue him who hath so loued vs, and of his infinite bounty hath multiplied vpon vs such inestimable blessings; and the more wee loue him, the more loth wee are to doe any thing which may displease him, and the more forward and willing to glorifie him, and to performe all good duties acceptable in his sight.

The second rule is, that we chiefly labour to approoue all our workes and wayes to God and our owne consciences, rather then vnto men, the testimony whereof is much more to be esteemed then publike fame, and humane censures. For same being but a breath of the often deceived multitude, may also deceiue vs, by giuing a false testimony, either on the worser or better part; but our cōsciences, which are priuy euen to our secret actions, and inward intentions in doing them, will not easily bee corrupted to giue in false euidence, especially in those who are sanctified and regenerate. Humane and vulgar censures are often false and friuolous, ridiculous and impious, applauding that which God condemneth, and condemning that which he commendeth; and commonly that best pleaseth the multitude, which displeaseth him. They call him honourable, not who honoureth God, and is honoured of him, who is a sonne of God, brother of Christ, and heire of heauen; but who is innobled by the vertues of his parents, or who hath bought glorious titles (as it were a slaue in the market, or as the Centurion his freedome) with a great summe. They call him rich and happy, who is poore, beggerly, naked, and vtterly destitute of the riches of Gods graces, because he hath some worldly pelfe, which every day may be taken from him, or he from it. And hee of the world is esteemed valorous and magnanimous, who is so impotent in ruling his passions, that he cannot beare the least injury without taking reuenge; and contrariwise he base and cowardly, who dissembleth wrongs, and according to Christs Commandement doth readily forgive them, leauing vengeance to God, vnto whō alone it belongeth: Though nothing is more contrary to true fortitude, or the magnanimous constancy of a sound and well-fetled minde, then with euery wind of words to bee moued out of a right state; and with other mens folly to become furious and frantique. But a good conscience giueth in true euidence, as witnessing with God, or that which he witnesseth, not out of a blind opinion misled by passion, passion, but according to the booke of holy Scriptures, with which this booke of conscience commonly agreeth. And therefore if wee would leade a godly life, and constantly performe those Christian duties which are pleasing vnto God, let vs lightly regard the censure of the multitude, who ordinarily outface and discourage vertue and piety, and commend and magnifie vice and wickednesse, iustifie those whom God condemne, and condemne those that hee iustificeth; accounting their false praises a great dishonour, and their scornes and disgraces for innocency and piety, our praise and glory, seeing he cannot be but honourable whom God honoureth, nor want glory, whom Christ, his Saints and holy Angels approue and applaud. And contrariwise, let vs highly esteeme, in all our actions, the testimony of our owne conscience, which will restraîne vs from secret sinnes, as well as from open and notorious, and moue and incite vs to all Christian duties, euen in our secret closets, when there is none by to censure our actions. And as no wise man in running of a race is much moued with the speeches of the standers by, which hee assuredly knoweth to be false and friuolous, thinking euer the better of himselfe when he is cast behind all the rest of the company, because they commend his speed, or the worse when he hath outstripped them and is neere the goale, because they discommend him for his slownesse: so neither must we be lifted vp with a good conceit of our selues, when others commend vs for our swiftnesse in the spirituall race, if our owne consciences tell vs, that wee are slow and behind all the rest with whom wee contend for the Garland; nor yet dejected and discouraged when they dispraise vs: if we are priuie vnto our selues, that with all our indeuour wee striue to make our best speed.

The third rule is, that we labour to performe all the duties of a godly life with a peaceable and quiet minde, which is not disturbed with disheartening feares, or tumultuous passions. The which calme quietnesse ariseth from two causes. The chiefe and principall is our peace with God, and peace of conscience, which are effects and fruits of our iustification by faith. The which assuring vs of the remission of our sinnes, our reconciliation with God, victory ouer all the enemies of our saluation, and that the Lord so watcheth ouer vs with his providence, and ruleth vs in all our wayes with his Wisedome and Power, that wee shall neuer fall from him, and so ouer-ruleth all things which oppose vs, that nothing shall be able to hurt or hinder vs, and all things shall turne to our good, and further our saluation; we are made heereby constant, cheerfull and couragious in all Christian duties, seruing the Lord in holinesse and righteousness, without feare, all the dayes of our liues. For then our sinnes, and the iudgements of God due vnto them will not terrifie vs, the malicious assaults and tentations of our spirituall enemies will not affright and discourage vs, afflictions and persecutions for righteousness sake, and for the profession and practice of Gods true Religion, will not daunt and dismay vs, but we will, in despite of all these oppositions, hold on our way, and finish our course with ioy. Whereas if wee want this inward peace and tranquillity, our sinnes will presse vs downe as an heauie burthen, and hinder our proceeding in the wayes of godlinesse, our consciences will accuse

That we must performe all good duties with a quiet and peaceable minde.

accuse and terrifie vs; Satan with his tentations will affright and beate vs downe, and outward troubles, ioyned with those inward discouragements which we finde in our selues, will so vex and disquiet vs, that either wee shall desist in the wayes of godlinesse, as despairing to ouercome all these difficulties, or else proceed slowly, and vnsettledly with much vnconstancy and discomfort. The second cause of this inward peace and tranquillity of mind, is the subduing and mortifying of our carnall lusts and tumultuous passions, as worldly loue, fleshly feare, rash anger, and the rest; and the right ordering of all our affections when they are sanctified. For where those vnruely passions doe still liue and beare sway, they blind the mind, that it cannot discerne the right way; corrupt and ouer-rule the will, that it cannot chuse, euen that which the iudgement approoueth, and so vnsettle vs in all good courses, that we can keepe no constant tenour in them, but vpon euery slight occasion, all our good resolutions are overthrowne, and we quite turned out of the right way. Whereas if these bee subdued and kept (as it were) vnder hatches, the mind being quiet, is able to iudge vprightly, and the will to imbrace that which holy reason commendeth to its choyce, and the worke of piety prospereth and proceedeth without any disturbance. And as we are thus to mortifie our carnall lusts; so we must rightly order our affections and passions, euen after they are sanctified; that they may performe their duties in due time and place, and like seruants, attend vpon holy reason, that they may assist it, and not as commanders and chiefe agents, goe before it. For as when a right and due order is obserued in the performing Christian duties, reason being inlightened by Gods Word and Spirit first approving them, the will, vpon the commendation of reason chusing them, and the affections and passions subiecting themselues to the seruice of them both, affect and desire them, and oppose, with all their strength, all impediments which hinder their producing into act; out of this orderly proceeding (as in a well gouerned state) wee become constant in all good courses: contrariwise, when affections beare chiefeest sway, and are the first mouers vnto Christian duties, reason being thrust from his throne, and will from the counsell table, though we may by fits and flashes performe them, yet doing them in a disorderly manner, not out of sound iudgement rightly informed, but out of sudden and vngrounded passions, wee can neuer bee constant in any good course, but hot and zealous whilest the heat of passion lasteth, remisse and indifferent when this seruour abateth, and stonie cold when it ceaseth. And this is the true cause why so many, who haue beene zealous professours in their youth, become luke-warme when they come to riper yeeres, and wholly cold and negligent, worldly and profane in their old age; because their Religion and deuotion was but a flash of youthfull passion, and not well-grounded vpon sanctified reason, and a sound and settled iudgement, conuincd by the euidence of truth, and rightly informed by the Word of God. And therefore seeing the first beginnings were disorderly and confused, it is no maruell if the proceedings be vnsettled and vnconstant; and hauing laid so vnstable and vnsecure a foundation, it is no great wonder, if the whole building, in short time, become ruinous.

The fourth rule is, that all the duties of a godly life, doe not only arise and spring from those inward and fundamentall graces, saving knowledge, a lively faith, purity of heart, a good conscience, and seruent loue; as I haue already shewed at large in the beginning of this Treatise, but also that they be ioyned and accompanied with other Christian and inter-nall vertues, and principally Christian prudence, zeale and humility, without which they cannot be acceptable vnto God. Christian prudence is most necessary to the well performing of all good duties, because it guideth and directeth vs in all particular actions, that they may bee done aright, both in respect of the matter, and the manner, the substance and circumstances, of which if we faile, or of any one of them, our works, otherwise commendable, doe lose all their grace and excellency. For though they be neuer so good in the matter, yet if they be done in an ill manner, and though for their substance they seeme neuer so glorious, yet if we faile in the circumstances, not obseruing due time, place, or persons, that which is generally good in the Thesis and Theory, ceaseth to bee so in the Hypothesis, and in respect of the particular act, as it is done by vs; neither can we safely passe thorow all these narrow straits and difficult passages, vnlesse Christian prudence sit at the Helme, and direct vs in all our courses. Besides, this prudence is necessary for the guiding and tempering of our zeale, which is a good Souldier in the Christian warfare, but an ill Commander, as being fit for execution, but not to giue directions; and if it be not vnder the conduct of prudence, it becommeth blind and preposterous, rash and wilfull, like a headstrong horse, full of courage, which being well backed, may doe good seruice, but if he be ill managed, carryeth his rider into headlong danger. But zeale, ioyned with prudence, is most necessary for our well proceeding in all vertuous actions, seeing (like the spirits in the body) it giueth to our soules liuely heat, whereby they are moued in the course of godlinesse, and are made actiue in all Christian duties, laboriously vsing all good meanes whereby they may bee furthered, and couragiously opposing and removing all lets and impediments which crosse vs in our way. And therefore if we would deserue the name of true Christians, wee must take heed that wee incline not to that damnable error of carnall worldlings, who make zeale and prudence flat opposites, thinking those that are most seruent, most foolish, and with Iehu his companions, censuring them as mad fellowes, that with any zeale performe their duty; seeing holy Dauid, who in wisdom exceeded his teachers and ancients, was so zealous in Gods seruice, that scoffing Michol condemned him of folly: yea, our Sauour Christ himselfe, who is the Wisdom of his Father, and in whom all the treasures of wisdom are hid, as the Apostle speaketh, as hee excelled all men in prudence, so also in holy zeale, seeing he was not onely thorowly heated, but euen consumed in this diuine flame, as hee professeth. Neither can true prudence be more seuered from holy zeale, then zeale from prudence, being herein like the naturall heat and radicall moysture of the body, which preserue mutually one another, and both faint and faile, when either languisheth and decayeth. For prudence without the warmth of zeale (like frozen waters) loseth its motion in Christian duties, and (like the parts of the body, from which the animall spirits are stopped) becommerh senselesse and benumbed, falling (as it were) into a dead Palsie. Yea, if zeale doe not put into it Christian courage, it groweth so wary and full of caution, that it attempteth nothing, because in all things it foreseeeth danger; and so at last degenerateth into worldly wilinesse, and irreligious policie. Finally, we must decke our selues, and all Christian duties, with true humility, ascribing all the glory of them vnto God alone, from whom onely we had power and will to doe them, and reseruing nothing vnto our selues but the shame of their imperfections and corruptions; let vs acknowledge that we are sufficiently rewarded, if our frailties and infirmities be graciously pardoned. But of this also I haue spoken in the beginning of this Treatise.

§. Sect. 9.

That we must chiefly esteeme, chuse, & affect the duties of godlinesse, according to their worth and excellency.

Mat. 5. 19.

The fifth rule is, that in our iudgements we esteeme, in our wills chuse, with our affections desire and imbrace, and in our actions practise and exercise Christian vertues and duties, according to their worth and excellency, profit and necessity; keeping (as much as in vs lyeth) a due proportion betweene them, in our iudgements esteeming and preferring, in our wills chusing, in our affections louing and desiring, and in our actions seeking after, and practising euery good grace and duty in their due time and place, preferring in our estimate, choyce, desires and practice, the chiefe and principall vertues and duties, before the meane, and the meane before others that are inferiour vnto them. Not that we may neglect the least grace of God or Christian duty, or so regard the greatest and most excellent, as that we dis-esteem the least and meanest; for as our Saviour saith, Whosoever breaketh one of these least Commandements, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least (that is, none at all) in the Kingdome of heauen; but that we must, when they may all stand together, giue the priority and precedencie, in iudgement, desire, and practice to the chiefe, both in time and earnestnesse of indeuour, spending our first and best time, the seruour of our zeale, and chiefe vigour and strength both of body and minde about them; or if wee are brought into such straights of necessity, that all cannot bee done, but some must necessarily bee omitted, that then the lesser giue place to the greater, till wee can get fit opportunity of performing both. Thus wee must preferre Theologicall vertues, as faith, affiance, hope, charity, humility, and the feare of God before those which are humane and ciuilly Morall, as temperance, chastity, ciuill iustice, almes-deeds, and such like; and generally our duties towards God, before our duties towards our neighbours and our selues, the Commandements of the first Table, before those of the second, a due proportion being obserued, Morall duties being compared with Morall, degree with degree, as the greatest with the greatest, middle with middle, and least with least; more desiring, and zealously indeuouring to get the chiefe graces, and performe the religious duties of Gods seruice, then those which meerey concerne our selues or our neighbours. Thus wee are more seruently to effect, and diligently to practise Morall and substantiall duties, then those which are ceremoniall and circumstantiall; yea, to reiect these latter, when both will not stand together, according to that; I will mercy and not sacrifice; and the practise of our Saviour,

our, who neglected the outward rest of the Sabbath, that hee might doe the workes of the Sabbath, in curing and healing the lame and diseased. The contrary whereof, God condemneth in the Iewes, and reiecteth their ceremoniall seruice, as odious and abominable, because they tooke occasion thereby to neglect the Morall. And thus they offend, who spend their chiefe zeale about ceremonies and circumstances of Gods seruice, and imploy their best strength and indeuour, either in defending or opposing them; being in the meane time more cold and slacke in the mayne parts of Gods seruice, and the principall duties of a godly life. Thus we must preferre the seruice of God it selfe before the meanes of it, and the duties of piety and charity, before the helps which further vs in them; as the doing of the Word, before hearing, the practice of godlinesse, before the teaching or learning of it, when both cannot well stand together; prayer, and the workes of piety and righteousness, before fasting and outward abstinence. In which regard, the Lord reiecteth the fasts of the Iewes, because they preferred them before the workes of Iustice and charity, neglecting these, vnder colour of doing the other. And thus likewise they faile, who place their Religion chiefly in hearing the Word, in the meane time neglecting the practice of what they heare and learne, in the duties of their callings, and in the workes of Iustice and mercy towards their neighbours; heerein like vnto rich misers, which spend all their time and strength in gathering riches, and when they haue got them into their possession, neuer care to make further vse of them. But we are to know that the end is to be preferred as more excellent, before the meanes that conduce vnto it. As the life is better then food and rayment; health, then the medicine; treasure, then the paines that getteth it, or the chest, locke and key that keepeth and preserveth it. In which respect, the practice of religious duties in our liues and conuersations, which is the end of our teaching and learning, is to be preferred before either of them, and accordingly, our chiefe zeale and most earnest indeuour is to be imployed and spent in doing the Word, rather then in hearing of it; though both are most necessary in their due time and place, to all that intend to lead a Christian life. Finally, we must preferre both in our choice and practice, internall duties of the mind and heart, before the externall and bodily seruice, for that is the life & soule of Religion, this the body, and without the other but a dead carkasse, which God accepteth not, nor will bring vnto vs any profit, as the Apostle teacheth vs. And lastly, the great and waighy matters of the Law, as iudgement, mercy, and faith, before those of small importance, as tything Mint, Annise, and Cummin; seeing our righteousness shall be Pharisaicall and Hypocriticall, if we spend our chiefe zeale and strength about trifles and things of small importance, and be in the meane time cold and slacke in the maine parts of Gods seruice.

The sixth rule is, that as wee desire spirituall graces, and to expresse them outwardly in the duties of a godly life, so also that we vse all good meanes and helps wherby we may obtaine the one, and practise the other. For the meanes and the end doe inseparably goe together in all ordinary courses of proceeding, & they who neglect the one, in vaine profess the other their loue and desire, or their hope, that by their idle wishes the other may be obtained. Neither is it more possible, that wee should obtaine any sauing graces, or performe the duties of a godly life, if wee neglect the meanes which inable vs vnto them; then it is for a man to liue without meate and drinke, or come to his journeyes end, and neuer trauell in the way that leadeth vnto it. Contrariwise, with no lesse care and diligence wee are to auoyd or overcome all lets and impediments, which stop and hinder vs in our Christian course, of which, I shall haue occasion to speake at large in the following discourse. Heere let it suffice to name one or two, as examples of all the rest. First, euill company, which will taint and infect vs with the poyson of their breath, and by their euill examples and corrupt communication, will first bring vs to a neglecting, and then to a lothing and vtter forsaking of all vertue and Christian duties. Among these, wee must shun with greatest care those dangerous tame beasts, clawing flatterers, which are (as one calleth them) the pestilence of the soule, and the poysoners of good mens minds and manners. For so powerfull are their cunning insinuations, being assisted with our pride and selfe-loue, that wee are ready to giue more credit to their false praises, then to the vnpartiall testimony of our owne consciences, and to thinke our selues (because they say so) such proficientes in all vertue and godlinesse, that wee neede not further to vse any meanes whereby wee might bee bettered and improoued in our spirituall state; when as wee are so farre from the marke of perfection, that wee haue scarcely as yet aimed at it. But aboue all other impediments, let vs carefully shunne the immoderate loue of the world and earthly things, which will so wholly take vs vp, that we shall haue neither leasure, power nor will to thinke on spirituall and heauenly things, or to spend any time in the duties of a godly life, or vsing any good meanes to further our assurance of heauenly happinesse. And therefore we are not to set our hearts vpon them, but to vse them onely as comforts of our pilgrimage; and as steps to lift vs vp in diuine contemplation, and to inflame our hearts with greater loue of heauenly excellencies; concluding with our selues, that if the Lord in greatest plentie imparteth the best things the world can boast of to his enemies; then how vnspeakeable are the riches, pleasures, and glory of his owne Kingdome, which hee hath referued as his peculiar blessings for his owne children and faithfull seruants?

C A P. II.

Of the rules of a godly life, which respect the circumstances of it.

§. Sect. 1.

That we must make precious account of our time which God hath allotted vs for his seruice.

And these are the rules which concerne the causes both principall and fundamentall of a godly life, and those also which are inferiour and subordinate. Those which respect the circumstances of it, are these; First, that wee make precious account of our time which God hath allotted vnto vs for his seruice, suffering (as much as in vs lyeth) no part thereof to be spent vaine-ly and vnfruitfully, about those things which profit not, either for the enriching of our soules with spirituall grace, or the furthering and assuring of our saluation. But either we must continually be taken vp with spirituall exercises, as Prayer, Meditation, hearing the Word, Reading, holy conferences, and such like; or in the workes of our honest callings, and of iustice and mercy for the good of our brethren, or in honest and moderate recreations, that wee may bee refreshed, and better inabled to performe these duties with more fruit. To which purpose, let vs often consider, that these are the mayne ends for which wee came into the world, and are suffered by God to liue and continue in it, and therefore that time which is not imployed to aduance these ends, is spent in vaine. That time is the most precious Iewell in the world, which cannot bee bought at any price, nor the least minute of it redeemed when once it is past, with the treasures of the richest Monarchy. That wee haue onely assurance of the time present for our vse, and cannot promise vnto our selues one moneth or moment of that which is to come. That our whole time were farre too little, though it were all spent in the duties of Gods seruice, from whom wee haue receiued so great and manifold blessings, as pledges and pawnes of farre greater, which wee assuredly expect in the life to come. That our employments in our course of Christianity are so many and important, so full of difficulties, and yet so necessary, as attaining to the knowledge of God and his will, and the practice of that we know, the furnishing of our soules with sanctifying and sauing graces, and bringing forth the fruits of them in the whole course of our liues, the making of our calling and election sure, and getting into our owne custody the assured euidences of our saluation, that if we be wise, wee will thinke all too little for these vses, and finde none to spare for idle and vaine exercises. Let vs consider, that the time which is spent in the pleasures of sinne, and pursuing of worldly vanities, brings for the present no true profit, or sound and solid comfort, and ending at the best in late repentance, leaueth nothing behinde it but griefe and vexation of spirit. That now is the acceptable time and day of saluation, which wee were best presently to take hold of, if wee loue our owne soules, because wee know not how soone it will bee past, and withall that when it is gone, it can by no possible meanes bee recovered. That our momentany and vncertaine time being well spent, shall bee rewarded with infinite and eternal happinesse; but being idly and vnprofitably wasted, shall bring vpon vs euerlasting woe and misery. Finally, that in this short time, heavenly happinesse is either wonne or lost, which shall continue beyond all times, and that damnation and hellish torments most intolerable, and endlesse, are either escaped, or else procured and sealed vp vnto vs.

The second rule is, that we doe not stay for occasions and opportunities of performing the Christian duties of a godly life, but that wee seeke for them earnestly before they offer themselues, and carefully take hold of them when we haue found them. Concerning the former, we are with our longing desires, to preuent the occasions of well-doing before they are offered, and vse all our best indeuours to finde them out when they seeme to lye hid, and to pursue them with all our speed, when they seeme to flee from vs. Heerein imitate we the practice of worldlings, who hauing their hearts vpon earthly things, doe not sluggishly stand still till they bee put into their mouthes, but with all vigilancie and diligence spie out all opportunities, whereby they may atchieue their ends, and become rich and honourable in the world. And seeing spirituall and heauenly wisdom, which chiefly consisteth in true godlinesse, is much better then riches and worldly honours, according to that of the Wiseman; How much better is it to get wisdom then gold? and of greater price, and more to be desired then precious stones, or any worldly thing besides; therefore we must seeke it as siluer, and search for it as for hid treasures; and being (as he teacheth vs) the principall thing and chiefe end of all, we must labour to get it with all our gettings; that is, make it our chiefe businesse to attaine vnto it; according to the example of the wise Merchant, who hauing by diligent search found the hid treasure, neuer resteth till he hath made himselfe owner of it, and gotten it sure in his owne possession. Neither is it sufficient with all diligence to seeke for all opportunities of godlinesse, but when we haue found them, we must with all speed lay hold of them, and not suffer them to slip from vs through our carelesse delays. And first, when God offereth vnto vs opportunity and meanes of seruing him in the duties of a godly life, calling and exhorting vs vnto them in the Ministry of his Word, and encouraging to imbrace them, by offering vnto vs the gracious assistance of his holy Spirit, we must in this very day hearken vnto his voyce, and not harden our hearts; when he inuiteth vs to his Supper, we must not pretend excuses, and put him off with delays, and whilst hee knocketh at the dore of our hearts, by the sound of his Word and finger of his Spirit, we must open vnto him, that hee may come in and feast vs with a banquet of his spirituall graces. Whilst hee calleth vs to repentance, and offreth vnto vs the meanes which formerly haue bene denyed, let vs hearken and turne vnto him, whilst the acceptable time and day of saluation lasteth. For it is but a day, and not an age, and when the Sunne-shine of the Gospel setteth, and the night of ignorance and superstition commeth, there will be no time of working. Now our Bridegroom calleth and knocketh, and if we open vnto him, we shall solace our selues in our sweete communion with him, and the fruition of his loue. But if with the sluggish Spouse we pretend excuses, and will not let him in, hee will withdraw himselfe, and then we may long seeke him, before we shall find him. Now wisdom cryeth out vnto vs in our streets, and happy are we if we hearken to her voyce; for if wee now stop our eares to her call, wee shall in the day of our affliction, cry and call, and not be heard, as the Lord threatneth.

Secondly, when we finde our selues best fitted and prepared for the performing of holy and religious duties, the Spirit of God disposing vs vnto them, by inlarging our hearts, and inflaming vs with the loue of spirituall exercises, by the sweet taste and comfortable feelings which wee finde in them, we are not to let slip this opportunity, but entertaining these good motions, and nourishing in vs these spirituall inclinations, we must set our selues seriously about them. As when the Lord calleth vs in the Ministry of the Word, and thereby awakeneth vs out of the sleepe of sinne, we must be ready to say with Samuel, Speake, Lord, for thy seruant heareth. When the

the Lord boreth the care and openeth our hearts, we must with Lydia, attend vnto the things that are spoken, imbrace them by faith, and bring forth the fruits of it in the workes of loue. When he powreth vpon vs the spirit of grace and supplication, we must retire our selues a-part into our Closets, and powre forth our soules and suites before him by seruent prayer. When our hearts (like Dauids) are with meditating vpon Gods manifold mercies, and the sweete taste of his inestimable benefits duly prepared, wee must not lose this opportunity by delayes, but presently with him sing and giue praise. When God hath giuen vnto vs ability to performe spirituall duties, whereby we may mutually further the saluation of one another, and put also some zeale into our hearts, whereby we are disposed vnto them, let vs make no delayes, but exhort one another daily, whilest it is called to day, lest any bee hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. Finally, if God hath put power into our hands, and some pittie and charity into our hearts, whereby we are inabled and mooued to doe the workes of mercy, we are to lay hold vpon these opportunities, and not hazzard the losing of them by our slothfull delayes; according to the counsell of wise Salomon; Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to doe it; Say not vnto thy neighbour, Goe, and come againe, and to morrow I will giue, when thou hast it by thee. For if we neglect our opportunity when God offereth it, he may iustly deny it vs when wee would haue it; or if it still continue, he may withdraw his grace more and more, which we haue neglectfully abused, and so giue vs vp to our owne hardnesse of heart, to goe forward and increase in our former neglect. Finally, seeing our hearts are deceitfull, fickle, and flitting, and we haue them not so at command that we can keepe them close vnto good duties, or preserue in them at our pleasure the fire of deuotion, it would be our wisdom to take them in their good mood, and to lay hold of the opportunity, for the performing of holy duties, as Prayer, Meditation, renewing of our Repentance, and such like, when we finde and feele them best affected towards them; and when wee discern that they are well warmed with the fire of Gods Spirit, we are to stirre it vp, and (as it were) to blow it more and more, giuing vnto it vent in our holy actions, that it may not be choked and smothered. For if we doe not take them at this aduantage, they will slip away, and the heate of our zeale and deuotion growing coole in vs, we shall become vnfit for any religious duties, and as vnable to worke our hearts to any frame of godlinesse, as to fashion the yron to a new figure and forme, when the fire is extinguished, and the heate gone out of it.

The last rule, respecting the circumstances of a godly life, is, (which I haue already in part touched) that for the auoyding of confusion and vnsettlednesse in our course of Christianity, we doe not confound and intermingle duties one with another, but that we, vpon good aduice and mature deliberation, propound vnto our selues some good order in the doing of them, allotting vnto euery houre and part of the day, some speciall duties to be ordinarily performed in them: As such, and so much time for Prayer, Meditation, Reading, and other religious exercises; such, and so much for the duties of our callings, recreations, and ciuill imployments; for sleeping, waking, rising, going to bed, eating and drinking, conferring, and the like. The which, howsoever we may not superstitiously tie our selues vnto for conscience sake, because God hath left the fitting of all times and occasions to our Christian liberty and to spirituall wisdom, as shall be most agreeable and profitable for vs in our seuerall places and callings; yet for order sake, and to auoyd confusion, vnconstancy and vtter neglect of good duties; after that vpon sound aduice wee haue set downe a good order and method for our proceeding in Christian duties, and what time is ordinarily to be spent in them, we are not easily and vpon euery slight cause to alter our course, but to keepe our selues, as neere as we can, vnto it, vnlesse either necessity, charity, or some vlooked for opportunity of better and more profitable employment, offering it selfe vnto vs, doe mooue vs in Christian wisdom and discretion, at some times to varie from our common course of proceeding. And this wee shall finde profitable, not onely to auoyd disorder and confusion, but also to settle our hearts in a constant practice of all good duties, which otherwise naturally affecting variety, nouelties, and often changes in religious exercises, by reason of that faciey and carnall lothing which they bring to our corrupt nature, would euery hand-while bee flitting and starting, sometimes performing them in a confused manner, and sometimes neglecting them altogether.

CAP. III.

Of the rules of a godly life, respecting the matter, forme and substance of it.

§. Sect. I.
That we can no otherwise aspire to perfection in Christian duties, then by proceeding
by degrees.

He rules of a godly life which respect the matter, forme and substance of it, come now to be intreated of. The first whereof is this, that we aspire vnto perfection by degrees, and not dreame or imagine, that we can the first day, and in the beginning of our conuersion attaine vnto it. For howsoever the Lord is not tyed to times and meanes, but can as soone, and as well perfect the worke of our Regeneration, as he did the worke of our Creation, wherein he did but say the word, and it was done; and howsoever sometimes, to shew the absolutenesse and greatnesse of his wisdom, power and goodnesse, he maketh quicke dispatch of his great worke of grace, and causeth some to attaine vnto a great measure of perfection, by the extraordinary assistance of his holy Spirit, especially such as are conuerted in their latter times, and hauing long lolytered, are cast behind hand, and haue much way to trauel, and worke to finish, in the very euen- ing of their liues; and some others also whom hee sanctifieth from their birth and tender youth, to be his greatest lights shining in his Church; yet this is not visuall in Gods ordinary course of proceeding, nor much more to bee expected of vs, then that wee should haue the stature and strength of men as soone as we are borne, vnto which wee ordinarily attaine by degrees, because we were at once made perfect and compleat in the extraordinary worke of our Creation. Besides, we haue all true sauing graces according to the measure and proportion of faith, vnto which we cannot cannot at once ordinarily attaine in any great perfection, both because it selfe also must hold some proportion with our knowledge, which is not suddenly attained, as soone as we are conuerred, vnlesse we had it before; and also because faith (as we haue shewed) increaseth by degrees, and wee cannot attaine vnto any great measure and fulnesse of perswasion, but by much exercise in holy duties, and great experience of Gods loue and goodnesse towards vs. We must not then, in the childhood of our Christianity, thinke that we can attaine vnto the perfection of old men in Christ, and so accordingly in our words and profession, after a glorious manner take vpon vs; but we must be content, with the Apostle, whilest we are children, to doe and speake as children, and when wee become men, to put away childish things. We must not thinke, when wee are first bound to this spirituall trade, that wee can learne and practise it in any perfection the first yeere; when as seuen yeeres are thought little enough for manuell trades, which are not so difficult to flesh and blood. No liberall Art is gotten without much paines and study, and many yeeres are required, before we can bee any great proficient in any of the chiefe professions, Diuinity, Law, or Physick: and shall we thinke that Christianity, which is the highest and hardest of all, can be attained vnto in any perfection, without much study, practice, and experience? It is not possible. Well may we deceiue our selues with shewes and shadowes, and deceiue others with outward flourishes of a glorious profession; but wee cannot otherwise attaine vnto any perfection in substantiall practice, but by degrees; and as possible it is at one leape to mount to the top of an high ladder, which others climbe step by step; as to come to the top and perfection of Christianity, vnlesse we proceed from one degree to another. If we would be wise builders, we must not thinke that we can, in the very beginning set vp the roofoe, and adorne the house within, that it may be fit for habitation; but we must finish our worke by degrees, and after wee haue provided store of materials, holy desires and good resolutions, wee must spend much time and paines in laying a sound and sure foundation, large and deepe, which (being as it were vnder ground) maketh no great shew to our selues or others; euen that foundation of which the Apostle speaketh, repentance from dead workes, faith towards God, and the knowledge of the principles of Christian Religion.

First, we must see and feele our misery, both in respect of sinne and punishment, in the looking glasse of the Law, wherewith being thorowly humbled, and vterly denying our selues in the worke of saluation, wee must flee vnto Christ, hungering and thirsting after him and his righteousnesse, and then apply him vnto our selues by a true faith, the which at the first (like the hand of an Infant) is weake in apprehension, but by degrees commeth to more strength. And if we proceed not by these steps, wee build vpon a false or sandy foundation, and our building in short time, seeme it neuer so stately, will become ruinous; and our faith which at the beginning is in our conceit a full perswasion, will by our fearefull relapse, when we come to be tryed by the winds and fouds of tentation, shew that it was, at the best, but carnall presumption. If wee would approue our selues to be good grounds, after wee haue receiued the seed of the Word into good and honest hearts, we must keepe it, till it haue taken fast rooting in vs, and bring forth fruit with patience; and not like those that are compared to the stony grounds, who incontinently as soone as the seed is sowne, without any pricke of conscience, or sound humiliation for sin going before, doe receiue the Word with ioy, and forthwith bring forth a greene blade of a flourishing profession, which for want of root neuer commeth to bring forth fruit, but withereth as soone as the sunne of persecution ariseth. We must not be like meteors, which soone, after their first beginnings make the greatest shew; nor like a fire of thornes, which as soone as it is kindled, giueth the fairest blaze, and maketh the most noyse and crackling; both which decrease by little and little, till they disappear and be wholly extinguished; but like the morning light, which shineth more and more vnto perfect day. We must not be like mushrooms, which come to their perfection in one nights growth; but trees of righteousness of Gods planting, which are still in growth, and bring forth most fruit in old age. We must not resemble Summer-fruits, which are soone ripe, and soone rotten, and best of taste when they are first gathered; but winter fruits and long lasters, which are a great while in comming to their perfection, and rellish best, and giue wholesomest nourishment in their latter end. We must be like Infants in the wombe, which stay their time and come to their growth by degrees, and not, by making more hast then good speed, proue abortiue births; for as in nature there is a growth by degrees, from the least to the greatest perfection, both in respect of the body and mind, from which common course of nature our Sauour Christ himselfe was not exempted, who is said to haue increased in wisdom and stature, and in fauour with God and man: so in our spirituall growth, we cannot attaine to the pitch of perfection in our first beginnings, but being then little children and weaklings in grace and goodness, we grow from knowledge to knowledge, from faith to faith, and from one degree of grace to another, vnto a perfect man, and vnto the measure of the stature of the fulnesse of Christ. Whereof it is that one of the Ancients saith; I would not vpon the sudden attaine to my highest pitch, but grow towards it by little and little. For looke how much the rash impudency of sinners displeaseth God, and so much he is pleased with the modesty of the penitent. And therefore let vs not nourish in vs this fond conceit, that wee either haue already, or may in our first entrance into the course of Christianity, attaine any great perfection, vnto which others scarcely aspire, after great paines, and long time spent in spirituall exercises; for this will but puffe vs vp with pride, and make vs ready to despise and censure others which were in Christ long before vs, whom we seeme to our selues to haue outrun, whereby wee shall moue the Lord to deny his grace, which being withdrawne, we shall by some fearfull fall discover our weakness. It will make vs rest in that which we haue, as though it were sufficient, and not to labour and strue after more perfection, and so keepe vs from being something, by pleasing our selues in our owne nothing; seeing all the seeming perfection vnto which wee haue attained, is not grounded vpon sauing knowledge, a liuely faith, and a sound iudgement, but a sudden flash of vnconstant passion, and hath in it no substance and solidity, but is like an empty empty bladder, which is suddenly blowne vp with the wind of pride. Or finally, if we be awakened out of our dreame, and vpon serious examination finde how farre short we come of our account, wee are ready to sit downe discouraged, despairing of comming to any perfection, seeing wee haue scarce attained to the first degrees of it.

The second rule is, in the exercise of Christian duties, that wee fit our burthen to our strength, so as we may be able to performe them in sincerity and truth, yea with cheerfulness and delight, and not oppresse our selues with an vnsupportable waight, by taking vpon vs more then we are able to beare. In which respect many offend, especially young professours, who being children in Christ, and indued but with a small measure of the gifts and graces of Gods Spirit, doe seeke to match and exceed those who are come to a ripe age, and to a great measure of perfection, in all outward duties of Religion and a godly life. As for example; because these being indued with a great measure of knowledge and grace, besides excellent gifts of nature, and both much helped and perfected with long practice and experience, are able, according to all occasions, to conceiue prayers, and to continue in them with perseuerance, powring forth their soules with great freedome and liberty of speech and spirit, words comming at will, and not being any stop, in inuenting of them vnto their deuotion and feruency of affection, but like streames from the fountaine, flow freely and kindly from them: therefore they also, wanting knowledge and the spirit of supplication in any good measure, doe notwithstanding tye themselves to the same taske, and not onely contemning all formes, impose a necessity vpon themselves of conceiuing all their prayers vpon the sudden; but also of continuing and holding out as long a time in this exercise, as those that haue been longest practised in it. Vpon which it must necessarily follow, that their deuotion and affection must bee much cooled and distracted, when as the powers of their soule are taken vp wholly with inuention of words and matter; and that through ignorance and want of gifts, many things will be impertinent, the same things often repeated, because new matter commeth not to mind, many imperfect, and scarce sensible speeches, without any order or coherence vttered, to make vp the breach, where knowledge, inuention and memory haue failed them. Others seeing some great proficientes in godlinesse, and long exercised in mortification, strict in their courses, denying the world with all vnlawfull pleasures, subduing their flesh vvith moderate fasting and abstinence, and such like spirituall exercises, they also, though but newly entred into the profession of Religion, will not onely labour to imitate, but exceed and goe beyond them, though not in inward truth and spirituall duty, yet at least in bodily exercise and outward shew. If they abstaine from vnlawfull pleasures, these vvill restraine themselves of those vvich are lawfull. If they be moderate in their honest recreations, these vvill not vse any at all. If they subdue the flesh vvith fasting, that they may be more fit for prayer, and other parts of Gods seruice, these vvill pine their bodies, and so impair their health and strength, that they are made vnfit to performe any Christian duties vvith any cheerfulness. If they auoyd immoderate mirth, carnall ioy, and scurrilous iests, these vvill scarce admit a smile, and place place much of their Religion in continuall mourning, in a sorrowfull and dejected countenance, and in an austere carriage of themselves in all companies, not knowing, that as there is a time for mourning, so also for reioycing; that Christian ioy becometh none but Christians, seeing they onely haue interest and right in the causes of it, and that wee may, yea ought to reioyce in the Lord with a double joy. Finally, they content not themselves to match in these outward shewes and bodily exercises, those who farre excell them in inward graces, nor to ouertake those who haue set out long before them in the race of Christianity, vnlesse they quite outstrip them, and leaue them farre behind. The which must needs proceed either from spirituall pride, which maketh them ouerweene their gifts, and to thinke their strength fit for the hardest taske; or from hypocrite, which maketh them to supply, in outward shewes, what is wanting in inward substance, or at best, from blind zeale, which transporteth them beyond themselves and their abilities in a flash of passion. But if we meane to hold on a constant course in Christianity, we must auoyd this practice, and being truly humbled in the sight and sense of our owne frailty and weaknesse, let vs so begin, as wee may continue, and hold out to the end, with daily increase in all grace and goodnesse. Let vs so bee carefull to tame the flesh with due and seasonable seuerity, as that we do not impair our health, disable our bodies to the seruice of God, nor deprive our soules of all comfort, whereby they are made cheerfull in all Christian duties. Let our zeale carry vs as farre and fast as it wil, but let it not over-carry vs beyond all bounds of spirituall wisdome and discretion. Let vs not rashly vndertake a taske, before we haue examined our strength, whether it bee sufficient for it; and ere we cast the burthen vpon our shoulders, let vs poyze and weigh it, that we may know whether wee shall be able to continue vnder it without fainting, till we come to the end of our iourney. Finally, let vs so labour to bring our outward man to conformity in bodily exercises and externall duties, with those which are greatest proficients in Christianity, as that wee doe not forget to spend our greatest paines and strength in mortifying our sinfull lusts; as pride, couetousnes, rash anger, malice, enuie, vncharitablenesse, and the rest; and not onely to adorne our soules inwardly with all sanctifying graces, loue, humility, patience, zeale, and such like, but also to approue the truth and sincerity of them by our workes of piety, righteousness and mercy towards the afflicted members of Iesus Christ. For to neglect these, and to bee strict in outward shewes and bodily exercises, is (as it were) to bestow much cost vpon the outside of the house, and to let the inside lye full of rubbish; to decke the body, and neglect the soule and life of Religion, which consisteth chiefly in inward graces, and the practice of them in the maine duties of holinesse and righteousness; to esteeme the shell more then the kernell, and to make our selues (as our Sauour compareth such) like vnto painted sepulchers, which are outwardly trimmed, and gorgeously gilded and painted, but within, full of rottennesse and putrifaction. What doth it profit (saith one) that thou afflictst thy body, when as thine hart is neuer the better? To fast, and watch, and not to mend thy manners, is as if a man should bestow great paines without the Vineyard, in weeding and manuring nuring, but leaue the Vineyard it selfe neglected and vnhusbanded, and sit for nothing but to bring forth thornes and thistles.

To which purpose let vs consider, that the Scriptures require, that wee should exercise our selues in the duties of a godly life, according to the measure of grace given vs, and not in such things as are about our reach and strength. They doe not command that we should torture our deuotion, by setting it vpon the racke, and vndertaking things about our ability, but that our seruice of God should be a free-will offering, and performed with cheerfulness & delight: not that Christians should be all of one size and spirituall growth, and performe their duty in equall perfection; but that we performe that which we are able, in sincerity and truth, according to the measure of the gift of grace received, and that wee should grow vp by degrees vnto a perfect age in Christ. So the Wise man willett vs, not to be righteous and wise ouermuch; whereby hee meaneth; not onely a righteousness and wisdom of our owne framing and fancying, which is contrary to the Word of God; for so it is not lawfull, nor onely ouermuch, but not at all to be wise and righteous; but that we doe not take vpon vs more outward shew and semblance of wisdom and righteousness, then our inward substance of grace will beare out in sincerity and truth; or such a degree of it as is quite about our reach and strength. To which purpose the Apostle speaketh and exhorteth, that no man should thinke of himselfe more highly then he ought to thinke; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to euery man the measure of faith. And this is that which our Sauiour meaneth, (when excusing his Disciples for not fasting like the Pharises, he saith, that no man putteth a new piece of cloth into an old garment, nor new wine into old bottles:) namely, that there is no wisdom to impose strict and hard exercises vpon young beginners and tender weaklings in faith, seeing it is the next way to discourage them quite in their good proceedings, and to bring all to nought. For when the duties which they vndertake exceed their strength, and the measure of their faith and inward grace, hauing no internall vertue to support themselves, they grow presently faint and wearie both of their practice and profession. When they haue put themselves into an vnpleasing prison, they are neuer well till they haue broke out, taking their liberty euen vnto licentiousnesse. When in the course of Christianity they haue over-loaded themselves, they are soone tyred, and cast off their burthen in the mid-way. When in running the spirituall race they strue and straine themselves at their first setting out, euen about their strength, they are presently out of breath, and giuing over the race, leaue the goale and garland vnto those who wisely fit their pace to their power and actiuity, so as they may hold out vnto the end. In which regard one of the Ancients (otherwise strict enough) professeth, that immoderate fastings, especially in weaklings, did much displease him, because he had learned by experience, that an Asse wearied in his way, is ready to seeke many turnings. And preferreth sparing and sober diet, and a stomacke alwayes retaining an appetite, before fasts of three dayes continuance.

Againe, for small proficients in Christianity, to tye themselves vnto the same exercises, which are performed by those that haue attained to great test perfection, both in respect of matter and manner, measure and degree, what is it, but as if a child should trauell in a mans shooes? what is it, but to bring the exercises of Religion vnto a fashion, of which, every one must be, who will be in any esteeme? what is it, but to fit all bodies with the same garment, and to make all Christians of one size and stature, leauing no distinction of childhood and riper age? And what doe they who thus doe, but open a gap to grosse hypocrisie, and shut sincerity out of dores? For how can wee be sincere, when wee haue no measure of inward grace in any proportion answerable to the shew of our outward duties? or how can wee performe seruice vnto God in them, heartily and cheerefully as hee requireth, when as wanting a support of inward gifts, we toyle our selues aboute our strength? Finally, how can we thinke that to exercise our selues in things aboute our power and reach, is to take vpon vs Christs yoke and burthen, and not rather such as are of our owne making and imposing, seeing he hath taught vs, that his yoke is easie, and burthen light, bringing quiet rest vnto our soules, and not an intolerable waight, which pressing vs downe and vexing vs, maketh our liues vnpleasant vnto vs, and our hearts neuer at ease vntill wee haue againe cast them off? Rather let vs imitate the example of Dauid, who hauing an humble conceit of himselfe and his owne gifts, euen like a child new weaned, kept himselfe quietly within his compasse, and did not exercise himselfe in great matters, or in things too high for him. To which purpose, let vs obserue these two rules; first, that wee doe not set forth all that wee doe gloriously to the shew, but alwayes so order the matter, that our practice of Christian duties doe not come short, but alwayes exceede our outward profession, and that wee bee more holy and religious in truth, then wee desire to bee in outward appearance. For nothing maketh men so forward to vndertake great matters which are aboute their strength, as a desire to gaine a greater esteeme of their inward gifts and outward duties in the sight of men, then they any wayes deserue in their true worth. Secondly, in the vndertaking of any exercise of godlinesse, let it bee our care, that wee haue a sufficient measure of inward grace and spirituall strength to support vs, that wee may continue constant in it vnto the end. For if the fountaine bee not sufficient to nourish the streames, they will soone grow dry; whereas if it bee full, they will plentifully flow of their owne accord. If wee haue not an inward stocke of grace to maintaine our expenses in outward and bodily exercises, all quickly will bee spent and consumed, and we shall become beggers and bankrupts in all grace and goodnesse. And vnto this our Sauour aduiseeth vs in the parable of the wise builder, who intending to erect a Tower, sate downe first and counted the cost whether hee had sufficient to finish it, lest happily after hee had laid the foundation, and not being able to finish it, all that beheld it, should begin to mocke him, &c.

The third rule is, that we doe not cumber our selues with too many businesses at once, but that wee orderly proceed from one duty to another, not vndertaking a new employment, till we haue brought that which we had first in hand, to some good effect. For as nature intendeth not many things at once, because being of finite vertue and operation, it cannot compasse

compassse and archieue them all together, but vniteth all its forces and vigour, that it may perfect that at which it chiefly aymeth: so vpon the same reason, grace followeth the same course, and because our vnderstanding is but of small capacity and extent, and cannot without confusion comprehend many things at the same time; and our wills weake and vnable to make sound and good choyce, when as they are troubled with confused variety of many obiects, and the zeale and ardency of our affections much weakened and cooled, when as they are distracted and diuided betwene many things desireable; and finally, the wit dulled, the spirits spent, and the body tyred, when as they are exercised about more employments, then by their vertue and vigour they can archieue; therefore it chuseth this as the best course, to doe one thing after another, and vndertaking the best and most necessary duties in the first place, not to thinke of or affect another, vntill that bee brought vnto some perfection. For as the fire lying together giueth great heate, but being scattered abroad, soone goeth out; and the Riuer running in the same current, is of such force that nothing can stop it, but being diuided into many little streames and riuulets, becommeth weake, and of little strength: so, if the fire of our zeale bee vnited about one obiect or Christian duty, it vwill bee able to archieue it with great seruencie; and the streame of our deuotion, running wholly in one course and current, will bee of such force, that nothing shall bee able to diuert or hinder it; but let them bee scattered and diuided about multitudes of employments at the same time, and their heate will be abated, and their strength so weakened, that they will not be able to bring any one good duty to any reasonable perfection.

The fourth rule is, that wee bee not busie and curious in prying into the liues of other men, and spying out their infirmities; nor strict and seuer in censuring and condemning their faults and imperfections, when wee haue taken notice of them. For hee that vndertaketh much businesse abroad, must of necessity neglect his owne at home; hee that is curious in searching and examining other mens manners, will finde no time to looke into his owne. The which wee see daily verified by wofull and lamentable experience in many Professours of these times, who spend all their zeale in censuring of others, and in exclaiming against the corruptions of the times, the disorders in the Common-wealth, the faults of Gouvernours Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall, the defects and blemishes of the Church, and in the meane time are cold and negligent in searching out their owne sinnes, in reforming their owne manners, and in the duties of sanctification, and of a godly life. The vvhich, is oftentimes done, not so much out of a true mislike and hatred of others vices and corruptions (for then they would make speed to pursue and subdue them with greater detestation in themselves, out of a feeling experience of the manifold euils which they bring vpon them) but to magnifie their owne zeale, vvhich will not suffer them with any patience to tolerate such faults and corruptions, to disguise and hide their owne vices, vnder this shew of misliking others sinnes, and to commend themselves, and get the name of forward Christians, by dispraising those who come farre behind them in outward shew. But if wee would make any good progresse in the wayes of godlinesse, wee must bee more diligent in reforming our owne liues, then in censuring other mens; and in vsing all good meanes, which may furnish vs with sauing graces, and further vs. in all good duties, then in spying out how farre others come short in them, and in censuring them for these defects. For as it is not the way of thriving in our worldly estate, to sit still and exclaime against others ill husbandry, but diligently to follow our owne businesse; so it is no course to grow richer in grace, and in the fruits of godlinesse, to censure and inueigh against others, as vnthriving Christians; but carefully to looke vnto our owne estate, and to vse all good meanes whereby wee may better it. Yea in trueth, this supercilious pride, in ouer-weaning our owne gifts, and censuring and condemning other mens defects, moueth the Lord oftentimes, to withdraw from vs those graces and good parts which wee seeme to haue, whereby wee are disabled, either in substance or shew to proceed in any Christian course, and oftentimes ouertaken with some foule sinnes, to the end, that being humbled in the sight of our owne frailty, wee may become the more charitable towards others, and ceasing to pry into their infirmities, wee may vvith all our indeuour, seeke to amend our owne liues.

That we must take heed, lest daily vse of Christian duties make vs cold and formall in them;

The fifth rule is, that wee carefully take heed, that through the daily vse of Christian and religious duties, they doe not become cold and formall, and performed, rather for custome then conscience sake, doing them still, because wee haue long done them, rather then out of a lively sense of their profit and necessity; like those who goe to feed, not because they haue any appetite to their meate, but because it is dinner time, and betake themselves to rest, not in regard that they finde themselves sleepey, but because their ordinary time is come of going to bed. But let the same causes which moued vs first to vndertake them, moue vs still to continue in them, namely, the loue of God, and obedience to his Commandements; an earnest desire to glorifie him, by doing the duties of his seruice, and so to carry our selues, as that wee may please him in all things, and haue both our persons and actions accepted of him; that wee may heereby adorne our profession, edifie our brethren by our good example, bee more and more enriched with all sanctifying and sauing graces, strengthened to all good duties, and so more and more assured of our owne saluation. For if wee bee not still moued by these causes and considerations, to performe the duties of Gods seruice, but doe them in an ordinary course, and neuer thinke why, nor to what end, we shall soone grow cold and formall, seruing God after such careless and negligent manner, as that neither wee nor our seruice shall bee accepted of him.

The sixth rule is, that with all care and watchfulnesse, wee preserve our zeale and deuotion in holy duties in their full strength, and not suffer them to decline in any part of their heate and seruency, seeing as in all things that are good, declinations are dangerous, so most of all in spirituall graces and holy duties, which being no naturall habits, but continually tinually opposed by our inbred corruption, and the malicious fury of all our spirituall enemies, declinations in them doe speedily bring vs to headlong ruine, the least remissions causing intermissions, and these totall neglect and vtter defection. An example whereof wee haue in the Church of Ephesus, who falling from her first loue, that is, remitting some degrees of the seruour and zeale of her affection, and not repenting of it, when by Christ shee was admonished, stayed not in this first degree of declination (for who can stay himselfe that is going downe the hill, who besides his owne naturall pronenesse to goe on, hath so many malicious enemies at his backe to thrust him forward?) but from one degree to another, fell within a while to vtter Apostacie. Neither must it in our declinations giue vs any comfort, that we still retaine some parts and remainders of our former goodnesse; for as no man can rise to any height of perfection, but by degrees; so neither any that hath had any shewes of goodnesse, though meere civill, can at the very first become extremely euill, but by degrees declineth, till at last hee cometh to the height of wickednesse. And as a small chinke in a ship doth not at first let in water enough to sinke it, if it bee carefully looked to, and the water pumped out as fast as it commeth in; but if it bee neglected, from a little rift, groweth at last to a desperate leake: so our small slips will not sinke our soules into the gulph of perdition, if they bee quickly espied, and carefully repented of and amended; but if wee continue in them with carelesse neglect, they will enlarge themselves, and increase from one degree to another, till they come to a full height of desperate wickednesse. The same care and providence therefore which wee take for our bodies, let vs also take for our soules, vsing wholesome spirituall food and diet, to preserve them in their perfect health and strength; or if wee so much as feare any declinations, let vs withstand the first beginnings with timely Physicke, seeing small and scarce sensible remissions, will by degrees bring vs into deepe consumptions of all grace and goodnesse. And as wee finde it necessary for the preserving of water in its full heate, to keepe a good fire still vnder it, because it is not a naturall property of it, and therefore if it bee not preserved by the same meanes by which it was first caused, it will within a while grow lukewarme, and soone after stone-cold; and as the fire it selfe will continue no longer burning then wee put fuell vnto it, because it is not in its proper element, but will flake and abate by degrees, vntill at last it vanish into ayre, and leaue nothing behind it but cold ashes: so our zeale and deuotion in holy duties, being supernaturall gifts and qualities, contrary to corrupted nature, and being spirituall, and of an heavenly nature, when they bee in vs, who are earthly and sensuall (as it were) out of their owne proper place and element, they will not continue, if wee nourish them not by the same meanes by which they were bred, adding daily vnto them new fuell to preserve their heate, but will soone grow remisse, and quickly after soone cold. And as they, so also their motions in the duties of godlinesse, not being naturall, if they bee not followed with a continued strength, by which at first they were made to mooue, they will, like the vnnaturall motion, bee violent in the beginning, slacke

and slow in the middle, and in the latter end faint, and vtterly desist. The which wee haue seene often verified, by the too lamentable experience of many professours in our dayes, who hauing beene forward and feruent in their youth, by remitting some degrees of their zeale, and through the tentations of the world fawning or frowning vpon them, become more slacke and slothfull in religious duties (resting in a formall fashion, and in the outward act; without any quickning power, or internall life of zeale and deuotion) haue declined in their riper yeeres to a lothsome lukewarmnesse, and to dead and desperate coldnesse, worldlinesse, and prophanenesse in their old age.

CAP. IIII.

That wee must not content our selues with a small measure of grace, but labour to grow vnto perfection.

6. Sect. I.
That the Scriptures require this growth in grace, from the least degrees to the greatest.

He last rule of direction for the leading of a godly life is, that wee content not our selues with that small measure of grace which wee haue receiued, nor rest in those duties which wee haue already performed, but that wee labour to grow daily, and increase in grace, and in the Christian practice of a godly life. For as in nature, things stand not at a stay, but as weary of the state of imperfection, tend to perfection, growing vpon therein from one degree to another, till they come to the highest (as the graine of corne taking roote in the earth, shooteth vp into a blade, and then groweth to haue an eare, and so ripening, multiplyeth it selfe in its kinde; and the little kernell springeth first into a small shure, and then groweth by degrees to a flourishing and fruitfull tree; and man himselfe conceiued of a little excrementall matter, groweth first in the wombe, by degrees to a perfect shape in all the parts and lineaments of a true humane body; and then after the birth, from childhood to youth, and from thence to ripe age and full stature) so the growth of grace proceedeth from imperfection, to one degree of perfection after another, vntill wee come vnto a perfect age in Christ. And as sicke men newly recouered, cannot rest contented that they liue, but long after their wonted strength, desiring first to sit vp, and when they can doe this, are not satisfied, but desire ability to walke, and to recouer their stomacke and appetite, and then to goe abroad, and not so content, wish to bee freed from faintnesse, to bee restored to their former good habitude, plight, and liking, and in a word, are neuer quiet in their desires, till they haue recouered their perfect health: so wee, hauing beene sicke in sinne vnto the death, after wee are reuiued and quickened by Gods Spirit, doe not content our selues with some first degrees of spirituall life, and beginnings of health and strength, but long and labour by all good meanes, that wee may daily increase in them, vntill wee attaine vnto them in full perfection. And this growth in grace, and in the practice of all holy duties is commended vnto vs, both by testimonies and examples. The Apostle would haue vs to bee no more children, children, but to grow up vnto him which is the Head, euen Christ. And beseecheth and exhorteth the Thessalonians, not onely to continue constant in the wayes of holinesse, and to please God, but that they would abound more and more. And the Apostle Peter requireth, not onely that wee should continue steadfast, but that wee should grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord Iesus Christ. To which purpose, Austine thus aduiseleth; Let that which thou art, alwayes displease thee, that so thou mayest come to that which thou art not. For where thou hast pleased thy selfe, there thou stayest. And if thou once comest to say, I haue enough, thou art vndone. And another perswadeth vs so to liue, that alwayes the present dayes may be better then those which are past, lest beginning to decline by little and little, it bee at length sayd vnto vs, Yee did runne well, who hindered you, that you should not obey the truth? A notable example heere-

 of wee haue in the Apostle, who when he had long runne in the Christian Race, and outrunne all others that set out long before him, yet forgot those things which were behind, and reached forth to those things which were before, and still pressed towards the marke, for the price of the high calling of God in Iesus Christ. And in the Church of Thyatira, who hath this commendation, not onely that they excelled in good works, charity, seruice, faith, patience, but also that their last workes were more then their first. The contrary whereof, the Apostle reprobeth in the Hebrewes, namely, that when for the time, they ought to haue bene teachers, they had need to be taught themselves the first principles of the Oracles of God, and were become such, as had need of milke, and not of strong meate. And our Sauour condemneth it in the Church of Ephesus, that she had falne from her first loue. And in the Church of Sardis, of whom he saith, that he had not found her workes perfect before God, that is, tending and growing towards perfection. Neither must we be content with some degrees of spirituall growth, but we must propound vnto our selues the marke of perfection, vnto which, because we cannot attaine in this life, therefore we must put no end here to our labour and indeuour, but striue daily to come neerer and neerer vnto it. So the Apostle exhorteth vs neuer to leaue, till wee haue cleansed our selues from all filthinesse of the flesh and spirit, and till we haue perfected our holinesse in the feare of God; propounding vnto vs no other marke to ayme at, but the marke of perfection. And telleth vs that God hath therefore instituted the Ministry of the Word, that he might thereby bring vs vnto a perfect man, and vnto the measure of the stature of the fulnesse of Christ. Thus he exhorteth the Hebrewes, that leauing the principles of the doctrine of Christ, they should goe on vnto perfection. And the Apostle James exhorteth vs to ayme at such a perfection, as wherein there is no want: Let patience haue her perfect worke, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing. And lest we should grow sluggish, because we suppose that we haue already matched our patternes in perfection, we haue not onely examples of Gods Saints set before vs for our imitation, as Noah, Abraham, Iob, David and the rest, but euen of God himselfe, who is infinite in all perfection. Be perfect (saith our Sauour) as your heavenly Father is perfect; not in degree, seeing his perfection is aboue all degrees; but that we should striue to be heerein like vnto him, seeing wee professe that he is our Father, and we his children.

Besides which testimonies and examples of holy Scriptures, tending to perswade vs vnto this continuall growth, till we attaine vnto full perfection, there are also many reasons grounded vpon them, which may quicken our indeuour in this kind. As first, because though we haue made good beginnings and proceedings, yet if we be not still growing and going forward towards perfection, all wee haue done already, is not praiseworthy in the sight of God, who being in his owne nature most perfect, liketh of nothing which is not like himselfe, and tendeth not vnto perfection. Secondly, because we cannot stand at a stay in the course of Christianity, but are still proceeding, or else declining and going backe; either we are rowing against the streame, or else are carryed downward, though we perceiue it not. To which purpose one obserueth, that Iacob in his vision saw Angels vpon the Ladder, ascending and descending, but none sitting or standing still: because we haue not here an abiding City, but wee seeke for one to come. Either wee must be still ascending, or wee shall descend: if we will stand still, we shall surely fall; like those who are vpon an high & narrow bridge, whose greatest safety in passing ouer is in their best speed. For howsoeuer Christians, which haue attained vnto some good degree of perfection, and to a settled course in godlinesse, may carry themselves with such vniforme constancy in all outward duties, that themselves cannot discern any remarkable difference, yet euen in them there is daily some proceeding in respect of their inward graces, hearts and affections, and although their actions and operations may, by reason of tentations and spirituall dissensions, decay in their sense and feeling; yet in respect of their habits and disposition, they are still proceeding to more perfection. Thirdly, because we can no otherwise be assured of our spirituall life in grace, of which, motion and proceeding is an inseparable consequence. For it is not with our soules as it is with our bodies, which are of short life, and shorter growth, hauing their increase, full stature and declination, seeing they, as long as wee liue, doe proceed from one degree of perfection vnto another, till after this life they come to a perfect age in Christ. They are heerein like vnto the morning light, which still increaseth, and shineth more and more vnto the perfect day; but heerein vnlike the Sunne, in that there is in this life and light of grace, no time of setting or declination; and therefore the beauty of Christs Spouse, is compared to the brightnesse of the morning, which still increaseth, and not to the afternoones light, which abateth more and more. They are trees of righteousness of Gods planting, which alwayes flourish; and when they come once to bring forth their fruits, they neuer grow dry and barren, but are still purged and pruned by him that set them, that they still bring forth fruit in more abundance; heerein vnlike other trees, and resembling onely the Palme and Cedar, in that they continually flourish, and most exceed in fruitfulness in their old age, as the Psalmist noteth. Gods children are not like false conceptions and dead moles, in the wombe, which quickly come to full growth, and then standing at a stay, proue abortiue births; but staying their appointed time, are perfected by degrees in their shape, parts, and all their lineaments, and after their birth stand not at a stay, (for there are no dwarfs dwarfs in Gods family) but grow from strength to strength, and from stature to stature, till they come to a perfect age in Iesus Christ.

And therefore when there is no growth in grace, nor in the practice of holy duties, we can take little comfort in such a state: but as it is a griefe to parents, when as their children grow in age, and not in wisdom; and an ill signe that nature is out of frame, and hindered in her course, when as in their bodies they stand at a stay, and though they eate, and drinke, and sleepe, yet doe not grow at all in their stature: so haue we more iust cause to grieue, when after many yeeres we remaine children in knowledge, and weaklings in all sauings grace; and may take it as an ill signe, that there is little grace in vs, or some notable impediment which doth stop and hinder it in its operations, when as hauing inioyed for a long time, the spirituall food of the Word and Sacraments, we grow not vp thereby, nor any whit increase in our strength and stature. Wee are pilgrims and travellers (as we professe) towards our heavenly home, who are still going on, and every day dispatch some part of the way; but if we stand at a stay, and after many yeeres spent, are no more forward in our journey, then we were at our first setting forth, it sheweth plainly that we are no true travellers, but loyterers, that lazily lye lusing in our Inne, or that we haue not gone in the right way that leadeth to our Countrey. Wee would bee counted souldiers in the Christian warfare, and professe that wee fight against the spirituall enemies of our saluation: but if Satan in euery temptation preuaileth with vs; if the world hath so allured vs by her bewitching baits, that we are in league and loue with it, if after many yeeres wee haue got no conquest ouer our corruptions, pride, couetousnesse, voluptuousnes, malice, enuie, and such like; but that they still raigne and rule in vs as in former times, it is a signe that we either are none of Gods Souldiers, seeing we haue made a peace with his enemies, or that wee are notable cowards, who iustly deserue to be casheered, and that there is little grace or goodnesse in vs, seeing so long time, and large meanes haue so little improoued and increased it. Doubtlesse (saith one) he is not good, who will not be better; and when thou ceasest in thy desires to become better, thou ceasest also to be good. And againe, no man hath attained to any perfection, who doth not desire, and labour to be more perfect: and so much the perfecter doth every man approue himselfe, by how much the more earnestly he strueth after perfection. Moreover, true vertue knoweth no end, nor is circumscribed with time; and the feare of the Lord indureth for euer. The iust man thinketh with Paul, that hee hath neuer apprehended that which hee pursueth; nor euer saith, I haue enough, but alwayes hungreth and thirsteth after righteousness; so that if he should liue for euer, he would also for euer desire still to be more iust, and would strue with all his strength to proceed from good to better. For he is not a mercenary that hath hired himselfe to doe God seruice for a yeere, but a sonne of the family which continueth for euer. Finally, let vs labour daily to grow in grace, by exercising it continually in the duties of godlinesse, both because otherwise we can haue no assurance that it is true and substantiall, but hypocriticall, and a bare shadow, seeing all true grace is growing grace, like the graine of mustard seed, small at the first, and great afterwards;

afterwards; and also because if we doe not increase our Lords Talents, he will take them from vs, and giue them to faithfuller seruants; and seeing through our negligence we haue deprived our selues of the substance, he will also take away from vs the shew and shadow; according to that of our Sauour; Vnto him that hath, shall be giuen, and he shall haue abundance; but from him that hath not, shall be taken away, even that which hee seemeth to haue.

Now if we would attaine to this Christian growth, wee must vse all good meanes which may further vs in it: for in vaine hee professeth his great desire to be rich, who neglecteth all good husbandry and meanes of thriving; or to grow in strength and stature, who will not vse food and clothing, which are the ordinary meanes to attaine vnto them. Yea, if wee desire spirituall growth in grace and goodnesse, we must take more then usuall paines, seeing as to the augmenting of the body, there is required more meat, and better concoction, then for the preserving of it in that stature and strength vnto which it hath already attained; so vnto our growth in grace, and increasing of our spirituall stature, it is necessary that we more diligently vse the meanes, and receiue the food of our soules in greater quantity, and with better stomackes, then onely to hold (as wee say) life and soule together, and to preserve our graces in their bare being and present plight. Now the meanes of increasing in grace, and proceeding in the practice of all Christian duties, are the same by which they had their first beginnings; as the carefull and conscionable hearing of the Word preached; for we must, like new-borne babes, desire the sincere milke of the Word; (which is also the seed of our Regeneration and new-birth) if euer wee meane to grow up thereby. So also the reading of the Word, and vse of the Sacraments, meditation, holy conferences, of which wee haue spoken in part, and shall say more in the following discourse. But aboue all, inuocation and prayer, desiring God, who is the Author of our spirituall birth and being; and also of our preservation and growth in godlinesse, that hee will perfect his good worke which he hath begun in vs, sanctifie vs throughout in our soules and bodies, and bring vs from one degree to another, till at last wee come to a perfect man in Christ; whereof we haue the holy Apostles in many places as fit precedents and examples, who by their seruent prayers craue at Gods hands this growth in grace for themselves and others. Finally, if we would be good proficient in Gods seruice, wee must often thinke of the worthinesse and excellency of our heavenly Master, who is the chiefe Goodnesse, and infinite in all perfection, and therefore, aboue all, deserueth our best paines and diligence; of his inestimable loue towards vs shining in our Creation, Preservation, and that great worke of our Redemption, by the death of his deare and onely Sonne; for who would not loue him, that hath so loued vs; and labour to approoue it by struing to serue him daily in more perfection? Of the Passion and sufferings of Christ, which will make vs thinke that we can neuer doe too much for him, who hath done and suffered so much for vs. Of the perfection which the Law requireth, vnder the penalty of a fearefull curse; and of the gracious promises, and sweet encouragements of the Gospell, belonging to all those who strue and labour daily to attaine vnto this perfection. Of the manifold and inestimable blessings, both temporall, spirituall and eternall, which God hath partly put presently into our hands, and partly confirmed vnto vs by infallible assurances: all which libetall and bountifull wages, if we be not too too ingratefull, will make vs daily to double our diligence in doing him seruice. Finally, we must oftentimes meditate of the breuity of our liues, and vncertainty of this short time, compared with the excellency and eternity of our heavenly happinesse, promised to all them who spend this momentary and vncertaine time in the duties of Gods seruice; the which, if any thing will moue vs to improoue the time present to the best aduantage, seeing we are not sure of another day; like wise Merchants who lay hold of a good penny-worth when it is offered; and the prudent Pilot, who setteth vp all his sailes whilest the wind and tide fauour him, because he is vncertaine how long it will last, and his opportunity being once past, cannot be recouered at his owne pleasure.

CAP. V.

Of the meanes whereby we may be inabled to leade a godly life: and first, of the ministry of the Word.

Vnto the rules of direction, which helpe and further vs in the duties of a godly life, wee are to adde the consideration of certaine speciall meanes respecting practice, whereby wee may be the better inabled to performe them. For as God in his Decree hath ordained the ends at which we must chiefly aime, that we may attaine vnto them; so also the meanes which conduce vnto these ends. As for example; hee hath propounded his glory as the supreme end of all things; and withall, diuers meanes whereby it is aduanced and magnified, as our faithfull seruice and obedience to his Commandements, faith in Christ, and such like. He hath ordained vs to saluation, and that we may attaine vnto it, hee hath linked his Decree to this end by certaine subordinate causes and meanes, as Creation, Redemption, Effectuall calling, Iustification, Sanctification, and Preservation. Hee hath decreed that we should liue our naturall life vnto our appoynted time, but withall, that we should vse the meanes of food, clothing, sleepe, physick, by which it is preserued and maintained. And thus also as hee hath ordained that we should liue the life of grace, so likewise that wee should vse the helpes and meanes which hee hath appoynted for the beginning, continuing, and finishing of it: which if wee neglect, wee can haue no more hope of attaining vnto it, whatsoeuer faire pretences wee make of our seruent desires to atchieue this end, then of comming to happinesse, being destitute of holinesse, without which, the Apostle telleth vs, we shall neuer see God; or of liuing to old age, without the vse of the meanes, meate, drinke, and apparell; or of liuing to Gods glory, when as we delight in the workes of darknesse, and shine not in the light of an holy life. The which as it must make vs carefull to vse all good helpes appoynted by God for the inabling vs vnto the duties of a godly life; so our second

§. Sect. I.

That if we will leade a godly life, we must vse the meanes inabling vs vnto it.

Heb. 12. 14.

second care must be, that wee vse them as meanes, and not supreme and principall causes, but relying our selues chiefly vpon God, his wisdom, and goodnesse, power, and promises, the death and Resurrection of Christ effectually applied vnto vs by the holy Spirit, let vs vse these meanes, as being his ordinances which hee hath appoynted to serue his prouidence, yet without putting our trust and confidence in them, as sufficient in themselues to conferre grace, or to inable vs vnto the duties of a godly life; seeing without the chiefe Worker assisting vs in the vse of them by his holy Spirit, they are able to doe nothing; and contrariwise, if they be wanting, he is all-sufficient without them, to make vs liue holily in this world, and happily in the life to come. Now these meanes are either ordinary, and in continuall vse vpon all occasions; or extraordinary, and to be vsed but at some times, when some speciall causes moue vs vnto them; and both of them either publike or priuate, or else mixt, and to be performed sometimes publicly in the Congregation, and sometimes priuately by our selues, or with others. The publike meanes are the ministry of the Word, the Sacraments and prayer. The which admit of a double consideration in respect of their diuers relations to seuerall ends. For as they are duties performed vnto God, that wee may glorifie him by doing vnto him seruice in them, they are parts and branches of piety and a godly life, in which sense we haue already intreated of them; but as they helpe and further vs for the begetting and increasing in vs of all spirituall graces, and the inabling of vs vnto all other Christian duties, they are the meanes of a godly life, in which sense we are now to speake of them. Wherein they may be resembled vnto coyne and treasure, the which is not onely a part of our wealth, but also the meanes of purchasing and procuring house, lands, goods, and all other riches: or vnto the hand, which in one relation is a part or member of the body, but in another respect, an instrument and speciall meanes for the preserving and nourishing of all our other parts.

§. Sect. 2.
That the ministry of the Word is a chiefe meanes of our spirituall life.

Rom. 1. 16.

1. Pet. 1. 23.

1. Cor. 4. 15.

Job. 5. 25.

The first meanes of a godly life, is the ministry of the Word; the which is the ordinary meanes of begetting vs to the life of godlinesse, and of beginning in vs all spirituall and sauing graces, by which, as inward causes, we outwardly moue in all Christian and holy duties. Of raising vs from the death of sinne, and cleansing and purging vs from the guilt and corruption of it; and also of so quickening and reuiuing vs, that we are inabled to performe the actions of holinesse, and to bring forth the fruits of a godly conuersation. Thus the Apostle calleth it, Gods strong power, whereby hee pulleth vs out of the state of death, into the state of life and saluation; and the Apostle Peter, The immortall and incorruptible seed, which begetteth vs vnto God, lining and abiding in vs for euer. And hence it is that the Ministers of the Word are called our spirituall fathers, who beget vs vnto God, because being dispensers of the Word of grace, they are instruments and meanes of our Regeneration. Thus our Sauior saith, that the houre was comming, yea euen then was, that the dead should heare his voyce, and line; that is, those which were dead in trespasses and sinnes, should be quickened, and haue their part in the first Resurrection, by vertue of his Word preached; for at this death and Re-

urrection that whole discourse aimeth. And as we haue first our spirituall life from the ministry of the Word, so also our cleansing and sanctification from the corruption and filth of sinne, whereby we are wholly disabled vnto all holy duties of a godly life. For so our Sauour telleth his Disciples, that they were cleane, through his Word which hee had spoken vnto them. By which meanes he desireth his Father, in his holy Prayer, to sanctifie them more and more. Sanctifie them with thy truth; thy Word is truth. So the Apostle saith, that our Sauour gane himselfe for his Church, that hee might sanctifie and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word; and implyeth elsewhere, that we cannot ordinarily haue faith, by which the iust man liueth, but by the preaching and hearing of the Word. How can they beleue in him of whom they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a Preacher? And after expressely affirmeth; That faith commeth by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God. And in another place he intimateth, that we cannot put off the old man, and being renewed in the spirit of our minds, put on the new, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness, vnlesse we haue first heard Christ, and been taught by him, in the ministry of his Word. But here we must take heed, that we doe not attribute our new birth and spirituall cleansing vnto the Word preached, as hauing in it any inherent power to giue life and grace in it owne nature, or as it is by man preached vnto vs, (for then all that heare it, would be quickened vnto holiness and new obedience, whereas common and wofull experience teacheth vs, that after the Gospell hath been long preached in diuers places, the greatest number remaine vnregenerate and dead in their sinnes,) nor yet as vnto a principall and chiefe cause of reuiuing vs; for this were to make an Idol of it, by attributing vnto it Gods prerogatiues and peculiar actions; who alone is able to regenerate vs, as hee onely could first create vs. But we are to attribute this vertue of giuing spirituall life to the Word preached, not as comming from man, but as it is the Word of God, and his holy ordinance which hee hath instituted and sanctified to this vse of giuing spirituall life, and the begetting and increasing of his graces in vs. By vertue of which ordination, and the blessing of God vpon it, the Word receiueh all its power and vigour to quicken and preserue our spirituall life; euen as by the ordinance of God, and his blessing, wee receiue our naturall life by generation, and the preseruatiue of it by food and clothing, which in themselues exceed not other creatures in their vertue for these vses, but onely so far forth as God by his blessing inableth them vnto them. The which if he withdraw, our meate will not nourish vs, but rather become our bane and poyson; and the Word preached will be so farre from being a Word of life and saluation, that it will become the saour of death vnto death, to our deepe condemnation. In which regard wee must not rest in the preaching and hearing of the Word, as in the deed done, for the begetting of Gods graces, and beginning in vs the life of godlinesse: (for thus it is onely the Spirit that quickeneth, making the same Word, and at the same time, effectually vnto some for these ends, by an inward, secrete and powerfull operation, which for want hereof is heard of others without any profit) but vse it as Gods ordinance, vnto which his blessing is promised, and doth so ordinarily accompany it, in the hearts of all those that vse it in obedience to God, and desire to profit by it for the former ends, that we may as well hope for spirituall life by seeding on this food, as for the preserving of naturall life by meate and drinke, seeing both alike are Gods ordinance, and by his power he is effectuell in the one as well as the other. And so contrariwise the neglect of this meanes, when God giueth it, doth take away all hope of the spirituall life of grace, seeing we tempt the Lord in refusing the meanes, and despising his ordinance; like those, who pretending that they rest vpon Gods sole power and promise for the preserving of their liues, should vtterly refuse to eate or drinke. Againe, whereas I say, that the preaching of the Word is the ordinary meanes of life and grace, when the Lord granteth it vnto vs, we are to beware that we doe not limit Gods power vnto it, as though hee could not any other way quicken, sanctifie and saue vs. For he is able, without all meanes, to doe all these by the sole and secret worke of his holy Spirit, being such an All-sufficient workman in himselfe, that he needeth not the helpe of any instruments; as we see in his sanctifying and sauing of elect Infants, dying whilest they are vncapable of outward meanes; for euen in them these two goe together, seeing the rule is generall, that without holinesse no man shall see the Lord. And hee is able to sanctifie other meanes for these vses, (as he ordinarily doth where the publike ministry and preaching of the Word is wanting) as the reading of the Word, priuate catechizing, holy conferences, instruction, exhortation, admonition, good examples, extraordinary blessings strangely conferred, sharpe afflictions, and by them great and vnusuall humiliations, the Lord vsing his corrections as an hand to lead vs to our sinnes, which haue brought them vpon vs. And therefore as when we haue the Word, wee may heare diligently, in hope of Gods blessing vpon his owne ordinance; so when we are deprived of this ordinary meanes of life and saluation, we are not to despaire and cast away all our confidence, seeing the Lord is able, either without meanes, by the sole operation of his holy Spirit, to worke his owne worke of grace and sanctification in vs, or to make other meanes, more weake in themselues, as powerfull and effectuell vnto vs as the other, yea will assuredly doe it, rather then hee will faile of any part of his promise, which he hath made vnto all those who trust and depend vpon him for life and saluation.

6. Sect. 3.

That it is the ordinary meanes of our new birth, and of working Gods graces
in vs.
1. Pet. 2. 2.

Secondly, as the ministry of the Word is the ordinary meanes of our new birth, and of beginning in vs Gods spirituall graces, whereby we are inabled to moue in the duties of a godly life; so also of our spirituall growth from strength to strength, and of increasing Gods graces where they are begun; according to that of the Apostle Peter; As new borne babes desire the sincere milke of the Word, that ye may grow thereby. Neither are we to thinke that the Word read, either by our selues or others, is ordinarily sufficient to worke in vs grace and godlinesse; for if faith (as I haue shewed) commeth by hearing the Word preached, then also the life of faith, and fruits of sanctification which spring from it, all which are nourished and increased by the same meanes whereby they were first begun in vs. Neither are we to dispute of the excellency and power of other means in themselues, or compared with this, seeing neither this, nor any other worke worke by any inherent vertue in themselves, but as they are Gods ordinances, which by his blessing attaine to their ends, and are made powerfull and effectually by the inward operation of his holy Spirit, to worke and increase grace and sanctification in vs. And therefore seeing the Lord hath ordained in all ages, not onely that his Word should be read for the edification of his people, but also that it should bee expounded to their vnderstanding, and applyed to their particular vse, (as we see in the example of the Priests in the dayes of Nehemiah, who caused the people to vnderstand the Law, and not onely read the Booke of Gods Law distinctly, but also gaue the sense, and caused them to vnderstand the reading: And in the practice of our Sauour Christ and his Apostles, who when the Law and Prophets were read to the people, contented not themselves therewith, but expounded and applyed them to their vse, according to the custome of those times) let not vs therefore take vpon vs to bee wiser then God, supposing that we can doe his worke better by tooles of our owne chusing, then by the meanes and instruments which hee hath ordained and sanctified, seeing nothing can bee done in this supernaturall worke of grace, without Gods blessing, which we may expect with most assurance in the vse of his owne ordinances. So that if either wee desire the new birth of grace, or being borne, to grow therein from one degree to another, let vs conscionably vse the ministry of the Word to both these ends. Neither let vs thinke that being once regenerate, we may grow vp of ourselves by sole vertue of those principles then infused vnto vs, and need no further the ministry of the Word to preserve vs in that state and being. For as the child new borne, cannot long continue in life by vertue of his naturall heate and moystrute, and much lesse can grow in strength and stature to a perfect man, vnlesse hee receiue daily nourishment; so neither can we subsist in our spirituall state and being, and much lesse grow in grace vnto a perfect age in Christ, vnlesse our soules be duly nourished with spirituall food, the Word of God, which is not onely the immortall seed of which we are begotten, but our Manna and meate; milke for babes, and strong meate for men growne to riper age. Especially seeing to our naturall defects and sinfull corruptions, which as inward impediments hinder the growth of grace in vs, there are added the outward assaults of our malicious enemies, the world and the diuell, who by their tentations will keepe vs from thriving and increasing, vnlesse what is diminished by their malice, bee supplied plentifully by our spirituall nourishment. Neither doe I thus magnifie the ministry of the Word, to derogate any thing from other excellent means, as prayer, Sacraments, the reading of the Scriptures, and the rest, but am ready to giue vnto them their deserued praise in their owne place. For howsoeuer, in the first acts of Regeneration, the preaching of the Word is the chiefe, if not sole meanes of our new birth; For how shall they call vpon him in whom they haue not beleueed? and how shall they beleue in him of whom they haue not heard? and how shall they heare without a Preacher? yet in our spirituall growth, the other are no lesse necessary for the increasing of Gods graces in vs, especially prayer, which is an ordinary and most powerfull meanes to preuaile with God, for the obtaining of whatsoever is wanting vnto vs, although we cannot pray with hope to be heard, vnlesse we pray in faith, as the Apostle James teacheth vs, and we cannot ordinarily haue faith, till first it be wrought in vs by the preaching of the Word. And therefore let vs not set these meanes of grace, to contend together for eminence and excellency, and much lesse magnifie one of them to exclude another, but acknowledging all to bee excellent and necessary in their place and time, let vs carefully ioyne them all together, that being nourished in our soules with this plenty and variety of food, we may grow vp the faster in all grace and godlinesse.

§. Sect. 4.
What is required in the Minister, that by his preaching he may further the people in the duties of godlinesse.

Mal. 2.7.

2.Tim. 4.1,2.

Ezek. 33.8.

1.Pet. 5.1,2.

Now that the Ministry of the Word may be an effectuall meanes of grace, and of strengthening vs vnto all holy duties of a Christian life, there are some things required, both to the right preaching and hearing of it. Vnto the former, there are some things necessary in the person of the Preacher, and some things in the act and execution of his Ministry. In the person, there must be skill to diuide the Word aright, not onely giuing a true sense of it to all, but to apply a fit portion vnto all sorts of hearers; and a great measure of wisdom and vnderstanding, through the outward helpes of study and learning, and the inward illumination of Gods Spirit, that he may bee able to instruct those which are ignorant; according to that in the Prophet Malachy; The Priests lips should keepe knowledge, (namely, as Iosephs come in the store-houses for the common vse, and not a close Prisoner, with whom none may bee admitted to conferre, sauing his Iaylour) and the people should seeke the Law at his mouth. Vnto which knowledge and skill, there must bee added industrious diligence, whereby he is ready to preach the Word in season, and out of season, reprobuing and rebuking, with all long suffering and doctrine, although hee seeme small fruit of his labours. For though the Minister be neuer so rich in the spirituall treasures of learning and knowledge, yet if miser-like, he doe not communicate them, but locketh them vp in his owne braine; the poore people are neuer the better, but may perish in their ignorance, euen as he shall doe in his sloth and vnfaithfulnessse. Thirdly, he must haue his heart affected with sincere loue of the people; whereby hee is moued in all things to seeke their good, and to preferre their saluation before his owne priuate profit. The which loue in the teacher, will make way in the hearts of his hearers, not onely for his instructions and comforts, but also his admonitions and reproofes, seeing they come not out of any spleene, but out of meere loue, and seruent desire of sauing their soules. In the act and execution of his Ministeriall function, he is to speake nothing but Gods Truth, as from him, and as before him, in his pure sight, which discerneth all errour, and in his glorious presence, who hateth and abhorreth all vanity and hypocrisie: And that not after his owne manner, chiefly ayming to magnifie himselfe in the ostentation of his owne learning and gifts, but in the demonstration of the Spirit, aboue all desiring and indeuouring to glorifie God in the saluation of his hearers.

§. Sect. 5.
That the word must be preached powerfully and plainly.

Whereunto these two things are required; namely, that he preach the Word powerfully & plainly; powerfully to the consciences of all, & plainly to the capacity (as much as in him lieth) of those which are most simple. Of both we haue the Apostle Paul for our patterne, who though he were most

most learned about all other the Apostles, both in arts and tongues, and all other learning of the Iewes, yet came not in excellency of speech, nor the enticing words of mans wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power, desiring to know nothing (that is, to make shew of no other knowledge) saving Iesus Christ and him crucified; and preferring five words spoken to the understanding of his hearers, above ten thousand in an unknowne tongue. Yea, we haue heerein our Sauour Christ himselfe, as our Precedent, who preached the Word, not like the Scribes and Pharises (after a ieiune and Scholasticall manner) but with all power and authority. And though hee were the wisdom of his Father, in whom all treasures of knowledge and learning were hid; and the word of his Father; exceeding in sound eloquence both men and Angels, yet preached the Word in a plaine phrase and humble manner of speech, not respecting what hee was able to speake, but what his Disciples were able to heare, conceiue, and carry away; like a louing and carefull nurse, chawing the harder and stronger meate in his mouth, that they might the better receiue it, whilst he explained more difficult points, by easie and familiar similitudes. Neither had hee onely care of more thorowly informing those who were men growne in knowledge, by teaching them the high and hidden mysteries of his Kingdome, but also of instructing his little children and yong nouices in the first principles of true Religion, as it was prophesied of him by Esayas, All thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be their peace. And like a faithfull and carefull Shepheard, hee did not onely apply himselfe to feed his whole flock, but extended his care and loue chiefly to his yonglings, gathering his Lambes with his arme, and carrying them in his bosome, and gently leading those which were great with yong. The which care and charge, when hee was to ascend on high, hee deputed to the Apostle Peter, and in him to all the whole Ministry, that they should feed his tender Lambes, as well as his older and stronger Sheepe. And therefore though the ouer-wise Grecians account the simple preaching of Christ crucified, foolishnesse; and the learned Doctors of the world make themselues spott with this easie plainnesse: Let all that truly feare God, chuse rather to imitate Christ and his Apostles in their course of preaching, labouring to speake vnto the capacity of the meanest and simplest, seeing the charge of their soules is commended vnto them by our great Shepheard, as well as theirs who are of greatest vnderstanding, and the soules of all being alike deare vnto God, they shall giue account of one as well as of another, of the little Lambes, as well as of the Rammes of the flocke. And seeing we must not only take care for our selues, that wee may goe to heauen alone, but are appointed Captaines and Leaders of Gods Armies, wee must not skorne plaine wayes, wherein all our company may goe with vs, the weake and sicke, as well as the strong and healthy; and mount aloft in learned discourses and Scholasticall speculations (as it were vpon the Alpes) which are no lesse high about their capacity, then cold and heartlesse, giuing no warmth to their zeale and deuotion; or trauell in the craggy and rough wayes of knottie controuersies, needlesse genealogies, and abstruse difficulties, where wee shall leaue all our hearers as farre off behind vs: but chuse rather such faire wayes and beaten paths, as will bring vs and our company with vs, with most speed and safety to the end of our journey. For though heereby we cannot commend our strength and swiftnesse, though we outrun others that haue set out before vs, because they go in mountainous wayes, & farre about, yet we shall commend our wisdom and prudence, in that we haue chosen the fairest and neereſt way. And surely if an vnpartiall view were taken of ſeueral congregations, and iuſt tryal made, whether thoſe haue beſt thriven in the Chriſtian growth, who haue bin diligently fed with ordinary food and daily bread, or thoſe who are ſometimes feaſted with a banquet of delicate diſhes; I doubt not but it would be found, that as ſometime Daniel and his fellows, that fed vpon plaine pulſe, which God had ſanctified to their uſe, were fatter and in better liking then they that did eate the portion of the kings meate: ſo thoſe people and Pariſhes would be found more thriving Chriſtians, both in knowledge & practice, who are fed with the pulſe of plaine Preaching, & with whoſome, though homely food, becauſe they can feed vpon it, and better diſgeſt it, then others that haue a kingly portion of abſtruſe learning, wit, and eloquence, ſometimes (though rarely) allowed vnto them, ſeeing they are meates of too hard diſgeſtion for their weake ſtomakes, cauſing crudities, humorous and ill-concocted conceits, and ſeldome affording any whoſome nourishment.

Of the duties of the people, reſpecting the Ministry of the Word.
1. Cor. 9. 22.

Mat. 9. 38.

The conſideration whereof, as it ſhould effectually moue Gods Miniſters to take ſuch a courſe in their preaching, as is moſt fit and profitable for their hearers, and denying themſelues, and the praiſe of their great learning and gifts in the worke of their Miniſtery, to become as weake to thoſe that are weake, that they may gaine them to Chriſt; ſo alſo ſhould it moue the people, who deſire to bee built vp in ſauing knowledge, and in the practice of all holy duties belonging to a godly life, to affect ſuch teachers, as being learned and ſufficient, doe conſcionably apply themſelues to their capacity, for their inſtruction and edification. To which purpoſe, they muſt ſtrive with God in their ſeruent prayers, that he will ſend ſuch labourers in to his harveſt; and in humility and ſubmiſſiue obedience, as their place and calling wil permit, labour by earneſt ſuite with ſuperiour Magiſtrates ouer Church and Common wealth, and eſpecially with Patrones and diſpoſers of Church-preferments, that they will provide and ſet ouer them ſuch faithfull and painefull Paſtours, as will feed them with food conuenient for the preſeruing of their ſoules in ſpirituall life, and the nourishing and increaſing of Gods graces in them; not fooliſhly affecting and admiring (as it is common with thoſe that are moſt ignorant) ſuch teachers, as deſiring the praiſe of their great learning, more then the ſaluation of their peoples ſoules, doe moſt exceed the ſhort reach of their ſhallow capacities; like vnto cold ſtomacks, which haue a greedy appetite after meates of hard diſgeſtion; but when they haue receiued them, for want of naturall heate turne them into wind, which affecteth their braine with noyſome vapours, and are not able to conuert them into any whoſome nourishment. Secondly, their care muſt be, as much as in them lyeth, and the neceſſary preſeruation of their ſtate will ſuffer them, to place themſelues vnder ſuch a Miniſtery, as will helpe them forward in their ſpirituall thrift and growth of grace, and counting (according to Maries choyce, and our Sauours approbation) this one thing neceſſary, let them preferre it before all worldly things;

Luk. 10. 42.

things; as fertile soyles, good ayre, well-seated houses and shops fit for trading, delightfull walkes and prospects, and plentiful provision for house-keeping; which without the other, may make full purses and Barnes, but hearts empty of all grace and goodnesse; healthy and well-liking bodies, but hunger-starved, leane and sickly soules. Thirdly, they must ioyne their cost with their care, and like the wise Merchant; esteeme this precious pearle and hid treasure, aboue all other their possessions; they must, if it be in their power, purchase it at any rate, seeing it only can make them truly rich, according to the counsell of the Wiseman; Buy the truth, and sell it not; thinking that part of their wealth well spared, which serueth as a meane to bring them vnto the right vse of all the rest, and to enrich their soules with the incomparable treasures of Gods sauing graces, whereby they are strengthened to the wise performance of all Christian duties. Fourthly, hauing Ministers, though not eminent and excellent in their gifts, yet of some good towardlinesse and willingness to grow vnto more perfection, they must giue them no discouragements, by their bitter censures, awke and froward carriage, backwardnesse to pay vnto them their right, or running from them vpon euery slight occasion to heare others; but rather they must nourish and cherish the good things which they see in them, that they may increase more and more, by shewing all loue and kindnesse, due reuerence and respect; especially by regarding them in the worke of their Ministry, and hearing them with all diligence, constancie, and attention. For by thus drawing the breasts of their spirituall nurses, they shall bring downe their milke, and cause it to increase and abound, at least, to a sufficiency of nourishment, whereas if it be not sucked, it will curdle in the breast, and make them heart-sicke to be thus neglected, or else in short time turne backe, and quite drying vp, leaue vnto them no nourishment at all. Finally, when God hath provided for them such as are eminent in their gifts, and painefull in their Ministry, labouring in word and doctrine, and going out and in before them as good guides in their gouernement, and holy example, they must not grudge to giue them the double honour of reuerence and maintenance, and together with the heavy waight of their Ministry, suffer them to lye gasping and groning vnder the burthen of pouerty and contempt, but giue them all good encouragement, not thinking much, that those who impart vnto them heavenly treasures, should be partakers with them of their earthly blessings: but especially, they must labour to profit by their paines, in knowledge and fruitfull obedience, which is the ioy of their hearts, the life of their life, and the Crowne of their Ministry; lest when they see that they sow all their good seed in barren soyles, and with the Prophet, and our Sauour Christ himselfe, haue iust cause to complaine, that they haue laboured and spent their strength in vaine, they be forced to make choyce of better and more fruitfull grounds, and to imploy their labours in some other place, where they may more glorifie God, and receiue more ioy and comfort to their owne hearts.

6. Sect. 1.

That we must use preparation before the hearing of the Word, and wherein it consisteth.

Eccles. 3. 1.

1. Pet. 2. 1.*

And these are the things which are required vnto the right preaching of the Word. Vnto the right hearing of it, that it may be a powerfull meanes to enrich vs with Gods graces, and to strengthen vs vnto all Christian duties of a godly life, some things are required before wee heare, some things in hearing, and some things after we haue heard it. Before we heare, we must use due preparation; vnto which is required first, that we enter into a serious consideration of Gods glorious presence, before whom we are to present our selues, that we may heare him speaking vnto vs, not of ordinary matters of small importance, but such as meerey concerne his glory, and the everlasting saluation of our owne soules. Whereby we shall be preserved from rushing rashly into the holy assemblies, and be made careful to looke vnto our feet, before we enter into the House of God. For if worldly men, duely considering that they are going into the presence of an earthly King, to heare him speake of the waighy affaires of the Common wealth, or such things as neerey concerne them in their owne particular, prepare themselves accordingly, that they may bee fit to come into such a royall presence; how much more should wee use the like and greater care, when we are to come into the presence of the King of Kings, and to heare him speaking vnto vs of such things, as much more concerne vs and the euertlasting good of our soules and bodies? Secondly, being to come vnto this spirituall feast, we are to prepare our selues by getting a good appetite, that we may not idly sit by and looke on, when others feed on these spirituall delicacies, for the refreshing and strengthening of their soules. To which end, wee must, by renewing our repentance, purge and cleanse our soules from sinfull corruptions (as our stomacks from clogging and hurtfull humours) which otherwise will take away our appetite, and make vs lothe and refuse, or eating against stomacke, not able to digest our spirituall nourishment. Of which kinde are wrath, maliciousnesse, guile, dissimulation, hypocrisie, preiudice, and forestalled opinions, and such like; seeing if these beare sway in vs, it is not possible that the Word of God should take any effect, or become profitable nourishment for the preserving and increasing of our spirituall health and strength. So also wee must banish out of our minds worldly cogitations about our pleasures or profits, which will distract vs from hearing the Word with any attention, and out of our hearts earthly cares, which like thornes, will choake the seed of the Word, and make it utterly vnfruitfull in vs. Moreouer, we must stirre vp our appetite, by considering our spirituall wants, which can no otherwise be supplied, then by comming vnto this feast; for as hunger, and sense of our emptinesse, maketh vs to long after our bodily food, so if we duly consider how empty we are of all Gods graces, and feeble vnto all good duties, it will much increase our appetite to the food of our soules; and wee shall goe to this Market with all cheerefulness, if we consider, that heere, and no where else, wee may fit and furnish our soules with all necessaries. Again, we must examine our sinnes which beare sway in vs, that repenting of them, we may receiue the assurance of pardon in the publike ministry, to our inestimable comfort, and may also bee strengthened against the power of them, that we may subdue them, and not suffer them to raigne in vs, as in former times; being armed against them, and the tentations of our spirituall enemies, alluring, or forcibly drawing vs into them, with the whole armour of God, and especially the sword of the Spirit. And this will also prouoke our appetite, and make vs goe with cheerefulnesse to the hearing of Gods Word, like the malefactor to receiue his pardon, or the Souldier that hath bene often wounded and foyled; by reason of his nakednesse, to put on sufficient armour, and to receiue from his Commander defensue and offensue weapons. Finally, we must prepare our selues, and stirre vp our appetite, by considering the properties of the Word, which we goe to heare. As first, the excellencie of it, as being the Word, not of man, but of God, the Word of truth, life, and saluation. Secondly, the power and efficacie of it, as being the power of God himselfe to our saluation, sharper then any two-edged sword, pearcing euen to the very deuiding of the soule and the Spirit, the ioynts and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart. A Word that hath alwayes its operation, and returneth neuer in vaine, but bringeth that to passe for which it is sent, and is either the sweete sauour of life vnto life, or of death vnto death. Thirdly, the great vility and profit of it, being a perfect and pure Law, that conuerteth the soule, a light that shineth vnto vs who sate in the shadow of death, and guiding our feete into the way of peace; heavenly wisdom, that giveth vnderstanding vnto the simple, and maketh the wise more wise; our Counsellor to aduise vs, our food to nourish vs, our weapon to defend vs and repell our enemies, an effectuall meanes to worke in vs all sauuing graces, and the way that bringeth vs to eternall blessednesse. Finally, let vs prepare our selues, and whet our appetite, by considering the necessity of it, seeing without it wee can attaine vnto no good, nor escape any euill; in which regard, our Sauour saith to Martha, that this one thing is necessary, as though there were no necessity of any other thing in comparison of it. The which necessity lyeth not only vpon weakelings, and those who are simple and ignorant, that they may learne the truth, but also vpon those who haue made greatest progresse in Christianity, and are richest in knowledge, that they may bee mouued to practise what they know, and bring it to holy vse, and that the graces of God may be confirmed and preserued in them. Vnlesse any man would foolishly imagine that he is so strong in grace, that he needeth not to eate any more food, for the restoring of that spirituall strength which is daily abated and impaired through our corruption, and the assaults and tentations of our neuer-resting enemies, Satan & the world. The last duty to be performed in our preparation, is, that we feruently pray vnto God for his grace, and the assistance of his holy Spirit, both to his Ministers in speaking, & our selues with the rest of his people, in hearing, that he may be so inabled therby to speak the Word truly, sincerely, powerfully & profitably, and we to heare in a Christian and holy maner, that God may be glorified, and we edified in our holy faith, and strengthened more and more vnto all the duties of a godly life.

Of duties to be performe.
l after the hearing of the Word.

In the hearing of the Word, diuers duties are to be performed. As first, we must set our selues in Gods presence, that we may heare all things that are commanded vs of him, according to the example of good Cornelius; in which regard we must not heare the Word after a carelesse and cold manner, but with fear and trembling, if we would haue God that speaketh, take any delight in vs. Secondly, we must heare it, not as the word of man, but as it is the Word of God, by which wee shall one day bee iustified or condemned. Thirdly, wee must hunger after the sincere milke of Gods Word, without the mixture of humane traditions, carnall eloquence, and worldly wisdom, that we may grow vp thereby. Fourthly, wee are to heare with all attention, hauing our eyes fastened vpon the Teacher, and hanging vpon his lips, as the child vpon the mothers brest, like the hearers of our Saviour Christ; to which end wee must carefully banish all worldly cogitations and wandring thoughts, and also all drowzinesse and sleepinesse, seeing we would not so heare our equals, and much lesse our superiours. Fifthly, we must heare with alacrity and cheerfulnesse, and shake off all dulnesse and carnall wearinesse, which makes no part of the Sermon pleasing but the conclusion onely. Sixthly, wee must heare with all due reuerence, the Word, as being the Word of God, and not of man, as from him, and before him, in whose presence the hills and mountains shake and tremble. Seuenthly, with all humility, submitting our selues vnto it, as vnto the Scepter of Gods Kingdome, to bee ruled and directed, instructed and reprobued by it, and not rebell against Gods holy ordinance, and repine and rage against our Teachers, when they touch our consciences to the quicke, and sharply reprove vs for our sinnes. Lastly, we must heare the Word with faith and a good conscience, giuing credit vnto all the parts of it, as well threatnings as promises, and applying all to our owne vse; with an earnest desire to profit by it, and to lay it vp in the closet of our hearts, that we may not be forgetfull hearers, and like leaking and riuen vessels that will hold nothing.

After the hearing of the Word, two duties are to be performed. The first is, that publicly in the Church we ioyne with the Minister in giuing praise and thanks vnto God for his mercy towards vs, in feeding our soules with the bread of life, and for the liberty he hath giuen vs to come in peace and safety into his holy Assemblies, to heare vs speake vnto him in our prayers, and to speake vnto vs by his Minister and Ambassadour; and that priuately at home, at least in some short manner, wee renew our thanksgiuing, and desire the Lord to write that which we haue heard, in our hearts, by the finger of his Spirit, and to make it effectuell for the enriching of our hearts with sauing grace, and the strengthening of vs to all holy duties. And if our memory, ability and gifts will serue, it is profitable for vs, and acceptable to God, if we can frame our prayer according to that which we haue heard, confessing those sinnes which haue been reprobued, bewailing those wants which haue been discouered, desiring those graces which haue been commended vnto vs, or praising God if we already haue them, and desiring grace and spirituall strength, that we may performe those duties, vnto which wee haue been perswaded and exhorted. The second duty is, that we lay vp that which we haue heard, in our hearts and memories, that we may practise them in our liues. For as it is not enough to haue good seed sowne in our grounds, if wee doe not couer it that it may take root, but let the fowles of heauen take it away, nor to seed vpon wholesome meate, vnlesse we retaine it in our stomackes that it may be digested, and like good nourishment applied to all the parts of the body; so it will little auaille vs to heare many Sermons, and neuer thinke more of them after we are gone out of the Church, and to receiue this spirituall food with greedy appetites, if we keepe it not, but presently cast it vp againe, out of hearts surferred with worldly cares, and clogged and cloyed with the grosse humours of our sinfull lusts. The which (as I am perswaded) is one chiefe cause why the most, euen amongst diligent hearers, haue, after so long inioying the light of the Gospell, so little profited either in knowledge or holy practice; namely, because they haue been so carelesse in keeping what they haue heard, and haue put this spiritual treasure into broken bags, and this precious liquor into riuken vessels. Now the meanes to retaine and imprint the things which we haue heard in our hearts and memories, is first to loue, regard, and set our hearts vpon them; for euen old men (as we say) who are weake in memory, doe yet retaine those things which they most affect. The second is, that wee heare the Word with diligent attention, obseruing the method of the Teacher, and how he proceedeth from poynt to poynt, fastening the former poynt in our mindes, by casting our eye backe vnto it, when as hee is leauing of it, and proceeding to another. For as it is not possible that the fault of the first concoction, should be amended in the second, seeing euery part and faculty is wholly taken vp about its owne proper worke; so is it no more possible that we should remember that which wee neuer minded, or that the memory should bring forth that, which the vnderstanding neglected to lay vp by due attention and obseruation. And therefore the Apostle telleth vs, that we ought to giue the more earnest heed to the things wee heare, lest at any time we should let them slip. Thirdly, this may make vs rub our memories, and make vs carefull to imprint in them the things which wee heare, if we consider that our diligent hearing of the Word will not make vs happy, vnlesse we also retaine it in our memories, and practise it in our liues: for so the Apostle James saith, that if we looke into the perfect Law of liberty, and continue therein, being not forgetfull hearers, but doers of the worke, we shall be blessed in our deed. And the Apostle Paul limiteth the promise of saluation made vnto the preaching and hearing of the Word, to the condition of retaining it in our memories. I declare (saith hee) vnto you the Gospell which I preached, and ye receiued, by which also ye are saued, if you keepe in memory that which I preached vnto you. Fourthly, wee must vnto our hearing, adde meditation, which is a notable meanes of imprinting it in our hearts and memories. Fifthly, wee must conferre with others, that they may helpe vs where we are wanting, and we them, where they haue failed. Sixthly, Gouvernours of families may helpe themselves, and those which are committed to their charge, for the better vnderstanding and remembering of what they haue heard, by repeating the chiefe poynts of the Sermon after they are come home, by strength of their memory, or helpe of their notes, and examining their children and seruants, and putting them to give an account of what they have heard and learned. Lastly, we must make what we have heard, our owne, by applying it to our owne vse, and bringing it to practice in our liues and conuersations; whereby we shall intitle our selues to that blessednesse which is promised to all those who both heare the Word and keepe it. And so much of the first meanes of inabling vs to the duties of a godly life, the ministry of the Word, and the things that are required vnto it. The which I haue the more briefly passed over, because I haue touched diuers of the poynts before, and more fully handled some of them in another Treatise.

CAP. VII.

Of the second publike meanes of a godly life, which is the administration of the Sacraments.

THe second meanes of inriching vs with all sauing graces, and strengthening vs vnto all the duties of a godly life, is the right vse of the Sacraments, Baptisme, and the Lords Supper, both which doe much conduce hereunto, and each of them seuerally. For the Sacraments are seales annexed to the Covenant of grace, purposely instituted of God to strengthen and confirme our faith in this assurance, that Christ and all his benefits doe belong vnto vs, that in him, and for his righteousnesse, death, and full satisfaction vnto Gods Iustice, he hath pardoned and forgiuen vnto vs all our sinnes; that in him he is well pleased with vs, and hath giuen vnto vs iust title and interest to all his promises both of grace in this life, and glory and happinesse in the life to come; that hee will giue vnto vs his holy Spirit, and thereby write his Law in our hearts, that we shall not depart from him, mortifie our corruptions, and quicken vs vnto new obedience. Of all which benefits, the Sacraments are not onely significant signes, but also infallible seales, annexed purposely by God vnto his Covenant, to assure vs, that he will performe all his promises; and to giue vnto vs (like a bond and conueyance legally signed and sealed) iust title and interest vnto all those blessings, euen before we sensibly haue them in possession and fruition. Yea not onely so, but they also serue like instruments and conduit pipes to conuey to the worthy receiuer, Christ, and all his benefits. Now what can more forcibly perswade, or more powerfully inable vs to the duties of a godly life, then the representing, assuring, and exhibiting of all these inestimable benefits, in the right vse of the Sacraments? What can more inflame our hearts with most seruent loue towards God, then the consideration, yea sense and feeling of this admirable loue of God towards vs, in giuing vnto vs when wee were sinners, strangers and enemies vnto him, and his grace, Christ Iesus, and with him all these unspeakable benefits? and what more then loue can effectually moue vs to an holy desire in all things to glorifie and please him, and to walke worthy his loue in all holinesse of life and conuersation? What can more lighten the burthen of our labour, and make vs to thinke all too little which we can doe and suffer for him? Againe, the Covenant of grace sealed sealed vnto in the right vse of the Sacraments, doth singularly incourage vs to lay aside all doubts and difficulties, seeing God thereby assureth vs, that he will, yea hath giuen vnto vs his holy Spirit, to direct and assist vs in all our good indeuours, in the mortifying of all our sinfull corruptions, seeme they neuer so strong and vnresistable, and strengthening vs to the performance of all good duries, seeme they neuer so difficult and vnpleasing vnto flesh & blood. And what can more effectually moue vs to go on in the worke of sanctification, then to haue such an assistant to ioyne with vs, vnto whom nothing is difficult, being infinitely able to performe and perfect whatsoever he vndertaketh? What can more powerfully perswade vs to doe Gods faithfull seruice, then to haue the pardon of our sinnes put into our owne hands, signed and sealed, so dearly purchased, and so freely giuen? then to haue the present pledges and pawns of Gods loue and fauour, the earnest of his Spirit, the first fruits of his graces, and the conueyances of our heavenly Inheritance, sealed and deliuered into our owne keeping. For who would be so sluggish, as not to doe faithfull and diligent seruice to such a glorious and gracious Master, for such liberall and bountifull wages? Finally, seeing in the right vse of the Sacraments wee doe really and truly, though spiritually and by faith, receiue Christ, that he may dwell in vs, and we in him, and not onely communicate with him in his diuine graces imputed by God, and applyed by faith, but also by vertue of his Spirit assisting this ordinance, haue all sanctifying and saving graces confirmed and increased in vs, whereby wee are strengthened vnto all the duries of a godly life: hence also it appeareth how much they conduce and further vs in them; seeing we haue Christ himselfe a co-worker with vs, who by his holy Spirit sustaineth the greatest part of the waight of that his easie yoke, and light burthen, which he layeth vpon vs; in which respect we may take courage vnto vs, and say with the Apostle, that we are able to doe all things, through the power of Christ which strengtheneth vs; and seeing also they cherish and increase his gifts and graces in vs, whereby we are moued and enabled to worke together with him, in all holy duries of Gods seruice, and of a godly and Christian life.

Phil. 4. 13.

Secondly, the Sacraments are helpees vnto vs for this purpose, as they are solemne testifications of our seruice and obedience vnto God, seeing they are his liueries and cognizances whereby his seruants are knowne from others; and the sacramentall oath which he causeth all his souldiers to take, when he entertaineth them into his spirituall warfare; and the pre-money which he putteth into their hands, whereby hee obligeth and firmly binderth them to continue constant in this warfare, and to fight courageously vnder his colours. Now this may moue vs to doe faithfull seruice vnto our great Lord and Master, partly because hee hath so innobled vs by giuing vs entertainment into his Family, and graced vs, by letting vs weare his liuery and cognizance, seeing it is a farre greater advancement and dignity, to be one of his meanest seruants, euen a doore-keeper in his House, then to be the greatest Monarch in the earth; partly because he incourageth vs to faithfull and diligent seruice by such bountifull wages and inestimable rewards; and partly because wee shall otherwise dishonor our Lord and Master, & weare his liuery to do him shame;

§. Sect. 2.

That the Sacraments further vs in godliness, as they are testifications of our seruice to God.

yea also disgrace our selues, whilest we doe discover our grosse hypocrisie, in not answering to our profession, nor performing such holy duties as are futable vnto it; whereby we shall moue the Lord, in his iust displeasure, to pull our lueries ouer our eares, and so vncaſing vs, to lay open our hypocrisie to our shame, and to turne vs out of doores. This may moue vs also to fight courageously vnder his Standard, against the spirituall enemies of our saluation, seeing if we slip out of his Campe, after we haue received this pres-money, and runne away, wee deserue death by our apostasie; or if we cowardly yeeld vnto the assaults and tentations of our spirituall enemies, and doe not fight valiantly, and performe faithfull seruice to our grand Captaine, euen vnto the death, wee are well worthy to be cashiered, to haue no part in the glory of his victory, nor any portion of ioy in his heavenly triumph.

That the Sacrament of Baptisme furthereth vs in godlinesse, as we are thereby ingrafted into Christ.

Gal. 2. 20.

Iob. 15. 6.

More specially, the Sacrament of Baptisme is to the worthy receiuer, a notable meanes to inable vs vnto the duties of a godly life. First, because thereby we are sacramentally ingrafted into the body of Christ, and made members of his body spiritually by faith, as wee are outwardly initiated, entred and admitted by the Congregation, as members of the visible Church, according to that of the Apostle, Ye are all the children of God, by faith in Iesus Christ; for as many of you as haue been baptized into Christ, haue put on Christ. By vertue of which incision, we are inabled to bring forth the fruits of holinesse and righteousness; according to that of our Sauour, I am the Vine, ye are the branches; he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit, (namely, by that life and sap of grace which he receiueth of me) for without me ye can doe nothing. For as the Impe or Clon liueth not by his owne life, but being cast out of the stocke, dyeth and withereth; so being ingrafted into Christ, we liue not our owne life, but by vertue of that liuely sap of grace which wee receiue from him, according to that of the Apostle; I liue, yet not I, but Christ liueth in me; and the life which I now liue in the flesh, I liue by the faith of the Sonne of God, who hath loved me, and giuen himselfe for me; whereas he that abideth not in the true Vine Iesus Christ, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered, and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. More specially, being baptized into Iesus Christ, we are baptized into his death and Resurrection, from which such vertue and vigour is deriued vnto vs, that wee are not onely thereby washed and purged from the guilt and punishment of all our sinnes, but also inabled to mortifie and crucifie the old man, the flesh, with the sinful lusts therof, & raised from the death of sin, to holinesse and newnesse of life. The which is not onely sacramentally signified by the outward washing and sprinkling with water, which serueth to cleanse vs from our bodily defilements, by our stay, and (as it were burying) vnder it, representing our mortification, death and buriall to sinne, and our rising out of it, signifying our spirituall Resurrection to a new life, but also certainly sealed and assured, and powerfully conueyed to the worthy receiuer, that is, to little children elected to saluation, potentially, the inward vertue lying hid in them, till being come to age, it be produced into act by a liuely faith; and to those of yeeres actually, who with the outward washing, apply by faith the blood of Christ for the purging of them

them from the guilt, pur vertue of his death and R flesh with the lusts therec and new obedience. And live any longer therein? Know ye not, that Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death?

 Baptisme into death, that like as Christ of the Father; even so we also should walke in newnesse of life; for if we haue bin planted together in the likenesse of his death, we shall be also in the likenesse of his Resurrection; Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sinne might bee destroyed. that henceforth we should not serue sinne, &c.

Secondly, Baptisme doth

is the Sacrament of our Regeneration and new-birth, not onely signifying, but sealing and assuring, yea powerfully conveying to the worthy receiver (by the inward operation of Gods Spirit, which powerfully work-eth together with his holy ordinances) the spirituall life of grace, potentially to the elect Infants, as they potentially haue faith, and by Gods Decree are ordained to belecue, and actually to those who by faith apply vnto themselves Christ and all his benefits. By which spirituall life and quickening power, they are enabled, according vnto their age and growth in Christ, to moue and worke in the duties of holinesse; even as the child which is new-borne moueth as soone as it liueth, first more weakly, and afterwards more strongly, as it increaseth in age and growth, in strength and stature. Neither is the vertue of Baptisme thus quickening vs to newnesse of life, to be limitted and restrained to the time past, or to the present act of administration, as though it did no more but purge and cleanse vs from the guilt and punishment of our sinnes past, and mortifific our originall sinne in which we were borne, or raise vs who were dead in trespasses and sinnes, vnto the first beginnings of spirituall life and motion, bringing vs (as it were) to the birth, and then vtterly leauing vs to be nursed and nourished by other meanes; but the power and vigour of it continueth and extendeth it selfe to the whole course of our liues; and is an effectuell meanes, being recalled to our minds, and afresh applied by faith, both to assure vs of the pardon of all our sinnes, as it is the seale of the Couenant, whose vertue continueth not onely at the first act of sealing, but as long as the tearme specified in the writing, and therefore must continue in full vertue for euer, to our vse, seeing it is a seale affixed to an everlasting Couenant; and also with no lesse efficacy to mortifie daily more and more, all our sinfull corruptions, and to quicken vs vnto holi-nesse and new obedience, when vpon any occasion wee apply vnto vs the death and Resurrection of Christ, signed and sealed vnto vs, and for our perpetuall vse in our Baptisme; and doe reuiew our spirituall euidences, and the great Charter of Gods Couenant, wherein he hath not onely gi-uen Christ vnto vs, and all his benefits, but also hath promised and assured vs that he will giue his holy Spirit to continue with vs vnto the end

§. Sect. 5.

Thirdly, as it is our restipulation in the Cou-enant of grace.

Thirdly, it is a meanes to helpe vs forward in all duties of godlinesse, as it is our restipulation in the Couenant of grace, whereby hauing receiued from God the promise of the remission of our sinnes, grace and glory, we for our part promise vnto God againe, that wee will receiue Christ and all his benefits by a true and liuely faith, bringing forth the fruits thereof in vnfaigned repentance and amendment of life, and that vicerly renouncing Satan, the world, and our owne sinfull flesh with the lusts thereof, we will wholly dedicate and con-secrate our selues, or soules and bodies to the seruice of him who is our Creator and Redeemer. The which our vow and Couenant made vnto God, is a powerfull bond to restraints vs from all sinne, and to tye vs vnto the performance of all duties of Gods seruice, seeing if we doe not performe the condition of the Couenant betwene him and vs, we can haue no true ioy and comfort in our liues, because we can haue no assurance that we haue any right and interest vnto any of Gods gracious promises made vnto vs in Iesus Christ. So often therefore as we haue occasion to call to our remembrance, our vow and promise made vnto God in baptisme, and especially when wee are present at the celebration of this holy Sacrament, and heare it againe repeated and made in the name of infants admitted vnto it; if wee conscionably labour to make a right vse of our Baptisme, it will put vs in mind of our Couenant then made with God, and renew our desires, resolution, and indouour of performing that seruice in the duties of a Christian life, which we haue vowed and promised vnto him, lest wee should be found Couenant-breakers, and dalliers with God, who will not bee mocked, thereby deluding our selues of all blessings and benefits, respecting this life and the life to come, which in the Couenant of grace are promised vnto vs. Where, by the way we may obserue, that those who withdraw themselves, and depart out of the assembly when the Sacrament of Baptisme is administered, doe not only thereby sinne against God, the Church, and the party baptized (as I haue before shewed), but also are very iniurious vnto themselves, in that they lose a good opportunity of calling to minde and renewing their Couenant with God, and deprive themselves of one speciall helpe, whereby they might bee inabled to performe the duties of a godly life.

§. Sect. 6.

That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper is a powerfull meanes to further vs in Christian duties, first, because thereby our Communion with Christ is confirmed, and secondly, our faith strengthened.

1st. 6. 34, 36.

So likewise the Supper of the Lord, rightly celebrated and vsed, is a powerfull meanes to inable and helpe vs forward in the performance of all Christian duties. First, because thereby our vnion and Communion with Christ, is more and more strengthened and confirmed; seeing God doth offer and giue, and we take and apply vnto our selues by the hand of faith, vnder the visible signes of Bread and Wine, Christ and all his benefits; his Body crucified, and his Blood shed, that they may nourish our soules vnto euerlasting life; according to that of our Sauour; He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him; and againe, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternall life, and I will raise him up at the last day. Now the more that this our vnion with Christ is strengthened and confirmed, the more powerfully doe we performe all Christian duties, seeing from him all grace is communicated vnto vs, and all vertue and quickning life, whereby we are inabled to bring forth the fruits of holinesse and righteousness. Secondly, it strengtheneth vs vnto all good duties, as it is a speciall meanes for the strengthening and increasing of our faith, which was the chiefe end for which it was ordained. For seeing the Lord hath not onely committed his Couenant to writing, but for the further ratification of it, hath annexed vnto it his seales, the Sacraments, there is now no place left to doubting; seeing it is impossible that the Lord, who is Truth it selfe, and his promises, Yea, and Amen, should faile in any of them, being thus established and confirmed. In which regard, the Apostle calleth the Sacraments, the seales of the righteousness of faith, because as seales, amongst men, are annexed to writings, to giue them security; and better assurance of the performing of Couenants agreed on betwene them: so the Lord hath instituted his Sacraments, and annexed them to his Couenant, not to confirme it, which is so infallible, that it needes no confirmation, but to strengthen our feeble and weake faith, which needes all helpes and meanes to keepe it from wauering. Now the more our faith is confirmed, the more rich wee grow in all sauing graces, seeing it is the fountaine from which they flow, and the more we abound in all holy duties, and fruits of new obedience, seeing it is the roote from which they spring.

Thirdly, because the Sacrament of the Lords Supper is the spirituall food of our soules, whereby they are nourished and strengthened in life and grace vnto eternall saluation, euen as our bodies are nourished with corporall food, and thereby strengthened and inabled for all actions and imployments: So our Sauour saith; My flesh is meate indeed, and my blood is drinke indeed; not to feed the body, but to comfort the soule, to preserve our spirituall life, and to strengthen vs vnto all duties of holinesse and righteousness. And as the bodily life languisheth, and strength decayeth, if we refuse our corporall nourishment; so the vigour and life of our soules cannot continue, if we feed not vpon Christ by faith; according to that vehement asseueration of our Sauour; Verily, verily, I say vnto you, except ye eate the flesh of the Sonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye haue no life in you. Yea, this Supper of the Lord is not such a spare meale, and bare Communion, as onely holdeth life and soule together; and doth not reuiue the spirits, increase the strength, and fit vs for action and imployment; but it is a plentifull feast for our soules, which maketh vs grow in grace and spirituall strength and stature, vnto a perfect age in Christ, making them strong and vigorous vnto all Christian duties of Gods seruice. Whereof this, that as Baptisme is called the Sacrament of our imitation and new birth, so this of our augmentation and growth in grace; affording vnto vs plentifull nourishment for this end. For as God is so bountifull in affording man meanes for the preserving his bodily life, that he alloweth him such things, not onely which are absolutely necessary, but also for delight, and not bread alone to strengthen mans heart, but also wine to make it glad oyle, to expresse this ioy in the face and countenance. So hee hath dealt much more bountifully for our soules, providing for their nourishment a plentifull feast, the strengthening Bread of Christs Body, and the cheering and gladding Wine of his precious Blood, the delicious viands and dishes of his spirituall benefits, and sauing graces, and sweet comforts of his holy Spirit; and not onely setteth these things before vs to looke vpon, but giueth vnto vs gracious entertainment, inuiting vs to feed vpon them, not onely vnto necessity, but also to delight. So that our welcome is no lesse worth then our cheere, and (as the Spouse speaketh) his loue better then wine. Yea, vnto his feast he addeth a banquet of spirituall comforts, inbracing vs with the armes of his loue, cheering vs with the consolations of his Spirit, and rauishing our soules with the sweet feelings of his fa-uour, and such inward ioy; that being with the Spouse thus brought into his Banqueting-house, and hauing for a Canopie ouer our heads, his Banner of loue, we are ready, as it were in an extasie to cry out, Stay me with flagons, comfort mee with Apples, for I am sicke of loue. Now how can our poore soules, being thus royally feasted and cherished at the Supper of the great King, but bee inwardly replenished with all thankfulness towards God for his so rich mercies? What can they doe lesse, then enter into a serious consideration with themselves, what they may returne vnto God, that they may expresse their loue and gratefulnesse, for so many and inestimable fauours, without any desert vouchsafed vnto them; saying with the Prophet Dauid, What shall I render vnto the Lord for all his benefits towards mee? And finding themselves to be vtterly vnable to make any other re-quitall, then by remaining thankfull debtors, what can they doe lesse then conclude with him, that they will take the cup of saluation, and call vpon the Name of the Lord, praising and magnifying his mercies in the sight of all the people? And finding our selues preferred in spirituall life, growne in Gods graces, and strengthened and fitted for all good employment, by the royall bounty of our heavenly King, feasting vs with such cordiall restoratiues, and delicious food, aboue the price of siluer or gold, or any other corruptible thing; how vngratefull should we be, if we did not imploy this strength which he hath giuen vs in the duties of his seruice, that we may glorifie his holy Name, and bee accepted of him, by doing that which is pleasing in his sight?

Fourthly, the right vse of the Lords Supper much conduceth vnto a godly life, as it is an action which we doe in remembrance of Christ, and are thereby put in minde how much he hath done and suffered for vs. For who can lightly esteeme of any sinne, which cost Christ no lesse then the price of his precious blood? Who will not bewaile his sinnes past with bitter griefe, abhorre his present corruptions with mortall hatred, and vtterly renounce and forsake them for the time to come, who duly considereth that they were the nayles which fastened our Sauour Christ to the Crosse, and that vnsupportable waight, which made his soule heavy to the death, pressed out of his innocent body that bloody sweate, and extorted from him that lamentable complaint, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Who will bee hired with the base wages of worldly vanities, to defile

his soule againe with the filth of sinne, which could no otherwise be cleansed and purged then by the precious blood of Iesus Christ, of infinite more value then ten thousand worlds? And so on the other side, who can bee slacke in the seruice of so gracious a Sauour? or bee sparing in his paines to glorifie him, who for his redemption hath not spared his dearest blood? Who would not worship him in all the duties of holinesse, who hath purchased his happinesse at such a rate, as men and Angels were not able to discourse? who is so vnthankfully slothfull, that will not spend his sweate in his seruice, and his teares, because he cannot spend so much as he should, and euen his blood to make vp what is wanting in them both, for him and his sake, that hath clenfed our bodies and soules from the ingrained spots, and vncurable leprosie of sinne, with his bloody sweate, yea full streames of his precious blood? Who will now grudge to doe works of mercy, or to feed the poore members of Iesus Christ with his spare food, & to clothe them with his cast apparell; which remembreth that this bread of life came downe from heauen to be our food, and hath not spared to feast vs at his owne royall Table, with his owne body and blood for our spirituall nourishment vnto eternall life? that he who is the liuely and expresse Image of his Father, and equall vnto him in glory and Maiesty, disrobed himselfe of this glorious garment, and tooke vpon him the shape of a seruant, yea was content to be stripped of those poore clothes he had suiting with his meane condition, and whilest he bore our sinnes, to beare our shame, hanging naked vpon the Crosse, that he might clothe vs that were spirituall naked, with the rich and glorious robe of his righteousness and obedience?

Finally, the Lords Supper rightly vsed, is a notable meanes, to confirme and strengthen vs vnto all duties of a godly life; because it giueth vs occasion in our preparation, (that we may come as worthy gheists to the Lords Table) to renew our Covenent with God, by renewing our faith in Christ, our repentance for our sinnes, our loue towards God and our neighbours, and all other sauuing graces in vs. We renew our faith, by meditating vpon Gods infinite mercies, and Christs all-sufficient merits, the gracious and indefinite promises of the Gospell, and the truth and omnipotencie of God, whereby he is willing and able to performe them; vpon Gods Commandement, inioyning vs to beleue, and his bounry and goodnesse, in giuing his Word and Sacraments made effectuell by his Spirit, whereby he inableth vs to doe that which he commandeth. Wee renew vpon this occasion our repentance also, by bewailing our sinnes past, and strengthening our resolution, to leaue and forsake them for the time to come, and to serue God in the contrary duties of holinesse and righteousness. And seeing our great wants and imperfections in all Gods graces and Christian duties, we promise and vow in our selues, and vnto God, that wee will carefully vse all good meanes whereby we may attaine vnto them in more perfection. So likewise after the receiuing of this Sacrament, wee take occasion to examine our selues, how we haue profited and increased in spirituall strength and growth of grace, by being feasted at the Lords Table with this food of our soules; and being mindfull of our promises made before we come to the Lords Table, we become more diligent in vsing the meanes whereby Gods graces may be perfected in vs, and we strengthened vnto all good duties. And that we may not appeare to be Couenant-breakers with God, and to haue receiued his grace in vaine, we are made more carefull and conscionable in looking to all our wayes, for the auoyding of all those sinnes wherewith formerly we haue beene ouertaken, and practizing those duties which we haue heretofore neglected, and so to carry our selues in the whole course of our liues, that we may at all times and in all things please the Lord, whom we haue found and felt so gracious vnto vs. In all which respects, who doth not plainly see, that the often resorting to the Lords Table, if we come vnto it duely prepared, is a most effectuall meanes to inrich vs with all Gods graces, and to strengthen vs vnto all good duties of a godly life? And therefore they are most iniurious vnto their owne soules, who seldome come to this spirituall feast, and take euery slight occasion of defrauding them of their due food, seeing thereby they make them droope in their spirituall life, to languish and waxe faint in all sauing grace, and to become vtterly, both vnable and vnwilling, to performe vnto God any sincere and cheerefull seruice.

Rom. 10. 12.

THe third meanes whereby we may be inriched with all sauing grace, and strengthened vnto all the duties of a godly life, is Prayer; Of which I shall not need to say much in this place, hauing before intreated of it at large. Onely it shall suffice to shew, that it is a singular meanes ordained of God, for the obtaining of grace and strength to serue God in all Christian duties. For of our selues we haue no ability vnto any thing that is good, no not so much as to thinke a good thought, or to entertaine into our hearts a good desire, but whatsoeuer we haue in this kind, it is the gift of God, according to that, What haist thou that thou haist not receiued? and that of the Apostle Iames; Euery good and perfect gift is from aboue, and commeth downe from the Father of lights. Now the meanes which God hath sanctified for the obtaining of all those gifts and graces which he hath promised, is seruent and effectuall Prayer; for though he be most bountifull and ready to bestow all good things, yet not to the idle and slothfull, but to such as acknowledging them to be his gifts, doe sue and seeke vnto him for them; and though he infinitely abound with all blessings, yet he communicateth them onely to those that craue them at his hands; according to that of the Apostle; The same Lord ouer all, is rich vnto all that call vpon him: and that of the Psalmist; The Lord is neere vnto all those that call vpon him, to those that call vpon him in truth. And the reason is, because such only doe glorifie him in his gifts, seeing those alone, who haue obtained his blessing by Prayer, will acknowledge him the Author of them, and returne vnto him to giue him thanks. Hence it is, that being willing to bestow all good things vpon his children, and vnwilling that they should neglect their duty, or haue them without suite; and taking delight to conuerse with them,

them, he withholdeth his gifts till they aske them, that they may haue this occasion to resort vnto him. And because through their negligence, hee would not keepe from them any thing, which he knoweth good and necessary, ouer-long; like a most louing, yet wise Father, he leaueth not the matter to our own foolish and wayward will, but by expresse commandement inioyneth vs to call vpon him, & encourageth vs in these our suites by promising before-hand, that he wil heare and grant them. Aske (saith he) and ye shall haue, seek and ye shall find, knocke and it shall be opened vnto you. And againe, Whatsoeuer ye shall aske the Father in my Name, he will giue it you. Aske, and ye shall receiue, that your ioy may be full. So the Apostle telleth vs, that this is the confidence which we haue in him, that if we aske any thing according to his will, he heareth vs; and if we know that he heares vs whatsoeuer we aske, we know also that we haue the petitions that we desired of him. In which regard, the Apostle exhorteth, that we should be carefull for nothing (namely, with a carking and distrustfull care) but that in every thing, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, we should make our requests knowne vnto God. In which regard, the Lord may be truly said to be the Author of all good gifts, and Prayer, the hand whereby we knocke at the dore of his grace; and when it is opened, receiue his blessings from him. He the lively and inexhaustible fountaine of all good; and Prayer, the bucket whereby wee draw it from him. He, a rich treasury of all grace and desireable riches; and Prayer, the key that openeth it vnto vs, in the Name and mediation of Iesus Christ. To this purpose, one of the Ancients speaketh thus; Prayer (saith he) in an admirable manner conduceth to a holy life, and worthy Gods seruice, and being begun, doth much improoue it, and like a treasure, storeth it up in our mindes. For if any man indenuereth to doe any thing belonging to a right course of life, Prayer being his guide; and preparing the way before him, hee shall bee sure to finde a commodious and easie passage, &c. And it is a signe of madnesse, not to bee perswaded that it is the death of the soule, if wee doe not often cast downe our selues at Gods seete. As the body without the soule is a dead carrion: so the soule, if it flee not to God by Prayer, is dead, miserable, and forsake.

More specially, Prayer is the chiefe meanes on our part, whereby wee obtaine his spirituall gifts and graces, by which wee are enabled to performe the duties of a godly life: For by it we obtaine the Spirit of God, who is the Author of all grace and godlinesse, seeing, as our Saviour hath taught vs, the Lord will giue his Spirit to those that aske it. And if wee want the graces of the Spirit, the Scriptures admonish vs to vse Prayer; as a speciall and chiefe meanes whereby we may obtaine them. So the Apostle James; if any man want wisdom, let him aske of God, that giueth to all men liberally, and vpraideth not, and it shall be giuen him. And the Apostle to the Hebrewes, setteth vs in this course for the obtaining of all graces; Let vs (saith he) come boldly to the throne of Grace, that we may obtaine mercy, and finde grace to helpe in time of need. Yea, these spirituall graces, whereby we are enabled to serue God in all holy duties, are things absolutely good for vs in some degree and measure; and therefore we may absolutely pray for them, without interposing any condition; first, because our heavenly Father

ther is ſo infinitely gracious and true of his promiſe, that he will deny nothing vnto vs that is good; and therefore much leſſe theſe things which are moſt neceſſary, and in an high degree of goodneſſe. For if we being euill, know how to giue good gifts vnto our children, how much more ſhall our Father which is in heauen giue good things to them that aſke him? Secondly, becauſe he hath commanded vs to pray for theſe ſpirituall graces; and therefore it is not to be imagined, that the God of all bounty and goodneſſe, would euer haue inioyned vs to aſke thoſe things, which hee is unwilling to giue: neither will any wiſe father draw his children to come with ſuits vnto him, by giuing them repulſes; onely it may be, that the Lord, to enlarge our hearts, and to make our deſires more ſeruent and earneſt, doth for a time with-hold theſe graces, at leaſt in reſpect of our ſenſe and feeling; but if we perſeuere in prayer, and continue importunate ſuiters, we are ſure to obtaine them in the end, and that in greater meaſure, ſeeing he that by holding his hand backe hath enlarged our deſires, and made vs more empty and hungry, hath promiſed alſo to fill and ſatiſſie vs. To which purpoſe Auguſtine ſpeaketh excellently; So long (ſaith he) as the Lord doth not take away from thee thy prayer, he will not remoue from thee his mercy; for he that giueth thee his Spirit, thou maiſt pray, will alſo giue vnto thee that, which by helpe of the ſame Spirit thou doeſt deſire. By all which it appeareth, that prayer is a principall meanes to obtaine all grace and ſtrength at Gods hands, for the well performing of all holy duties. Whereof it is, that the Saints in all ages haue ſo ordinarily vſed it for this end, in the behalfe both of themſelues and others. So Dauid, in many places of the Pſalmes: Shew mee thy mercy, O Lord, and teach mee thy paths. Leade mee in thy truth, and teach mee. Teach mee, O Lord, the way of thy Commandements, and I ſhall keepe them vnto the end. And the Apoſtle Paul; The Lord make you to increaſe, &c. to the end he may ſtabliſh your hearts vnbلائمة in holineſſe before God; And the very God of peace ſanctifie you wholly, and I pray God your whole ſpirit, and ſoule and body, may be preſerued blameleſſe vnto the coming of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. Whereas without prayer there is no hope of any growth in grace; for as in nature all things that grow haue in them an appetite and attractiue force, wherewith they draw that nourishment vnto themſelues, whereby they come to growth and augmentation: ſo in the ſpirituall growth, none receiue any increaſe of grace, but they who haue an appetite and ſpirituall deſire, which they expreſſe by the attractiue force of prayer, whereby they draw from God, the fountaine of all goodneſſe, ſpirituall nourishment, and all things needfull to the furthering of their growth in Chriſt.

Now as prayer generally is a notable means to further vs in all duties of a godly life; ſo eſpecially that which is publike, when as many of Gods Saints and ſeruants being met together in his holy Aſſemblies, doe joyntly with one heart and voyce, implore the gracious aſſiſtance of his good Spirit, whereby they may be inabled to ſerue him in all Chriſtian duties. For if the prayers of one alone doe offer vnto God an holy kind of violence, (as we ſee in the example of Moses) ſo as he ſeemeth vnable to deny and reiect them, becauſe he hath graciously bound himſelfe, by his free and infallible promiſes, to heare and grant them; how powerfull muſt the prayers prayers of the whole Congregation needs bee to preuaile with God, in any suit made according to his will, seeing he hath tyed himselfe to heare and helpe them by more speciall promise; according to that of our Saviour, if two of you shall agree on earth, as touching any thing that they shall aske, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heauen. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. So the Lord hath promised that he will cause his seruants to reioyce in the granting of their suits by speciall fauour, which they shall make vnto him in his owne House: I will bring them (saith he) to mine holy Mountaine, and make them ioyfull in my House of prayer; their burnt offerings and sacrifices shall bee accepted vpon mine Altar; for mine House shall be called an House of prayer for all people.

Mat. 18. 19, 20.

Esa. 56. 7.

1. King. 8. 30, 33

2. Cor. 1. 10, 11.

Vpon which promises made by God, Salomon, at the consecration of the Temple, groundeth his prayer, that the Lord would in speciall manner heare the suits and supplications of his seruants publicly assembled in his Temple to call vpon him. And hereof it is that the Apostle contenteth not himselfe with his owne prayers, or the priuate suits of others, that he might still be preserued for the seruice of God, and of his Church, but desireth that the Church of Corinth should ioine together in prayer for him, that the gift bestowed vpon him by the meanes of many persons, might giue occasion vnto many, of giuing thanks also in his behalfe. For as much fuell and fire laid together, doth make the flame and heate so much the more vehement; and many small streames meeting in the same channel, grow great and vnresistable: So the fire and fuell of our zealous and seruent prayers ioined together in the publike Congregation, maketh a flame that scorning all stop, mounteth vp to heauen; and when we ioyntly powre out our soules before God, like many waters met in one current, they haue the force of a great torrent and vnresistable flood, which beare downe all before them, and neuer stay, till falling into that infinite Ocean of all mercy and goodnesse, they are graciously receiued and accepted of him. And therefore let no man proudly attribute so much vnto his priuate deuotion, that he should be moued thereby to neglect the publike prayers of the Congregation, as needlesse and of lesse efficacy; seeing they are a much more principall and potent meanes to preuaile with God, then our priuate and proud deuotions, scorning such excellent helpes, which may well kindle in vs that elementary and flashing flame of blind and vngrounded zeale, which lasting but a while, serueth for no vse, but to set the Church on fire with hurtfull Schismes and furious contentions, but will neuer kindly warme our hearts with that heavenly heate of seruent zeale, which maketh vs fit and forward vnto all Christian duties, and the substantiall parts of Gods seruice. In which regard I may well say to such, as proudly presuming of the strength of their owne deuotions, thus single themselves from the Congregation by their priuate duties; as the Wise man in another case; Woe vnto him that is alone; for if hee falleth, and faileth in this duty, through want of attention, and wandring thoughts, faintnesse of faith, and lacke of seruency, there is none by to helpe him; whereas praying in the Congregation, wee mutually supply one anothers defects, one being deuoutly diligent, when another groweth cold and remissely negligent, and he

Eccl. 4. 10.

he rising againe, as ashamed of his foyles and falls, and recovering the fauor of his zeale and deuotion, requirerh the other with his assistance, when he beginneth to faint and grow weary. Herein like vnto souldiers, who being singled from one another, are easily overcome, but ioyned in a battell, doe mutually second and succour one another, one fighting, when the other fainteth, and he with renewed strength giuing a fresh charge, together of the other farre engaged; when through weaknesse and weariness he is able no longer to beare the brunt. And thus much of the third publike meanes of a godly life, to wit, prayer. Concerning the fourth and last, which is the reading of the Scriptures, I will speake when I come to treat of priuate reading, because many things to be spoken are coincident to both, and I would not distract them in my Discourse. Onely let it be remembred, that whatsoeuer can be said of the benefit and efficacy of priuate reading, is in a higher degree of excellency verified in that which is publike, because being a ministeriall function, ordained of God, for the common good of the whole Church, and euery particular Congregation, it is more powerfull to all good vses then private reading, Gods more speciall blessing by the inward operation of his holy Spirit, alwayes more effectually accompanying his more excellent and publike ordinances, then such as are priuate, and of an inferiour nature. And therefore the Word publicly preached is more powerfull and profitable, then a Sermon priuately read in our owne houses (as I haue shewed) not in respect of the substance or matter contained in both, nor onely in respect of execution and action (wherein preaching excelleth reading) but chiefly because Gods blessing accompanyeth more effectually that ordinance vnto which he hath giuen the preeminence; so by the same reason, public reading is to be preferred before priuate, not onely because the Minister ordinarily readeth with more iudgement and vnderstanding, more plainely and distinctly, giuing euery word and sentence their due weight, emphasis and accent, and thereby giuing such light to the vnderstanding, and life to the affections of the hearers, that such reading is not much inferiour to a meane comment; but chiefly and principally (as I said) because it is a ministeriall function, vpon which we may expect a larger blessing then vpon our owne priuate actions. The which I touch by the way, to shew vnto those their error in iudgement, and fault in practice, who highly esteeme, and diligently exercise themselves in their owne priuate reading of the Scriptures, and yet so despise public reading in the Congregation, that they will hardly, or not at all vouchsafe their presence, or if that, yet not their reuerent and diligent attention.

CAP. IX.

of the private meanes of a godly life: and first of Christian watchfulness.

BUt howsoever we are to ascribe to the publike meanes, the chiefe preeminence, as being of greater vertue and efficacy, for the enriching of our soules with all saving grace, and strengthening of them vnto all Christian duties of a godly life: yet wee must in any case take heed, that wee doe not (as it is the custome of many cold and carelesse Christians) content our selues with them alone, and rest vpon them as being alone sufficient for all purposes. But we must also with no lesse diligence, care and good conscience, adioyne vnto them the vse of priuate meanes to helpe vs forward in our spirituall growth. First, because God hath inioyned vs the vse of them as well as of the publike, and the Saints from time to time, yeelding obedience herein vnto God, haue made them their daily exercise, as wee shall see when we come to speake of them in particular. Secondly, because they adde strength to our faith, and fuel to our deuotion, whereby we are enabled to performe vnto God publike seruice with more life and zeale, delight and profit: whereas if we neglect priuate duties all the weeke, and suffer our hearts to be taken vp with worldly things, they will be quite out of frame for spirituall exercises, and hardly brought vnto any religious duties of Gods seruice. But when we present our bodies in the Congregation, we shall leaue our hearts at home, about our earthly affaires, and drawing neere vnto God with our lips, shall in the meane time haue our hearts further removed from him: offering vnto him a dead and formall, cold and heartlesse seruice, wherein he taketh no delight. Thirdly, because Gods publike seruice cannot sometime be inioyed at all, as in the dayes of persecution, and is alwayes stinted and limited to one or few dayes in the weeke, when as our soules, no lesse then our bodies, need their daily bread, and to be refreshed continually in their spirituall strength, which is abated through our naturall corruption, and many slips and falls into sinne, as also with the daily and houely tentations of the diuell and the world. In which respect these priuate meanes haue this preeminence aboue the publike, that though they are not so powerfull, and yeeld lesse nourishment: yet we may haue them at our pleasure, and feed vpon them as oft as we will, supplying what is wanting in their vertue and efficacy, by their daily and continuall vse. Finally, by the priuate meanes we are fitted and prepared for the well performing of the publike; as by reading, prayer, meditation, &c. we are enabled to heare the Word preached, with profit, seeing they not onely enlarge our hearts, that wee may heare it with delight, reuerence and attention, but also fasten it in our minds and memories, and make it fruitfull in our liues; and not onely helpe our vnderstandings, that we may better conceiue of what is spoken, being well acquainted with the holy Scriptures, but also inflame our affections with the loue of Gods publike seruice, when as we haue thought before-hand of the excellency, profit and necessity of it. So likewise by these priuate meanes we are made more fit for publike prayer; whereas thereby we are made better acquainted with our wants which need supply, our finnes to be confessed, and the benefits receiued, for which we are bound to returne vnto God praise and thankgiuing; and by often conuersing with God in our priuate prayers, we are more encouraged to goe with boldnesse and confidence vnto the Throne of grace; vnto which wee cannot attaine, if wee estrange our selues from him, by our seldome approching into his presence. Finally, we cannot come as worthy guests to the Lords Table, vntill by our priuate exercises of meditation, examination, and prayer wee be prepared, whereby we renew our faith, repentance and charity towards our neighbours, and come furnished with such sauing graces as are needfull and necessary for the receiuing of the Sacrament with fruit and comfort. And therefore it is no maruell if those who content themselves only with the publike meanes of saluation, and altogether neglect these priuate helps, leauing all their Religion and deuotion at the Church doore, and neuer looking after it till their next returne, doe prooue such vntuering Christians, weake in knowledge, feeble in grace, and slacke and faint in all the duties of a Christian life. For as we would not wonder to see one leane and feeble in body, that should content himselfe with liberrall sustenance one day in the weeke, and fast all the rest: so there is as little cause to maruell at the small growth, spirituall leanness, and weaknesse of these carelesse Christians, after they haue long inioyed the publike means of saluation; seeing they rest wholly vpon them, and neglect all priuate duties (as it were) their daily sustenance, and so by long fasting are imbled in their strength, and abated in their appetite, that they can neither receiue the food publicly offered, nor yet digest and turne it into nourishment when they haue fed vpon it. Whereas our soules need more continuall and daily nourishment then our bodies, seeing there are no fewer causes of the impairing and abating of their strength.

That Christiā
watchfulnesse is not a bodily,
but a spirituall
exercise.
The spirituall
watch.

Now these priuate meanes are manifold: All which may bee reduced vnto two kinds, both which containe vnder them diuers particulars: the first are such priuate helps and meanes as are to be vsed by our selues alone; the second sort are such as may be vsed both by our selues, and also with others ioyning with others. Of the former sort; the first is Christian vigilance or watchfulnesse, which well deserueth the first place, because being rightly knowne and practised, it will serue as a guide to direct and leade vs in all the rest. Whereof my discourse need not to be so large, as the argument is excellent and necessary, seeing it is so religiously and learnedly handled in a Treatise lately published, that were not this Worke imperfect without it, I should haue needed to haue said nothing of it, seeing little can be added, which hath not been better said already. But that we may proceed in handling of this poynt, I will consider the nature of this watchfulnesse, and the meanes which inable vs vnto it. In the former, we will examine what it is, and wherein it consisteth, and the ends where to it tendeth, or the obiects about which it is exercised. For the better explaining of the first poynt, wee are to know, that waking, watching and watchfulnesse, and contrariwise, sleeping, and neglect of watching, are not here vsed in their natieue and proper signification, but are metaphori-

call words, borrowed from the state and disposition of our bodies, and from thence transferred to our soules and spirituall estate. For we are said to sleepe, whilest wee continue in the state of vnt regeneration, dead in trespasses and sinnes, or when being recovered by the quickening power of Gods Spirit, regenerating and reuiuing vs, we doe, in respect of some acts and operations, relapse againe into our former condition. And wee are then said to awake, when we rise out of this estate, either in our first conuersion, or when we renew our repentance, after our falling into sinne, and doe againe recover the operations of spirituall life. And finally, wee are said to watch, when being, through our naturall corruption, inclined and disposed to fall into our former sleepe of sinne, wee doe with all care and circumspection obserue our selues, that wee be not ouertaken with spirituall sloth, but that we may continue waking, and able and actiue for the well-performing of all Christian duties, and of our spirituall life in grace. In which regard, their ignorance and errour is much to bee pitied, who imagine that they haue well obserued and kept the Christian watch, vnto which we are exhorted in the Scriptures, when as hauing abridged themselves of their sleepe and naturall rest, they haue thereby wasted and wearied their bodies, and weakened their corporall strength; this errour arising out of another, that the flesh (by which the Scriptures vnderstand our originall and naturall corruption, the body of sinne and death) is nothing else but the body it selfe, and that mortification of the flesh, consisteth chiefly in the macerating and tormenting, pining and pinching of our bodies, by depriuing them of all necessaries, and among others, of their naturall rest and sleepe; the which errour I haue at large refuted in another place. But we are to know, that as we may nourish the flesh, and consume the body; and contrariwise, nourish the body, and mortifie the flesh: so we may take our bodily sleepe (as all the faithfull haue done in the state of Regeneration) and yet maintaine the spirituall watch; and watch euen whole nights, as Iudas that betrayed Christ, the souldiers at his Sepulchre, and the eues and adulterers, that lye in wait to make spoyle of their neighbours goods and chastity, and yet sleepe and snore in the deepe lethargie of sinne and wickednesse. So that it is not the bodily watchfulnesse or sleepe that is commanded or forbidden; for of this, as of all of like kinde, the Apostles saying is verified, namely, that bodily exercise profiteth little; yea it hurterh much, if we rest in it as the deed done, or doe it as a worke satisfactory and meritorious; not subduing the flesh, but puffing it vp with pride and presumption, nor inabling vs to Gods seruice, but making the body vsfit to bee a ready instrument for the soule, whilest by immoderate watching it is weakened and ineebled, and becommeth more dull and drowzie, more lumpish and vncheerfull to all good duties of a godly life.

And yet I deny not but that there may be good vse of bodily watching, when as it is moderate and seasonable, not onely in respect of ciuill and morall affaires, as the dispatching of our necessary businesse, ministering to our friends vpon their bed of sicknesse, and such like, but also as it conduceth vnto spirituall ends; as when it furthereth vs in keeping our spirituall watch, &c. is not rested in as a bodily exercise, but referred and desti-

nated to an holy and religious end. As when with David, Paul, and Silas we abridge our selues of sleepe, that wee may praise God by singing of Psalmes, or lifting vp in silence our thankfull hearts vnto God for extraordinary benefitts; or when with our Saniour Christ, and his Church in persecution, we spend the night in prayer and other religious exercises. And thus our Saniour requireth of his Apostles bodily watchfulnesse to a spirituall end; Watch and pray (saith he) that ye fall not into temptation. But yet the Christian waking and watching, which in the Scriptures are so much commended vnto vs, is not corporall; but spirituall, or onely corporall, so farre forth as the Spirituall thereby may be aduanced and furthered. For which the Word of God is so cleare, that it needs not the light of any other Comment; Awake thou that sleepest, and arise up from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light. Out of which sleepe of sinne when they are awakened, he exhorteth them to keepe the Christian watch: See thou that ye walke circumspectly, not as fooles, but as wise; redeeming the time, because the dayes are euill. And againe; Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving. So hauing commended vnto vs the spirituall armour, he willeth vs to pray alwayes, and watch thereunto with all perseuerance. And yet more plainly, Awake to righteousness, and sinne not. Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quize your selues like men, be strong. Neither doth the Apostle inhibit bodily sleepe and naturall rest, but carnall security and sleepe in sinne. Ye are (saith he) children of light, and of the day; not of night, nor of darknesse; therefore let vs not sleepe, as do others, but let vs watch and be sober, &c. putting on the breast-plate of faith and loue, and for an helmet, the hope of saluation.

Byall which it appeareth, that the Christian watchfulnesse which is commended vnto vs in the Scriptures, is not bodily and naturall, but supernaturall and spirituall. Now let vs consider in the next place what it is, and wherein it consisteth. Concerning the former: The Christian end spirituall watch, is an heedfull obseruation of our selues in all things, and a serious, carefull, and diligent circumspection ouer all our wayes, that wee may please God by doing his will, and neither commit any sinne which hee hath forbidden, nor omit any duty which hee hath commanded. The which description setteth forth vnto vs the nature of the Christian watch, as it is commended vnto vs in the holy Scriptures. Thus the Lord inioyning this watch by Moses the Captaine of his people, saith; Take heed to thy selfe, and keepe thy soule diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes haue seene, and lest they depart from thine heart, all the dayes of thy life. And our Saniour prescribing it, doeth expresse it in these words; Take yee heed, watch and pray; for yee know not when the time is; watch yee therefore, lest coming suddenly hee finde you sleeping. So the Apostle expoundeth that phrase, of awaking out of sleepe, and arising from the dead, in the next words; See that yee walke circumspectly, not as fooles, but as wise; redeeming the time, because the dayes are euill. And exhorting the Watch-men of the Church, to keepe diligently this watch, hee willeth them to take heed vnto themselves, and to all the flocke, ouer which, the holy Ghost had made them ouerseers to feed the Church of God, which he had purchased with his blood.

Now if we would know wherein this obseruation and circumspection consisteth, consisteth, and in what it is to be vsed and exercised; the Apostle telleth vs, that it must not be in some few things onely, the rest being neglected; but in all things whatsoeuer; Watch then in all things; so that wee must keepe this watch at all times, in all places, vpon all occasions, when we are alone, and when we are in company; abroad and at home, in the workes of our callings, and in our recreations, when we haue to deale with others; and when we are exercised in our owne businesse; in ciuill affaires and morall actions, and in our religious duties which we performe vnto God, as hearing, reading, praying, meditating; according to that of our Saviour; Take heed how ye heare, watch and pray. And seeing the deuill layeth baites and snares to catch vs in all places and in all things, we must be very heedfull and circumspect, that we doe not fall into his nets of perdition. When wee are alone, we must take heed that wee be not idle and vnprofitable, wholly taken vp with worldly thoughts and sinfull imaginations, nor ouertaken by Satans tentations, inticing vs to the committing of secret sinnes, seeing solitude exempteth vs from the feare, either of shame or punishment. When we are to goe into company, we must looke to our selues, that we be not corrupted with euill examples, and vaine and rotten communication, and that we doe not thus corrupt others, but edifie them by our sauoury speeches, and holy conuersation. When we looke to be taken vp in Christian conferences, we must watch ouer our selues, that wee fall not, through selfe-loue ouer-weening our owne gifts, into pride and vaine-glory, nor through pride breake out into anger and contention. When we go to compound differences between neighbours, we must take heed, that we be not partial to either side for worldly respects, nor through stiffenesse and obstinacie, cause more discord in stead of making peace. When we are going to a feast, let vs set a watch ouer our appetite, that it doe not draw vs to gluttony and excesse; but that we so vse Gods greater blessings, as that wee be fitted by them to doe him better seruice. When we are about to doe the workes of mercy, we must take heed of pride and affectation of humane praises, or that wee haue in them any opinion of meriting thereby any thing at Gods hands. When we are to pray, or heare the Word, or to performe any other religious duty of Gods seruice, knowing that in them also Satan layeth his snares, and spareth for no paines to make these exercises vnprofitable, and euen turne them into sinne; let vs obserue our watch when we goe about them, that we may be well prepared, and performe them with all reuerence and attention, faith and feruencie of spirit, carefully looking to our minds and hearts, that they bee not hindred in these duties with worldly distractions, and wandring thoughts, dulnesse, drowzinesse, and carnall wearinesse. In a word, there is nothing wherein this watch is not to bee kept, seeing in all things, through Satans wiles, and the deceitfulnesse of our owne hearts, wee are indangered vnto sinne; either sayling in the matter of our actions, or in our manner of doing them.

Neither must this watch be kept ouer some of our parts onely, neglecting the rest, as ouer the body alone, but not the soule, or the soule, and not the body, but ouer the whole man, that in all our powers and parts, inward faculties and outward actions, we may please God by doing his will.

That we must watch ouer all the powers and parts of our soules and bodies.

Deut. 4. 9.

Mat. 6. 23.

But yet the more accurate and diligent watch must bee ouer the soule, as being the more subtile and excellent part, according to that expresse charge of Almighty God; Take heed to thy selfe, and keepe thy soule diligently: implying, that though this watch must be kept ouer the whole man, yet the soule, which is the better part, must bee looked vnto with greatest care and circumspection. Thus wee must watch ouer all the speciall faculties of our soules, as ouer our reason and iudgement, that they be not darkened with ignorance (for if the light be darknesse, how great is that darknesse?) nor corrupted and misled into errours and heresies. Ouer our memories, that they neither retaine those vanities and sinfull impression which should be rased and blotted out, nor forget those things which God hath entrusted to their keeping. Ouer our consciences, that they bee pure and cleane, purged from dead workes, and that they be not slacke in doing their duty, in excusing and accusing, nor wee negligent in giuing heed to their censure. Ouer our wills, that they goe not before, but waite vpon holy reason, chusing and imbracing that which it commendeth, and refusing and reiecting that which it condemneth and disalloweth. But especially, wee must keepe this carefull watch ouer our mindes and imaginations, which naturally are euill, and that continually, being most disordered and licentious, and not to be kept within any compasse, if we leaue them vnto their owne liberty. And therefore if we would keepe our soules in good plight and free from danger, we must not foolishly imagine that thought is free, or that wee may suffer our phantasies and imaginations to take their full scope and pleasure, in rousing and ranging which way they list; for if they thus get the bridle (as it were) betweene their teeth, they will run with vs in a headlong course into vanity and sinne; whereby displeasing God, we shall moue him to giue vs ouer to our owne imaginations, and to the tentations of Satan, suggesting into them horrible blasphemies. For when hee findeth them (Dina-like) wandring abroad, and from vnder the gard of Gods protection, he defloureth and defileth them with hellish pollution, and turneth the pleasure of their liberty into horror and griefe. Moreover, by giuing liberty to our thoughts and imaginations to range whither they list, and not accustoming to keepe them in any compasse, and within the bounds of Gods feare, we shall not be able, when we most desire it, to bring them into any order, but they will be ready to disturbe and distract vs in our best duties. For like runagate seruants, they will bee to seeke when we most need them, and be ranging about worldly vanities, when wee would haue them wholly exercised in religious duties. Or if with much paines we doe bring them home, and binde them to their taske, being inured to liberty, and delighting themselues in rousing abroad, they will, to recouer their lost pleasure, breake all their bonds, run away from vs, and be taken vp with worldly cogitations, so as we shall not be able to heare the Word, or pray, or meditate, or performe any other religious duties, without being distracted and interrupted in them with these earthly thoughts and wandring imaginations. From which if wee would be free, our best course is to watch ouer our cogitations and phantasies at other times, and to keepe them vnder command, that they may bee exercised about things profitable. For if wee vsually giue them liberty to range whither whither they list, custome will cause an habit, and this liberty will grow to licentiousnesse, so as we shall reduce them into no order, nor make them fit for any good imployment. Neither is it enough, that we restraîne our thoughts from rousing after worldly vanities, but we must also haue them taken vp and exercised in spirituall, heavenly, or at least ciuill and morall Meditations about the affaires of our honest callings; for if they bee not busied about these, Satan will thrust in the other, and finding them empty of any good thing, hee will easily replenish them with those that are euill.

But aboue all other our internall parts, we must keepe our watch with greatest care ouer our hearts, according to the Wisemans counsell; Aboue all keeping, or with all diligence keepe thy heart, for out of it are the issues of life: and the admonition of the Apostle; Take heed, breshren, lest there be in any of you an euill heart of unbeliefe, in departing from the liuing God. For the heart is the treasury either of all good or euill, and out of it the tongue speaketh, and the hand worketh. It is the fountaine of all our words and actions, and if it be corrupt, it will defile them too; but if it bee clenfed and purified by faith, it will also purifie the streames which flow from it. It is a vessell apt to receiue all liquors good or euill, and therefore our care must be to replenish it with the best, and then to couer and keepe it close, that nothing be spilt and lost, and lest it receiue soyle, or haue any euill thing infused into it; for as the Wiseman obserued, dead Flies taint the whole pot of precious oyntment. It must be kept carefully as an inclosed Garden and Vineyard, that all annoyances being kept out with the fence, it may bring forth good fruits and ripe Grapes pleasing to Gods taste; and not suffered to lye open as an high-way, where all things are trampled vnder-foot or stolne away, and nothing suffered to thriue which is profitable for vse. Now by heart, heere I chiefly vnderstand all the affections and desires, both concupiscible and irascible, all the passions of loue, hatred, hope, despaire, ioy, sorrow, anger, and feare. And by keeping of them, their holding in subiection vnto reason, it selfe being first made subiect to the Word and will of God, and the right imploying of them about their fit and proper objects, onely louing that which is good, and hating that which is euill, reioycing in the testimonies of Gods loue, and sorrowing for sinne, because he is displeased with it, hoping in Gods mercies, and despairing in our owne strength, fearing God, in respect of his mercies and iudgements, and being angry with that onely wherewith hee is offended and dishonoured. And if we thus keepe our hearts in tune and order, they will make sweet musicke in Gods hearings; but if the affections and passions rebell against reason, and fall at variance one with another, we can expect nothing but iarring discords and tumultuous confusion. If we keepe them locked vp (as sometime Aeolus the windes) vnder the command of reason, our hearts and mindes will be calme and quiet; but set open the gates, and leaue them to their liberry, and nothing will follow, but stormes, tempests, and shipwracke of our soules vpon the rockes of sinne. Blow away the clouds and foggy mists, and we shall in our little world haue a cleere se, but let them ouer-cast and ouercloud reason, which is the Sunne in the firmament, and what can follow but darkenesse and disorder, stumbling bling and falling at euery stone of offence? But especially we must watch ouer our hearts, that wee may keepe out camall concupiscence from entring, and that we may withstand and shut the doore of our hearts against the first motions and inclinations vnto sinne; euen as wee would keepe out of our houses in the plague time, infectious ayre; or in the time of warre, our mighty and malicious enemies from entring into our City or Countrey; or if they bee entred at vnawares, wee must repell them presently, at their first appearing vpon our Coast, and giue them no time to fortifie and make themselues strong; wee must crush this Cockatrice in the shell, and when they are yong, dash this Babylonish brood against the stones.

Now as wee must obserue a carefull watch in keeping out, or cleansing our hearts from all sinne and corruption, so aboue all, that wee doe not nourish in them such as are most dangerous to our soules health. As first and principally we must beware of those finnes and vices, vnto which, through our naturall corruption we are most inclined, the which we shall discern by our often falling into them, by our lothnesse to leaue them, and after we haue resolved to part with them, and haue already broken from them by vnfeined repentance, by our hanging after them in our carnall loue, which maketh vs, after we are forced to leaue them for the safety of our soules, to looke backe vnto them (like Lots wife towards Sodom) with a desire to returne, were wee not beaten from them with the feare of Gods Iudgements. By which signes, when we haue discovered them, we must with greatest care watch ouer our hearts, that wee bee not againe ouertaken of them; first, because wee haue greatest cause to hate and abhorre them, seeing by them wee haue most dishonoured and displeased God. Secondly, because they haue most often wounded our consciences, and giuen vs the greatest foyles. Thirdly, because they haue most disturbed our inward peace, and depriued our hearts of spirituall ioy in the assurance of Gods loue. Fourthly, because we are still most prone to fall into them, by reason that our corrupt natures are so much inclined towards them; and our carnall loue doting vpon them, are ready vpon all occasions to renew their league and giue them entertainment. And therefore as with greatest care and vigilance, wee arme our selues against such enemies, as haue a strong party in our owne City, and many secret Traytors, which are alwayes ready to open the gates and let them in; so must wee keepe the narrowest watch, and bend our chiefest force against such finnes as our flesh and carnall lusts doe most affect, and are in greatest league and liking with them, seeing these secret Traytors are still in readinesse to giue them entertainment, and betray our soules vnto them, if wee doe but a little intermit our spirituall watch. Secondly, we must with singular circumspection take heed of those vices and finnes, which doe most ordinarily waite vpon our speciall callings, seeing by reason that wee are daily conuersant in them, they doe make against our soules most often and fierce assaults; and the rather, because by our many foyles and falls they become customeable, and harden our hearts in them, our often sinning searing the conscience, and taking away the sense of sinne. And thus Magistrates must watch ouer themselues, that they doe not peruert iud-

ment, by taking bribes and rewards, and that they haue no respect of persons; nor for feare or fauour doe any iniustice. Thus Lawyers must take speciall heed, that they doe not for their fees blind the eyes of the Iudge by their false and corrupt pleading, paynting ouer a soule cause with faire glosses, and that they doe not protract suites, that they may grow rich out of their Clyents pouerty. And Physicallians, that they doe not deale vnfaithfully with their parients; and delay the cure for their owne aduantage. And Diuines, that they doe not for worldly lucre become non-residents, starving their peoples soules, to fill their owne purses, and purchase fields with the price of blood: And that they bee not slothfull and negligent in feeding their soules that are committed to their charge, following Peters counsell to Christ; Master, spare thy selfe. And Traders, that they doe not vse deceit in buying and selling, nor tell vntruths, to put off their wares at an higher rate. And finally, thus must Artificers watch ouer themselves, that they doe not their worke deceitfully, onely for sale, and vnseruiceable for vse. Vnto which speciall circumspection, in respect of our callings and the sinnes incident vnto them, the Scriptures exhort. Thus Iohn the Baptist perswaded the Publicanes, whose calling was to liue by toles and customes, to take heed of exacting more then their due; and the Souldiers, that they should beware of offering violence vnto any man; but bee content with their owne wages. And our Saviour hauing to deale with rich landed men, willett them to take heed of conetousnesse. And the Apostles Paul and Peter, speaking vnto Ministers and Pastors, exhort them to take heed to their flockes committed vnto their charge, that they did feed them with the bread of life, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind. Finally, we must watch ouer our hearts, that they be not corrupted and drawne away from God with the sins of the times and Countrey in which wee liue; both because wee are apt to follow a multitude in doing euill, and are easily misled by bad examples; our corruption, like tinder, receiuing and nourishing these hellish sparkes; and being same into these sinnes, wee are apt to continue in them without feeling or remorse, the multitude of offenders taking away the sense of sinne. And therefore, as in infectious times and places we are not willing (vnlesse we be fooles) to haue the plague for company; but the more the contagion is spread, the more we increase our care that we doe not come into places infected, or if we be constrained through the necessity of our calling to liue in them, yet we take heed that we doe not consort with those that are visited, further then necessity and charity requireth; and carefully and continually vse our best preseruatiues to keepe out the infection; or if wee be tainted, the best Antidotes and Cordials to expell the poyson with all speed, before it haue seized vpon the heart: so must we vse the like or greater care, when we liue in places and times infected with speciall and heynous sinnes, that wee shunne those that are tainted with them; or vse our best preseruatiues to preserue vs from their infection; or if wee be touched in the common contagion, that wee doe not nourish the poyson in our hearts by carnall loue, but expell it with what speed we can, by rising againe in vnfaigned repentance; seeing the danger heere as farre exceedeth the other, as the soule the body; the euils of sinne, the euils of sicknesse; or death death which is endlesse and euermlasting, that which is corporall and momentary. And thus we are to watch ouer our soules, hearts and internall faculties. The like watch we must keep ouer our all outward parts, and first ouer all our senses, the which are the gates of our soules, by which all things enter, nothing almost being in the vnderstanding, heart, and memory, which hath not found admittance by the senses. And therefore as those who desire to keepe the City safe when it is besieged, doe keepe most diligent watch about the gates, suffering none to passe in or out, but onely knowne friends, without due examination whether their comming be for good or ill: so being besieged on all sides by our spirituall enemies, we must keepe a strait watch ouer our senses, which are the visuall passage by which they send their forces to surprize vs, admitting nothing to enter, without due triall taken, whether it be a friend or foe to our saluation: for as long as we thus watch the gates, and keepe them fast locked and barred against all euils, the City of our soules, and Castle of our hearts, can neuer be sacked and spoyled by all the might and malice of our spirituall enemies. Now this watch ouer our senses doth chiefly consist in two things. First, in restraining them of their liberty, and not suffering them to range and roue at pleasure, and whither they list, nor to satisfie themselves, euen vnto satiety, with sensuall delights, and full fruition of their seuerall objects; but oftentimes stopping them in their course and full carriere, let vs call them to account, whether the things which they are exercised about, are as profitable to our soules, as pleasant to our senses; or contrariwise, if they doe not, like sweet drinckes, conueigh into our soules some deadly poyson, and bring more hurt and hinderance to the life of grace, then ioy and comfort to the life of nature. Secondly, when we allow our senses to take their pleasures, we must carefully obserue, that they delight themselves only in things lawfull, both in respect of matter, measure, and manner, not suffering our eyes to gaze vpon hurtfull vanities, and lasciuious and wanton objects; nor our eares to heare scurrilous iests, and such rotten speeches as will corrupt good manners, nor our taste to draw vs on by, delighting in pleasant meates and drinckes, to excesse, gluttony and drunkennesse; but as wee may, to satisfie nature, and to refresh and comfort our hearts, giue some liberty vnto our senses to inioy their delights; so our care must be, that we not onely make choyce of lawfull objects, but also that they be exercised about them in a right manner, and so moderated in respect of the measure, that our hearts doe not suffer of them, nor be glewed by carnall delight vnto the earth, and so made vnfit for spirituall exercises and heavenly meditations. But we must so vse these sensuall pleasures, as not abusing them, to cheere the spirit, and not pamper the flesh, as comforts in our pilgrimage, to make vs to goe on with more cheerfulness in our way, and not as impediments to hinder vs in our iourney, by fastening our hearts vnto the vanities of the world.

CAP. X.

of Christian watchfulnesse ouer the senses, our tongues
and actions.

More especially, wee must keepe this carefull watch ouer our eyes, which are the windowes of our soules, through which they behold all earthly objects, not suffering them to roue about at pleasure, and to glut themselues with delightfull sights, but restraining them as much as we can, that they doe not behold that in this kind, which it is not lawfull to couet: For of seeing comes louing; and of louing, lusting and desiring. We must keepe them from beholding any thing that may be vnto vs a ground of temptation, whereby we may be drawne into any sinne, or which may be a distraction vnto vs in Gods seruice, and hinder our well performing of any Christian exercise, but let vs, as neere as wee can, make choyce of such sights as will more profit the soule, then please the sense. Thus Iob watched ouer his eyes, and because he would be sure to keep them within compass, he leaueth them not to their owne liberty, but keepeth them vnder covenant, that they should not in any wanton manner, so much as looke vpon a woman. And this is that which Salomon meaneth, where he saith, that the wise mans eyes are in his head, but the eyes of a foole are in the ends of the earth. Not that they doe not all alike stand in their heads, but that a wise man leaueth not his eyes loose to their owne liberty, but ruleth and governeth them with wisdom and discretion, not suffering them to behold vnlawfull objects, or those which are lawfull, vnlawfully, either in respect of manner, or measure; whereas a foole vseth no restraint, but suffereth them to roue into all the corners of the world. Into which folly David fell, when he suffered his eyes to gaze their fill vpon the beauty of another mans wife, this folly drawing him on to commit a greater folly in Israel; and therefore hauing lamentable experience of his owne frailty, he keepeth afterwards ouer them a surer watch; which yet not being sure enough, he desireth the Lord to watch ouer him, and to turne away his eyes, lest he should behold vanity. With like care wee must watch ouer our eares, to keepe them from hearing any thing which is vaine and sinfull; tending to the corrupting of our soules, or the hindring of them in the growth of grace: As all filthy communication and speeches tending to Gods dishonour, and our owne, or our neighbours hurt, all insulfe and vflauory talke, bitter taunts, and vnchristian and spitefull iests, all whisperings, backbiting and slanderings, and all such discourses as feed the flesh, and starue the spirit, wed vs to the world, and weane vs from God. For though like the Syrens songs they tickle and delight the eare, yet they wound the heart and conscience with sinne, and bring vs into such a spirituall phrenzie, that we are ready to leape ouer-board into a sea of perdition. And therefore we must stop our eares against these bewitching forcerers; and not for the pleasing of our carnall sense, hazard the destruction of our precious soules. The hearing is called the learned sense; and happy are they, who by their care and watchfulnesse prouide for themselves felues profitable and good Masters, of whom they may learne sauing wil-dome; and not such as teach nothing else but vanity and sinne. And the eares like conduit-pipes conuey vnto the soule, either the cleere streames of the water of Life, or the filthy puddles of sinne and death; and therefore let vs be carefull to bring them daily to be filled at Gods Fountaine, lest the diuell abuse them, to draine the filth out of the polluted sinners and channels of wicked mouthes. Thus we must watch ouer our taste, that we doe not, to please the palate, vse such excesse in our diet, as will disable vs to Christian duties; and that the end of our eating be chiefly the refreshing and comforting of our bodies, that they may be fit for Gods service who hath fed them, and not the pampering of the flesh with sensuall delight. For if we giue way to our appetite, this short and brutish pleasure will bring vpon vs innumerable euils: As vpon our bodies, sicknesses and short life; and vpon our soules and bodies both, sloth and idlenesse, lumpish heauinesse and vnaptnesse to any good action, drowzie dulnesse, or vaine mirth and furilous babbling, shortnesse of memory, and blockishnesse of vnderstanding, wanton dalliance and inflammation of our hearts with vnlawfull lusts. And thus finally wee must watch ouer our sense of touching, that we doe not, to please it, inlaue our selues to efminate daintinesse, thinking that wee are quite vndone, if wee may not rumble at our ease vpon our beds of downe, and goe (like those in Kings houses) in soft rayment; or (like Diues) be clothed in Purple and fine linnen every day. But let vs inure this sense to man-like hardnesse, that wee may not thinke it strange and intolerable to lye hardly, and goe barely, if Christ who suffered so much for vs, doe call vs to suffer a little for the testimony of his truth. And much more must wee restraîne this sense from all vnlawfull objects; as vnchaste kisses, lasciuious imbracements, and wanton dalliances, which tend to the inflaming of our hearts with vncleane lusts, and make our bodies, which are the Temples of the holy Ghost, polluted brothel-houses, and filthy styes for wicked spirits.

Secondly, we must keepe a carefull watch ouer our tongues, according to the example of the Prophet David; I said, I will take heed to my wayes, that I sinne not with my tongue. For the well-ruling and ordering of our tongues is a matter of great moment, for the furthering or hindering of vs in the course of a Christian conuersation; according to that of Salamon, A wholesome tongue is a tree of life, but peruerse nesse therein is a breach in the spirit. If we vse it well, it will be our glory, as being a notable instrument of glorifying God, whilest we speake to his praise, and those that honour him, he will honour; but if wee abuse it vnto sinne, it will become our shame, seeing thereby we dishonour God who hath giuen it vs, and all good things. If we order it wisely, and speake things profitable and worth the hearing, we shall edifie our brethren: For the lips of the wise disperse knowledge; and a word filthy spoken, is like apples of gold, in pictures of siluer; that is, pleasant and profitable, like workes of gold curiously and artificially grauen by a cunning workman; but if we vent nothing but filth and folly, bringing vp (as it were) our excrements by a wrong way, we shall annoy our hearers, with our rotten and vsauory speeches, and by our euill words, corrupt their good meanes, as the Apostle speaketh. If we speake wisely and to edification, we shall, in profiting others, haue the comfort of it in our owne hearts: For as Salomon speaketh, A man hath ioy by the answer of his mouth, and a word spoken in due season, how good is it, both to the speaker, and to the hearers? But when a man hath pleased himselfe, for the time, with scurrilous iests (the some and froth of wit) it is his sinne and shame, and leaueth nothing behind it but sorrow, & the tormenting sting of an euill conscience. If our discourse be religious and honest, & such as becommeth Christian grauity, it is a good signe & comfortable euidence vnto vs, that we are iust and vpright in Gods sight: For the mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of iudgment. And, If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body: but if our talke be corrupt and vsanoury, it is a signe of a rotten and wicked heart: for as our Sauour telleth vs, out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh: A good man, out of the good treasure of the heart, bringeth forth good things; and an euill man, out of the euill treasure, bringeth forth euill things. In a word, Life and death are in the power of the tongue, and they that loue it, shall eate the fruit thereof: and as our Sauour telleth vs; By our words we shall be iustified, and by our words we shall be condemned. In which regard it standeth vs vpon, to keep a narrow watch ouer our mouthes, that we offend not in our speeches, and to resolue with Dauid, that our tongues shall speak of righteousness all the day long; so speaking & doing, as those that shal be iudged by the law of liberty.

Now this watch ouer our tongues must tend to the right ordering of the, both in respect of silence, & of speech. For we must not only restraints our tongues from euill and corrupt communication; but also order them a right in speaking that which is good, taking care not alone to speak good things, but also in a good maner, when as they are seasonable & profitable in respect of circumstances, time and place, the causes mouing vs, and the persons hearing vs: not powring out good speeches without discretiō, but obseruing measure, grauity and modesty, not thinking it enough to speak that which is good, when some others are present that could speake better. And therefore, as we doe not suffer pots and glasses of sweet waters, to haue their full vent, but keepe their mouthes close stopped, to preserue their sweetness for such times wherein it may most seasonably be vsed; so though our hearts be full of sweetness, and (as the Psalmist speaketh) inditers of good matter; yet we must not vent it with open mouth, which will make it lose much of its sweetness, but let vs keepe it in, till we haue got some seasonable time, when as we may hope to spend it to some good purpose. For which moderating of our tongues by seasonable silence, and auoyding of too much talking, the wise Salomon giueth vs good caueats and counsell: In the multitude of words (saith he) there wanteth not sinne, (seeing a man that speaketh much, venteth some euill, or commonly is tainted with pride and selfe loue in speaking that which is good) but hee that refraineth his lips, is wise. And againe, He that hath knowledge, spareth his words, (so that he hath but a shew of knowledge that lauishly spendeth them) and a man of vnderstanding is of an excellent spirit, knowing when to speake; and when to keepe silence, And euen a foole, when hee holdeth his peace, is counted wise; and he that shutteth his lips, is esteemed a man of vnderstanding: In which regard Iob wissheth earnestly that his friends would hold their peace; that it might bee imputed vnto them for wisdom, because they spoke many good things, yet not to the purpose, nor did prudently in them to Jobs person or state, which being so grievously afflicted and dejected, needed (if they would have spoken seasonably) cordials of comfort, and not bitter purges, or the distastfull infusion of gall and wormwood. And the Apostle James exhorteth vs, to be swift to hear, and slow to speak. To which purpose (as one obserueth) God hath wisely appointed a double gard to keepe in the tongue, the lips, and two row of teeth, that it might be restrained from breaking out by this double fence, and might be preserved from slipping, being seated by nature in such a moyst and slippery place. And as we must keepe this watch ouer our tongues in respect of keeping silence; so also in respect of speech; for our tongues are not giuen vs to this end chiefly, that wee should restraints them and say nothing, but that they might be our glory, in glorifying God by setting forth his praise. And the Wise man telleth vs, that as there is a time to keepe silence, so also there is a time to speake. And here our first care must be, that according to the Psalmists counsell, we keepe our tongues from euill, and our lips from speaking guile. And as the Apostle admonisheth, that wee suffer no corrupt communication to proceed out of our mouthes, but that which is good to the vse of edifying, that is may minister grace to the hearers; and that we use neither filthinesse, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not conuenient, but rather giuing of thanks. But especially, let vs watch ouer our soules, and our tongues, that we doe not (as it is the common custome of the most) abuse them to slanders and reproches, backbiting, and sharpe censuring of our neighbours; but taking all things, doubtfully spoken and done, in the best part, excusing that which is tolerable, commending that which is good, and extenuating faults of frailty and infirmity, let vs approoue our selues to be truly charitable, by making our loue to serue as a couer to hide a multitude of sinnes. Yea, so farre should we be from wronging our neighbours, by being the authours of euill reports, that we should not lend our eares to others that spread them, but approoue our selues by this signe, to be Citizens of heauen, that we will not receiue a reproch against our neighbours, nor so much as vouchsafe to take it vp, though we found it by the highway side. For (as one saith) he is blessed that hath armed himselfe so against this vice, that no man dare detract from any before him. And in the next place we must watch ouer our tongues, that our speech may bee alwayes with grace, seasoned with the salt of wisdom and Christian prudence, which teacheth vs to know how we may answere euery man, and speake to their profit and edification. The which wise and religious ruling of our tongues, is a matter of great moment, and no lesse difficulty; For as the Apostle James telleth vs, though the tongue be but a little member, yet it is a world of iniquity, and boasteth of great things. And as a little fire is sufficient to inflame great store of matter: so the tongue defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature, and is it selfe set on fire of hell; and such an vnwholy euill, full of deadly payson, as no man can tame by sole strength of nature. And yet such is the necessity of the well-gouerning of it, that all our Religion is to no purpose without it. For if any man amongst vs seeme to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiueth his owne heart, that mans Religion is ruine. In which regard we must keepe over it the straighter watch; as we vse to curbe and keepe in a head-strong horse, with so much the sharper and stronger bit; and seeing no man can with his owne circumspection rule it sufficiently, but that it will breake from him at vnawares, and the Lord onely is sufficient to manage and direct it, according to that of Salomon, The preparation of the heart, and the answer of the tongue is from the Lord; therefore we must pray with David, that he will set a watch before our mouth, and keepe the dore of our lips; and that he will so open our lips, that our mouth may shew forth his praise.

Lastly, we must set this diligent watch over our workes and actions, that they may in all things be conformable to the Word and will of God, whilest we doe that which hee hath commanded, and leaue undone that which he hath forbidden. Thus the Wise man exhorteth vs, not to be rash and vnaduised in our courses; but to ponder the path of our feet, and let all our wayes be established, turning neither to the right hand, nor to the left, and removing our foot from euill. And this hee maketh to be a note of a man truly wise: for whereas a silly man, being ouer-credulous, is rash and headlong in all his enterprises, A prudent man looketh well to his going: and whereas the foole rageth and is confident, a wise man feareth and departeth from euill. And because our wayes are, through the malice of our spirituall enemies, on all sides beset with snares, wherewith, if we be not very circumspect, we shall easily be caught; therefore in this regard he saith, that hee is blessed that feareth alwayes, and seeing we daily tread vpon slippery places, whilest we are managing our worldly affaires. Heereof it is, that the Apostle commendeth vnto vs this watchfull care, willett him who thinketh that he standeth, take heed lest he fall. Now this care and watchfulnesse respecting our actions, prouideth, first, that we spend none of our precious time in sloth and idlenesse, (for by doing nothing, we shall quickly learne to doe that which is ill) but that we be alwayes exercised in some good employment, respecting Gods glory, or our owne, or our neighbours good, as I haue shewed at large before, and therefore heere thus briefly passe it ouer. Secondly, that with all care and circumspection wee keepe our selues from all sinfull actions, and though through Satans tentations, and our owne corruption, we haue conceived sinne in the heart, yet let vs there smother it, as in the wombe, and not consummate and perfect it, and (as it were) by acting of it, bring it vnto birth. Finally, wee must watch ouer our workes and actions, that we may not onely shunne euill, but also doe that which is good, that thereby we may glorifie God by the light of our godly liues, adorne our profession, edifie our neighbours by our good example, and make our owne calling and election sure. But of this also I haue spoken before.

of the ends at which we must ayme in the Christian watch.

§. Sect. I.

Of three speciall ends of our Christian watch.

And these are the things wherein our Christian watch chiefly consisteth, and about which it is exercised. The next point to be considered, is, the ends at which wee must principally ayme in it, the which are diuers. The first and chiefe is, that we may please God in all things, for which vse, this watch is most profitable and necessary. For seeing naturally our wayes are wholly corrupt, so as wee can please him in nothing, it is not possible, without singular care and circumspection, that wee should so carry our selues in our whole conuersation, as that all our actions may bee acceptable in his sight. Secondly, wee must thus watch ouer our selues, that wee may daily more and more mortifie our corruptions, especially those which beare greatest sway in vs; and that wee may auoyd all manner of actual transgressions, and those, about all the rest, wherewith wee haue beene most often ouertaken, because Satan and our owne corruption are most ready to vse those weapons of iniquity to foyle and ouercome vs, which they haue found by experience most potent to preuaile against vs. Nor must we thinke any sinne so small that wee may neglect it, seeing the least is strong enough to make way for greater. Neither must we onely watchfully auoyd the sinnes themselves, but also all the occasions and meanes which may allure and draw vs vnto them. For where God hath forbidden any vice, there hee also forbiddeth the occasions and meanes of it, which if wee neglect and runne wilfully into tentations, it is iust with God, when we thus tempt him, to withdraw his grace, and to leaue vs to the Tempter; and then what can follow but our shamefull foyles and falls? For who can carry fire in his bosome, and not bee burnt? who can hope to liue vnto old age, that maketh it his daily sport, to bee dallying with the meanes and occasions of death? And therefore if we would preserue our soules from being defiled with the filthy strumpet of sinne and vice, let vs carefully shunne her vnchaste imbracements; yea (as Salomon speaketh) let vs remooue our way farre from her, and come not neere the doore of her house. And if we would not walke in the wayes of sinne which lead to destruction; Let vs not so much as once enter into the path of the wicked, nor goe in the way of euill men, but auoyd it, passe not by it, turne from it, and passe away. If wee would not doe the deuils workes of vniustice, wee must not so much as receiue his wages; but shake our hands from holding of bribes. If wee would not become euill and vaine in our thoughts and actions, wee must shut our eyes from seeing euill; and turne them away from beholding vanity. Thirdly, wee must keepe this watch, not onely that we may auoyd all sinne; but also that wee may performe all Christian and holy duties with all diligence and constancie, not contenting our selues to doe some, and neglect others, or to bee earnest in them sometimes, and soone after carelesse and slothfull; but obseruing all, and in all seasons. Yea, this watch must extend it selfe, not onely to the matter of Christian duties, but also to the maner; as that they be done in loue and obedience.

dience to God, that wee may thereby glorifie him in faith and with a good conscience, with alacrity and cheerefulnesse, in sincerity and truth, without all hypocrisie, dulnesse, and wearinesse; And finally, that wee doe them prudently and seasonably, with due respect to all circumstances of persons, time, and place. In all which respects, if wee doe not carefully keepe the Christian watch, it is not possible but that wee shall continually faile, both in the matter and manner of our duties: seeing wee are naturally auerſe and backward vnto them, sluggish and slothfull, rash and vndiscreete in doing of them; and therefore if wee doe not carefully watch ouer our hearts, wee shall vpon every slight occasion neglect them altogether, or grow cold and carelesse, slacke and remisse, drowzy and soone weary in performing them. Whereas, if keeping this watch, wee stirre vp and re-enliue Gods graces in vs, when they are ready to languish and die, and (with the Ostridge) hasten our speed, by adding vnto our wings of faith and loue, the spurres of Gods feare, wee shall, without thinking of wearinesse, run much more swiftly and surely in the wayes of Gods Commandements.

Finally, in this our watch we must carefully take heed, that whilest wee set our selues to performe the duties of a godly life, wee be not hindred by the tentations of our spirituall enemies, or at least so disturbed and disabled, that not doing them in that manner as we ought, we lose all the fruit of our labours. In which respect, our Sauour exhorteth his Apostles to ioyne watching with their prayer, that they might not fall into temptation, nor onely vnderstanding thereby a bodily watchfulnesse opposed to naturall sleepe, but also the spirituall watching opposed to carnall security, the sleepe of the soule, with both which they were at that time ouertaken. For howsoeuer the consideration of the multitude, might, and malice of our spirituall enemies, is a motiue sufficient to make vs stand watchfully vpon our gard, seeing they assault vs on all sides with their engines of battery, lay secret ambushments in every corner, and fill all places so full of their nets and snares, that without singular circumspection we cannot auoyd them: yet seeing they neuer bend their malice and might so furiously against vs, as when they see vs exercised about Christian duties, that they may either discourage vs, or make them vnprofitable; who seeth not that wee had heere need to keepe a double watch? Like wicked theeuers, often fleshed with blood and cruelty, they are alwayes ready to doe vs a mischief, and to beate vs euen to the death when they find nothing about vs; but then they double their watch and diligence, in surprizing vs by the way, when as we are going about the seruice of our heavenly Master, and carry with vs the rich treasures of his graces; in which regard, wee must be no lesse vigilant for our owne safety, then they for our destruction; for our perseuerance in the wayes of godlinesse, and preserving of our spirituall riches, then they to stop vs in our course, and to spoile vs of all our wealth. The deuill, like a roaring Lyon, goeth alwayes about, seeking to deuoure vs, and therefore it behooueth vs continually to watch and to be sober; but then he is most watchfull in sowing his tares, when he seeth that our heavenly Husbandman hath sowne his good seed and wheate of sauing graces in our hearts. The world alwayes maligneth those whom Christ hath chosen out of it; but in nothing doth it shew greater malice against them, then when they most seriously set themselves to doe God faithfull seruice, as we see in the examples of all ages. The flesh is alwayes ready to betray vs into the hands of them both; but neuer doth it more spitefully play its prizes, then when it seeth vs exorcised in religious duties; carrying away our hearts with a thousand distractions, and like a masse and heauy waight pressing vs downe; maketh vs lumpish and heauy, unweildy and soone weary in our Christian race. In which regard, we must at all times watch to defeat their malice, but we must double and triple it, against this triple opposition of the deuill, the world, and our owne flesh, when we intend to performe any Christian duties.

6. Sect. 3.
That we must keepe this watch in all places, and at all times.

Deut. 4. 9.

In all which respects, we are to keepe a carefull watch ouer our selues in all places, when we are at home, and when we are abroad; when we are alone, and when we are in company; in the Church and open streets, and in our owne houses and priuate Closets; seeing there is no place free from danger, by reason of those inward corruptions and secret traytors, which we carry euery where about vs, and those outward enemies, the deuill and the world, which are ready in all places to set vpon vs. So likewise there is no time exempted from this watch, neither youth nor old age, day nor night, but it must be kept continually, according to that, I haue beed to thy selfe, and keepe thy soule diligently; lest thou forget the things which thine eyes haue seene, and lest they depart from thine heart all the dayes of thy life. For the causes of it are continuall, and therefore the watch must not be intermitted. At all times we must labour to please God, and not by sin, and obedience at all times must be yeilded to him. At all times sinne must be hunted, vnto which we are prone by nature, and all vertues and Christian duties to be imbraced and practised, when any good occasion is offered, vnto which naturally we are backward and auerse. No time is exempted from the Christian warfare, nor secure and safe from the assaults of our spirituall enemies. And therefore we must continually stand vpon our guard and keepe our watch, that we be at no time vnfit for any of these purposes, lest being surprized vpon a sudden, wee be easily vanquished by our spirituall enemies. Besides, through the intermission of our watch, we doe not onely lose the present time, which should be spent in the seruice of God, but also indanger our selues to lose much more, before we can againe set our watch in good order. For our hearts hauing broke the bounds of Gods feare, will not without much labour be restrained of their licentious liberty; our deuotions being once cooled, will not without much fire and fuell reheat their lost heate. And sooner might wee with well ordered hearts, haue performed the duties of Gods seruice which we intend, then bring them in frame and rightly prepare them, when through neglect of this watch they are out of tune. Finally, wee must keepe this watch in all estates and conditions, in the time of health as well as in sicknesse, as well when we are rich, that our wealth do not wedge and fasten our hearts vpon the world and earthly things; as in our pouerty, that wee vse no vnlawfull meanes to become rich. In our prosperity, that we forget not God, nor loue his gifts better then the giuer; and in our affliction, that we murmur not through impatiencie, but draw nearer vnto God when he correcteth vs.

Neither

Neither is it enough that we thus watch over our selues, but wee must also with like care and circumspection watch ouer our brethren, seeing the Lord hath not committed vs to our owne single watch, but hath ioyued vs to be mutuall obseruers and keepers one of another, not curiously to pry out one anothers faults, to censure and aggravate them, but charitably to take notice of them, that wee may helpe to amend them. Thus the Apostle inioyneth vs, to consider one another, in prouoke vnto loue, and to good workes, and that we should exhort one another daily, while it is called to day, lest any of vs should be hardened through the deceitfulnesse of sinne. For this care and watchfulnesse being an inseparable effect and fruit of Christian charity, extendeth it selfe, not onely to our owne persons (for this were nothing but selfe loue) but as farre as it stretcheth, that is, to all our neighbours. Thus David tooke notice, not onely of his owne sinnes, to mourne for them, but faith that rivers of waters did runne downe his eyes, because other men did not keepe Gods Law. Yea, this his care extended to his enemies; My zeale (saith he) hath confirmed me, because mine enemies haue not kept thy Word. But though our care must extend to all, yet wee must keepe this watch in a speciall manner ouer those who are committed to our speciall charge; as the Housholder ouer his family, and the Pastour ouer his flocke, according to that of the Apostle, Take heed to your selues, and to all the flocke, over the which the holy Ghost hath made you ouerscers, &c. Which whoso negleth, and taketh care onely for himselfe, hee is worse then an Infidell, and plainly discouers that hee is of Cains speech and spirit, thinking it enough to looke to himselfe, and seeming to bee his brothers keeper.

Of the reasons whereby wee may bee perswaded to keepe this Christian watch.

He next point to be considered, is the meanes whereby wee may both be stirred vp, and also inabled to keepe this Christian watch, which are partly reasons that may moue vs to vndertake it, and partly helps inabling vs to performe it. The reasons which may perswade vs vnto this watchfulnesse, are diuers; all which may be reduced vnto two heads. 1. Because it is most necessary. 2. Because it is exceeding profitable. The necessity of it appeareth diuers wayes. First, because God hath expressly required it; Take heed to thy selfe, & keep thy soule diligently, &c. Let your loynes be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye your selues, like vnto them that wait for their Lord, when he will returne from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, ye may open vnto him immediately. So Ioshua exhorteth the people, to take diligent heed to doe the Commandement and the Law, to loue the Lord their God, and to walke in all his wayes, and to cleaue vnto him, and serue him with all their heart, and with all their soule. And our Sauour Christ exhorteth all to watch and pray, because we doe not know when the time of his coming should be. And stirreth vp the Church of Sardis to be watchfull, and to strengthen the things which which did remaine and were ready to die. The which his Commandement, he powerfully and effectually presseth by diuers parables; as of the good man of the house, who carefully watcheth the comming of the thiefe, that hee may not rob and spoile him. Of the wise and faithfull seruant, who watcheth for the comming of his Lord, that hee may finde him employed in his businesse, who being found faithfull, is richly rewarded for his care and diligence. And of the euill seruant, who neglecting this watch, is severely punished. And of the ten Virgins, whereof five were wise, and five foolish; the wise watching diligently for the comming of the Bridegroom, and being found prepared, were receiued with him into the bridal Chamber of ioy and happinesse; the foolish, through their carelesse negligence, being taken at vnawares and vnprovided, were excluded from his glorious presence for euermore. So that no duty is more straightly ioynd and earnestly inforced then the spirituall watch, to the end wee might obserue it with the greater care and diligence, or if wee neglect it, hauing had so many and effectuell warnings, wee might bee left without excuse.

The second reason to inforce the necessity of this watch, is taken from our estate and condition heere on earth. First, because through our corruption we are exceeding weake, and full of frailty and infirmity, by reason whereof we are prone vnto sinne, and easily overcome with the temptations of our spirituall enemies, if wee neglect the keeping of this vwatch, and be taken vnprovided. The which reason our Sauour vseth to inforce the necessity of vwatching and praying. Watch and pray (saith he) lest ye fall into temptation: The Spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weake. So the Apostle in this regard, vvilth him that thinketh he standeth, to take heed lest he fall; and exhorteth vs to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling. And the Wiseman pronounceth him blessed, vwho in the sight and sence of his owne frailty and infirmity, feareth alwayes. For as it is necessary for those vwho haue vweake and sickly bodies, to obserue a strict diet; and for those Citizens, vwho being besieged by mighty and malicious enemies, and haue many breaches in their valls, to be very diligent to make them vp againe, and in the meane time, to keepe a carefull and strong vwatch ouer those vweake places, because their enemies are ready to take all advantages, and to giue the fiercest assaults vwhere they are likeliest to haue the speediest entrance and least resistance: So vve vpon the same grounds, must thinke it necessary to double our vwatch, because our soules are sickly, and full of vvants and vweaknesses, and many breaches are made in the chiefeest Bulwarkes of our owne strength, by the cruell and continuall assaults of our spirituall enemies. Secondly, our care is necessary in keeping this vwatch, because naturally vwee are drowzy and sleepy, like those in a Lethargy, vwho need to haue some continually standing by, and to keepe them avwake, by pricking and pinching them, that they may not fall into the sleepe of death. Yea, and after that vve are regenerate, and are espoused vnto Christ, vve are apt vvith the five vvise Virgins, to nod often, and take a nap, vvhen as vwee should vvaite for the comming of our Bridegroom. And if hee did not avwake vs daily, by his Spirit knocking at the doore of our hearts, and his gracious call sounding in his Word, saying vnto vnto vs, Awake, thou that sleepest: and open vnto me, my sister, my loue, my dore, my undefiled, we would quickly fall into our old Lethargy of carnall security. In respect of which drowzinesse of nature, by reason of the reliques of sinne remaining in vs, we are vnfit to keepe the spirituall watch, vnlesse we continually rowze vp our selues, and shake off this sloth of carnall security. And therefore as it is said of the Nightingale, that being to delight her selfe with her night songs, and fearing lest falling asleepe, shee should indanger her selfe to birds of prey, doth set her brest against a thorne, to keepe her waking; so we, being to sing the songs of Sion, and to spend our time continually in holy duties, must vse all good meanes to keepe vs waking, because wee are euery hand-while apt through our sluggishnesse, to take a nap, and thereby to indanger our soules to those rauinous and hellish fowles, who take their chiefe delight in the workes of darkenesse, and are ready to seaze vpon vs, if they find vs sleeping. Thirdly, this watch is necessary, in regard of the wickednesse and deceitfulness of our owne hearts, which are ready continually to withdraw themselves from God, to start aside like a deceitfull bow, when wee aime at any good duty, and so make vs to misse the marke; and to breake from vs when wee set our selues to performe any religious exercises, distracting and pulling our minds from them, that they may wander about in worldly cogitations. And therefore seeing it is such a slippery Eele, we must take the surer hold of it, seeing it is such a false and flitting seruant, which hath often deceived vs, accompanying vs into the Church, and euen vnto our Pewes, and then secretly slipping frō vs, that they may spend the time allotted to Gods seruice, in ranging abroad about worldly vanities; there is no way but to set it before vs in Gods presence, and to keepe it continually vnder the straight watch of a vigilant eye, that it may not slip away at vnawares, as it hath done often in former times. And this the Lord requireth as necessary in this case; Take heed to your selues, that your heart be not deceiued, and ye turne aside; that is, lest you heart deceiue your heart, your corrupt and deceitfull heart, preuailing against your heart which is sanctified and regenerate; for neither can the world, nor the deuill draw vs away from God, till our sinfull flesh and corrupt nature betray vs into their hands. And of this also the Apostle giueth vs warning; Take heed (saith he) brethren, lest there bee in any of you an euill heart of unbeliefe, in departing from the liuing God. Fourthly, this watch is necessary, because without it we are apt to relapse into our former condition of the sleepe of sinne. For wee are in this life like men not thorowly awaked, but betweene sleeping and waking, so as we may say with the Spouse, I sleepe, but my heart waketh: and if we be not continually vsing all good meanes to keepe vs waking, wee will but open our eyes and shut them againe, and (as it vvere) but turne vs to the other side, and so returne to our former sleepe. Wee are like men but nevvly recovered out of dangerous diseases, which haue great need to looke vnto themselves, seeing vpon euery slight cause, the least taking of cold, or distemper through ill diet, they are ready to relapse into their former sicknesse. Wee are like vweakelings, that can but hardly got, and yet must needs trauell in slippery places, or (as it vvere) aloft vpon a narrow beame, where vve often slip, and are sure to catch grieuous falls, vnlesse wee carefully fully watch ouer our selues, and looke diligently to our footing; and being false, are sure to perish, vnlesse we rise vp againe, and recover our selues by vnfeined repentance; according to that of our Satiour; Remember from whence thou art false, and repent, and doe thy first workes, or else I will come against thee quickly, &c. The which relapses and falls be most dangerous vnto our spiritual life, because they make our estate worse then it was before our conuersion, when as we were sicke in sinne and death, seeing we are but like men who in their departure are dawed (as they say) and wakened by the out-cries of the standers by, who reuiue not to line, but to dye againe, and so to indure the paines of a continued sickness and double death; in which respect our Satiour Christ saith, that the end of such is worse then their beginning. And the Apostle Peter affirmeth, that it had been better for them, not to haue knowne the way of righteousness, then after they haue knowne it, to turne out of it, like the dog to his vomit, or the sow to her wallowing in the mire. Lastly, in regard of our selues this watch is necessary, because without it we can haue no assurance that we are spiritually inlightened and awakened out of the sleepe of death. For this is the difference which the Apostle maketh betweene the faithfull and the vnbeleeuers, that these still lye sleeping and snorting in the darke night of ignorance and errour, doing in the darke, the workes of darknesse, and wholly neglecting the Christian Watch; but the other being children of the light, and of the day, doe not sleepe as doe others, but watch and are sober, and being of the day, doe the workes of the day, putting on the breast-plate of faith and loue, and for an helmet, the hope of saluation. And as there are great and manifold causes respecting our selues, which make this watch necessary; so also in respect of the enemies of our saluation, who being powerful and politicke, farre mightier then we, and yet many to one, doe labour by all meanes to worke our destruction. The which argument alone should keepe vs waking, (for when should we vwatch, if not in the time of our Christian warfare, when as we are beset on all sides with such dangerous and malicious enemies?) especially if we consider that the chiefe commander of all these forces, Satan, that roring & rauening Lion, neuer slumbreth nor sleepeth, but goeth continually about, and watcheth all opportunities of working our destruction. And therefore if they be so watchfull that they may worke our ruine, by casting vs into the deep sleepe and spirituall lethargie of sin & death, how vigilant and carefull should we be, by preuenting their malice, to escape this imminent & desperate danger?

The reasons which may induce vs to keepe this watch respecting our profit, are also diuers. First, because it helpeth vs much to the leading of a godly life, in which we thriue and profit, or decline and goe backward, as we either keepe and obserue, or intermit and neglect this Christian watch. For when we watch ouer our selues, God likewise watcheth ouer vs, and by the assistance of his holy Spirit, inableth vs to stand against all tentations, and to goe forward in our Christian course; but when through our slacknesse and negligence, we runne wilfully into tentations, hee leaueth vs to be foyled of them, that we may learne the next time to take better heed. More especially, the Lord will inlighten the eyes of our minds, that we may discern the right way in which we should walke; according to that of the Apostle, Awake, thou that sleepest, and stand up from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. And seeing the way, we shall haue our faith so strengthened, and our courage and resolution so confirmed and increased, that we shall manfully proceed in it, notwithstanding all opposition; whereof it is that the Apostle conioyneth and linketh all these together as inseparable companions; Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quite your selues like men, be strong. For as those who for want of heed and circumspection fall into secret ambushments at vnawares, are soone discomfited, and by running away, leaue to their enemies an easie victory; whereas those who by their watchfulnesse discouer them, are no whit daunted in their courage, because they can easily auoyd them; or defeating the stratagem of their enemies, can circumiuent and catch them in their owne snare: so is it also in the Christian warfare; wherein the discouery of our enemies policies, by our carefull watch, is a principall meanes of preuenting them, the finding out of their secret ambushments, more then halfe the way vnto assured victory, and the very sight of their nets lying neere their stales, and of their deadly hookes of sinne lying hid vnder the baits of worldly profits and pleasures, are sufficient warnings to make vs shunne and escape them, if we haue any care of the saluation of our soules. So that there is no readier and surer way to auoyd all manner of sinne, the bane and poyson of our soules, then by our watch to espie the danger when it is offered vnto vs in these golden cups; no meanes more forcible to make vs flie the hellish imbracements of this painted strumpet, then by our diligent watch and circumspection, to pull off the deceiuing vizard of momentary gain and delight, and to behold her in her naturall deformity and vgly filthinesse. Whereas contrariwise, the neglect of keeping this carefull watch, is the ready way to all wickednesse; the mind being let loose to vaine and sinfull thoughts, the heart to sinfull concupiscence and vlawfull lusts, the tongue to light, wanton and wicked words, the hands to act the workes of darkenesse, and the whole man exposed to the dangerous assaults and tentations of our spirituall enemies, wherewith being vanquished, we are easily led captiue into all sinne. Of which we haue lamentable experience in Noah, Lot, Dauid, Peter, and many others, who whilest they carefully kept the spirituall watch, triumphed ouer the enemies of their saluation, and went on courageously in the wayes of godlinesse; but when they did but for a little while intermit and neglect it, receiued dangerous and shamefull foyles. But most evidently doth this appeare in the example of our first parents, who so long as they obserued this watch, continued constant in their integrity; but remitting their care and circumspection, and letting loose their eares to heare the voyce of the Tempter, their hearts to admit, through fond credulity, his false suggestions, their eyes to gaze on the forbidden fruit, their hands to touch, and their mouthes to taste it, they were soone overcome, and caught both themselves and for all their posterity, a fearfull fall. And therefore if they fell in the state of innocency by intermitting this watch, who can neglect it in the state of corruption and imperfection, and yet hope to stand? Finally, it conduceth and furthereth vs much vnto a godly life, as it maketh vs fit and ready for the well-performing of all Christian duties. For when all our parts are hereby kept in a good and constant order, they are always prepared for all good imployments; and if wee take care that our Instruments be well stringed and kept in tune, no more remaineth but to touch them with a skilfull hand, and there will be a melodious harmony between the heart, tongue, and outward actions. And therefore David demanding how a young man might order his steps, and cleanse his wayes, that they might be pure and vpright in the sight of God? doth thus resolve the question, that it is to be done by taking heed thereto according to Gods Word.

Secondly, this watch is exceeding profitable, not onely as it preserveth vs from all sinfull wayes, and fitteth vs to walke in the wayes of godlinesse, but also as it inableth vs to be constant in this course, and to perseuere in it euen to the end. Seeing hereby we are strengthened against all discouragements, auoyd or leape ouer all impediments, that like stumbling blockes are cast into our way, and are prepared and armed against all the assaults of our spirituall enemies, and all other oppositions which might incounter vs in our Christian course. Thirdly, it is a notable meanes of Christian security, so as keeping this watch, we may with David, grow so confident, that though wee should walke thorow the vale of the shadow of death, yet we will feare no euill, because God also watcheth ouer them, who thus watch ouer themselves, so as hauing once set their watch, they may lay them downe securely and take their rest, because the Lord maketh them to dwell in safety. So also vpon the same grounds it causeth vnto vs inward peace, euen peace with God, and the peace of a good conscience, when as by helpe of this watch we carry our selues so in all things, as that wee and our works are accepted of him, and pleasing in his sight. The which peace cannot be impeached with the malice and might of all our enemies; for if God be with vs, who can be against vs? If he speake peace vnto our consciences, though all the world should proclaime warre, it needs not to dismay vs, for though thousands fall on one side, and ten thousand on the other, it shall not hurt vs or disturbe our peace; for either the Lord will bee a wall of defence, and tower of strength to preserue vs from all danger, and to make vs shot-free euen at the Canons mouth; or else wee shall bee, with Iosiah, taken away in peace, although we fall by the hands of our enemies. From which security and peace, ariseth spirituall ioy, unspeakable and glorious, when as we are sure that nothing can hurt vs, or hinder our saluation, but all things, euen afflictions themselves, shall worke together for the best. Now what is this, but to haue a heauen vpon earth, when as in this momentany life those eternall ioyes are begun in vs? For as the Apostle telleth vs, The Kingdome of God is righteousness, peace, and ioy in the holy Ghost. Fourthly, by this Christian watch we are fitted to beare all estates, so as the great faile of prosperity shall not ouer-set vs, whilest wee take heed vnto our hearts, that they be not vvithdrawne from God, and fastened vpon vvorldly things; nor be forced by the stormes of afflictions, to strike faile, and desist in our course towards our heavenly Countrey, much lesse to dash against the rockes of despaire, being assured that they are the signes of our adoption, euidences of Gods loue, and that by these manifold tribulations we shall enter into the Kingdome of heauen. Fifthly, by this this watch vve are made ready for the comming of Christ vnto Iudgement, and prepared to enter into the ioy of our Master, as we see in the parable of the faithfull seruant, and the wise Virgins; so as when the time approacheth, the terrours of it need not to daunt vs, but rather expecting him with his reward in his hand, we may with confidence and ioy hold up our heads, because our full Redemption draweth neere. Finally, by this watchfulness we are assured of blessednesse; seeing our Sauour hath pronounced such as thus watch for his comming, blessed in so doing. Blessed (saith he) are those seruants whom the Lord when he cometh shall finde watching. Verily I say vnto you, that he shall gird himselfe, and make them to sit downe to meate, and will come forth and serue them, and make them owners of all his goods. In which regard he calleth them Blessed, blessed, and the third time blessed, to shew that they are thrice blessed, and euen perfected and consummate in blessednesse which keepe constantly the spirituall watch, and are thereby alwayes in readinesse and prepared for his comming.

CAP. XIII.

Of the meanes whereby we may be inabled to keepe the Christian watch.

THe last thing to be considered in this spirituall watch, is the meanes whereby we may be inabled to keepe it; the which I will but briefly touch, because they are so fully handled in the fore-named Treatise. The first meanes are sobriety and temperance, the which as they much further vs in the naturall watch, so are they singular helpes to inable vs vnto the spirituall. Whereof it is that in the Scriptures they are ioyned and inioyned together, as mutuall causes one of another. Be sober and watch. We are not of the night, nor of darknesse; therefore let vs not sleepe as doe others, but let vs watch and be sober. And our Sauour Christ perswading vs to this spirituall watch, and arming vs against the deepe security of the latter dayes, giueth vs in charge, as a notable meanes to cause the one, and prevent the other, that we take heed vnto our selues, lest at any time our hearts be overcharged with surfetting and drunkennesse, and the cares of this life, and so that Day come vpon vs at vnawares. Which meanes of watchfulness when Noah and Lot neglected, they soone fell into a dangerous sleep of sinne. Neither must this temperance and sobriety extend onely to meates and drinckes, seeing we may be drunke with the intoxicating cups of pleasures and carnall delights, and surfet vpon worldly prosperity and earthly things, when we doe too hungerly affect them in our desires, and set our hearts immoderately vpon them; but they must reach also (as I shewed before, when I spake of sobriety) to the right ordering of our minds in the vse of all temporary blessings, in a due manner and measure, so as they may be helpes and not hinderances vnto vs in all the duties of a godly life; which if we neglect, we may surfet and be spiritually drunke, though we be neuer so temperate in the vse of meates and drinckes. The second meanes to make vs watchfull is, to nourish in our hearts the true
